PENAL CODE (XLV of 1860)

PENAL CODE (XLV of 1860)

—S. 161.

Synopsis.

1. Applicability and scope
2. Gratification
3. Offence under
4. Sanction for prosecution
5. Sentence
6. Miscellaneous.

1. Applicability and scope.

—S. 161—Applicability and scope.

S. 161 of the Penal Code deals with three categories of cases:—

(1) acceptance of gratification as a motive or reward for doing or forbearing to do any official act,

(2) acceptance of gratification for showing or forbearing to show in the exercise of his official function, favour, or disfavour, and

(3) acceptance of gratification for rendering or attempting to render any service or disservice to any person with the Legislative or Executive Government of India or with the Government of any Presidency, or with any Lieut. Governor, or with any public servant.

Where a constable working in Court accepts gratification from certain witnesses on the inducement that the identification of property for which they had come would be expedited, the case falls under the last category mentioned above. 1949 A.L.J. 326=1949 A.W.R. 529.

—S. 161—Offence under—Accepting illegal gratification or rendering service with public servant.

S. 161, I. P. Code, is not confined to cases in which the illegal gratification is taken for doing an official act, and it is an offence under that section for a public servant to accept any gratification other than legal remuneration as a motive or reward for rendering or attempting to render any service to any one with any public servant as such. 51 M. 86, foll. 1948 A.W.R. (C.C.) 120=1948 O.A. (C.C.) 120=51 Cr.L.J. 219=A.I.R. 1949 Oudh 84.

—S. 161—Offence under by public servant.

Under the concluding words of S. 161, a public servant may be guilty under that section even independently of the exercise of his official function, that is, if he obtains a reward for rendering or attempting to render any service to a person with another public servant. A. I. R. 1943 F.C. 18=44 Cr.L.J. 466=47 C.W.N.F.C. 5=9 B.R. 310=1943 M.W.N. 315=22 Pat. 349=24 P.L.T. 139=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 62=I.L.R. (1943) Kar. (F.C.) 2 Sup.=1943 F.C.R. 7=206 Ind. Cas. 232 (F.C.)

—S. 161.

Section 161 is not confined to cases in which the gratification is taken for doing an official act under it. It is an offence if a public servant accepts any gratification other than legal remuneration as a motive or reward for rendering or attempting to render any service to any one with any public servant as such. 105 Ind. Cas. 829=51 Mad. 86=39 M.L.T. 615=26 M.L.W. 529=1927 M.W.N. 764=28 Cr.L.J. 1005=9 A.I.Cr.R. 180=A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1011=53 M.L.J. 723.

—S. 161—"Motive or reward"—If covers also a case where the payment is made in respect of past favours—Person on leave—Does not cease to be a public servant to whom S. 161 is applicable.

What is forbidden by S. 161 of the I. P. Code generally is receiving any gratification as motive to do or a reward for having done any such thing as is described in the definition. Accordingly the phrase, "motive or reward" under S. 161 covers a case where the payment is made in respect of past favours.

S. 161 will apply also to a person who is on leave as he cannot be said to have ceased to be a public servant. Such leave counts as duty and so long as a person is on duty he must be deemed to be a public servant. 60 L.W. 488 (1)=48 Cr.L.J. 1008=A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 63=1947 M.W.N. 491=(1947) 2 M.L.J. 160.

—S. 161—Offence under—Police constable accepting money to get accused released on bond.

The accused who was a police constable was charged under S. 161, I. P. Code, for having accepted money to get one M who was under arrest in a petty case released on a bond. It was contended that as it was no part of the official duty of the accused to release M, his demanding and receiving money did not amount to an offence under S. 161, I. P. Code:

Held, that the accused was a public servant and an officer of the thana and demanded money for the purpose of securing the release, that it was clearly demanded and paid as a motive or reward for the accused rendering service to M with a public servant, namely, the officer in the thana who could grant the release, and that, therefore, the accused was guilty of an offence under S. 161, I. P. Code. 222 Ind. Cas. 522=47 Cr.L.J. 316=A.I.R. 1946 Cal. 270.

—S. 161—Clerk demanding that applicant should invest Rs. 100 in war loan as condition for forwarding application—Offence under S. 161, held committed by clerk.

It was the official duty of the Arms Act Clerk to put up to the Sub-Divisional Officer the application which the petitioner made for renewal of the licence for his gun. As a condition to the performance of that duty, the Arms Act Clerk demanded that the petitioner should invest Rs. 100 in war loan;

Held, that the demand of the Arms Act Clerk constituted an offence under S. 161. A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 258=26 P.L.T. 38=24 Pat. 138=11 B.R. 486=46 Cr.L.J. 748=220 Ind. Cas. 416.

Lahore High Court Rules—Process Server not authorised to conduct Court Sale—False report by—Liability. 1930 Cr.C. 108=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 92.

—S. 161—Applicability.

Even where an act is not within the exercise of the official duty of a public servant, if a public servant erroneously represents that the particular act is within the exercise of his official duty he would be liable to conviction under S. 161, if he obtained a gratification by inducing such an erroneous belief in another person. 113 Ind. Cas. 179=51 All. 467=11 A.I.Cr.R. 205=1929 A.L.J. 153=10 L.R.A.Cr. 23=30 Cr.L.J. 67=A.I.R. 1928 All. 752.

—S. 161—Illustrations—Scope.

The principle of the illustration applies as much to the other purposes set out in S. 161 as to doing or forbearing to do any official act. 105 Ind. Cas. 829=51 Mad. 86=9 A.I.Cr.R. 180=39 M.L.T. 615=26 M.L.W. 529=1927 M.W.N. 764=28 Cr.L.J. 1005=A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1011=53 M.L.J. 723.

The officer immediately caught hold of the accused, and after getting the notes counted by his servant turned the accused out of his quarters:

3. Offence under.

- (a) Abetment
- (b) Attempt
- (c) Essentials
- (d) Proof.

3 (a). Offence under—Abetment.

—Ss. 161 and 116—Public Servant receiving bribe on behalf of another public servant who was to show favour to the person paying the bribe—Conviction under S. 161—Legality.

Where a constable receives a bribe on behalf of a Sub-Inspector who was to release the accused on bail as the consideration of "doing or forbearing", etc., was not required from the constable he cannot be convicted under S. 161, I. P. Code, as the principal offender. He can, however, be found guilty under S. 161 read with S. 116 as an abettor. A. I. R. 1950 All. 412=4 A.I.Cr.D. 411=51 Cr.L.J. 1073=1950 A.L.J. 750.

—Ss. 161 and 109—Person complying with demand of public servant for bribe—If guilty of abetment.

A person who complies with a demand made by a public servant for a bribe, in order to avoid pecuniary injury or personal molestation, is guilty under S. 109, I. P. Code, of abetting an 'offence' under S. 161, I. P. Code. I.L.R. (1950) Nag. 229=1950 N.L.J. 435=51 Cr.L.J. 235=A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 1.

—Ss. 161 and 116—Offer of bribe to public servant to induce him not to make a report—Report already made—Offence, if any, committed.

Where bribe is offered to a public servant with a view to induce him not to make a report, though the report might have been already sent, the giver of the bribe would be guilty of an offence under S. 161, read with S. 116 of the Penal Code. I.L.R. (1947) A. 444=229 Ind. Cas. 613=1947 A.L.J. 312=48 Cr.L.J. 467=1947 A.W.R. (H.C.) 263=1947 A. Cr. C. 49=1947 A.L.W. 94=A.I.R. 1948 All. 17.

—S. 161.

Offering of bribe—If per se an offence.

See Penal Code, Ss. 116 and 161. (1947) 1 M.L.J. 179=A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 306 (2).

—Ss. 161 and 116.

Where the accused paid the money to a person to be handed over to a public servant as a bribe but the money was not so paid:

Held, that the accused was guilty of abetment of an offence under S. 161 read with S. 116. 1942 N.L.J. 104.

—Ss. 161, 116—Abetment of offence.

The provisions of S. 161 are not limited to official acts only. That section applies even if a public servant is requested to render any service with another 'public servant'. The section does not require that the public servant must, in fact, be in a position to do the official act, favour or service at the time. Illustration (c) to the section shows that even if a person offers gratification to a public servant by way of reward for services, which in fact were never rendered by him, he would still be guilty of the offence under S. 161. The heinousness of the act obviously lies in the intention of the bribe giver to corrupt the public servant and the act cannot be considered to be less heinous merely because the public servant does not happen to possess the necessary power to do the required favour or service.

The accused who had got a warrant for attachment of certain land issued against a judgment-debtor wanted to have the warrant signed by the Revenue Assistant in his capacity as a Collector. He wished to bribe the Reader of the Revenue Assistant in order to get this done. While he was standing outside the Court room of the Revenue Assistant he saw a Magistrate, coming out of the Court room and thinking that he was the Reader of the Revenue Assistant placed Rs. 2 and the warrants of attachment in his hand, asked him to get the warrants signed and take the money:

Held, that the accused did request the Magistrate in his capacity as a public servant, to render him the service of getting the warrants signed by another public servant, viz., the Revenue Assistant and therefore, although the Magistrate did not render him the service required, yet the act would still be punishable as 'abetment' of the offence under S. 161 read with S. 116. A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 276=43 P.L.R. 273=42 Cr.L.J. 636=I.L.R. (1942) Lah. 402=195 Ind. Cas. 229.

The latter part of S. 161, makes it an offence for a public servant to accept any gratification other than legal remuneration as a motive of reward for rendering or attempting to render any service with a public servant as such and the offer of the gratification amounts to an abetment of offence under S. 161.

The Divisional Forest Officer in his official capacity was holding a departmental inquiry in which M, a public servant, was cited as a witness. The accused offered a sum of Rs. 100 to M as illegal gratification as a motive or reward for rendering him a service in the proceedings before the Divisional Forest Officer by not giving evidence against him or so shaping his evidence as not to injure him, or generally by influencing the Divisional Forest Officer in the accused's favour in connection with the allegations against him:

Held, that in doing so, he was attempting to bribe a public officer to render him service with another public servant who was acting as such and that he was guilty of an abetment of offence under S. 161. A.I.R. 1935 Sind 7=37 Cr. L. J. 20=158 Ind. Cas. 992.

—S. 161—Abetment of offence under.

A mere statement by a person to a Judicial Officer that the plaintiff in a certain case would be willing to pay a certain sum of money to him as bribe if he decides the case in favour of the plaintiff does not amount to the abetment of an offence under S. 161. A.I.R. 1933 All. 513=34 Cr.L.J. 623=1933 A.L.J. 1481=55 All. 654=143 Ind. Cas. 661.

—S. 161—Government Hospital—Doctor—Bribe, offer of to induce him to retain patient.

Where the doctor in charge of a Government hospital has already decided to discharge a patient but that patient is still in the hospital he cannot be regarded to be functus officio as his duties and responsibilities to the patient still remain and an offer of a bribe to him to retain the patient for a longer period is an offence under S. 161, and the refusal of the bribe brings the case under illustration (a), S. 116. 126 Ind. Cas. 603=32 M.L.W. 17=A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 671.

—S. 161—Bribing police.

Where a person is accused of abetment of bribing a Head Constable of Police, the first part of S. 116, is applicable and not the second part as an offence under S. 161, is not cognizable by the police and is not one, the commission of which it is the duty of the head constable to prevent. 109 Ind. Cas. 681=10 L.L.J. 364=29 Cr.L.J. 601=10 A.I.Cr.R. 356=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 840.

—S. 161—Instigation—Statement to Public servant "X wished to pay you Rs. 5,000" may, taken with the context, amount to instigation.

The accused interceded with the Municipal Commissioner on behalf of his cousin and got some building regulation released in his favour, and then waited upon the Commissioner to thank him. The cousin had also other business with the Municipality pending. In the course of the conversation the accused said, "my cousin wished to pay you Rs. 5,000". The Commissioner thought he was being offered a bribe and asked him to leave which he did after apologies:

Held, Per Macleod, C.J.—That the words of the accused, though not an offer, amounted to an instigation to the Commissioner to attempt to get the Rs. 5,000.

There are many other ways of instigating a public servant to commit an offence besides by means of a direct offer of a bribe. The illustration (a) to S. 116 is only an example of an abetment of an offence under S. 161.

A person is said to instigate another to an act when he actively suggests or stimulates him to an act by any means or language, direct or indirect, whether it takes the form of express solicitation or hints, insinuation or encouragement.

Per Shah, J.—Without straining the meaning of the language used, it could not be said that the accused instigated the complainant to do anything. Particularly where the conversation does not amount to an offer, the Court should be slow to infer a sinister purpose from words which do not naturally bear that interpretation. 67 Ind. Cas. 818=24 Bom. L.R. 534=23 Cr.L.J. 466=A.L.R. 1923 Bom. 44.

—S. 161.

Where it was not within the powers of the public servant to show any favour to the person offering the bribe:

Held, that the latter should not be convicted under Ss. 161 and 109. 64 Ind. Cas. 369=33 C.L.J. 379=23 Cr.L.J. 1=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 344.

—Ss. 161 and 109—Abetment of bribery—Motive immaterial.

A person handing currency notes to a Magistrate to show favour to an accused is guilty under S. 161, though his motive may be merely to expose a corrupt Magistrate. 22 M.L.T. 373=6 L.W. 677=(1917) M.W.N. 831=19 Cr.L.J. 29=42 Ind. Cas. 989.

—S. 161, 116 and 107—Public servant asking for bribe—Abettor-liability.

A person responding to the call of the public servant through payment of a sum of money, is not the less guilty of abetment under S. 107, I.P.C. The solicitation on the servant's part making the offence is only more culpable than it would otherwise have been. S. 107 does not require instigation but intentional aiding to do a thing. 18 Cr.L.J. 327=9 L.B.R. 52=10 Bur. L.T. 252=38 Ind. Cas. 439.

3 (b). Offence under—Attempt.

—S. 161.

A mere offer to pay an illegal gratification to a public servant is an attempt to bribe; actual money or other consideration need not be produced at the time the offer is made. 83 Ind. Cas. 679=3 Pat. 647=3 Pat. L.R. Cr. 61=26 Cr.L.J. 119=A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 48.

—Ss. 161, 511—Attempt to obtain illegal gratification—Asking is attempting.

A Civil Court peon asking a party in a suit to pay him dasturi if he wished him to serve summons on a witness without an identifier is guilty of the offence of attempting to obtain illegal gratification. To ask for a bribe is an attempt to obtain one. 2 A. 253, Foll. (1905) 9 C.W.N. 547=32 C. 292.

3 (c). Offence under—Essentials.

—S. 161—Acceptance of money to constitute an offence under—Requisites.

Simple acceptance of money is not an offence under S. 161, Penal Code; it must be as a motive or reward for an official act. If a person accepts money as a motive or reward for an act which cannot be said to be an official act, he would not be guilty under S. 161. 1950 A.L.J. 57.

—S. 161—Ingredients of offence—Public servant not in a position to do official act.

All the ingredients of the offence under S. 161, I.P. Code, would exist if an illegal gratification is accepted by a public servant as a motive or as a reward for doing or forbearing to do some official act. It is wholly immaterial whether the public servant concerned is in a position to do any official act or not. 1941 Lah. 276; 51 A. 467; 31 B. 335 and 1948 Nag. 82, foll. 3 A.I.Cr.R.D. 217=A.I.R. 1949 Ajmer 12=50 Cr.L.J. 400=1949 A.M.L.J. 121.

—S. 161—Offence under—Public servant not in a position to show official favour.

S. 161, I. P. Code, does not require that the public servant receiving a bribe must in fact be in a position to do the official act, favour or service at the time. It is sufficient if he promises to show favour in the exercise of his official functions although he has in reality no such power. I.L.R. (1947) Nag. 611=1947 N.L.J. 393 =49 Cr.L.J. 124=A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 82.

—Ss. 161 and 114—Offence under—Payment to public officers intended as a donation to a public institution in which they were interested—Connection between the payment and performance of the official duty not established—Defence of India Rules, R. 34 (6) (c).

Certain monies were offered to two officers in the Provincial Textile Commissioner's office by the accused who were the applicants for a permit. It was established by the attendant circumstances that the payment was made as a donation to a public institution in which the officers were interested and that the amounts were offered independently of the result of the application:

Held: (i) that as the sine qua non was the establishment of a connection between the payment and the performance of the official duty before it can be said that gratification offered was a motive or reward for the purposes mentioned in S. 161 of the Code no offence had been made out;

(ii) for the same reasons there was no inducement offered to the officers to fail in the performance of their duties and consequently no "prejudicial act" had been committed by the accused within the meaning of R. 34 (6) (c) of the Defence of India Rules, 1948 M.W.N. 86=61 L.W. 140=A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 281=49 Cr.L.J. 265=(1948) 1 M.L.J. 142.

The fact that a person giving the bribe to an officer on behalf of his principal is not in the service of his principal is immaterial. A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 255=45 Cr.L.J. 64=46 P.L.R. 166=209 Ind. Cas. 66.

—S. 161—Public servant functus officio.

No offence under S. 161 is committed where the public servant to whom the bribe is offered is at the time when the offer is made functus officio as to the matter in respect of which the bribe is offered. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 26=36 Cr.L.J. 626=154 Ind. Cas. 910.

—S. 161—Officer functus officio.

If a man in the vain hope of getting a public officer to re-consider a question, as to which that public officer is functus officio offers a bribe he commits no offence whatever.

—S. 161.

No favour need be shown to the briber as a fact; it would be sufficient if he was led to believe that the matter would go against him if he did not give the Officer a present. 86 Ind. Cas. 72=27 Bom. L.R. 120=26 Cr.L.J. 696=A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 261.

—S. 161—Reward for any other purpose.

A public servant taking a sum of money as a motive or reward, only for any of the purposes mentioned in the section is liable under S. 161, I.P.C. To receive gratification for any other purpose is not culpable. 21 C.W.N. 552=18 Cr. L.J. 565=39 Ind. Cas. 805.

—S. 161—"In the exercise of his official functions"—As a motive or reward.

S. 161 requires proof that an official has obtained as a motive or reward for official conduct an illegal gratification for himself or another. That other may or may not be an official and therefore may be wholly unconnected with the official conduct. The conduct which is contemplated as the consideration for the bribe must be that of the official obtaining it. To obtain a bribe as a motive or reward for another's conduct, does not fall within the section though it may be an abetment of that offence or cheating. The performance of the act which is consideration for the bribe is not essential but it is essential that the bribe should be obtained 'as a motive or reward'. The phrase evidently means on the understanding that the bribe is given in consideration of some official act or conduct. Such an understanding need not be proved by explicit evidence of any precise agreement. It may be inferred from circumstances. (1907) 9 Bom. L.R. 331=31 B. 335.

3 (d). Offence under—Proof.

—S. 161 and the Prevention of Corruption Act (II of 1947), S. 4—Acceptance by public servant of gratification other than legal remuneration—Presumption of acceptance as motive or reward.

The petitioner was a public servant and he accepted Rs. 100 and a gold ring as reward for exercising his official favours in favour of the bribe-givers by recommending to his superior officer, their retention in their jobs, despite a retrenchment discharge notice served on them. He was convicted for an offence under S. 161 of the Penal Code, and in revision, it was contended that the petitioner did not receive the gifts as illegal gratification, or bribe, but simply as 'mariyadas', or honours rendered to him by persons benefitted by his recommendation, who gave them willingly and even joyfully out of the gratitude for his recommending them:

Held, the essence of the matter is the real nature of the payment to be gathered from the circumstances and under the general presumption in S. 4 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, II of 1947, viz., that in any trial for offences punishable under S. 161, where it is proved that an accused person has accepted or obtained for himself any gratification other than legal remuneration or any valuable thing from any person, it shall be presumed unless the contrary is proved that he accepted or obtained it as a motive or reward as is mentioned in S. 161 of the Penal Code. 1949 M.W.N. 649=62 L.W. 712=A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 93=51 Cr.L. J. 386=(1949) 2 M.L.J. 443.

—S. 161—Conviction—Proof—Sufficiency—What has to be proved—Proof of mere passing of marked currency notes from spy or decoy witness to accused—Sufficiency.

The mere handing over of currency notes to the accused cannot adequately prove that they were given as bribe, so as to render the receiver liable to conviction on a charge under S. 161, I. P. Code. The prosecution must either succeed or fail according as it proves that the notes were paid as bribe or not. To sustain a conviction it must be proved that the money was received by the accused for an illegal purpose; it is not sufficient to prove that marked notes passed from the decoy or spy witness to the accused. I.L.R. (1949) Cut. 585.

Recovery of marked coins amounts to corroboration. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 245=38 Cr.L. J. 423=I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 181=167 Ind. Cas. 521.

—S. 161—Illegal or guilty intention—Proof—Passing of marked currency notes to accused—Proof—Sufficiency for conviction of offence of receiving bribe—Corroboration of statement of police decoy—Necessity—Duty of prosecution.

It is not sufficient for the prosecution in a case of receiving illegal gratification or bribe, to merely prove that some marked currency notes passed into the hands of the accused from a police decoy or agent provocateur. The prosecution must produce evidence in support or corroboration of the statement of the decoy that the money in question was received by the accused for an illegal purpose. The mere statement of the decoy that he paid the money for an illegal purpose is not sufficient to justify a conviction. 48 Cr.L. J. 964=49 P.L.R. 253=A.I.R. 1948 Lah. 27.

—S. 161—Proof of charge—Independent evidence—Duty of prosecution to adduce—Police trap or decoy witness—Evidence of—Sufficiency.

A charge under S. 161, I. P. Code, cannot be established by the tainted evidence of accomplices or spies of the police. If they are persons set up by the police, to make out a case against the accused who had probably earned the reputation of corruption, from beginning to end, their evidence is not sufficient. There must be some independent evidence, either direct or circumstantial. It cannot, of course, be laid down as a general rule that no prosecution can be based upon police traps. While it is generally impossible to defect this class of offence in any other way except by police traps, that should not lighten the task of the prosecution which lies upon it under the general principles of criminal law that the accused's guilt must be established beyond all reasonable doubt. Anybody may be easily taken unawares by a police trap or decoy witness who is no better than an accomplice, whose tainted evidence cannot in law be held sufficient to bring home the charge to the accused. 4 A.I.Cr.D. 363.

—S. 161—Proof of offence—Evidence of person offering bribe—Value of.

A person who offers a bribe to a public servant is an accomplice, and it is generally unsafe to convict a person on the evidence of an accomplice unless corroborated in material particulars. 1929 Nag. 215, ref. to. 3 A.I.Cr.D. 270=A.I.R. 1949 Ajmer 12=50 Cr. L. J. 400=1949 A.M.L.J. 121.

—S. 161—Persons instrumental in negotiating bribe.

In a case under S. 161, persons who were either instrumental in negotiating the bribe or in arranging for its payment are in the position of accomplices and according to well-settled principles it is highly unsafe to base a conviction on their testimony without independent corroboration. (1934) 147 Ind. Cas. 557=34 P.L.R. 836=35 Cr. L. J. 452.

—S. 161—Accomplice in offering bribe.

A person who offers a bribe to a public officer is an accomplice. Persons who actually pay the bribes or co-operate in such payments or are instrumental in the negotiations for the purpose are also accomplices of the person bribed, and a person who with knowledge that the bribe has to be paid advances money is clearly an abettor and as such an accomplice. 114 Ind. Cas. 457=30 Cr.L. J. 311=1929 Cr. C. 110=A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 215.

—Ss. 161 and 384—Nature of evidence required.

S. 161 requires the acknowledgment of receipt and not the mode of obtaining illegal gratification to be established by evidence; in the particular case, principal witnesses for the prosecution are abettors so that their evidence ought to be treated as that of an accomplice. 15 A.L. —S. 161—Proof of offence—Receiving bribe even for doing a just and proper act is an offence—People of locality accustomed to pay bribe—Independent proof of offence is necessary.

The fact that the people of a particular tract of the country have been given to the practice of making payments in money or in kind to subordinate officials to win their favour, does not relieve their prosecution of the necessity of strict and conclusive proof of the offence of bribery.

When a bribe has been proved to have been given it is not necessary to ask what, if any, effect the bribe had on the mind of the receiver and it is an offence even when the act, done for the bribe given, is a just and proper one. The gist of the offence is a public servant taking gratification other than legal remuneration in respect of an official act. 89 Ind. Cas. 1035=8 N.L. J. 138=26 Cr.L. J. 1467=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 313.

—S. 161—Proof of offence—Evidence of good character of accused—Value of.

Cases of bribery like all other criminal cases are subject to the rule that the accused cannot be convicted unless the Court is satisfied concerning his guilt beyond reasonable doubt, to which may be added as a corollary, that where the accused in a bribery case pleads and produces evidence of good character which the Court regards as satisfactory, and if it appears to the Court that a person possessing such a character would not be likely to act, in the circumstances proved to have existed at the time, in the manner alleged by the prosecution, such improbability must be taken into account in determining the question whether or not there is reasonable doubt as to the guilt of such accused person. 48 Cr.L. J. 882=A.I.R. 1947 Lab. 410.

4. Sanction for prosecution.

—S. 161—Sanction to prosecute for an offence under—Requisites.

In order to constitute proper sanction to prosecute an accused for an offence under S. 161, Penal Code, there should be evidence either from the order granting sanction or other documentary authority placed before the Court or even oral evidence that the facts were placed before the officer from whom sanction was sought.

Where a sanction merely refers to the particular offences for which sanction is being accorded and the name of the person to be prosecuted and there is nothing to indicate that the facts giving rise to the offence were placed before the sanctioning officer, the sanction cannot be said to be a legal one. The mere heading in the sanction that it was in regard to the "acceptance of illegal gratification" would not be a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law. 1950 M.W.N. 899=63 L.W. 816=(1950) 2 M.L. #### 5. Sentence.

—Ss. 161 and 116—Offence under—Measure of sentence—Trap laid against giver—Discretion.

Per Malik, J.—The question of sentence must, in each case, depend upon a variety of considerations and is a matter primarily in the discretion of the Court which passes the sentence.

It is no doubt true that bribery and corruption in connection with military contracts have become so common that they amount to a public scandal and it is necessary that deterrent sentences should be passed. But the proper way of putting down this evil is to punish, not only those who offer bribes but still more severely those who take bribes, and when the facts disclose that the bribe was solicited, even with the object of getting a man caught and punished, it would render the abetment less culpable than it would otherwise be. A.I.R. 1945 All. 207=1945 A.L. J. 204=I.L.R. (1945) All. 450=47 Cr.L. J. 132=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 167=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 195=221 Ind. Cas. 256.

—Ss. 161 and 116—Distinction between one who offers bribe and one who accepts it.

Per Iqbal Ahmad, C. J.—Both the giver and taker of the bribes are parts of the same instrument; the minds of both work in unison, both act in concert and it is their concerted action which produces a result constituting a menace to society. There is, therefore, no distinction between the two.

[Tests for different sentences for different offences laid down.] A.I.R. 1945 All. 207=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 195=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 167=I.L.R. (1945) All. 450=47 Cr.L. J. 132=1945 A.L. J. 204=221 Ind. Cas. 256.

—Ss. 161 and 116—Offence under—Measure of sentence—Trap laid against giver—Accused 25 years old and acting as agent of his father—Taker not tried—Loss in other way—Belated application for revision.

Per Iqbal Ahmad, C. J.—In awarding the lighter sentence for an offence under S. 161 read with S. 116, I. P. C., against the accused who offered bribe, the facts that a trap was laid against him, that he was of 25 years of age and was acting in a firm as an agent of his father and that the taker of the bribe was not tried in ordinary Court of law are not the matters to be considered. But when it was found that the accused sustained a heavy loss by way of cancellation of his contracts and that the application for revision praying for the enhancement of sentence was belated, the decision of the Sessions Judge was not to be interfered with. A.I.R. 1945 All. 207=1945 A.L.J. 204=I.L.R. (1945) All. 450=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 167=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 195=47 Cr.L.J. 132=221 Ind. Cas. 256.

—S. 161—Bribery in connection with military contracts—Consideration in awarding punishment.

In a case under S. 116 read with S. 161 against a military contractor whose business was to supply goods to a military depot of specified quality, the fact that a trap was laid to catch the accused is no reason for not imposing a sentence of imprisonment. A.I.R. 1945 All. 207=1945 A.L.J. 204=47 Cr.L.J. 132=I.L.R. (1945) All. 450=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 195=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 167=221 Ind. Cas. 256.

—S. 161—Bribery prevalent among higher officials also—Points to be considered while giving punishments to subordinate officials.

In apportioning the punishment in the case of bribery, the Court is entitled to take into consideration the fact that corruption of the nature of which the accused has been convicted is undoubtedly widely prevalent not only amongst the class of subordinate officials to which he belongs, but also in much higher places. It is common knowledge that bribery and corruption are widely indulged in by many persons. The more influential they are and the greater the pecuniary benefit they derive therefrom, the greater is the degree of immunity which they seem to enjoy. It is little wonder, therefore, that following the general example of such persons the small fry are easily tempted and more easily succumb, even though the latter are relatively in greater danger of being found out and punished. Although this does not lessen the gravity of the offence it is a consideration in favour of comparative lenience in punishing such people. Until something is done to reduce the prevalence of this class of offence in high and influential quarters, it is unfair to visit the smaller practitioner with punishment of extreme severity. A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 255=45 Cr.L.J. 64=46 P.L.R. 166=209 Ind. Cas. 66.

—S. 161—Punishment must be deterrent—Mere fine is not enough.

Punishment in the case of offences by or relating to the public servants, and particularly those of obtaining or giving bribes by or to public servants, ought to be deterrent as their object is to check repetition of the offences not only by the actual culprits, but also by the other public servants. A lenient punishment as of a mere fine can hardly act as a corrective, or deter men from committing similar offences. 86 Ind. Cas. 469=26 Cr.L.J. 821=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 321.

—S. 161—Payment of bribe—Effect.

Payment of a bribe to a public official must be a wrong act but the circumstances may be such as to render the immorality of a very venial description. 12 Cr.L.J. 170=9 M.L.T. 503=9 Ind. Cas. 978.

—S. 161.

As it appeared from the admission of the parties that both the parties were guilty of an offence under S. 161, in having taken bribes by looting the public dishonestly, the High Court directed that they be ordained to show cause why they should not be prosecuted for an offence under S. 161. —Ss. 161, 165—Continuous offence when—Bribe partly on one day and partly on another—Same or separate offences.

Where a certain sum of money is paid on a certain day to a public servant as illegal gratification and another certain sum on another day for the same purpose, the offence of receiving illegal gratification becomes a continuous offence and there ought not to be separate convictions for offences, under Ss. 161, 165, I. —S. 162—Motive.

Held, that the prosecution for perjury against that person could not successfully be maintained. Held, further that the High Court had power to interfere in revision in a case where the Magistrate sanctions a prosecution under the above circumstances even if the order was passed under S. 476, Cr. P.C. 4 A.L.J. 811=1908 A.W.N. 22.

—S. 166—Applicability—Essentials of offence—Mere disobedience of order without dishonesty or mala fides.

The offence which is made punishable under S. 166, I.P. Code, is a wilful disobedience of an express direction of the law. A mere disobedience to an order does not constitute an offence under the section, when there can be no imputation of either dishonesty or mala fides. 4 A.I.Cr.D. 729.

—S. 166—Notice of service—Representation as a warrant—Conviction.

A peon who was directed to require the signature of the persons on whom notices were to be served represented the notice to be a warrant and actually arrested the complainant. —S. 167—Preparation and framing of electoral rolls.

Under S. 167, I.P.C., there is no difference between the preparation and the framing of an electoral roll. The signature and the delivery of the electoral rolls under R. 13 (1), Bihar Municipal election Rules are operations subsequent to the preparation under Sub. R. (1), and serve to indicate that the preparation was complete, but cannot be said to be essential to the framing required by S. 167, I.P.C. for it is not always impossible to show in other ways that the process of preparing was complete.

A Head Clerk of a Municipality appointed under R. 13 (1), Bihar Municipal Election Rules, 1937, to prepare the electoral rolls, prepared them but went away on leave before signing or delivering them and they were, therefore, signed and delivered by his locum tenens:

Held, that for S. 167, I.P.C., to apply, the preparing and framing must be complete and final so far as the author is concerned, and it was difficult to exclude anything that it would have been permissible for the Head Clerk to do the rolls until the time came for his signing them and delivering them. He could not, therefore, be convicted under S. 167. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 539=22 P.L.T. 443=7 B.R. 690=42 Cr. L.J. 508=194 Ind. Cas. 108.

—S. 167.

Appointment of Head Clerk to prepare electoral rolls under R. 13 (1), Bihar Municipal Election Rules, 1937, of Municipality of five wards—Subsequent Government Notification deviding Municipality into sixteen wards—Appointment of Head Clerk neither revoked nor fresh formal appointment made:

Held, that the word "charged" in S. 167 is not to be very narrowly construed. It was no part of the ordinary duty of Head Clerk to prepare any electoral roll but as he was expressly appointed to prepare the electoral rolls under the Election Rules, he was a public servant charged with the preparation of electoral rolls. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 539=22 P.L.T. 443=7 B.R. 690=42 Cr. L.J. 508=194 Ind. Cas. 108.

—S. 167—False entry by Station House officer.

Evidence of subsequent conduct, whether sufficient for conviction,

A false entry in his diary by a station House Officer is sufficiently proved by evidence of his subsequent conduct displaying mala fides in his actions and is rightly convicted under S. 167. (1011) 2 M.W.N. 64=12 Cr. L.J. 502=12 Ind. Cas. 222.

—S. 167—Forgery.

The offence under S. 167, is included in the offence under Ss. 467-471, and therefore, conviction, both under S. 167 and Ss. 467-471, is not maintainable. 99 Ind. Cas. 122=3 O.W.N. 760=7 A.I. Cr.R. 51=13 O.L.J. 817=28 Cr. L.J. 90=A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 615.

—S. 167—Tampering with records.

—S. 168 — Scope—Offence by public servant—Engaging in trade in contravention of R. 21, Bombay Civil Service Conduct, Discipline and Appeal Rules, 1932—Prosecution under S. 168, I.P. Code — If barred by R. 49, Civil Service (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules.

It is a wrong hypothesis to say that if a public servant is guilty of a wrongful deed which falls under two distinct laws, e. g., Penal Code, S. 168, and R. 21 of the Bom. Civil Service Conduct, Discipline and Appeal Rules, framed under R. 49 of the Civil Service (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules. Penalty can be imposed on him only under one law. If a public servant is guilty of a crime under the Penal Code, he can be prosecuted, convicted and sentenced under that Code. There is also no doubt that after such conviction, or even irrespective of the result of the prosecution, he can be dismissed under R. 49 of the Civil Service (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules. Although R. 49 of the Rules does not lay down that one of the penalties which could be imposed upon the members of the services comprised in the classes specified is a prosecution under S. 168, I. P. Code, a public servant who engages himself in trade, in contravention of the rules under which he is legally not to do so, can be prosecuted under S. 168, I. P. Code, and such a prosecution is not barred or rendered unsustainable by R. 49. 52 Bom. L. R. 648=A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 233.

—S. 168—Applicability—"Engage in trade"—Meaning of—Bombay Civil Service Conduct, Discipline and Appeal Rules, 1932, R. 21—"Trade"—Public servant in office of Public Health Engineer—Preparation for money for outsiders of plans, estimates, etc.—Offence.

The word "trade" used in S. 168, I. P. Code, and in R. 21 of the Bombay Civil Services Conduct, Discipline and Appeal Rules, cannot be construed as being limited to its technical meaning, but must be construed in a wider sense as covering every kind of trade, business, profession or occupation. Where a public servant, employed in the office of the Public Health Engineer to the Government of Bombay, executes the work of preparing plans and estimates for schemes of drainage and water works for outsiders for money, it being his duty to handle such schemes in the course of his employment in the Government Department, it must be held that such public servant engages himself in trade and renders himself liable to conviction under S. 168, I. P. Code, as under R. 21, he is bound not to engage himself in trade. 52 Bom. L. R. 648=A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 233.

A member of a Municipal Committee in Berar, who becomes directly or indirectly interested in a contract with the Committee, in violation of S. 146 of the Berar Municipal Law, commits an offence not punishable under the Municipal Law, but punishable under S. 168, I.P.C. and S. 151 of the Municipal Law does not apply. 6 N.L.R. 114=11 Cr.L.J. 613=8 Ind. —S. 168—Police Officer—Carrying on trade—Police Act (V of 1861), S. 10.

The conduct of a police servant carrying on a shop comes within the prohibition contained in S. 10 of the Police Act and he is, therefore, liable to be convicted under S. 158, I.P.C. The words 'any employment or office whatever' in S. 10 of the Police Act are wide enough to cover the case of a Police Officer who engages in trade. 19 Cr.L.J. 152=48 Ind. Cas. 440 (Cal.)

Prosecution under S. 168, I.P.C., read with S. 34, U.P. District Boards Act need not be started on a complaint of the Board or of some person authorised by the Board. A.I.R. 1933 All. 543=34 Cr.L.J. 1208=1933 A.L.J. 1559=55 All. 798=146 Ind. Cas. 149 (2).

—S. 168—Sanction of Local Government.

It is open to a Court to take cognizance of an offence under S. 168, without previously obtaining the sanction of the Local Government. A complaint alleging that a member of a Municipal Committee had committed an offence under S. 168, can, therefore, be taken cognizance of without sanction.

A member who in his private capacity takes a contract with a Municipal Committee cannot be said to have done so "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty." A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 133=28 N.L.R. 156=34 Cr.L.J. 70=140 Ind. Cas. 711.

—S. 168—Sentence—Gross abuse of official position by public servant—Deterrent sentence—Necessity—Sentence of fine of Rs. 1,000 or simple imprisonment for three months in default—Sufficiency.

In the case of an offence by a public servant under S. 168 of engaging himself in trade, in a case of gross abuse of an official position by him extending over a fairly long time, the matter calls for deterrent punishment. A sentence of a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to suffer three months simple imprisonment, is grossly inadequate and must be enhanced. A sentence of simple imprisonment for 9 months and a fine of Rs. 5,000, and in default, further simple imprisonment for three months awarded in place of the punishment inflicted by the lower Court. 52 Bom. L. R. 648=A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 233.

Where the accused posed as a C.I.D. Officer and by so doing obtained the services of the Kamdar Mahar, services which he would not otherwise have obtained and which the Kamdar Mahar was bound to give on demand by a Government Officer:

Held, that the accused did an act under the colour of the office which he had assumed and was guilty of an offence under S. 170. A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 321=1941 N.L.J. 222=43 Cr.L.J. 79=1.L.R. (1942) Nag. 484=196 Ind. Cas. 759.

—S. 170.

C.I.D. Constable pretending to be Police Officer. The accused, a C.I.D. Constable, pretended to be a Police Officer, and as such demanded the production of the rahdari papers from people who had cattle with them:

Held, that he was guilty under S. 170. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 92=37 Cr.L.J. 81=159 Ind. Cas. 353.

—S. 170—'Under colour of office'—Personating C.I.D. Officer.

Accused went to the platform of a railway station without a ticket and obtained admission on the pretence that he was a C.I.D. Officer. Held, that his conviction under S. 170, I.P.C., was wrong. The mere assumption of false character without any attempt to do an official act is not sufficient to bring the offence within the meaning of S. 170, I. P. C. 3 Pat. L.J. 389=(1918) P.H.C.G. 287=4 Pat. L.W. 39=19 Cr.L.J. 209=43 Ind. Cas. 785.

—S. 170—Personating a public servant—Acts done in such assumed character—"An Act under-colour of such office".

Mere personation is insufficient to justify conviction under S. 170. The section, further requires that the offender should be shown to have attempted to do or to have done in such assumed character some act under colour of such office. The phrase "an act under colour of such office" points to acts which could not have been done without assuming official authority or responsibility and would not connote acts of a ministerial or mechanical character which might be done without requiring the justification of office in the person doing them. —S. 170—Personating a public servant—Act done by person not in office under colour of office—Offence.

Held, that a trial of the two offences under Ss. 170 and 175 together was illegal and contrary to the provisions of Ss. 232 and 235, Criminal P.C. and that the conviction should be set aside no further enquiry being necessary. A. I. R. 1933 Mad. 434=34 Cr. L. J. 1183=146 Ind. Cas. 195.

—S. 171-A—Applicability—Acts amounting to offence under S. 52, Madras District Municipalities Act no offence under Penal Code.

In the matter of the Election Offences Act (introduced as Chap. 9-A in the Penal Code) bearing on elections to the Legislative Council there is no section corresponding to S. 52, District Municipalities Act. If an allegation is made in the matter of an election to the Legislative Council that a candidate committed acts which would amount to an offence under S. 52, District Municipalities Act, it could not be an offence under the Election Offences Act relating to the Legislative Council. 122 Ind. —S. 171-B—Bribery.

Where a candidate for an election takes steps to dissuade the rival candidate from standing and offers money to the rival candidate through his agent for withdrawing the candidature, his conduct comes within the definition of 'bribery' contained in S. 171-B. —S. 171-C—Gosha voters—Circular that goshas should unveil themselves if identity is disputed—Validity.

There was a large number of Muhammadan gosha voters in a certain polling area. Booths were set apart for women, women Polling Officers were appointed and it was also ordered that only females could be appointed agents of candidates but the candidates themselves were admitted to the booths. The District Election Officer sent a circular subsequently that gosha ladies will have to unveil themselves in the polling booths if their identity was challenged by the candidates or their agents. A candidate insisted on each purda voter unveiling herself in accordance with this circular. He was subsequently elected but his election was set aside on the grounds (i) that the circular that goshas should unveil themselves was ultra vires and illegal and

Held, (i) that to prevent false personations in elections it was essential that candidates should have an opportunity of looking at the voters and the circular that gosha ladies will have to unveil themselves was not illegal or ultra vires;

(ii) that, in any event, the candidate was not guilty of any offence under S. 171-C, I.P.C. in insisting on gosha voters unveiling themselves in accordance with the circular, and the election was not liable to be set aside. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 27=39 M.L.W. 466=146 Ind. Cas. 572.

Held, on facts, that the circular that goshas should unveil themselves before candidate, was not illegal or ultra vires, and the candidate in calling them to unveil their faces for identification, was not guilty of any offence and election was not liable to be set aside. —S. 171-C—Offence—Essentials.

Where the complainant, a candidate for election, was prevented from coming out of his house and going to the voters by his rival candidate and the latter's supporters who were picketing the former's house:

Held, that the accused, the rival candidate, is not guilty of an offence under S. 171-C. 93 Ind. Cas. 692=7 Lah. 218=27 P.L.R. 190=27 Cr.L.J. 468=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 297.

Telling people not to vote and making false representations to them that voting would lead to increase of taxes and to confiscation of voters' properties are not an offence under S. 171 (c) and (f). —Ss. 171-D and 171-F—Punishment—Proper sentence—Fine—Adequacy.

It is the duty of magistrates to understand the necessity of purity in elections and to regard and punish the offence of personation in elections as a serious offence. A sentence of fine is a ludicrously inadequate punishment; the only proper sentence in such a case is one of rigorous imprisonment, whether it be a first offence or otherwise. I.L.R. (1947) Kar. 134=A.I.R. 1948 Sind 109=230 Ind. Cas. 37=48 Cr.L.J. 481.

—S. 171-D—Ingredients of offence.

Section 171-D is wide enough in its terms to cover the case of a man who knowing that he has no vote and knowing that another person bearing the same name as himself has a vote, applies for a voting paper in the name of that person, though that name be the same name as his own. But before he can be convicted under such circumstances, the prosecution must prove as in all other cases in which the burden lies upon them, the facts which bring the accused within the particular provisions of the section. A.I.R. 1937 Sind 21=38 Cr.L.J. 806=30 Sind L. R. 425=166 Ind. Cas. 640.

—S. 171-D.

It may well be argued that the word "personation" itself implies some corruption or fraud. A.I.R. 1937 Sind 21=38 Cr.L.J. 306=30 Sind L.R. 425=166 Ind. Cas. 640.

—S. 171-D.

Where it is not shown that the accused knew he was not entitled to vote in that there was upon the list the name of another person which name was the same as his own, no offence is committed within the section. A.I.R. 1937 Sind 21=38 Cr.L.J. 306=30 Sind L.R. 425=166 Ind. Cas. 640.

—S. 171-D—Applicability.

In a Municipal electoral roll Mohammad Din, son of Faqir Mohammad, was recorded as a person entitled to vote. The accused Mohammad Din whose father's name was admittedly Abdulla asked for a ballot paper in the name of Mohammad Din, son of Faqir Mohammad; and when questioned he asserted more than once that his father's name was Faqir Mohammad. The contention that the officer who prepared the electoral roll intended to put the accused on the register and that Mohammad Din, son of Faqir Mohammad had no existence at all, was not proved:

Held, that the accused was guilty of personation. 117 Ind. Cas. 883=30 Cr.L.J. 853=A.I.R. 1929 Lah.52.

—S. 171-E—Amount paid to club to pay off its debt and repair its premises with object of inducing its members to vote, is bribe.

A candidate may lawfully pay either an association of persons or an individual to work for him at an election, but he may only pay what is a reasonable sum on the particular work done. Where that payment is to a voter it may, however, amount to a bribe if the payment is out of all proportion to the work done or agreed to be done. Whether any particular payment by a candidate is or is not a bribe must always fall to be decided upon the particular facts of each case. Money paid to a club to pay off its debt and to repair its premises with the object of inducing those of its members who are voters to record their votes in favour of the candidate is a bribe. Whether the object was in fact achieved is immaterial. The motive of the briber and not the effect of the bribe is the test. A.I.R. 1942 Rang. 52=199 Ind. Cas. 110.

—S. 171-F—Ingredient of offence.

Mens rea is an ingredient in the offence under S. 171 (f) and where the corrupt intention is absent, the offence of personation cannot be committed: The Stepney Case, 4 O. ## —S. 171-F—False signature.

The offence of false preparation of signature sheet at an election being specifically described and designated by the legislature, it is not open to any Court to say that although the offence may be specifically one under S. 171 (f) of the Penal Code, it falls equally under S. 465 of the same Code and therefore, it is open to the Court to try the offender under either of the two sections. 84 Ind. ## —S. 171-F — Gist of offence — Fraudulently obtaining signature slip is no offence under S. 171 (f) read with S. 511.

The accused went to the officer who had the custody of signature slips. He did not give out his name but produced a certain piece of paper which bore a certain number. The officer looked at that number then looked at the electoral roll and discovered that against that number the name of one L appeared. On being asked by that officer if he was L, the applicant said he was. A patwari of the village was there and he said that the applicant was not L but was one M. There was a dispute and ultimately the applicant admitted that he was M and not L:

Held, that the obtaining of the "signature slip" was an act which by itself would not have amounted to an application for a voting paper. 84 Ind. Cas. 711=22 A.L.J. 1102=6 L.R.A.Cr. 20=26 Cr.L.J. 359=A.I.R. 1925 All. 226.

—S. 171-F—Lenient view.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—The system of election in India is still in its infancy, if not, in its experimental stage. The degree of solemnity that attaches to elections in England does not attach to elections in this country, and these possibly are the reasons that influenced the legislature in providing for comparatively lenient and alternative punishments for offenders committed at elections in India as compared with the punishments provided in England. 118 Ind. ## Publication that rival candidate is leper.

Publication by one of the candidates to an election against the other candidate that he is a leper, knowing it to be untrue, with the mala fide intention of injuring his reputation and humiliating him before the public, does not constitute an offence under S. 171-G. ## —Ss. 171-G, 499, 500.

It cannot be said that S. 171-G is a species of the more general offence of defamation or is carved out of

—S. 171-G—Defamatory statements about non-candidates.

It is only in the case of an offence under S. 171-G that previous sanction is necessary. And the offence defined in that section is the making of a false statement in relation to the personal character or conduct of a candidate at the election. It does not apply to defamatory statements made about persons who are not candidates. A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 316=1935 M.W.N. 1164=37 Cr.L.J. 629=162 Ind. Cas. 494.

—S. 171-G—General charges of misconduct.

General charges of misconduct are not statements of fact within the meaning of S. 171-G.

Where the important statements in question were that it appeared that because complainant committed fraud in respect of money in the fund office, he was removed by the General body or by the department, and complainant and (another) have removed from the list of voters the names of those who did not vote for them:

Held, that the first of the above statements may be construed as a statement of fact. The other statement that he removed the names of voters from the list of electors, that is, the names of those who did not vote for him at the previous election three years before, is a general statement, a general imputation of misconduct unaccompanied by any charge of particular acts not amounting to a statement of fact within the meaning of S. 171-G. A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 316=1935 M.W.N. 1164=37 Cr.L.J. 629=162 Ind. Cas. 494.

—S. 171-G—Essentials.

In order to constitute an offence under S. 171-G, something must be stated as a fact and not as a general imputation or as a matter of opinion.

Where during an election at which R was a candidate the accused published a document in which he stated that R and his father had no properties, that they will not shrink from committing even murder, that they were in enjoyment of some properties by virtue of an adoption which was false and opposed to law, that R's father had been making many kinds of forgeries, that they were doing many kinds of harm to the poor and that R was an atheist and that he was committing forgeries, misrepresentation and false personation, etc:

Held, that though in the document in question there were one or two statements which could properly be described as statements of fact, the bulk of it was taken up with general imputations of misconduct unaccompanied by any charges of particular acts of misconduct, which could not properly be described as statements of fact within the meaning of S. 171-G, Penal Code and sanction of the Government was not, therefore, necessary for the prosecution of the accused. A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 511=35 L.W. 753=33 Cr.L.J. 665=1932 M.W.N. 1086=63 M.L.J. 380=55 Mad. 791=138 Ind. Cas. 604.

—S. 172—Conditions of applicability.

Section 172, Penal Code, can apply only if a summons, notice or order is to be served on the accused, who absconded with a view to evading the service of such summons, notice or order. The order which the District Magistrate can pass under S. 552, Criminal P.C., is for the immediate restoration of the woman unlawfully detained to her liberty, or if she is a female child below 16 years, to her husband, parents, guardian or other person having the lawful charge of such child. An order of the District Magistrate directing the Police to produce the woman before him is not one under S. 552, Criminal P.C., at all. There is nothing in S. 552, Criminal P.C., which requires service of the order on any person. The order is one capable of execution, and the section lays down that the Magistrate "may compel compliance with such order using such force as may be necessary." Once an order under S. 552, Criminal P.C., has been passed, it is open to the Magistrate to use all lawful means to have the woman restored to her liberty. It is conceivable that, for that end, he may legally issue an appropriate direction to some other person in whose custody the woman may be. When the order of the District Magistrate is not one which can be considered to be, in substance or form, an order under S. 552, Criminal P.C., and he does not in that connection issue any summons, notice or order for service on the applicant and no attempt is or could be made to serve on him such summons, notice or order, S. 172, Penal Code, cannot apply. A.I.R. 1936 All. 354=1936 A.L.J. 373=1936 A.W.R. 210=37 Cr.L.J. 713=162 Ind. Cas. 755.

The provisions of S. 172 do not cover the absconding from a warrant of arrest. 113 Ind. Cas. 740=50 All. 666=9 A.I.Cr.R. 443=9 L.R.A.Cr. 68=30 Cr.L.J. 203=26 A.L.J. 443=A.I.R. 1928 All. 232.

—S. 172—Absconding in order to avoid being served with a summons notice or order—Running away to avoid arrest under a warrant.

S. 172 has no application in the case of a warrant which is not a 'summons, notice or order' and a conviction under that section for absconding in order to avoid being served with a warrant is bad in law. (1905) 2 C.L.J. 625=3 Cr.L.J. 117.

—S. 172—Evasion of warrant.

The accused commits contempt of Court by evading the warrants of the Sessions Court and also by having the misrepresentation made in his application of revision to court that he was in jail and should be released on bail. —S. 173—Getting away from the serving officer and shutting oneself in house amounts to "intentionally preventing service."

Personal service may be made either by delivering or tendering, but the tender must be real tender of a document which is understood by the person to be served, and he must have voluntarily waived actual delivery and indicated in some way that a tender was sufficient.

A man who gets away from the serving officer with the obvious intention of not allowing him to hold any communication with him at all and shuts himself in his house, is intentionally preventing service either by tender or by delivery. 107 Ind. Cas. 563=26 A.L.J.

Refusal to sign and return the duplicate is not an act which prevents the service of the citation within S. 173. 5 B. H. C. R. Cr. 34, 3 C. 621, A. W. N. 883, 222, 20 C. 358, Foll. 1. Complaint by whom to be made.

—S. 174—Complaint by whom to be made.

An offence under S. 174, is against the public servant before whom the accused fails to appear.

Where, therefore, the accused who was summoned as a prosecution witness in a case under S. 110, Criminal P. C., refused to take the summons and did not attend Court on the date fixed, the complaint must be made by the Magistrate in whose Court the case under S. 110, Criminal P. C., was pending and who had summoned the accused. Where there is no such complaint and the case is started on the complaint of the Sub-Inspector, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to convict the accused. 2. Forum of trial.

—S. 174—Forum of trial.

An offence under S. 174, Penal Code, is covered by S. 195, Criminal P. C., and as the exceptions provided in Ss. 480 and 485, Criminal P. C., do not apply to it, a Magistrate in whose Court the accused has failed to appear cannot try it. The prohibition is absolute and the consent or otherwise of the accused is immaterial. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 545=35 P.L.R. 454=36 Cr.L.J. 407 (2)=153 Ind. Cas. 514 (1).

3. Lawful orders—What are and what are not.

—S. 174—"Summons".

(Per Boys and Young, JJ.)—A citation issued to a person who is in arrear of Government revenue under S. 147, Land Revenue Act is not a summons within the meaning of S. 174, Penal Code and the person so served is not bound to appear in obedience to it and by his failure to attend he is not guilty under S. 174, Penal Code: (Sen, J. Contra). 123 Ind. Cas. 673=31 Cr.L.J. 546=1930 A.L.J. 354=A.I.R. 1930 All. 265.

—S. 174.

The issue of a citation to an alleged defaulter under S. 147 of the Land Revenue Act does not involve him in any legal liability to attend and therefore no offence under S. 174 is committed by non-appearance. 99 Ind. Cas. 409=25 A.L.J. 38=7 L.R.A.Cr. 177=28 Cr.L.J. 153=49 All. 215=A.I.R. 1927 All. 49.

—S. 174.

The issue of a citation to an alleged defaulter under S. 147 of the Land Revenue Act does not involve him in any legal liability to attend, and a person is not guilty of an offence punishable under S. 174 if he does not comply with such a citation. 99 Ind. #### —S. 174—Person disobeying the order under S. 147, U. P. Land Revenue Act, is liable.

Section 147, U. P. Land Revenue Act, when it gives a revenue official exercising fiscal functions authority to issue a citation to a defaulter to appear, gives him authority to order that person to appear before him and the person is obliged to appear before him if so ordered under the penalty laid down by S. 174, Penal Code: 13 O.C. 55, Foll.; A.I.R. 1927 All. 122, Diss. 106 Ind. #### —S. 174—U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1911, S. 147—Disobedience of citation.

Intentional disobedience of citation issued under S. 147 of U. P. Land Revenue Act is an offence under S. 174, I. P. C. 13 O. C. 55=11 C.L.J. 250=5 Ind. Cas. 805.

—S. 174—Order "ultra vires".

Section 36 does not authorize the District Magistrate to compel the attendance of an alleged tout in the proceedings or to receive orders in the case, and therefore he cannot be charged under S. 174, Penal Code, if he fails to attend the Court. 111 Ind. Cas. 672=6 Rang. 529=29 Cr.L.J. 912=A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 296.

—S. 174—Summons on wrong form.

Where in an application for action to be taken under S. 107 of the Cr. P. C. the Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed the Tahsildar to make inquiry into the matter and the latter sent summons to the parties on forms provided for cases under S. 193 of the Land Revenue Act, and on the parties failing to appear, convicted them under S. 174 of the Penal Code, Held that the proceedings were illegal ab initio, that the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was ultra vires that there was no summons issued according to law, and that the conviction is not maintainable. 59 Ind. Cas. 335=22 Cr.L.J. 79=L. R. 2 A. (Cr.) 3 (All.)

—S. 174—Failure to appear before Commissioner—Solicitor—Privilege.

A Court could not ask a solicitor to attend before it and produce the letter written to him by his client, but he could be asked to attend before it or a Commissioner and state whether he has received such a letter, without asking for contents. A solicitor absenting himself when called on to appear before a Court under a mistaken belief that he is asked to produce the letter, could not be held guilty. 42 Ind. Cas. 532 (Cal.)

—S. 174—Disobedience of summons wrongly issued.

—S. 174—Summons under Madras Revenue Summons Act (III of 1869), S. 1—Disobedience.

A Karnam, was summoned by the Tahsildar under S. 1 of the Madras Act III of 1869 to appear before him on a certain day for inquiring into correctness of sub-divisions of fields. He failed to appear and was convicted under S. 174, I. P. C. Held, (1) that the accused was rightly convicted of an offence under S. 174, I.P.C., though the inquiry for which accused was summoned was not held by the Tahsildar but by a subordinate officer. 8 M.L.T. 373=11 Cr. L.J. 566=8 Ind. Cas. 133.

—S. 174—Powers of Tahsildar.

Several persons, residents of villages near Almora, were summoned by the Tahsildar to serve as coolies and at their refusal to attend the Thasil were thereupon again summoned to appear at the Thasil to answer charge of non-attendance when summoned to attend as coolies. Held, that disobedience to the latter summons could not render the persons summoned liable to punishment under S. 174, inasmuch as the Thasildar had no authority to issue such a summons. 1904 A.W.N. 122=1 A.L.J. 263.

4. Non-attendance—When and when not offence.

—S. 174—Offence under—Requisites—Failure to comply with summons not specifying time but only mentioning place and day—If an offence.

It is essential in order to sustain a conviction under S. 174, I. P. Code, that the accused person should have been left in no doubt both as to the place and time at which his attendance is required. Hence a summons which although it specified the place and the day, but omitted the time, is a summons which is not sufficiently specific to justify a prosecution if it be not complied with. I.L.R. ##### —S. 174—Duty of medical officers to attend Court.

Medical Officers like other persons, are bound to attend Court on receipt of summons and to give evidence if required by the Court. They cannot refuse to give evidence for reasons which they may consider sufficient, but they should represent to the Court as regards the fees payable to them. Any declaration of terms is unnecessary and should be avoided. A.I.R. 1937 All. 768=1937 A.L.J. 972=39 Cr.L.J. 113=1937 A.W.R. 899 (1)=172 Ind. Cas. 31.

—S. 174—Inability to attend—Accused an advocate—Summons on—Pleader appearing for—Advocate engaged elsewhere on date of hearing—No offence.

Magistrate ordered the issue of summons to the petitioner, who was a barrister, to appear on the 12th April and answer a charge under the Burma Motor Vehicles Act. The summons was not served till 5 p. m. on the 11th April. Next morning another Barrister, appeared before the Magistrate on petitioner's behalf and stated that the petitioner was appearing as counsel in a case before the High Court and that therefore he was unable to attend. The learned Magistrate noted that the explanation was unsatisfactory but adjourned the case till 19th April 1923. On the 19th, the petitioner duly appeared and after the motor case had been disposed of was called upon to answer another charge namely that of disobeying the summons to attend on the 12th:

Held, that no offence under S. 174 was made out.

Held, further that the petitioner did not intend to disobey the summons but, placed as he was, he found himself unable to abandon his client's interests and therefore instructed a barrister to represent the circumstances to the Magistrate. 76 Ind. Cas. 693=1 Rang. 549=2 Bur.L.J. 146=25 Cr. L. J. 229=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 35.

What is made punishable by law under S. 174 is an intentional disobedience to the summons of a Court. The word 'intentional' does not appear to have been defined in the I.P.C. but it has been interpreted to mean non-attendance which amounts to wilful disobedience. 10 W.R. 33 (Cr.); 22 P.R. 1880, Foll. 72 Ind. —S. 174—Officer—Direct service of summons.

Disobedience to summons served on an amin personally by a Police Sub-Inspector to give evidence at a police investigation is an offence under S. 174, I.P.C., which requires serving through heads of departments only in cases of summons issued by a Court of Justice. Such matters should be departmentally dealt with and prosecution should be generally after consultation with the delinquent's official superior. 18 Cr.L.J. 733=40 Ind. Cas. 733 (Mad.)

—S. 174—Failure of complainant to attend—Prosecution for disobedience, whether justifiable.

Where a complainant was ordered to appear on the day of hearing on penalty that his complaint was liable to be dismissed for his absence, a prosecution for disobedience of any order is illegal as there was no order for his personal appearance, nor would such an order be justified. 2 Lah. L.J. 539.

—S. 174—Summons—Non-attendance.

For a conviction under S. 174, the summons must have been issued by a public servant legally competent as such to issue the same and that the accused must have intentionally omitted to attend. 15 Cr.L.J. 595=12 A.L.J. 680=25 Ind. Cas. 347.

—S. 174—Failure to attend—Case not taken up that day—Failure not culpable.

Where the complainant was ordered to attend Court on the date fixed for the hearing of the case and he failed to attend but the Magistrate did not take up the case owing to some other demand on his time, Held, that the complainant could not be convicted of an offence under S. 174, I.P.C., under circumstances of the case. 3 S.L.R. 155=10 Cr.L.J. 576=4 Ind. Cas. 410.

—S. 174—Vakil — Professional misconduct — Munsiff, jurisdiction of—Disobedience of order.

A Munsiff called upon a vakil to show cause on the 22nd November why a report should not be made against him to the High Court for gross professional misconduct. On the same date the vakil put in a written explanation and the matter was ordered to be put up on the 6th December for order. On the 6th December, the Vakil did not appear. Later, on the 20th December, proceeding was drawn up for the prosecution of the vakil under S. 174, for non-appearance on the 6th December. Held, that there was no order enjoining upon the vakil to appear personally before the Munsif on the 6th December, and the proceeding under S. 174, ought to be quashed and was accordingly set aside. Held also, that when the vakil had been called upon to offer an explanation, which he did on the 22nd of November to all intents and purposes this was a sufficient compliance with the order. Quaero.—Whether the Munsif had jurisdiction to take proceedings against the vakil in the way he did. —S. 174—Summons not addressed to any one—Omission to attend—Offence.

When a summons is not addressed to any one in particular, but is served on a party, a pleader, her omission to attend is not an offence under S. 174. (1902) 6 C.W.N. 927.

—S. 174 — Summons served in pleader — Validity of—Service good as to suits how far good as to offence under S. 174.

Service of summons which may be good as to suit need not be good so as to make a person liable under S. 174. Service on one's pleader is not good service so as to make one liable under S. 174, for omission to attend. (1902) 6 C.W.N. 927.

—S. 174—Witnesses' refusal to allow commission inquiry to be held in witnesses' house—Consent by pleader, effect.

Where a person's pleader is served with a notice that such person will be examined in her house on commission, and the pleader had no authority to consent to that, her refusal to allow the commission inquiry to be held there is no offence under S. 174. (1902) 6 C.W.N. 927.

—S. 174—Notice to accused to appear—Appearance by agent—Agent's request to dispense with personal appearance—Notice to show cause why accused should not be committed for contempt—Motion before District Magistrate and High Court.

Where an accused who had been asked to appear and plead to a charge appears by agent and requests that his personal appearance should be dispensed with, it will not be an exercise of proper discretion to charge the accused for contempt under S. 174. He should be asked to appear personally on or within a day named and if he failed to appear, then proceedings may be taken for contempt. An accused is entitled to move the District Magistrate and the High Court to direct the Magistrate to dispense with his personal appearance and such application cannot make the appearance by agent a contempt of court or aggravate the contempt if any. —S. 175 — Withholding documents — Mere suspicion.

Where it appeared that the petitioner was amply justified on the respondent's own statements in supposing that there are other accounts that the defendant had knowledge of and access to, and that he was evading disclosing them to the Court:

Held, that this raised the deepest suspicion but was not sufficient to establish a charge of contempt of Court. To establish such charges, it is essential to prove that in fact there are in the case other documents which had been deliberately withheld. A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 132=161 Ind. Cas. 738.

—S. 176—Recovery of excess rent.

A Village Munsif was convicted under S. 176 of the I. P. C. for not giving information to a police of the loss of a jewel or theft of it in a certain person's house. It was held that as the information did not relate to the commission of a non-bailable offence which the Village Munsif was bound to communicate to the police under S. 45 (1) (c) of the C. P. C., his conviction was illegal. 5 M.L.T. 257=9 Cr.L.J. 224=1 Ind. Cas. 245.

—S. 176—Suspicious death in Master's house—Servants liability.

Under certain specified circumstances covered by S. 45 of the Cr. P. Code, 1898, the concealment of suspicious death is punishable under S. 176, I. P. —S. 177—Offence under—Ingredients—False information in sale-deed.

S. 177 of the Penal Code lays down two ingredients, firstly, that a person must be legally bound to furnish information on the particular subject to the public servant, and secondly, that he must furnish, as true, information on that subject which he knows or has reason to believe to be a false. Hence even if it be taken that under S. 21 of the Registration Act that the executants of a sale-deed were legally bound to furnish true information regarding the property, the Court is bound to see before convicting the executants for a wrong statement in it, to consider and decide whether they knew or had reason to believe the information furnished to be false. 51 Cr.L.J. 883=A.I.R. 1950 Ajmer 19 (2).

Person submitting income-tax return false his knowledge is guilty of an offence under S. 177, Penal Code. (1937) 20 N.L.J. 214.

—Ss. 177, 182—Person must be legally bound to give information.

Section 177, Penal Code, has no application to a case in which a false statement has been made to the Police by a person who was under no legal obligation or who was not legally bound to give that information. Such a person may be liable for prosecution under S. 182, Penal Code. To bring a case under S. 177, Penal Code, it is absolutely necessary to prove that the informant was legally bound to give the information, which is proved to be false, to the Police.

The words, "any subject" occurring in S. 177, Penal Code, have reference to the matters enumerated in S. 45, Criminal P. C., or to matters about which a person is "legally bound" to give information under some other law, and to no other subjects.

A mukhia of a village who had taken away a girl from the village, signed a panchayatnama stating that a certain girl had died by having been drowned and sent it to the Police. The accused was prosecuted under S. 177, Penal Code:

Held, (Per Sulaiman, C. J. and Rachhpal Singh, J.; Bennett, J. contra), that as none of the events enumerated in Cl. (d) of S. 45, Criminal P. C. had happened, it could not be said that the accused was legally bound to give any information to the Police and that the false information which he gave to the Police did not bring his case within the four corners of S. 177, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1936 All. 788=38 Cr.L.J. 57=1936 A.L.J. 1064=1936 A.W.R. 905=1 L.R. (1937) All. 162=165 Ind. Cas. 769.

—Ss. 177 and 43—Incorrect post-mortem report by Municipal doctor.

Under an arrangement between the Municipality of B and the Bombay Government, the accused Medical Officer employed by the Municipality was to conduct post-mortem examination of the bodies sent to him by Police and to submit the results in the form prescribed by the Government. The remuneration for each examination was fixed at Rs. 4. According to R. 9, Civil Medical Code, every examination for medico-legal purposes should be complete; and according to R. 10 (i), information on each point referred to in the form was to be recorded and R. 14 required that the copy of the examination should be forwarded to the Police Sub-Inspector. Two dead bodies were sent to the accused by the Sub-Inspector on July 23, 1933. The bodies were those of two brothers. One of the bodies was lying on the ground. Without opening either of the bodies, the accused reported the one as too decomposed to permit any examination of the internal organs, and as regards the other he made a detailed report. Next day, by an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under S. 176, Criminal P.C., the bodies were exhumed and on another post-mortem examination by the Civil Surgeon, the bodies were found to have no post-mortem incisions. The accused was thereupon tried for offences under Ss. 177 and 197, Penal Code, and found guilty. On appeal:

Held, (i) that S. 43, Penal Code covered a breach of contract, and not merely a tort. The breach of contract, however, must be one which furnishes ground for a civil action, that is to say, in respect of which damages could be obtained under S. 73 of the Contract Act, or which could be enforced specifically;

(ii) the contract to examine the body was a contract between the applicant, and the Municipality and it was difficult to see how the Municipality could suffer any damage by the breach of that contract, and there was no evidence that they did in fact suffer any damage. If this was so, the act of the applicant would not give rise to a civil action and could not be the foundation of a prosecution under S. 177, Penal Code;

(iii) there was no satisfactory evidence on the record of any contract between the applicant and Government and unless there was such a contract the applicant was not legally bound to furnish information as to these bodies within S. 177, Penal Code;

(iv) the applicant did not commit an offence under S. 177, however, reprehensible his conduct may have been. A. I. R. 1934 Bom. 202=36 Bom. L. R. 373=58 Bom. 491=35 Cr.L.J. 1429=151 Ind. Cas. 867.

—S. 177—Filing of false return as to income without being served with notice—If offence—Income-tax Act, S. 22 (2).

A person who furnishes false information to a public servant, when he is not legally bound to furnish the information, cannot be convicted of an offence under S. 177, Penal Code. Consequently, when a person who is not served with a notice under S. 22 (2), Income-tax Act, files a false return, he cannot be convicted under S. 177. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 626=35 P.L.R. 544=36 Cr.L.J. 176=15 Lah. 832=152 Ind. Cas. 682.

—S. 177—Lawyer absconding deliberately keeping assessable income out of return.

Where the accused, a lawyer, deliberately kept out of the income-tax return certain assessable income and instead of being ready and willing to put matters right, persisted in maintaining what he ought to have known was a false defence to the charges preferred against him, and it appeared that if he had included this income also in his return the income-tax he would have to pay would have been raised by Rs. 3000, and he was fined only Rs. 1000 by the District Judge:

Held, that the offence must be regarded as a serious one, bearing in mind the deleterious effect that it may have, unless other persons are deterred from acting in like manner, upon the position of the general body of tax-payers and that a mere fine of Rs. 1,000 was not sufficient but in addition to a sentence of one month's simple imprisonment should be awarded. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 292=35 Cr.L.J. 131=146 Ind. Cas. 653.

—S. 177—Essentials—Income Tax Act, S. 52.

The essence of offence under S. 52, Income tax Act and Penal Code, S. 177 lies in the verification of an untrue statement, and provided the statement was deliberately false or not believed to be true, subsequent rectification cannot make it any the less an offence, though it may be considered as an extenuating circumstance in awarding sentence. 120 Ind. Cas. 435=1930 A.L.J. 26=31 Cr.L.J. 88=1929 Cr.C. 647=A.I.R. 1929 All. 919.

—S. 177—Accidental explosion—Injury to property—Explosive Sub. Act, S. 8—Obligation to give notice to Police—Intention.

Under S. 8 of the Explosive Substances Act, the primary requisite to give notice, is accidental explosion and not serious injury to property. S. 177 of the Penal Code will not apply unless the omission to give notice was intentional. 8 Bur. L. T. 288=16 Cr.L.J. 622=30 Ind. Cas. 446.

—S. 177—Under-valuation, whether false information.

Where a person in a return under the Road Cess and Public Works Act represented rent payable to him in respect of the subordinate holding to be in excess of that which the Magistrate found that the tenant was actually bound to pay, he could not be convicted under S. 177, I. P. C., since he did not under-value the property. 13 C.W.N. 191=5 M.L.T. 93=11 Cr.L.J. 11=4 Ind. Cas. 578.

—S. 177—False statement to public officer—Land—Acquisition Act, S. 9—Absence of statement on record—Issue of process.

A complaint that the accused made a false statement in response to a call for information under S. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act is not sustainable in the absence of the written statements on which the charge is founded, and in the absence of reference to any specific statement or statements on which the accusation was made; and the magistrate would not be exercising proper discretion in issuing process on such a vague complaint. (1900) 5 C.W.N. 131=27 Cal. 985.

—S. 177—False statement—Land Acquisition Act, S. 9—Statement under consideration in High Court in Land Acquisition appeal—Prosecution.

Where the statement of a person called upon to furnish information under S. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act is alleged to be false, no prosecution for such information ought to be started until the civil court has finally disposed of the land acquisition case before it. Held, where lessor and lessee were both concerned in a Land Acquisition case, the lessor should not be prosecuted for false statement so long as the lessee's case was under consideration before the High Court as the statements of the lessor and lessee could not be distinguished. (1900) 5 C.W.N. 131=27 Cal. 985.

A charge under S. 177, Penal Code within the meaning of S. 40 of the Income-Tax Act can be legally tried only at the place where the verification is made. 68 Ind. Cas. 843=45 Mad. 839=16 M.L.W. 335=31 M.L.T. 282=1922 M.W.N. 690=23 Cr.L.J. 619=A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 50=43 M.L.J. 475.

—S. 179—Refusal to answer questions touching a subject on which he is bound to state the truth.

An examination of the complainant as a witness for the prosecution of persons who have already been committed to Sessions on his own complaint, is relevant and the Magistrate has a discretion to require the complainant as a witness under S. 219, Criminal P. C. Where, therefore, the Magistrate finds that on such examination the complainant is guilty of refusing to answer questions touching a subject on which he was bound to state the truth and takes proceedings against him under S. 480, Criminal P. C. and convicts him under S. 179, Penal Code the conviction should be upheld. A.I.R. 1935 All. 267=36 Cr.L.J. 446=1935 A.L.J. 299=1935 A.W.R. 123=153 Ind. Cas. 907.

Where during cross-examination a witness was asked as to what was the result of a case and instead of answering in the affirmative or in the negative, he said, "I do not know," and subsequently said that the case was dismissed, and the witness was prosecuted and convicted under S. 179:

Held, that the Magistrate was not justified in assuming that the witness before him was aware of the result of the case and deliberately stated that he did not know and that the witness could not be considered to have refused to answer the questions put to him as he gave perfectly rational answers and there was no reason for the Magistrate to hold that the witness declined to answer. #### —S. 180—Refusal to sign record under S. 342—Criminal P. C.

Where the Magistrate put questions to the accused under S. 342, Criminal P. C., but the accused refused to answer, the record will contain only the questions and the note that the accused refused to answer the questions. Such a record has to be signed by the accused. If he refuses to sign he obstructs the process of the Court and is liable to punishment under S. 180, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1935 All. 652=36 Cr.L.J. 1098=1935 A.L.J. 1058=1935 A.W.R. 800=157 Ind. —S. 181—Person making false statement in affidavit.

The mere swearing of the affidavit does not make the statement contained therein a piece of evidence which a Court would be bound to admit in a judicial proceeding within the meaning of S. 3, Evi. Act. In receiving that statement, the Magistrate before whom it is sworn is not receiving something which is intrinsically evidence and is therefore not acting in the exercise of any authority to receive evidence. The Magistrate does not satisfy the definition in S. 4, Oaths Act, of a Court or person authorized to administer oaths and affirmations. Consequently, a person making a false statement in such affidavit is not guilty of an offence under S. 181, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 657=43 C.W.N. 1033=41 Cr. L. J. 21=I.L.R. —S. 181—Prosecution under—Power of Appellate Court to change it to one under S. 198.

Where prosecution is legally instituted by the Civil Court under S. 181, Penal Code, the Appellate Court can under S. 423, Criminal P. C., alter the finding to one under S. 193, Penal Code, and convict under it. Even if the prosecution has been launched under an inappropriate section, the Appellate Court has power to do this. (a) General

(b) Ss. 182 and 211.

1 (a). Applicability and scope—General.

—S. 182—Applicability—Cognizable and non-cognizable offences.

Section 182 says nothing about cognizable or non-cognizable offences or anything of the kind. The only question to be considered is whether the report is false and whether it was calculated to induce the public officer to do something or omit something which he ought not to have done or omitted. A.I.R. 1943 All. 96=1942 A.L.J. 576=44 Cr. L. J. 342=1942 A.W.R. (H.C.) 336 (2)=204 Ind. Cas. 639.

—S. 182—Person giving information to Police about non-cognizable offence—Complaint found false.

Section 182 makes no distinction between information relating to a cognizable offence and one relating to a non-cognizable offence; nor is there anything in that section to justify the conclusion that it applies only to cases in which the information given to any public servant relates to a cognizable offence. In that illusts. (a) and (b) to S. 182 show that that section applies as much to information relating to a non-cognizable offence as to one about a cognizable offence. When a false report is made to the Police, the question in deciding as to whether it amounts to an offence under S. 182 is not whether the report is one of a cognizable crime but whether it is of such a nature as might be supposed to lead the Police to make use of their lawful powers to the injury or annoyance of any person.

Hence, where a person makes a complaint to the Police of a non-cognizable offence and it is found that the complaint was false and frivolous, he can be convicted under S. 182. A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 413=1940 O.W.N. 655=41 Cr. L. J. 778=16 Luck. 55=1940 A.W.R. 305=189 Ind. Cas. 655.

—S. 182—False report to police.

In deciding as to whether a false report made to the Police amounts to an offence under S. 182, the question is not whether the report was one of a cognizable crime but whether it was of such a nature as might be supposed to lead the Police to make use of their lawful powers to the injury or annoyance of any person. A.I.R. 1936 All. 313=1936 A.L.J. 253=1936 A.W.R. 273=37 Cr. L. J. 562 (1)=162 Ind. Cas. 338.

—Ss. 182, 498—Complaint to Superintendent of Police of non-cognizable offence.

Where a person merely makes a complaint to the Superintendent of Police of a non-cognizable offence under S. 498, Penal Code, the Police cannot take any action in respect of that offence and no prosecution under S. 182 can be legally maintained in respect of such information whether the information be true or not. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 374=34 Cr. L. J. 1149=10 O.W.N. 755=145 Ind. Cas. 819.

—S. 182—False report to police—Non-cognizable offence.

False report of a non-cognizable offence made to police officer without expecting any action on his part cannot form the ground of conviction under S. 182. 21 Cr. L. J. 576=18 A.L.J. 636=57 Ind. Cas. 96.

—S. 182—Information to Police about missing of animal.

Where the accused reported to the Police that his buffalo was missing, and the Police directed a case under S. 379, Penal Code and it was subsequently established that he had sold the animal to a person against whom the accused wanted to get up a case:

Held, that the report, not being the report of a cognizable or non-cognizable offence, did not in itself call for any action on the part of the Police Officer to whom it was made, and hence fell short of fulfilling the conditions necessary to justify a conviction under S. 182. A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 170 (1)=13 P.L.T. 83=33 Cr. L. J. 314=136 Ind. Cas. 447 (1).

—S. 182—Applicability—Statements in course of investigation.

The information which is penalised under S. 182, Penal Code, is an information which is intended to cause or known to be likely to cause the public servant concerned to take action. Where information within the meaning of the section had already been given and the law already set in motion, further statements made in the course of investigation would not be further information falling under S. 182. I. P. Code. 1946 P.W.N. 146=13 B.R. 260=228 Ind. Cas. 583=48 Cr. L. J. 264=A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 64.

—Ss. 182 and 500—Applicability Memorial to Government officers.

Dafamatory allegations against Govt. servant—Govt. servant filing complaint stating therein that the charges were false and were made mala fide with intention to secure his removal from service and that his reputation was affected—Magistrate taking the complaint on file under S. 182:

Held, that the complaint was under S. 500 and not under S. 182. A. I. R. 1941 Mad. 805=1941 M.W.N. 676.

—S. 182—Withholding of information.

Section 182 makes punishable the positive act of giving false information. There is nothing in the section showing that it intends to punish the withholding of information as distinct from the actual giving of information. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 15=41 Cr. L. J. 368=42 P.L.R. 771=I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 396=186 Ind. Cas. 703.

—Ss. 182 and 109.

A person instigating another to make a false report can be convicted under S. 182 read with S. 109. A.I.R. 1937 All. 755=1937 A.L.J. 881=39 Cr.L.J. 102=1937 A.W.R. 865=172 Ind. Cas. 23.

A false charge must be made to an officer who has power to investigate and send it up for trial. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 83=4 B.R. 274=16 Pat. 571=19 P.L.T. 51=39 Cr.L.J. 314=173 Ind. Cas. 432.

—S. 182—Public Servant—Information to any but a public servant as defined by Code—No offence.

No offence under S. 182, Indian Penal Code can be made out where it is not suggested that false information was given to a public servant as defined by the Indian Penal Code, quite apart from the consideration that it was given without and beyond British India. 77 Ind. Cas. 189=47 Bom. 907=25 Bom. L. R. 772=25 Cr.L.J. 333=A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 51.

—S. 182—Complaint to public servant, whether necessary.

No complaint to a public servant is necessary for a conviction under S. 182, I. P. C. 1 L. W. 847=15 Cr.L.J. 672=25 Ind. Cas. 1000.

—S. 182.

Section 177 has no application to a case in which a false statement has been made to the Police by a person who was under no legal obligation to give that

—S. 182—Intention.

A driver of a motor car was driving without licence. The Superintendent of Police asked for his name and he gave a false and fictitious name. The effect of the false information was that difficulties and obstacles were put in the way of his prosecution:

Held, that although the effect of the wrong information was merely to obstruct the prosecution of the real offender, yet it is the intention in the mind of the informant, that is important. In giving the false name the driver's intention was to cause the police officer to take steps for the prosecution of a person, who did not exist and to omit to take steps against himself. The false information given by him, therefore, came within the mischief of S. 182 (a). 113 Ind. Cas. 587=7 Pat. 715=10 P.L.T. 244=30 Cr.L.J. 177=11 A.I.Cr.R. 567=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 4.

A person who makes a false statement in his petition cannot be held to have committed an offence under S. 182 simply because his claim is not substantiated, even assuming that some false statement, which was not directly the subject of complaint, was made with the object of inducing and that he did induce the Court to take some action, as it cannot be said that the Court was thereby induced to do what it ought not to have done. 109 Ind. Cas. 805=10 A. I. Cr. R. 320=29 Cr.L.J. 613=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 574.

—S. 182—No offence.

Person identifying before Treasury Officer another as the proper payee of a certain money, rashly and without taking care to ascertain as to the truth of his identity is not guilty under S. 182 or S. 420, where it is held that his intention was not dishonest. 99 Ind. Cas. 57=44 C.L.J. 230=28 Cr.L.J. 25=7 A.I.Cr.R. 177=A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 78.

—S. 182—Applicability.

For a conviction under S. 182, it is not necessary that the false report must be taken down from dictation. 6 A.L.J. 236, Dissented from. 95 Ind. Cas. 598=3 O.W.N. Sup. 96=27 Cr.L.J. 822=A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 448.

—S. 182—Affidavits.

Criminal case—Transfer application by complainant's advocate—Affidavit by third person in support of petition—False information in—Deponent if liable. 83 Ind. Cas. 343=25 Cr.L.J. 1383=1925 M.W.N. 146=20 M.L.W. 624=A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 123=47 M. L. J. 658.

—S. 182—Petition not signed.

An accused may be convicted under S. 182 of the I.P.C. though the petition containing the information given by him is not actually signed by him. 1 C.W.N. 452 (not applied). 3 S.L.R. 132=11 Cr.L.J. 3=4 Ind. Cas. 477.

—Ss. 182, 415, 419 and 511—False representation to a public servant—Production of certificate referring to another man—Offence.

An ex karnam desiring to be reinstated in his post produced a certificate of having passed an examination; in fact, the certificate referred to some other man having the same name. Held, that when the representation is not shown to cause or likely to cause damage or harm to the officer concerned either in body, mind, reputation or property within S. 415, I.P.C., no conviction could be sustained under Ss. 419 and 511, I.P.C., though the facts might constitute an offence under S. 182, I.P.C. 19 M.L.J. 271=4 M. L. T. 324=8 Cr. L. J. 421=3 Ind. Cas. 609.

—S. 182—Scope—Liability of abettor.

A person at whose instance another person makes a false report to the police cannot be tried under S. 182, I.P.C.

A Sub-Divisional Officer is wrong in treating as complaint, a report by police that a certain person made a false report. 6 A.L.J. 236=9 Cr. L. J. 518=2 Ind. Cas. 200.

—S. 182—False information to village magistrate.

A person who gives false information to a village magistrate for the purpose of being passed on to the Station House Officer whose bounden duty it was so to pass is guilty of an offence under S. 182, 4 M. 211 held not to apply to S. 182 under the Code of 1898. (1905) 28 M. 565.

1 (b). Applicability and scope—Ss. 182 and 211.

—Ss. 182 and 211—Section applicable.

Giving false information to the police is an offence under S. 182 as well as S. 211. 10 A.L.J. 429=13 Cr.L.J. 855=17 Ind. Cas. 791.

—Ss. 182 and 211—False report to Police.

An offence falling under S. 182, is included in the more serious offence falling under S. 211, and a prosecution for a false charge may be either under S. 182, or S. 211, though clearly if S. 211 does apply and the false charge is serious a prosecution should be under the more serious S. 211. But this does not mean that where a person makes a false complaint to the Police and the offence under S. 182, is complete, and the Police in conformity with the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P. C., file a complaint and a prosecution is lodged under S. 182, the proceedings under S. 182 must subsequently be quashed if the accused not content with the false report to the Police subsequently makes a false complaint on the same facts to a Magistrate in addition and thereby exposes himself to a prosecution under S. 211, I. P. C. The proceedings under S. 182 cannot be quashed on the ground that the trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the accused without sanction of the Court in which the subsequent false complaint was lodged especially when the accused has raised no such objection to the validity of the proceedings, but does so only after he had been convicted and sentenced under S. 182. Consequently, the conviction under S. 182 is not illegal. A. I. R. 1943 Lah. 31=I. L. R. 1942 Lah. 675=44 Cr.L.J. 305=204 Ind. Cas. 572.

—Ss. 182, 211—Facts disclosing offences under Ss. 211 and 182.

Where all the facts of a complaint taken together disclose an offence under S. 211, I. P. C., the Court is not debarred from enquiring into the offence simply because an offence under S. 182, I. P. C., is also disclosed and for the trial of such an offence a written complaint from the public servant concerned is necessary. A. I. R. 1937 Mad. 8=1936 M. W. N. 641=71 M.L. J. 485=44 M.L.W. 631=37 Cr.L. J. 1134=59 Mad. 1083=165 Ind. Cas. 292.

—Ss. 182 and 211—Graver and minor offences—False report to police and false complaint to Magistrate—Conviction therefor under S. 182—Legality.

It is true that the two complaints, both false in the same particulars, may be regarded as so closely connected that independent prosecutions and convictions for two offences are undesirable; and in the ordinary way if a prosecution takes place, it should be for the more serious of the two offences committed. This may, no doubt, be a good ground for quashing proceedings under the minor section in their early stages, but when there has been no prosecution for the more serious offence and a person has been prosecuted for the minor offence and the whole case is complete, there is no reason for holding that the conviction is illegal.

The accused laid an information to the police charging a person with robbery, which was thrown out as false. Subsequently, the accused filed a complaint making the same allegation and the Magistrate on the police report threw it out under S. 203, Cr. P. Code. Meantime, the police had laid a complaint against the accused under S. 182 and the accused was found guilty and convicted:

Held, that though the offence fell both under S. 182 and S. 211, the conviction under S. 182 could not be regarded as illegal. A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 243, Not Foll. 128 Ind. Cas. 836=8 Rang. 499=1931 Cr. C. 28=A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 12.

—Ss. 182 and 211—Under S. 182, accused must have known or believed information to be false while under S. 211 if he had reasons to believe it to be false it is enough.

Under S. 211 of the Penal Code if the accused makes his complaint without any just grounds and acts without due care or caution it is enough to constitute an offence. But under S. 182 the information given to a public servant should not only be false in fact but it must be false to the knowledge or belief of the informant and the mere fact that the accused had reasons to believe it to be false is not sufficient. 82 Ind. Cas. 718=19 S.L.R. 91=25 Cr.L.J. 1358=A.I.R. 1925 Sind 184.

—S. 182 and 211—Distinction between.

An offence under S. 182 is committed when an information false to the accused's knowledge, is given to a public servant, but under S. 211 the accused should have instituted or caused to be instituted against another some criminal proceedings through a definite accusation and not by a mere expression of a suspicion. (1917) M.W.N. 875=19 Cr.L. J. 28=42 Ind. Cas. 998.

—Ss. 182 and 211—Distinction between—Sanction—Evadion of.

S. 182 is to be interpreted not in isolation but in association with S. 211 and it applies to cases when the information to the public servant falls short of amounting to the institution of criminal proceedings against a defined person and falls short of amounting to the false charging of a defined person with an offence as defined in the Penal Code. Where the information amounts to such an institution and such false charging, S. 211 will apply. Where a matter comes under S. 211 which requires sanction for prosecution thereunder, it will be an evasion of the salutary provision of law to proceed under S. 182 without sanction. 15 Bom. L.R. 574=14 Cr.L.J. 491=20 Ind. Cas. 747.

—Ss. 182, 211—Proof—Essentials.

Onus:—To bring a case under S. 211, it is enough for the prosecution to prove that there was no just or lawful ground for the action taken and that the accused knew it. To bring a case under S. 182, not merely absence of reasonable and probable cause for giving the information, but a positive knowledge or belief of the falsity of the information given in the accused should be established. S. 182 does not impose criminal liability for mere want of caution before giving the information, however reckless and rash might be the conduct of the accused. (1906) 9 Bom. L.R. 33=31 B. 204.

A prosecution for the minor offence under S. 182 when it is doubtful whether the facts alleged constitute a graver offence under S. 211, is legal. 37 All. 110=13 A.L.J. 53=16 Cr.L.J. 159=27 Ind. Cas. 223.

—Ss. 182, 211—False complaint against unknown persons.

An offence, constituted by a false complaint against unknown persons is not one under S. 211, but one under S. 182. It is, therefore, within the competence of the Police authorities concerned to complain of that offence and within the competence of the Magistrate, on receiving that complaint, to issue summons under S. 182. A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 288=42 Cr.L.J. 624=194 Ind. Cas. 799.

—S. 182—Comparative scope.

Sections 182 and 211, Penal Code in reality differ fundamentally as regards the ingredients of the offence concerned.

Section 182 is primarily intended for cases of false information which do not ordinarily involve a particular allegation or charge against a specified and definite person. S. 211 covers cases where there is a definite information or charge with reference to a criminal offence against a particular person. 105 Ind. Cas. 454=29 N.L.R. 136=10 N.L.J. 191=28 Cr.L.J. 934=9 A.L.Cr.R. 87=A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 17.

Accused giving information to Police resulting in arrest of third person on charge of murder—Third person discharged—Accused is responsible for his prosecution and is guilty under S. 211 and not under S. 182. A.I.R. 1939 Sind 274=41 Cr.L.J. 8=184 Ind. Cas. 243.

—Ss. 182 and 211.

Telegrams sent to Deputy Commissioner, etc., alleging offence by Sub-Inspector—Allegations found false on inquiry—No proof that telegrams were sent with a view that authorities should take criminal proceedings against the person charged—No offence under S. 211 is committed but offence under S. 182 is committed. A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 66=37 Cr.L.J. 604=162 Ind. Cas. 140.

—Ss. 182 and 211.

Woman demanding investigation and punishment to Sub-Inspector who was alleged to have raped her—Sub-Inspector found not guilty of charge—Complaint by Sub-Inspector against woman for false charge—Held woman was guilty of offence under S. 211 and not under S. 182. A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 69=17 M.L.J. 189.

—Ss. 182 and 211—False report to Police and also false complaint to Magistrate—Proceedings started—Proceedings under S. 211 are appropriate—But proceedings under S. 182 are not illegal.

Where there have been Court proceedings in consequence of a false report to the police, then S. 211 is the appropriate section to apply, and is so in any event, where the case is a serious one.

But this does not of necessity make a prosecution under Section 182 illegal. It is a question of expediency whether the High Court will quash the conviction for the minor offence under section 182 and direct a trial for the graver one under section 211. 64 Ind. Cas. 839=11 L.B.R. 43=A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 43.

—Ss. 182, 211—False charge to police officer—Cognizable offence.

When a false charge is made to the police of a cognizable offence the offence committed by the person making the false charge falls within the meaning of S. 211 and not S. 182 17 C. 570, foll. (1901) 5 C.W.N. 727.

—Ss. 182, 211—Complaint to District Registrar—Departmental enquiry—Judicial proceeding.

See Cr.P.C., S. 195. 11 Cr.L.J. 212=5 Ind. Cas. 721=11 C.L.J. 111.

—Ss. 182 and 211—Different trials under, validity of—Charge in respect of the same offence.

A person cannot be tried separately under S. 182 and under S. 211, I.P.C., when the charge under either section is in respect of the same offence, namely, giving a false information to or lodging a false complaint with the police. (1915) 11 U.B.R. 195=17 Cr.L.J. 177=33 Ind. Cas. 817.

—Ss. 182 and 211—Alternative charge—Subsequent charge.

Offences under Ss. 182 and 211 are quite different. A person charged under S. 182 cannot be charged in the alternative under S. 211, but if he is acquitted under S. 182, this acquittal is no bar to his prosecution subsequently under S. 211. 20 P.R. 1910 (Cr.)=30 P.W.R. 1910 (Cr.)=11 Cr.L.J. 420=140 P.L.R. 1910=6 Ind. Cas. 944.

2. Essentials of offence.

—S. 182—Offence under—Proof required.

In order to establish an offence punishable under S. 182, I.P. Code, it must be established that a person gave information which he knew or believed to be false to a public servant and that he intended thereby to cause such public servant to do something which such servant ought not to do or that he knew it to be likely that he would thereby cause such public servant to do something which he ought not to do. The words "to do something" which such public servant ought not to do must mean, to do something which the public servant was enjoined to do in his official capacity as public servant. If a person gives false information to a public servant knowing it to be likely or intending that he would do something which had no connection with his office as a public servant then the conduct of the person giving such information would not come within the purview of S. 182, I. P. Code. 51 Cr.L.J. 469=A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 97.

—S. 182—Person giving information must be shown to know or believe it to be false.

To constitute an offence under S. 182, it must be shown that the person giving the information knew or believed it to be false or that the circumstances in which the information was given were such that the only reasonable inference is that the person giving the information knew or believed it to be false. A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 6=38 Cr.L.J. 289=3 B.R. 219=166 Ind. Cas. 738.

—S. 182—Offence under—When complete.

Section 182 is for the prosecution of a person who gives any information which he knows or believes to be false, etc., to a public servant. The offence is complete as soon as the information is given. Whether the public servant omits to take a statement subsequently on oath of the person giving the information for the purpose of taking certain action on it is a matter which will not affect the giving of the information. A.I.R. 1936 All. 469=1936 A.L.J. 592=1936 A.W.R. 396=37 Cr.L.J. 857=163 Ind. Cas. 609.

—S. 182—Essential requisites.

Section 182 requires that information which is false or which is believed to be false should be given to a public servant with a particular intention or knowledge, and if the information is known to be false and is given with the intention of causing a public servant to do or omit to do anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit, if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given were known by him, or to use the lawful powers of such public servant to the injury or annoyance of any person, then the offence is committed. The fact that the public servant did not in fact do or omit to do anything or did not use his lawful power in consequence is not a deciding factor. The guilt of the accused lies in his intention or knowledge and a man's intention or knowledge must be judged from his acts and the surrounding circumstances. A.I.R. 1936 Sind 94=90 Sind L.R. 75=37 Cr.L.J. 870=163 Ind. Cas. 910.

—S. 182—Essentials of complaint under.

The allegations in complaint under S. 182, should contain the ingredients of an offence, for it is essential in order to secure a conviction under this section, that the information given by the accused must have been known or believed to be false by him at the time when he gave it. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 97=37 Cr.L.J. 9 (2)=159 Ind. Cas. 95.

—S. 182—Essentials.

To constitute the offence punishable under S. 182, I.P.C. it is necessary that the information given should be that which the accused person knows or believes to be false. It is not sufficient that he had reason to believe it to be true, there must have been positive knowledge or belief that it was false. 32 P.R. 1884 Cr. and 29 P. R. 1894 Cr., Foll. 119 Ind. Cas. 230=30 P.L.R. 655=30 Cr.L.J. 1008=1930 Cr.C. 22=11 L.L.J. 495=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 54.

—S. 182—Essentials.

It is an essential ingredient of an offence under S. 182 that the offender should intend to cause, or should know it to be likely that the information given by him to the public servant will cause the public servant to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given or known by him, or to use the lawful power of such public servant to the injury or annoyance of any person. A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 550=129 Ind. Cas. 87.

—S. 182.

A prosecution under S. 182, I.P.C., will lie quite irrespective of whether the action which a public servant is asked to take on information given to him is a legal one or not. To take the view that if he is not legally entitled to take action a prosecution will not lie will reduce S. 182, I.P.C., to a reductio ad absurdum. 75 Ind. Cas. 289=24 Cr.L.J. 913 (Lah.)

—S. 182—Petition before Magistrate for enquiry—Allegation false—Prosecution.

The accused petitioned the Magistrate that a certain person was collecting men to cause him some injury and asked for an enquiry by the police. After the inquiry the Magistrate, holding the petition to be false and vexatious, directed the prosecution of the accused for an offence under S. 182, I.P.C. Held, that the accused having given information to a Magistrate which had been held to be false and which was intended to cause the Magistrate to use his lawful powers to the injury or annoyance of another, the order directing the prosecution of the accused, was legal. 20 Cr.L.J. 821=53 Ind. Cas. 821 (Pat.)

—S. 182—False information to public servant—Essentials of.

S. 182, I.P.C., applies to a case in which it is intended that a public servant should do or omit to do something which he would not be legally justified in doing or omitting to do if he knew the true facts. Asking a public servant to do an act which would be an illegal act, on true facts being stated to him, would not come within the section. 16 A.L.J. 614=19 Cr.L.J. 895=47 Ind. Cas. 91.

—S. 182 — False information — Resignation containing untrue statement.

Where a person resigning his office submitted a petition to the Collector containing allegations against other servants of the Collector without any intention that the Collector should use his powers to the injury or annoyance of those others, Held, he was not guilty of an offence under S. 182, I.P.C. 16 A.L.J. 105=19 Cr.L.J. 257=44 Ind. Cas. 113.

—S. 182—False information—Expression of suspicion.

An expression of suspicion against some persons in a complaint of theft to the police does not amount to the giving of false information. 27 C.L.J. 230=22 C.W.N. 478=19 Cr.L.J. 336=44 Ind. Cas. 352.

3. Evidence and proof.

—S. 182—Evidence and proof.

The fact that an information is shown to be false does not cast upon the party who is charged with an offence under S. 182 the burden of showing that when he made it, he believed it to be true. The prosecution must make out that the only reasonable inference was that he must have known or believed it to be false. It is necessary for the prosecution to prove, not merely the absence of reasonable or probable cause for giving the information, but a positive knowledge or belief of the falsity of the information given: 26 Mad. 640; 31 Bom. 204; and 35 P.R. 1890 Cr. Foll. 110 Ind. Cas. 785=10 A.I.Cr.R. 557=29 Cr.L.J. 753 (Lah.)

—S. 182—Accused selling his horse and giving false information of theft—Offence under S. 182 is made out.

Where the accused gave false information to the police that his horse was stolen when in fact he himself had sold it and subsequently instituted proceedings under Ss. 379 and 411:

Held, in making a report the accused clearly gave false information to the police which he knew to be false and he must have known that it was likely that he would thereby cause the police authorities, if they found the horse answering to this description, to take it from the possession of its rightful owner. On these facts an offence under S. 182 is clearly made out. 71 Ind. Cas. 216=44 All. 647=24 Cr.L.J. 88=A.I.R. 1922 All. 272.

—S. 182.

The fact that the information is shown to be false does not cast upon the party who is charged with an offence under Section 182, I. P. C. the burden of showing that when he made it, he believed it to be true. The prosecution must make out that the circumstances were such that the only reasonable inference was that he must have known or believed it to be false. 69 Ind. Cas. 81=9 O.L.J. 342=23 Cr.L.J. 641=26 O.C. 44=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 4.

—S. 182—Report of assault—Proof must be given that accused knew information to be false.

It is not sufficient to find for a conviction under the Section 182 that the accused person has given information which he did not believe to be true, but it is necessary that it should be found positively that he knew or believed the information to be false. The accused can only be expected to show upon what facts within his knowledge the information given was founded, but he certainly is not bound to show the information given was in fact true. 35 P.R. 1890 Cr. Foll. 62 Ind. Cas. 327=2 P.L.R. 1922=22 Cr.L.J. 503=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 313.

—S. 182.

In a prosecution under S. 182 of the Penal Code, the burden lies on the prosecution to prove that the accused knew or believed the information to be false. 61 Ind. Cas. 171=22 Cr.L.J. 347 (Cal.)

—S. 182—False information of threatened breach of the peace—Onus.

To constitute an offence under S. 182, I. P. C., it is necessary for the prosecution to prove not merely an absence of a reasonable and probable cause for giving the information but a positive knowledge or belief of the falsity of the information given. 6 O.L.J. 457=20 Cr.L.J. 791=53 Ind. Cas. 695.

—S. 182—'Giving false information'—Onus of proof.

To constitute an offence under S. 182, it must be shown that the person giving the information knew or believed it to be false or that the circumstances in which the information was given were such that the only reasonable inference is that the person giving the information knew or believed it to be false. The onus on the prosecution will not be shifted by merely showing that the information was false. (1903) 26 M. 640.

4. Interpretation—"Gives information"—if restricted to voluntary information.

See also: A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 64 under Note 1 (a).

—S. 182—False information given during investigation.

If a witness answers questions because he is compelled to answer by reason of the powers of the Police, that in itself may well be sufficient to negative the guilty intent or knowledge necessary for a conviction under S. 182. The information is then not so much given as taken. But to hold that S. 182 can never apply to false information given to the Police during the course of an investigation, is to go further than the words of S. 182, or the public interest properly allows. A.I.R. 1939 Sind 274=41 Cr.L.J. 8=184 Ind. Cas. 243.

—S. 182—Information given during investigation under S. 161, Criminal P. C.

A reasonable interpretation of the words of S. 182, I. P. C., is to include information even if it is given to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation under S. 161, Criminal P. C., in reply to questions put by him. There is no reason to insert in the statutory provisions of S. 182, words that are not there, and thus to restrict unduly the meaning of the words and to reduce the efficacy of the section in dealing with the mischief with which it was designed to deal. The section is not confined to information which is volunteered and which falls under S. 154, Criminal P. C. A.I.R. 1936 Sind 94=30 Sind L.R. 15=37 Cr.L.J. 870=163 Ind. Cas. 910.

—S. 182—Statement by witness to Police under S. 161, Criminal P. C.

A statement made by a witness to the Police under the provisions of S. 161, Criminal P. C. is not "an information given to a public servant" within the meaning of S. 182, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 97=37 Cr.L.J. 9 (2)=159 Ind. Cas. 95.

—S. 182—Give information—Meaning—False information to Police Officer.

A statement made to an investigating Police Officer in answer to his question is not giving

—S. 182—Information during investigation.

Section 182, Penal Code applies to a statement made during the investigation of a case. The word 'information' in the section is used with reference not to a Police Officer in particular but to any public servant. Consequently, the meaning of the word is not restricted to a first information recorded under S. 154, Criminal P. C. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 555=14 P.L.T. 541=34 Cr.L.J. 1216=146 Ind. Cas. 234.

—S. 182—"Gives information."

There is nothing to justify the reading in of the word "voluntarily" before the word "gives" in S. 182.

Where a driver of a motor-car driving without a licence, when asked for his name by the Superintendent of Police gave a wrong name:

Held, that the Superintendent of Police was not holding an investigation and the question put to the driver was not put under S. 161, Cr. P. Code, so as to give him benefit of S. 162. He is guilty under S. 182, I. P. C., because the words "gives information" in that section should not be interpreted as necessarily meaning "volunteers information". 113 Ind. Cas. 587=7 Pat. 715=10 P.L.T. 244=30 Cr.L.J. 177=11 A.I.Cr.R. 567=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 4.

—S. 182.

The words "give information" should not be interpreted as necessarily meaning "voluntary information", i.e., that it must be information on some matter which is not already under inquiry by the public servant.

Statements made by persons in the nature of evidence given before an inquiring officer are information as contemplated by the section. 104 Ind. Cas. 712=28 Cr.L.J. 872=9 A.I.Cr.R. 54=9 P.L.T. 342=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 56.

Obiter.—The word "give" in S. 182 cannot be given the restricted meaning of the word "volunteer". 227 P.L.R. 1914 and 2 Cr.L.J. 474, not Foll. 90 Ind. Cas. 316=26 Cr.L.J. 1532=4 Bur. L.J. 261=3 Rang. 577=A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 364.

—S. 182—False information on being questioned.

An informant knowingly giving false information to a public servant voluntarily or on being questioned is punishable under S. 182, Penal Code. 1 Lah. 410=58 Ind. Cas. 818.

—S. 182—Unfounded allegation against a magistrate in application for transfer—Information to public officer.

The accused applied for transfer of his case from the Thasildar's Court and in the application made certain unfounded allegations against the Thasildar. He was examined by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and repeated the allegations made in the application: Held, that the statement made under such circumstances was not information given to a public officer within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code and the petitioner could not be prosecuted for that statement in as much as he was in the position of an accused person and the statement was made in answer to questions put by the Sub-Divisional Officer. 12 M. 451, foll. (1910) 7 A.L.J. 1143=33 All. 163=7 Ind. Cas. 914=11 Cr.L.J. 537.

—S. 182—Statement of defence witness in departmental enquiry.

The expression 'gives information' in S. 182, I. P. C., means to volunteer information and is not intended to apply to a statement made in answer to questions put by a public servant. Statements made by witnesses to Police Officers under S. 161, Criminal P. C., cannot except in very special circumstances, be regarded as 'gives information to a public servant' within the meaning of S. 182, I. P. C.

If a statement made by a witness to a Police Officer under S. 161, Criminal P. C., cannot in general form the basis for a conviction under S. 182, I. P. C., still less can a statement of witness called for the defence at a departmental inquiry. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 232=38 Cr.L.J. 980=170 Ind. Cas. 854.

5. Place of trial.

—S. 182—Information by letter — Jurisdiction to try case.

Under S. 182, I. P. C. the act of giving information consists of something done by the giver and of the knowledge acquired by the person to whom the information is given. The writing and the posting of the letter at one place and the receipt of it at another taken together constitute the giving of information. It follows that the act of giving information partly takes place where the letter is written and posted. Further the intention which is an essential ingredient of an offence under S. 182, I. P. C., is entertained by the person giving the information at the place where the letter is written and posted. Consequently, in a case where the information given to a public servant is contained in a letter posted at one place and delivered at another the offence is committed partly in one local area and partly in another. The Court at the place where the letter is written and posted has jurisdiction to try the case. Even if that Court be supposed to have no jurisdiction, S. 531, Criminal P. C. will cover the case. A.I.R. 1936 All. 105=(1936) A.L.J. 416=37 Cr.L.J. 157=1935 A.W.R. 1476=159 Ind. Cas. 808.

—S. 182—Offence under, when complete—Place of trial.

The gist of the offence under S. 182, is the giving of information so as to cause a public servant to act upon it, and the offence is completed when the information reaches the public servant. Consequently, a case under the section has to be tried at the place where the public servant received the information. A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 427=35 M.L.W. 451=1932 M.W.N. 451=33 Cr.L.J. 452(1)=137 Ind. Cas. 333.

—S. 182—Jurisdiction.

Person making complaint to police—Police taking no action—Complaint filed in Court of Magistrate—Magistrate ordering preliminary inquiry—Police subsequently filing complaint in Court of another Magistrate against the informant charging him under Ss. 182

6. Prosecution for offence.

- (a) Need for complaint by public servant.
- (b) Right of accused to opportunity to prove his case.

6 (a). Prosecution for offence—Need for complaint by public servant.

—S. 182—Prosecution under, without complaint of public servant.

The provisions of S. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., are subject to the provisions of S. 195 which follows it and hence, a person cannot be prosecuted and convicted under S. 182, I. P. C., without there being a complaint in writing of a public servant against him as required by S. 195, Criminal P. C. A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 424=1940 A.W.R. 307 (1)=41 Cr.L.J. 787=1940 O.W.N. 917=189 Ind. ##### —S. 182.

Cognizance of a case under S. 182 cannot be taken against the petitioner except on the complaints, in writing, of the officer before whom the petition was filed or some other public servant to whom he is subordinate. (1938) 67 C.L.J. 583.

—S. 182.

Petition of complaint against conduct of Police to District Magistrate—Order 'file', passed on complaint—Subsequent prosecution of petitioner under S. 182—Held, petitioner could claim that sanction of District Magistrate was necessary for prosecution—Proceedings, held, should be quashed. Application not suggesting that Magistrate should take action—Prayer to take woman from husband's custody—Omission to take deposition of applicant:

Held, that the application was not a complaint and the Magistrate was not bound to take the deposition of the applicant on oath and the omission did not vitiate an order subsequently made by him directing a complaint under S. 182 to be made against the applicant for prosecution under S. 195 (1) (a), Criminal P. C. A.I.R. 1936 All. 469=1936 A.L.J. 592=37 Cr.L.J. 857=1936 A.W.R. 366=163 Ind. Cas. 609.

—Ss. 182, 211—Sanction for prosecution under.

—S. 182—Who can take action.

A made a false report of dacoity. The police did not proceed on his complaint but prosecuted certain persons under S. 324. This offence also was not brought home to them and the police made a complaint against A requesting his prosecution under S. 182 for making a false report of dacoity. A was convicted:

Held, that the conviction was legal. The complaint was properly made under S. 182. The only persons who could take action in the case were the police and not the Court which not having tried any case of dacoity was not in a position of being able to say a false complaint had been made of dacoity before it: 7 O.W.N. 756=1930 Cr. C. 954=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 414.

—S. 182—Graver and minor offences.

There is no bar to cognizance being taken of an offence under Penal Code, S. 211 on the complaint of the investigating police officer though he is not also an officer referred to under S. 195 (1) (e), Cr. P. Code; but if the charge under Penal Code, S. 211 fails, there cannot by reason of Cr. P. Code, S. 195 (1) (a) be a conviction under Penal Code, S. 182. 117 Ind. Cas. 37=30 Cr.L.J. 710=1930 Cr. C. 74=11 P. L. T. 88=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 98.

—S. 182—Power to prosecute.

The petitioner filed a complaint before the Magistrate who after examining the petitioner sent the complaint to the Sub-Inspector for inquiry and report. The Sub-Inspector reported the case to be maliciously false, recommended the prosecution of the petitioner under S. 211, Penal Code, and preferred a complaint of that offence against the petitioner. The petitioner filed a petition impugning the report and praying the Magistrate to make a judicial inquiry. The Magistrate directed the Sub-Inspector to submit a report for prosecution under S. 182 and on receipt of the "report for prosecution" issued summons on the petitioner under S. 182:

Held, that the order was wrong in law, that S. 195 (i) (a), Cr. P. Code, bars a complaint by the Sub-Inspector of an offence under S. 182 since he was not "the public servant concerned" or the superior of such public servant to whom the false information punishable under S. 182 was given and that S. 195 (i) (b) was a bar to cognizance being taken of it except on the complaint of the Magistrate. 115 Ind. ##### —S. 182—Sanction.

Sanction of the trying Magistrate or of the District Magistrate must be obtained before launching a prosecution under S. 182, I.P.C., in cases where a police enquiry is followed by a trial in Court, but the want of sanction is an irregularity under S. 537 and does not vitiate the trial unless it has occasioned a failure of justice. 74 Ind. Cas. 259=24 Cr. L. J. 755=1 Bur. L. J. 258=A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 135.

—S. 182—Offence coming under two Sections—Sanction to prosecute under one, refused—Prosecution under the other is barred.

Where the charge might have been made against the accused under section 182 or Section 211, Held, it seems to be contrary to public policy and to the recognised principles of the administration of the criminal law, when a charge has been launched which requires sanction by a particular authority and that authority has refused sanction, to hold that it is open to a complainant to alter his election, shift his ground and start a fresh charge on an alternative section which does not require sanction. 68 Ind. Cas. 32=45 All. 11=20 A. L. J. 775=23 Cr. L. J. 496=A.I.R. 1922 All. 502.

—S. 182—False information to police followed by complaint—Complaint by officer to whom information given.

The accused gave information to a police officer that certain persons had committed theft and also complained to a Magistrate to the same effect. The police after investigation found the information false. The Magistrate having called for a report from the police, they reported that the complaint was false. The accused asked for an opportunity to produce his evidence. After examining his witnesses the Magistrate issued a summons to the accused to appear. On the date fixed, prosecution witnesses did not appear and the Magistrate discharged the accused. Thereupon the police officer to whom accused had given information made a complaint and preferred a charge under S. 192 of the Penal Code. Held, that accused making a complaint to a Magistrate and then dropping the proceedings is no bar to the police officer to whom false information has been given making a complaint under S. 182 of the Penal Code. 17 A.L.J. 32=20 Cr. L. J. 114=49 Ind. Cas. 98.

—Ss. 182, 193 and 199—Cr. P. C., Ss. 195 and 537—Sanction—Revision—Conviction under S. 199 if can be converted to one under S. 182.

A declaration under S. 199, I. P. C., must be one which having been made is afterwards receivable in evidence of the fact declared. A conviction under S. 199, I. P. C. for which no sanction is necessary cannot in revision be converted into one under S. 182 which requires a sanction. 15 Cr. L. J. 603=8 Bur. L. T. 82=25 Ind. Cas. 515.

—S. 182—Cr. P. C. (1898), S. 195—Sanction by Police Officer.

A person giving information to a police can have his case determined by the Court before he is called upon to answer a charge of giving a false information. Obiter.—The Magistrate should not take cognizance of such a case without a complaint of the public servant to whom the false information was given simply on the sanction of the Inspector of Police. 14 C.W.N. 765=11 Cr. L. J. 354=6 Ind. Cas. 415.

—Ss. 182, 211—Cr. P. C., S. 195—Information given to the Police alleged to be false—Procedure—Notice.

Where a District Magistrate upon a report made by the Police that information given to them charging a person with a specific crime is false, orders the person giving such information to be prosecuted under S. 211 of the Indian Penal Code such order is not an order to which S. 195 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies; neither is the order passed without jurisdiction if no previous notice to show cause is given to the accused. The more proper course however, would be to let the informant bring his witnesses into Court, hear them out, and then, if the case was considered to be a false case, to pass an order that the informant should be tried under S. 211 of the Indian Penal Code. (1907) 30 A. 32=1907 A.W.N. 288=4 A.L.J. 790.

—S. 182—Cr. P. C., S. 195 (1)—Complaint by a police officer.

One S. made a report at a Police station. On enquiry the investigating Police Officer came to the conclusion that the report was false and that it had been made at the instance of one U. The Sub-Inspector sent a report to the Assistant Superintendent of Police asking that action should be taken under S. 182 against S and U. The Assistant Superintendent of Police declined to take action but sent the report to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who took cognizance of the offence against S and U, under S. 182. Held, that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take any action under S. 182. Report of a Police officer was not a complaint under S. 195 (1), Cr. P. C., U not having given the information himself could not be prosecuted under S. 182, I. P. C. 2 A.L.J. 236. Also: (1910) 6 Ind. Cas. 415=11 Cr. L. J. 354=14 C.W.N. 765.

6 (b). Prosecution for offence—Right of accused to opportunity to prove his case.

—S. 182—Complaint of person to be prosecuted must be dealt with according to law.

Where a person when called upon to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under S. 182, I. P. C., challenges the Police report and reiterates the charges made before the Police it is clearly a complaint, and the Magistrate should deal with it under the provisions of S. 203, Criminal P.C. The case under S. 182, I.P.C. cannot be proceeded with until that person's complaint has been dealt with in accordance with law. A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 271=40 Cr. L. J. 644=182 Ind. Cas. 235.

—S. 182—Accused filing naraji petition against Police Report—Trial under S. 182 before disposal of petition—Validity.

Where on the Police reporting to be false an information filed against certain persons by the accused, a warrant was issued against him under S. 182, Penal Code and on receipt of the warrant the accused filed a naraji petition against the Police Report which was dismissed on the ground that he would have ample opportunity to adduce evidence to prove his case in the proceedings under S. 182, and he was tried and convicted in those proceedings:

Held, that the accused was prejudiced and the Court ought to have enquired into the naraji petition first before the accused was tried under S. 182 and that the conviction should be set aside. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 614=37 C.W.N. 399=34 Cr. L. J. 1077=145 Ind. Cas. 824.

—S. 182—Inquiry into naraji petition by complainant.

Where on a Police Report that the case of the complainant was false, he filed a naraji petition objecting to the Police Report:

Held, that process cannot be issued against him under S. 182 without enquiring into and disposing of the complainant's naraji petition. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 550=36 C.W.N. 794=33 Cr. L. J. 724=139 Ind. Cas. 217.

—Ss. 182, 211—Issuing process under, without dismissing complaint, legality.

The accused lodged an ejahar before the Police bringing a charge of theft against A. The Police enquired into the matter and submitted their report. The accused then filed a narazi petition before the Magistrate who sent the matter to an Honorary Magistrate and the latter submitted his report. The Magistrate without dismissing the narazi petition issued process against the accused under Ss. 211 and 182:

Held, that the Magistrate was wrong in law when he issued a process against the accused under Ss. 211 and 182 without having dismissed the narazi petition which was to be treated as a complaint. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 383 (1)=36 C.W.N. 15=33 Cr. L.J. 514 (1)=137 Ind. Cas. 849.

—S. 182—Opportunity to accused to prove truth of his case need not be given in every case.

Although where the accused files a narazi petition in a case under S. 182, it is a better procedure to give the accused an opportunity of proving the truth of his case before the Magistrate enquires into the case, if the accused is convicted without giving him such opportunity, the trial cannot be said to be illegal. —S. 182—Opportunity to accused to prove his case.

There is no provision in law that before a Magistrate can enquire into a case under S. 182, on the complaint of a Police Officer the accused person must have an opportunity of proving his case. Such a provision is unnecessary and even when the accused asks the Magistrate by a petition that his case might be investigated, conviction without such preliminary opportunity being given, is not illegal; at the most it may amount to error of discretion and is not error of law. The appellant lodged informed a Sub-Inspector of Police that certain persons had beat him and set fire to a house. The Sub-Inspector on enquiry did not believe the story and recommended that the appellant might be prosecuted under Ss. 182 and 211. The prosecution of the appellant was then directed by a Deputy Magistrate. A preliminary enquiry was made and the appellant was committed to the Court of Session and convicted under S. 211; Held, that when the accused had been committed for trial to the Court of Sessions, a conviction by that Court could not be set aside simply on the ground of some irregularity in the commitment proceedings, especially when that point was not raised in the first Court, and that S. 532, Cr. P. Code, would cure such a defect. 13 Cr.L.J. 826=17 Ind. Cas. 570 (Cal.).

—Ss. 183, 186, 353 and 332—Offences against public servants—S. 195 (1), Criminal P. C.—Applicability.

The offences against public servants in an ascending scale of gravity are: (i) voluntary obstruction (S. 186, I. P. C.); (ii) resistance to their taking of property by lawful authority (S. 183, I. P. C.); (iii) assault or the use of criminal force to them in the execution of their duty (S. 353, I.P.C.) and (iv) voluntarily causing hurt to them in the discharge of their duty (S. 332, I. P. C.). The offences in (iii) and (iv) unlike those in (i) and (ii) do not require a complaint in writing of the public servant concerned or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate before a Court can take cognizance of them presumably because they are cognizable and the measurement of punishment with which they can be visited makes cases relating to them warrant cases. Although the offences in (i) and (ii) may be present in offences (iii) and (iv), they are ancillary to them and no question of attracting the provision of S. 195 (1), Criminal P. C. would arise unless the prosecution sought to include offence (i) or (ii) or offences (i) and (ii) with the more serious offence or the more serious one of them. Then and only in respect of offences (i) and (ii) would the action contemplated by that sub-section be required. Where the offence is (ii), i.e., under S. 183, I. P. C. the requirements of S. 195 (i), Cr. P. C. will have to be met and the Court cannot evade them by using another section of the I. P. C. The test whether there is evasion or not is whether the facts disclose primarily and essentially an offence for which the complaint of Court is required. A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 210=1945 N.L.J. 239=I.L.R. —Ss. 183, 186—Arrest by execution warrant—Judgment-debtor released forcibly—Written complaint to District Magistrate under S. 195, Criminal P. C.—Complaint described as under Ss. 476 and 195, Criminal P. C.—Effect of.

In execution of a decree in favour of P against N and M, warrants of attachment by arrest of the judgment-debtors were issued by the Subordinate Judge. Two process-servers effected the arrest of the judgment-debtors whereupon R and seven others came to the rescue of the judgment-debtors and forcibly got them released. The process-servers made a report to the Subordinate Judge and the Subordinate Judge after issuing notice to all the persons, who rescued the judgment-debtors drew up a complaint under S. 195, Criminal P. C., and forwarded it to the Court of the District Magistrate for necessary action. The District Magistrate forwarded the complaint to a Magistrate of the first Class, and the latter in a summary trial convicted all the accused of an offence under S. 186, Penal Code, and acquitted them of an offence under S. 183, Penal Code. An appeal was filed by R and six others and the Sessions Judge acquitted them all. Two of them did not file any appeal against their convictions by the trial Magistrate of an offence under S. 186, Penal Code, but the Sessions Judge 'suo motu' took action in favour of the two accused and referred their cases to the High Court with a recommendation that their conviction under S. 186 be set aside.

Held, that in the present case the Subordinate Judge filed a complaint as required by S. 195, Criminal P. C. It was true that the Subordinate Judge had described his complaint as one under S. 476 and S. 195, Criminal P. C., regarding offences under S. 183, Penal Code, but the mere fact that he had made a reference to S. 476, Criminal P. C., did not make his complaint any the less one under S. 195, Criminal P. C. The reference, therefore, was entirely misconceived. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 277=35 Cr.L.J. 990=11 O.W.N. 120=149 Ind. Cas. 377.

—S. 183—Accused merely raising hand objecting to article being seized by constable.

An article in the possession of the accused was during their absence seized by the head constable who had come to investigate a case of theft, and kept loaded in a bandy for the purpose of being taken. The accused hearing about it, came from the north, stood before the bandy and raising their hands said that the bandy should not be driven and they objected to the article being taken:

Held, that a statement by the accused objecting to the constable taking the article accompanied by a pantomime indicating that they were so objecting could not be taken to amount to offering any "resistance" within the meaning of S. 183. Consequently, no offence under S. 183, was committed. A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 45=56 L.W. 599=1943 M.W.N. 711=45 Cr.L.J. 559=210 Ind. Cas. 240.

The accused who was the tandel of a country ship carried goods consigned to various persons in Jaitapur and Rajapur ports. The ship arrived at the port of Jaitapur which is at the mouth of the creek. The goods which were consigned to Jaitapur traders were landed, and octroi was duly paid in accordance with rules made by the District Local Board. There was no separate octroi Naka for the port of Rajapur, and Nakedar of the Jaitapur Naka went on board the applicant's ship together with a peon and panchas and demanded from the tandel the amount of octroi duty, about Rs. 60, on the goods which he was proposing to take to Rajapur. The tandel declined to pay, firstly because he had not the money to do so, and secondly, because as he said, the Rajapur merchants objected to pay. On his refusal, the Nakedar acting under R. 8, seized part of the cargo. The accused resisted and was prosecuted for an offence under S. 183, I.P.C., that is, for the offence of resistance to the taking of property by the lawful authority of a public servant and was convicted.

Held, that the prosecution had not established that the jurisdiction of the District Local Board to impose taxes extended to goods on board the ship before the goods were landed or that the Local Board had power to make use of R. 8, providing for collection of octroi in the same manner as is provided in the case of a toll by S. 116, Bombay Local Boards Act. The conviction was, therefore, not maintainable. A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 376=38 Bom. L.R. 790=38 Cr.L.J. 37=165 Ind. Cas. 637.

—Ss. 183, 99—Default for irrigation dues—Attachment of property not of defaulter, by person not legally authorised—Resistance—Absence of violence—Offence, committed—Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, S. 154.

Section 183, I.P.C., is not a section for the protection of the public servant, but enables him to take the offensive and prosecute anybody who resists the taking of property by lawful authority. Resistance to the act of a public officer acting bona fide though in excess of his authority may well give rise to some charge in the nature of assault, but it cannot afford any foundation for a prosecution under S. 183. The section applies to resistance to the taking of property by lawful authority of a public servant, and there are no words in that section as there are in S. 99, extending the operation of the section to acts which are not strictly justifiable by law.

B owned certain land in respect of which he was in arrear with his irrigation dues. He had sold the sugarcane grown in that land to one R who had employed the accused to crush the sugar, and the jaggery was being removed in two carts when it was attached by the Talati in respect of the irrigation dues in arrear. The accused subsequently removed the carts from the custody of the Talati, and took them away, but no act of violence was alleged. Though the Talati put in an authority from the Mamlatdar there was no evidence that the Mamlatdar had power to give that authority to the Talati to attach the property, or that the Collector had delegated the authority to act under S. 154, Bombay Land Revenue Code, to the Mamlatdar.

Held that, it was not for the defence to point out to the prosecution any missing link in their chain of proof. The omission to prove the authority of the Mamlatdar was fatal to the conviction:

Held also, that there being no allegation of violence on the part of the accused the accused was entitled to resist peaceably the wrongful act of the Talati in seizing the jaggery which did not in fact belong to the defaulter. On his failure to deposit the difference between his bid and the amount secured when the shop was re-sold, he was prosecuted and convicted of an offence under S. 185, Penal Code:

Held, (1) that as no complaint was made by the District Magistrate or the Excise Officer within the meaning of S. 195, Criminal P. C., the conviction of the accused for an offence under S. 185, Penal Code, could not be legally sustained;

(2) that the absence of a complaint as required by S. 195, Criminal P. C., could not be cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C.;

1. Interpretation.

- (a) "Voluntarily"
- (b) "Obstructs"
- (c) "Public servant"
- (d) "In the discharge of his public functions".

1 (a). Interpretation—"Voluntarily".

—S. 186—Act done in good faith in the belief that same is right and justified under the law—Offence—"Voluntary obstruction."

To render a person liable for an offence under S. 186, I. P. Code, the prosecution must make out a voluntary obstruction, i. e., the commission of some overt act of obstruction. Where a person causes obstruction to a public servant in the honest belief that he was doing something that was right that cannot come within the mischief of S. 186, I. P. Code, where a person does something in a bona fide belief that he is doing what he is entitled to do under the law, he does not cause "voluntary obstruction" within the meaning of S. 186, and the section cannot apply. 4 A.I.Cr.D. 729.

The word "voluntarily" contemplates the commission of some overt act of obstruction; mere passive conduct is not intended to be penalised. 81 Ind. Cas. 209=25 Cr.L.J. 721=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 139.

—S. 186—Public servant—Voluntary obstruction.

Where a person not only refuses to give up the property but threatens to do harm to the Police Officer if he ventures to carry out the warrant, he commits an offence under S. 186, since the threat is an overt act sufficient in law to constitute voluntary obstruction. (1904) 6 Bom.L.R. 254.

1 (b). Interpretation—"Obstructs".

—S. 186—"Obstruction"—Ingredients of offence—Writ of delivery by Civil Court—Tenant saying that he would vacate on arrival of landlords and not before—Offence.

The "obstruction" contemplated by S. 186, I. P. Code, may be in various ways and physical force is not necessary to constitute obstruction punishable under the section. Where a tenant in possession of premises tells the peon of a Civil Court going to execute a writ of delivery of possession against him, that he was a tenant under two persons who were the owners and that he was prepared to vacate the house on the arrival of those two persons and that he could not vacate unless his land-lords asked him, to do so, and there was neither threat nor violence, on the part of the tenant, and the peon without further words goes back and returns the writ, it cannot be held that an offence under S. 186 is committed. A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 544=4 A.I.Cr.D. 742.

—S. 186—"Obstruction"—Meaning of—If confined to physical obstruction.

"Obstruction" does not mean "physical obstruction". The nature of the obstruction would vary according to the nature of the duty which a public servant is to discharge. Where it was found that in order to prevent the search and seizure of stock of sugar the manager or owner of a factory had locked all the gates of the factory except the main entrance; had placed on the road leading to the factory a huge truck on jacks, with all the four wheels removed in such a way as to block the road leading to the godown; had kept heaps of coal, firewood and tins on the door leading to the godown, making it impossible for any vehicular traffic to reach the godown doors; and had also caused some of the rails and fish plates of the railway siding leading to the godown to be removed; that every attempt was made to resist and obstruct the officers in seizing the stocks of sugar:

Held, that the obstructions found were sufficient to bring S. 186, I. P. Code, into operation and that an offence under S. 186 had been committed. 4 A.I.Cr.D. 405=A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 436.

—S. 186—Actual physical force held not necessary.

During the execution of a warrant of possession the judgment-debtor and his men paraded the place in a defiant and angry mood:

Held, that the act of the judgment-debtor constituted physical obstruction even though no physical force was actually brought into play at the time. It was not necessary for them actually to come to blows. A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 334=1943 N.L.J. 505=45 Cr.L.J. 407=211 Ind. Cas. 442.

—S. 186—Sale Officer of Co-operative Society—Execution of decree—Obstruction by slamming door in face of Officer—Offence under S. 52, Co-operative Societies Act.

A sales officer of a Co-operative Society in execution of a decree went to a certain house in the village with the intention of entering it to seize some movables in the house which were alleged to have belonged to the 2nd accused, against whom the decree was being executed. The first accused, the wife of the 2nd accused just when the officer was about to enter the house slammed the door in his face and prevented him from entering the house to do his duty:

Held, that offence was committed not under S. 52, Madras Co-operative Societies Act, but one under S. 186, Penal Code, but even if there was an offence under section 52 of the Act, an offence under section 186, Penal Code, being more serious it was competent for the Magistrate to try the accused for offence under S. 186, Penal Code:

Held, also that shutting the door in the officer's face amounted to obstructing him in the performance of his duty and the accused were liable to be convicted for an offence under S. 186. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 552 = (1942) 1 M.L.J. 583 = 1942 M.W.N. 375 = 55 L.W. 368 = 43 Cr.L.J. 757 = 201 Ind. Cas. 627.

—S. 186—Constable prevented from regulating traffic by threatening language.

Where the constable is prevented by the accused from regulating the traffic, the exact means employed by the accused if he acts intentionally do not matter. Even threatening language is sufficient to constitute "obstruction" within S. 186. A.I.R. 1938 All. 118 = 1937 A.L.J. 1344 = 39 Cr.L.J. 363 (1) = 1937 A.W.R. 1179 = 173 Ind. Cas. 732.

—S. 186—Obstruction—What is.

Where there is sufficient indication that force would have been used if the peon having a warrant of attachment had persisted in executing it, it is quite enough to constitute obstruction.

Where the warrant is in order and the officer does not go beyond fulfilment of the instructions given to him in the writ, then a resistance to the public servant is an offence punishable under S. 186. A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 633 = 18 P.L.T. 783 = 4 B.R. 115 = 39 Cr.L.J. 100 = 172 Ind. Cas. 168.

—S. 186—Constructive obstruction.

The only bar to a complaint under S. 186, I. P. C. is S. 195 (1) (a), Criminal P. C., which makes cognizance dependent upon a complaint in writing of the public servant who was obstructed in the discharge of his public functions or some other public servant to whom he is subordinate. Section 186 does not contemplate constructive obstruction to a judicial officer in the discharge of his judicial functions even when they are of a quasi executive character or when the proceedings before him are in execution. A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 74 = 16 P.L.T. 808 = 2 B.R. 95 = 37 Cr.L.J. 104 (2) = 159 Ind. Cas. 503.

—S. 186.

Where an octroi officer is acting within his authority in asking the accused to show the goods, refusal to show them amounts to obstruction offered in the discharge of the public functions of the officer which would be punishable under S. 186, and assault on him would make him liable for an offence under S. 332. A.I.R. 1935 Sind 245 = 29 S.L.R. 54 = 37 Cr.L.J. 148 = 159 Ind. Cas. 665.

—S. 186—Threat of violence.

The question as to whether an offence under S. 186, has or has not been committed, must depend upon the peculiar facts and circumstances of each case. Threats of violence made in such a way as to prevent a public servant from carrying out his duty might easily amount to an obstruction of the public servant, particularly if such threats are coupled with an aggressive or menacing attitude on the part of the person uttering the threats and still more so, if they are accompanied by the flourishing or even the exhibition of some kind of weapon capable of inflicting physical injury. Threats made by a person holding an offensive weapon in his hands must be taken to be just as much an obstruction as that caused by a person actually blocking a gateway or handling a public servant in a manner calculated to prevent him from executing his duty.

Resistance or obstruction to the execution of an illegal warrant is not an offence under S. 186, I. P. C. A.I.R. 1933 All. 759 = 1933 A.L.J. 952 = 34 Cr.L.J. 1211 = 55 A. 985 = 146 Ind. Cas. 183.

—S. 186—Mere threat.

It cannot be laid down that a mere threat of violence cannot constitute obstruction within the meaning of S. 186. On the other hand, threats of violence made in such a way as to prevent a public servant from carrying out his duty, might easily amount to an obstruction of the public servant, particularly if such threats are coupled with an aggressive or menacing attitude on the part of the persons uttering the threats and still more so if they are accompanied by the flourishing or even the exhibition of some kind of weapon capable of inflicting physical injury.

It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what does or does not constitute an obstruction within the meaning of S. 186. Each case must be decided upon its own particular facts and circumstances. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 871 = 36 C. W. N. 1038 = 60 C. 149 = 34 Cr.L.J. 181 = 141 Ind. Cas. 636.

—S. 186—Mere verbal protests.

Where the accused merely sat on a chair by the side of a staircase and verbally objected to a public servant going upstairs for making a search in the discharge of his public functions, and there was no evidence to show that the accused actually obstructed with his hands or blocked the way or did anything that could be interpreted as a threat which was likely to be immediately carried out:

Held, that there was no act amounting to an obstruction of the public servant and the accused was not guilty of an offence under S. 186. A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 21 = 9 R. 601 = 33 Cr.L.J. 175 = 135 Ind. Cas. 653.

—S. 186—"obstruction".

The word "obstruction" as used in S. 186 means "physical obstruction" i. e., actual resistance or obstacle put in the way of a public servant. The word implies the use of criminal force, and mere threats or threatening language is insufficient. 110 Ind. Cas. 101 = 10 A.I.Cr.R. 486 = 29 Cr.L.J. 645 = A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 827.

—S. 186—Escape from custody.

Escape from lawful custody of a process-server does not amount to obstruction to a public servant in the discharge of his duties, nor does the act of a person in running away and shutting himself up in a room and refusing to come out constitute voluntary "obstruction," but it constitutes an offence under S. 225-B. 2 B.H.C. 128 (F.B.), Foll. 103 Ind. Cas. 833=9 L. L. J. 408=8 A.I.Cr. R. 443=28 Cr. L.J. 753=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 708.

—S. 186—Resigning membership of Panchayat and instigating others not to accept the membership—No offence.

The accused a member of a village Panchayat when asked to sit with a member of the depressed classes, refused to do so and told the S.D.O. that the Panchayat would cease to exist and instigated his fellow Panchas and other persons not to sit with the members of the depressed classes in the Panchayat:

Held, that though the Sub-Divisional Officer was no doubt hampered in the performance of his public duty by the refusal of the applicant and by his instigations, the applicant's conduct did not amount to voluntary obstruction within the meaning of S. 186. 87 Ind. Cas. 514=47 All. 579=23 A.L.J. 352=26 Cr. L.J. 978=A.I.R. 1925 All. 401.

—S. 186.

Where a constable entered a house and found in a room three articles alleged to have been stolen, but before the constable could remove them the accused caused the door of the room to be shut and also threatened to kill the constable if he removed the articles:

—Ss. 186 and 224—Mere running away—Whether amounts to obstruction.

A mere running away of a person not charged with an offence, whom an official of a Civil Court tries to arrest under a warrant of that Court, does not amount to obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his functions within S. 186, I.P.C., nor does it come within S. 224, I.P.C. 17 Cr. L.J. 71=32 Ind. Cas. 663 (Mad.).

—Ss. 186 and 225-B—Resistance or obstruction to arrest—Overt Act.

A person ran into his house to avoid his arrest in execution of a Civil Court's warrant: Held, that his running away did not amount to intentional resistance or illegal obstruction within S. 225-B; but there must be some overt act of resistance or obstruction to justify a conviction under S. 186 or 225-B. 7 A. L. J. 1174=11 Cr. L. J. 721=8 Ind. Cas. 823.

—Ss. 186, 225 (B)—Resistance or obstruction to arrest—Overt act.

Where a warrant was issued by the civil court for arrest of a judgment-debtor and the judgment-debtor, on seeing the officer, ran into the house and thus avoided arrest; Held, that it did not amount to intentional resistance or obstruction to the arrest within the meaning of S. 225-B. There must be an overt act of resistance or obstruction which could justify conviction under S. 186 or S. 225. (1910) 11 Cr. L. J. 721=7 A.L.J. 1174=8 Ind. Cas. 823.

1 (c). Interpretation—"Public servant".

—S. 186—Obstruction to person acting under orders of public servant.

Obstruction offered to a person acting under the orders of a public servant while fixing the boundaries under Cl. 2, S. 119, Bombay Land Revenue Code, is equal to an obstruction offered to the public servant. 31 Bom. L. R. 800=1929 Cr. C. 321=A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 385.

—S. 186—Physical obstruction to person acting under the direction of public servant.

In the case of removing an encroachment, a public servant has ordinarily only to see that the encroachment is removed. He is not, either by Law or practice required to do the whole act of removing the encroachment by his own hands. He can employ agents for such a manual task and if the agent is obstructed in doing what he is legitimately required to do by the public servant actually present at the time of the removal, then there is an obstruction offered to the public servant himself, because what he is doing by the hand of that agent is really, in the eyes of the law, something he is actually doing himself and the person obstructing is guilty under S. 186. 109 Ind. Cas. 353=52 Bom. 286=30 Bom. L.R. 364=10 A.I.Cr.R. 197=29 Cr. L. J. 529=A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 135.

—S. 186—"Public Servant"—Obstruction to helpers of the public officer is not obstruction to public officer.

The Naib-Tahsildar of Income Tax visited the village of the accused where he was told by the Lambardars that the petitioners kept several shops and ought to be assessed. A dispute then took place between the Lambardars on the one side and the petitioners on the other and it was alleged that the Lambardars were in the course of the quarrel assaulted and beaten and thereupon they declined to render any help to the Naib-Tahsildar. Held, that the mere fact that the Lambardars so refused to render help to the Naib-Tahsildar, does not amount to obstruction to the Naib-Tahsildar, within S. 186. 73 Ind. Cas. 338=24 Cr. L. J. 594=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 238.

—S. 186—"Public officer"—Canongoe appointed under S. 45, Bengal Act V of 1875—Survey Act—Appointment in a case not falling within the section, effect of.

Where a settlement officer appointed a canongoe in connection with boundary disputes not falling within S. 45 of Bengal Act V of 1875 the canongoe is not a public officer within the meaning of S. 186, I.P.C. (1901) 6 C.W.N. 120.

1 (d). Interpretation—"In the discharge of his public functions."

—Ss. 186 and 342—Government Firka Supply Officer entering accused's house to seize paddy—Absence of authority to seize—Obstruction to officer and locking him in—Offence.

The accused was a villager, who on the day of the occurrence had in his possession 17½ bags of paddy. The Firka Supply Officer had come to that village to procure the surplus paddy and he had with him a list apparently containing names of persons from whom he had to procure. The name of the accused was admittedly not in that list. When the officer entered the house of the accused and found the  $17\frac{1}{2}$  bags, he asked the accused if he had a permit and when the accused stated he had none, asked him to surrender the entire quantity. The accused resisted the claim, whereupon the officer recorded the statement of the accused and declaring his intention to seize the stock went inside the house. The accused then locked the outer door and the officer had to stay inside till he was released next morning by the village munsif. The accused was convicted for offences under Ss. 186 and 348 of the Code.

In revision, held, that the conviction under S. 186 cannot be sustained. There was no authority to the officer to seize any paddy in the house of any ryot and there was nothing to indicate that any portion of the  $17\frac{1}{2}$  bags was surplus within the meaning of the rules, and in the circumstances the officer could not be said to be discharging his function as a public servant, when he entered the house with the avowed intention of taking away the  $17\frac{1}{2}$  bags of paddy. But though the accused had the right of private defence of property, in keeping the officer locked up far beyond the limits dictated by the need to protect the property and to prevent criminal trespass, the accused committed an offence under S. 342. 1949 M.W.N. 545=(1949) 2 M.L.J. 335.

—S. 186—Ingredients of offence—Absence of proof of functions of alleged public servant and of authority under which he is acting—Effect—Conviction—Sustainability.

Before a Court can convict a person under S. 186, I. P. Code, it must be proved that there was obstruction to a public servant in the discharge of his functions. Where the writ under which the public servant was acting (e.g., a Commissioner appointed by Court to remove certain obstructions ordered to be removed under a decree to which the accused is not a party), and it is impossible to say what the public functions of the Commissioner were, it would be impossible to hold that there was any obstruction to the public servant (Commissioner) in the discharge of his public functions and in such a case, therefore, a conviction under S. 186 cannot be sustained. 4 A.L.Cr.D. 218.

—Ss. 186 and 353—C. P. and Berar Food Grains Export Restrictions Order (1943)—Notification by local Government prohibiting export of juar from district—District Magistrate issuing instructions to local officials to prevent contravention of order—Use of force by official—If protected—Resistance—Offence.

In view of the powers conferred on a District Magistrate by the C. P. and Berar Food Grains Export Restrictions Order (1943) which prohibits, inter alia, the export of certain food grains out of certain districts except under a permit issued by the District Magistrate, and the notification of the C. P. and Berar Provincial Government, dated 23-12-1943 prohibiting the export of juar, it must be held that the District Magistrate has power to cause such steps to be taken or such force to be used as may be reasonably necessary to secure compliance with or prevention of contravention of the order in respect of the export or transport of juar. But unless a particular official is empowered by the District Magistrate to use force to prevent contravention of the order, it cannot be held that that official is acting in the discharge of his duty as a public servant or in the discharge of his public functions within the meaning of Ss. 186 and 353, I. P. Code, when he

The prosecution have to prove their case when they ask that a person should be convicted for the obstruction of a public servant in the discharge of his public functions. —Ss. 186, 379—Receiver appointed by Court taking possession of corn of third Party—Third party re-taking possession peacefully and not allowing Receiver to make batai—Offence if committed.

Where the Receiver appointed by Court takes possession of corn in possession of a third-party who subsequently re-takes its possession peacefully and does not allow the Receiver to make batai of the corn, the third party cannot be punished under S. 379, I.P.C. because he takes possession only peacefully of his own property. Further, since what the Receiver is trying to do is expressly forbidden by sub-r. (2) of R. 1, O. 40, Civil P.C., it cannot be said that the third party obstructed a public servant even though a Receiver be a public servant within the meaning of S. 186, I. P. C. Section 186, I. P. C. contemplates that the public servant obstructed should be discharging his public functions lawfully, but when there was no legal basis for his acts, the section does not apply. —S. 186—Resistance to warrant of attachment.

If a Public Officer does no more than act upon the official instructions he has received and if those official

Instructions are not of such a kind as to be obviously and patently illegal, then he acts properly in carrying out such orders, and resistance to a Public Officer carrying out orders which upon the face of them are not open to objection and are in proper form is an offence against the statute.

In cases of obstruction and resistance to legal process, the Court should look at the warrant of attachment and see whether the officer was doing something, which was not contained in the writ of attachment which would have justified reasonable resistance and only such reasonable resistance as was necessary for the purpose of resisting an unlawful act. —S. 186—Officer acting beyond jurisdiction—Obstruction to him is not punishable.

Section 186 does not apply to an officer, who, is acting wholly outside his jurisdiction or authority.

—S. 186—Obstruction to a public servant—Nature of offence.

Proof that the public servant obstructed, was obstructed in the discharge of his public functions, is necessary before a conviction under the section is sustainable. In a suit for account, a preliminary decree was passed ordering defendant to furnish an account within a specified time. He failed to do so, and together with two companions, resisted a peon sent by the Court to arrest him under O. 21, R. 32 of the C. P. Code. Held, that the arrest was unlawful and that the conviction of himself and his two companions of offences under Ss. 186 and 225-B, I. P. C., could not stand. The order for furnishing the accounts was not an injunction within O. 21, R. 32. 3 Pat. L. J. 106 = 19 Cr.L.J. 385 = 44 Ind. Cas. 737.

No offence under S. 186 was committed by the accused in not allowing a Munsiff to pass through their private property while the Munsiff was going in connection with a suit to which accused were no parties. 20 C.W.N. 857 = 18 Cr.L.J. 62 = 37 Ind. Cas. 46.

—Ss. 186 and 434 — Obstruction to public servants — Survey and Boundaries Marks Act (xv of 1897), S. 17 (a)—Removal of landmarks fixed by surveyor outside authorised area—Offence.

A surveyor empowered by a notification under S. 17 (a) of the Survey and Boundaries Marks Act to survey certain lands, in good faith and under colour of his office entered upon the lands of the accused and fixed demarcation stones on them and the accused obstructed him in measuring the lands and removed the demarcation stones. Held, that the accused were guilty of offences under Ss. 186 and 434 though it is proved that the land on which the surveyor carried on his operations was not actually included in the notification. 31 M.L.J. 305 = (1916) 2 M.W.N. 183 = 4 L.W. 377 = 17 Cr.L.J. 481 = 36 Ind. —S. 186 — Municipal Overseer — Unlawful obstruction.

A Municipal Inspector finding the accused exposing vegetables for sale on a public road, directed him to remove the basket from the road, and on the latter's refusing to do so commenced to take away the basket to the Municipal Office, when the accused snatched it away. Held, that the accused could not be convicted of an offence under S. 186 as no authority was pointed out to justify the action of the complainant who was clearly doing an illegal act. (1902) 4 Bom. —Ss. 186, 147—Resistance to defective warrant under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C., if offence.

If there is no jurisdiction to issue a warrant, resistance to the execution of such an illegal warrant is no offence. But for a mere failure to record reasons under O. 21, R. 22 (2), Civil P. —S. 186—Resistance not more than what was justifiable to resist an unlawful proceeding.

A writ of attachment directed the attaching officer to attach the articles belonging to the judgment-debtor as identified by the plaintiffs. The attaching officer found the goods in the physical possession of a stranger A, but on the attaching officer attempting to seal up A's ware-house, he was resisted by A and in consequence A was prosecuted under S. 186, and convicted on the ground that the possession he claimed was not bona fide. It appeared that the actual physical resistance offered by A was not more than he was justified in using in resisting an unlawful proceeding:

Held, that A had committed no offence and that consequently the conviction should be set aside. A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 279=11 Pat. 49=33 Cr.L.J. 883=13 P.L.T. 689=139 Ind. Cas. 834.

Where in execution of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, a warrant was issued directing the executing peon to seize the wife and deliver her to her husband, failing which, to bring her under arrest before the executing Court, and the peon was resisted and the woman was snatched away, Held, that the warrant, the execution of which was resisted, was illegal and therefore no offence was committed under S. 186. 22 C.W.N. 814=19 Cr.L.J. 968=47 Ind. —S. 186—Time expired warrant.

When the date fixed in a warrant of attachment has expired, then the warrant is no longer in force and capable of execution, and if any person offers resistance to execution, purporting to be made under the time expired warrant then he is not guilty of any offence under S. 186; 10 Cal. 18; 37 Cal. 122; 31 Cal. 424 and 1 Pat. Where the returnable date fixed in the writ of attachment was the 2nd April but the attachment was sought to be made on the 8th of April, the execution of the writ is absolutely illegal and resistance to the attachment not being illegal, the conviction under S. 186, I.P.C. is bad. 1 Pat. —S. 186—Resistance to execution of warrant—Time expired—Warrant.

Resistance to a warrant, which is out of date and overdue, or to one, which is not endorsed with the name of the person executing it or executed by a person not authorised, is not an offence under S. 186. 37 Cal. 122=14 G.W.N. 282=11 Cr.L.J. 128=5 Ind. Cas. 409.

—S. 186—Resistance to the execution of warrant under the Public Demands Recovery Act after the date specified in the warrant—Civil procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. 21, R. 24—Extended date not specified in the warrant—Execution by person not expressly authorised—Warrant under Chowkidari Act (VI of 1870, B.C.) S. 45—Delegation of authority to execute.

A warrant issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (1 of 1895) was made, returnable on the 26th July and it was alleged by the prosecution that the warrant was extended to the 8th of August. The accused resisted the execution of the warrant on the 2nd August and were charged with an offence under S. 186, I.P.C. Held,—That under Order 21, rule 24, of the Civil Procedure Code the day on or before which the warrant was to be executed should have been specified in the warrant. Even assuming that the warrant had been extended to 8th August, the warrant on the date of its execution, viz., the 2nd August, was not a good warrant inasmuch as the extended date did not appear on the warrant and therefore the accused did not commit any offence under S. 186 by offering resistance to its execution on the 2nd August. Resistance to the execution of a warrant issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act, by a person on whom the warrant on the face of it does not confer any authority to execute it does not constitute an offence under S. 186, I.P.C. The person against whom the warrant is sought to be executed is entitled to see the warrant not only for the purpose of satisfying himself as to the amount but also for the purpose of satisfying himself that the person who seeks to execute the warrant is legally authorised to do so. Where a warrant issued under S. 45 of the Chowkidari Act (VI of 1870, B.C.) was directed to the Naib nazir who made it over to one of his subordinates for execution; Held, that the resistance to the execution of the warrant by the latter person to whom the warrant was made over did not constitute an offence under S. 186, I. P. C. The warrant issued under S. 45 of the Chowkidari Act must contain the name of the person who is to execute it and only that person who is named in the warrant as charged with execution can lawfully execute it. The words of S. 45 of the Chowkidari Act are sufficient stringently to override any general power of delegation which the Naib-nazir might have in cases of execution of warrants in which his power has not been specifically limited by statute. 11 Cr. L. J. 128=14 G.W.N. 282=5 Ind. Cas. 409=37 C. 122.

4. Miscellaneous.

—S. 186.

The Judge cannot refrain from taking action under S. 186 because subsequent to the assault the judgment-debtor has taken proceedings under Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, with the possible result that the debt in connection with which the warrant was issued would become non-existent, when on the point of fact at the time of assault, there was no question of any proceedings under Agri. Debtors Act. A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 414=43 Cr. L.J. 410=1 L.R. (1942) 2 Cal. 108=198 Ind. Cas. 617.

—S. 186—Charge under S. 186 framed widely.

Where a charge under S. 186, had been widely framed—framed against all the six accused and in respect of all the six days—and yet it was impossible to gather from the judgments of the lower Courts in respect of which of these days two alone out of the six accused were found guilty and where the evidence was not specifically considered in respect of any particular dates or offenders regarding any obstruction offered by them on any particular day:

—S. 186—Sentence.

The defiance of the processes of law is a serious offence, as it hampers the administration of justice. If allowed to be committed with impunity, the prestige of the Court is lost and hence, the sentence should not be lenient. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 548=19 P. L. T. 665=5 B.R. 104=40 Cr.L.J. 74=17 Pat. 680=178 Ind. Cas. 487.

—Ss. 186 and 189—Separate conviction and sentence—Lagality.

Separate convictions under both sections are bad when the accused is found to have refused to follow the Court peon when arrested under civil warrant and threatened to use violence—Whole occurrence falls under S. 189, Penal Code. 82 Ind. Cas. 163=25 Cr.L.J. 1237=A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 183.

—S. 187—Refusing to sign search list.

Per Varma and Manohar Lall, JJ. (Chatterji, J., dissenting).—The word 'assistance' in the first part of S. 187, is eiusdem generis with the various forms of assistance specified in the latter half of the section. Assisting a search officer by attending and witnessing a search has been made eiusdem generis by the Legislature with the kind of assistance referred to in the second part of the section. But again it is the refusal to attend and witness the search that has been made penal and not the signing of the search list. A refusal to sign search list by a witness to search cannot by itself be deemed to be an offence under S. 187, I. P. C. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 403=19 P.L.T. 461=4 B.R. 772=39 Cr.L.J. 756=17 Pat. 632=176 Ind. Cas. 787 (F.B.)

—S. 187—"Assistance"—Refusing to sign search list—No offence—Cr.P.C., S. 103 (1).

Refusing to sign a search list though intentionally is not an offence under S. 187, the "assistance" referred to in the former part of S. 187, is eiusdem generis with the various forms of assistance specified in the latter half. The "assistance" must have some direct personal relation to the execution of the duty by the public officer. The word "assistance" as used in the section implies that the party who assists is doing something which, in ordinary circumstances, the party assisted could do for himself. 26 M. 419 (F.B.)

—S. 187—Refusal to aid arrest.

Where a person when arrested by a Police Officer lay down on the ground and refused to move, and the Police Officer sought for the help of the accused to remove him and the accused refused aid:

Held, that as the person lay down in order to secure his eventual escape from being taken to the thana and the assistance of the accused was consequently demanded to prevent his escape, the refusal of the accused to offer the aid, made him liable for conviction under S. 187. —S. 187—Police holding a search to trace certain person—Cr.P.C., S. 42.

—S. 187—Search under S. 103, Cr. P. Code—Refusal to assist—Salt Inspector holding a search.

A person was called upon by a Salt Inspector to assist in a search held under S. 103, Cr.P.C., but refused to do so. He was thereupon convicted under S. 187, I.P.C. Held, that the conviction was right. 38 M.L.J. 27=11 L.W. 58=(1920) M.W.N. 110=12 Cr.L.J. 33=54 Ind. Cas. 241.

1. Applicability of section.

—S. 188—Disobedience of order under S. 36 (4), Legal Practitioners' Act.

Proceedings under the Legal Practitioners' Act are quasi-criminal proceedings, and S. 188, I. P. Code, applies to the disobedience of an order under S. 36 (4), Legal Practitioners' Act, excluding a person from the precincts of a Court by reason of inclusion of his name in the list of touts. I. L. R. (1950) Nag. 449=A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 158=4 A.I.Cr.D. 366=51 Cr. L. J. 1007=1950 N.L.J. 215.

—S. 188—Order of injunction by Civil Court—Disobedience of—Offence—Prosecution—Complaint by Court—Necessity—Cr. P. Code, S. 195 (1).

S. 188, I.P. Code, only applies to orders made by public functionaries and for public purposes, and not to an order made in a civil suit between party and party, such as an order of injunction restraining a party from executing a decree. Such an order is not one for public purposes, and hence disobedience of such an injunction order is not an offence under S. 188, I. P. Code, so as to render a complaint by Court necessary for prosecution of the person disobeying the order of injunction under S. 195 (1), Cr. P. Code. 6 Cal. 445, Foll. A. I. R. 1949 Cal. 349=3 A. I. Cr. D. 332=50 Cr.L.J. 632.

—S. 188—Orders contemplated by.

S. 188, I. P. Code, is confined to orders promulgated by public functionaries for public purposes and in the public interest. I. L. R. (1947) All. 722=A.I.R. 1948 All. 50=48 Cr. L. J. 982=1947 A. L. J. 304=1947 A.W.R. (H.C.) 196 (2).

—S. 188—Applicability—Order by attaching Court to produce property—Order disobeyed—S. 188 does not apply.

S. 188 is intended to apply to orders passed by the public functionaries in the public interest or to prevent a breach of the peace or other unlawful disturbance and not to orders made in a civil suit between party and party, for the breach of which a remedy has been provided by the Code of Civil Procedure.

The order issued by the attaching Court to the custodian to produce the property entrusted to him in Court on a certain date for sale by auction is in substance an order issued by the Court to a person who held the property in trust for that Court, and the disobedience of such an order might delay the sale but cannot be deemed to cause any obstruction, annoyance or injury or risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person lawfully employed or to produce any of the other results specified in the section. S. 188 of the Penal Code cannot be applied to such a case. 6 Cal. 445 and 4 Ind. Cas. 824, Foll. 61 Ind. Cas. 237=24 O.C. 18=22 Cr.L.J. 381=A.I.R. 1921 Oudh 123.

The word 'promulgated' in S. 188 of the I.P.C. refers to orders passed under the Cr. P. Code, and disobedience to an injunction issued by a Civil Court is not punishable under that section. 6 C. 445, Foll. 39 Mad. 543=17 M.L.T. 391=2 L.W. 410=16 Cr.L.J. 592=30 Ind. Cas. 144.

—S. 188—Disobedience to injunction to a guardian not to marry ward.

The operation of S. 188 is limited to the promulgation by public servants of the public orders relating to safety, health or convenience of the public. A guardian disobeying an injunction of a Court not to marry a ward does not fall within the section. 17 Bom. L.R. 676=16 Cr.L.J. 668=30 Ind. Cas. 652.

—S. 188—Order in civil suits between party and party.

The disobedience of a prohibitory order issued under (O. 21, R. 46) S. 268, C.P.C., is not punishable under S. 188, as the section does not apply to orders in civil suits between party and party. 11 Cr.L.J. 56=4 Ind. Cas. 824 (U. Bur.).

2. Disobedience of order.

- (a) Illegal orders
- (b) Orders under S. 144, Cr.P.C.
- (c) Other orders.

2 (a). Disobedience of order—Illegal orders.

—S. 188.

The words 'to abstain from a certain act' in S. 144, Criminal P.C., do not empower Magistrates to make a positive order requiring a person to do a particular thing. This order, being without jurisdiction, the subsequent order summoning the person under S. 188, Penal Code, for disobeying the order under S. 144, Criminal P.C., is without jurisdiction. (1936) 164 Ind. Cas. 434=61 C.L.J. 579=37 Cr.L.J. 936=39 C.W.N. 1053.

—S. 188.

In proceedings under S. 144, Criminal P. C., a Magistrate is only entitled to make a restrictive order preventing the opposite party from doing an act, but it does not enable him to make a mandatory order directing the opposite party to do some act. When such a mandatory order is passed, it is beyond the Magistrates power, and the opposite party is under no obligation to obey it. Consequently, disobedience of such an order is not punishable under S. 188, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 724=34 Cr.L.J. 1192=63 Cal. 11=38 C.W.N. 115=146 Ind. Cas. 169.

—S. 188—Proceedings under S. 133—Legality of order if can be raised in trial.

A question as to the validity of the final order made in proceedings under S. 133, Criminal P. C., cannot be raised at the trial of the accused for an offence under S. 188, Penal Code, for disobedience of the order. Where in the proceedings no objection has been raised that a co-sharer was not made a party, it cannot be raised in subsequent proceedings under S. 188, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 242=60 Cal. 1336=35 Cr.L.J. 778=148 Ind. Cas. 808

The determination of question whether an offence is committed in disobeying an order does not depend on its legality. 73 Ind. Cas. 801=45 All. 526=24 Cr.L.J. 689=A.I.R. 1923 All. 606.

—S. 188—Order under S. 144, Cr. P.C.—Provision for questioning its legality—Prosecution for disobedience—Legality—Contesting of.

An order under Cr. P. Code, S. 144 was passed. A revision was taken to the High Court. But the High Court dismissed the application because the period of the order had elapsed and because it was stated when the order was passed that its legality could be questioned in a prosecution under S. 188, I.P.C., if there should be one for disobedience of the order. Then there was a prosecution under Penal Code, S. 188.

Held, that the legality of the order under Cr.P. Code, S. 144, could be gone into. 67 Ind. Cas. 200=34 C.L.J. 578=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 258.

—S. 188 — Criminal Procedure Code, S. 550 — Order by Sub-Inspector of Police on a Station Master to detain goods suspected to be stolen—Legality of—Proper procedure to be adopted.

An order issued by a Police Sub-Inspector to a Station Master directing him to detain certain goods suspected to be stolen is irregular. The Sub-Inspector should in such cases act under S. 550 of the Cr.P. Code and seize the suspected goods. 16 O.C. 371=15 Cr.L.J. 177=22 Ind. Cas. 753.

—S. 188—Grantee — Order directed to person other than grantee of land—Burma land Revenue Act II of 1847.

An order directing persons other than the grantee of the land to take certain order with buildings on the land is unwarranted by the Burma Land Revenue Act and the rules thereunder, and therefore such persons are not liable under S. 188, Penal Code. 7 Bur. L. T. 25=7 L.B.R. 75=15 Cr.L.J. 22=22 Ind. Cas. 166.

—S. 188—Order under S. 145, Cr. P. Code—Legal order—Disobedience.

Where an order under S. 145, Cr. P. C., is illegal by reason of the Magistrate not complying with the provisions thereof, a person disregarding the order cannot be punished under S. 188, I.P.C. 16 P.W.R. 1913 (Cr.) =92 P.L.R. 1913=14 Cr.L.J. 63=18 Ind. Cas. 351.

—S. 188—Order forbidding entry into Railway premises—Summary trial—High Court's power to interfere.

Where there is no order by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, a conviction under S. 188, I.P.C., though obtained at a summary trial should be set aside. An order forbidding persons to enter railway quarters except for purposes of travelling, is an illegal order as the public has a right to go to Railway premises for many purposes other than travelling. 35 All. 136=11 All.L.J. 92=14 Cr.L.J. 122=18 Ind. Cas. 682.

—Ss. 188 and 430—Overseer of the P.W.D. empowered to promulgate an order.

The accused, ryots of a certain village, were convicted by the Dy. Magistrate of offences under Ss. 430 and 188 for damming a certain odal and feeding the tank against the order of the P. W. D. Overseer. The Sessions Judge reversed the conviction under S. 430 but confirmed the conviction under S. 188. It was contended on behalf of the accused, that the Overseer's order did not come within S. 188, the contention was valid. The order of the Overseer could not operate to make an act unlawful which was lawful before its promulgation. (1910) M. W. N. 616=9 M.L.T. 42=11 Cr.L.J. 621=8 Ind. Cas. 302.

—S. 188—Lawful order—Promulgation.

An order by a District Magistrate directing that certain plots of land are not to be cultivated is not such an order that its disobedience is punishable under S. 188. (1904) 1 A.L.J. 615. Also 1904 A.W.N. 233.

Nor an order made by a Receiver not to pay rents to any other persons. Disobedience of such an order is not an offence under S. 188 as it did not cause annoyance, etc., as required by S. 188. (1901) 6 C.W.N. 141=29 C. 236.

2 (b). Disobedience of order—Orders under S. 144, Cr. P. C.

—S. 188—Disobedience of order under S. 144, Cr.P. Code—Irregularity in method of service—Validity of proceedings.

Where the accused had actual knowledge of the order under S. 144, Cr.P. Code, by reason of the fact that he acknowledged service of the order on him, the failure to leave duplicate copy with him does not affect the validity of the proceedings under S. 188, I. P. Code. 16 C. 9, Foll. 54 C.W.N. 256=51 Cr.L.J. 59=A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 677.

—S. 188—Irregularity in promulgation of order under S. 144, Criminal P. C.

Even if there has been irregularity in the method of promulgation of the order under S. 144, Criminal P.C., that in itself would not make it ultra vires, so as to prevent the conviction of any person who, being proved to have had knowledge of the order, nevertheless disobeyed it. It is not enough in such cases to prove that the order has been duly promulgated. There must also be positive evidence that the accused had knowledge of the order which he is charged with disobeying. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 446=6 B. R. 425=41 Cr.L.J. 414=21 P.L.T. 231=187 Ind. Cas. 135.

—S. 188—Disobedience of order under S. 144, Cr.P. Code—Trial for—Propriety of order—Power of Court to consider.

It is not open to the Court trying an accused for disobedience of an order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, to decide whether it would have passed such an order in the circumstances of the case. It has to take the order as a good and valid order unless it is shown that the order was a nullity by reason of the fact that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction, or by reason of some other similar circumstance. The Court is not to superimpose its view on the propriety of the order. 54 C.W.N. 256=51 Cr.L.J. 59=A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 677.

Order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., prohibiting persons from organising or holding or attending any meeting or procession, etc., picketing at toddy shops, and also prohibiting public from taking any part in such activities—Accused closing his own shop and exhorting his neighbours to close their shops:

—S. 188—Disobedience long after order.

Orders passed under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, being intended to provide for cases where a speedy remedy was desirable, do not have more than a temporary operation. Where an order had been passed on 7th February 1873 presumably under the said section prohibiting religious processions with music in any but certain specified thoroughfares in Bareilly City, a person could not now be convicted under S. 188 of the Penal Code for disobedience of that order long after. 59 Ind. —S. 188—Prohibitory order against marriage of a minor girl without Court's permission.

Where the marriage of a minor girl was performed with the person having knowledge of prohibitory order, the breach of the order committed was not merely technical but constituted deliberate defiance of the Court. The defiance of the authority of the Court, if not severely dealt with, is calculated to nullify the law which empowers it to take timely and proper measures for the welfare and protection of minors. Both the parties are liable to be dealt with for defiance of the authority of the Court which is an offence. A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 203=1940 N.L.J. 157=41 Cr.L.J. 803=I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 45=189 Ind. ## —S. 188—Order under Bombay City Police Act—Disobedience of, is offence under section.

The offence of disobedience of an order duly promulgated by a public servant under certain prescribed conditions is an offence under S. 188, I.P.C. and S. 23 (3) enlarges the ambit of the existing offence under S. 188, I.P.C. by including an act prohibited by S. 23 (3) within it. Though the disobedience of the order of the Police Commissioner under S. 23 (3) is an offence punishable under S. 127, yet it would be equally punishable under S. 188, I.P.C., if all the conditions laid down by that section are fulfilled. 1929 Cr.C. 545=31 Bom. ## —S. 188—Order to remove obstruction—Disobedience—Order to show cause against prosecution—Petitioner pleading that he has removed obstruction—Order for prosecution is bad.

The petitioner was alleged to have obstructed a roadway. Apparently he maintains that at the time the roadway was not public. Proceedings were accordingly commenced against the petitioner under Section 133 on the 25th of May, 1922. The petitioner, as he had a right to do, applied to the Magistrate for a Jury under section 134. The Jury was accordingly appointed and instructed to report on a certain day; but they did not report on the appointed day and on that day the Magistrate without any further ado made the conditional order which he had previously made absolute, ordering the alleged obstruction to be pulled down. Apparently the order directed the petitioner to pull the obstructions down by the 5th of August. For some reason or other he did not do so and some days later, the fact that he had not done so was brought to the notice of the Magistrate who directed him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for an offence against the provisions of Section 188 of the Indian Penal Code. However, a little later on, the petitioner came and told the Magistrate that he had removed the alleged obstructions; but nevertheless, the Magistrate had directed that he should still be prosecuted. Held the order was illegal and must be set aside. 73 Ind. —S. 188, Cr.P.C., Ss. 133 and 137—Verbal order to remove obstruction—Disobedience.

A verbal order to remove an obstruction under S. 133 of the Cr.P.C. has not the effect of a final order under S. 137 of Cr.P.C., and a person disobeying such an order is not guilty of an offence under S. 188 of the Penal Code. 16 Cr.L.J. 24=26 Ind. Cas. 328 (Cal.)

3. Essentials for conviction.

—S. 188—Conviction under—Likely consequences of breach of order—Need for proof.

Under S. 188, I. P. Code, there can be no conviction unless the likely consequences of the breach of the order are proved. If the prosecution leads no evidence to prove this, the gap cannot be filled up by resort to judicial notice. 58 C. 971, Rel. on. I.L.R. (1949) Nag. 976=51 Cr.L.J. 254=4 A.I.Cr.D. 165=1950 N. L. J. 211=A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 12.

—S. 188—Disobedience of order under S. 144, Cr.P. Code—When punishable.

It is clear from S. 188, I. P. Code, that mere disobedience of an order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, is not punishable under that section. The disobedience of the order must cause or tend to cause danger to life, health or safety, or cause or tend to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person lawfully employed. 54 C.W.N. 256=51 Cr.L.J. 59=A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 677.

—S. 188—Disobedience of order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code—If per se offence punishable under S. 188.

A mere disobedience of an order passed under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, does not amount to an offence punishable under S. 188, I. P. Code. To establish an offence under S. 188, I. P. Code, the prosecution has to prove that the disobedience caused or tendered to cause danger to human life, health or safety, or caused or tended to cause a riot or affray. A disobedience per se of an order promulgated under S. 144, is not an offence. 231 Ind. Cas. 224=48 Cr.L.J. 747.

—S. 188—Essentials for conviction under S. 188.

For a conviction under S. 188, there must clearly be something more than mere disobedience of the order. It must also be shown that obstruction, annoyance or injury, danger to human life, etc., have been caused or might have been caused. Where there is a finding that the disobedience of the order was risky to the public peace the conviction of the accused under S. 188 is justified. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 446=21 P.L.T. 231=41 Cr.L.J. 414=6 B. R. 425=187 Ind. Cas. 135.

—S. 188.

It is not necessary for a conviction under S. 188 that there should be a definite finding of the Magistrate that the action of each accused led to or caused a breach of the peace. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 162=11 O.W.N. 384=35 Cr.L.J. 699=9 Luck. 543=148 Ind. Cas. 518.

Where the accused, on being served with a notice under S. 144, Criminal P. C., to abstain from constructing or proceeding with the construction of a certain work, disobeyed the order, and was charged under S. 188, Penal Code, and the Magistrate in convicting him condemned such conduct as tending to cause an affray:

Held, that the Magistrate erred in arguing from general to the particular, whereas he ought to have come to the conclusion from the actual facts of this case as to whether or not there was a tendency for an affray to be caused. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 868=36 C.W.N. 792=33 Cr.L.J. 829=139 Ind. Cas. 739.

—S. 188—Ingredients of offence.

Under S. 188, mere disobedience of an order does not constitute an offence in itself. There must be a disobedience of the order and then it must be shown that the disobedience has a certain consequence or tends to some result.

In the case of offence under S. 188, there must be some definite evidence to justify the Court in classifying them under one group or another of the cases with which that section deals. They cannot be classified in the graver category merely upon the general consideration that now-a-days if any person is arrested it may lead to a riot or affray. A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 122=32 Cr.L.J. 511=35 C.W.N. 257=53 C.L.J. 461=58 Cal. 971=130 Ind. Cas. 241.

—S. 188—Evidence and proof.

Section 144 makes provision for a contingency that local and temporary orders may, at times, be made without there being a real danger of breach of the peace or other reason justifying it. Accordingly, under that section it has to be proved that the accused not merely disobeyed the lawful order but that the act of disobedience was such as caused or involved the risk of a breach of the peace or other danger or trouble. 1930 Cr. C. 131=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 131.

—S. 188—Essentials.

In order to constitute offence under S. 188 it is not sufficient merely to find that a person was a member of a crowd which disobeyed a lawful order but it must further be found that the disobedience of the crowd of which that person was a member, tended to cause danger to human life, health or safety, or caused or tended to cause a riot or an affray. 111 Ind. Cas. 461=10 Lah. 231=29 P. L. R. 647=29 Cr. L. J. 877=11 A.I.Cr. R. 137=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 378.

—S. 188.

Where having regard to the circular issued by the accused and his admissions that he convened the meeting, there is adequate ground for drawing the inference that the accused knew that the disobedience of the order of the Commissioner of Police would at least result in a conflict with police the disobedience of the order under S. 23 (3) in such a case fulfils all the conditions necessary to constitute an offence under Penal Code, S. 188. 1929 Cr. C. 545=31 Bom. L. R. 1151=A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 432.

In the absence of a finding to the effect that the disobedience was likely to cause or tended to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury or risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person or any one of the things mentioned in Cl. 3, the mere disobedience of a duly promulgated order is not an offence under S. 188. 109 Ind. —S. 188—Order—Picketing, prohibition of—Public place—Promulgation of—Disobedience to the order.

A number of young men, including the accused were found preventing and patrolling the roads near the liquor shops in the Belgaum City some shouting "don't drink" and using offensive language in addition to those words such as "If you drink it will be as if you drink the blood of your children." The District Magistrate thereupon issued orders under S. 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code prohibiting these acts; but the persons warned continued to do them from the verandah of a private house adjoining a public place:

Held, (1) that objectionable language such as "If you drink, you will be drinking the blood of your children" speaks for itself. No further evidence than the words used is required to prove that it has a tendency to cause annoyance to persons lawfully employed under S. 188 of the Indian Penal Code. (1908) 10 Bom. L.R. 1047.

—S. 188—Breach of the peace, likelihood of, necessary to support conviction.

To support a conviction under S. 188, some evidence that the disobedience is likely to cause a breach of the peace is necessary. 4 C.W.N. 226, Foll. (1904) 8 C.W.N. 781=31 C. 990.

Definite evidence on record necessary. (1905) 32 C. 793=2 Cr.L.J. 760.

—S. 188—Offence under Police Act, 1861, S. 32 and S. 188, Penal Code—Knowledge of order is a necessary ingredient.

Knowledge of the order is a necessary ingredient of the offences punishable under S. 188, Penal Code, and S. 32, Police Act. There is no foundation for a distinction between S. 188, Penal Code, and S. 32, Police Act, so far as the element of knowledge as an essential ingredient of the offence is concerned. A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 535=1937 M.W.N. 172=45 L.W. 400=(1937) 1 M.L.J. 473=38 Cr.L.J. 620=168 Ind.Cas. 848.

—S. 188—Requirements of.

The requirements of S. 188, are satisfied only on proof that a person having knowledge of the order and being thereby directed to abstain from a certain act has disobeyed such direction. It is not enough that he has failed to prove that the disobedience of the order by another person was without his consent. There does not lie upon the accused person the burden of proving any such thing. A.I.R. 1933 Sind 93=34 Cr. L. J. 362=142 Ind. Cas. 591.

—S. 188—Disobedience of notice.

Without a finding on the plea of the accused, there is no legal basis for convicting the accused for disobedience of the order. 1933 M.W.N. 223.

—S. 188—Promulgation of order is not sufficient—Accused must be proved to have knowledge of the order.

Section 188 requires that it should not merely be proved that there was an order which was duly promulgated under S. 134, Cr.P. Code, but also that the accused person who is going to be convicted under the section was aware of it. The promulgation of the order is not sufficient to establish this knowledge. 99 Ind. Cas. 36=54 Cal. 152=28 Cr.L.J. 4=44 C. L. J. 250=A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 28.

—S. 188.

It is not sufficient in order to affect a person with the knowledge of an order under S. 144 and to render him liable to conviction under S. 188 to show that the order had been duly promulgated. It is necessary to prove by positive evidence that he has the knowledge that the order has been made. 100 Ind. Cas. 830=31 C.W.N. 340=45 C.L.J. 202=28 Cr. L. J. 350=7 A.I.Cr.R. 540=A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 306.

—S. 188.

It is the duty of the prosecution in every case under S. 188 to prove by positive evidence that the accused had knowledge of the order with the disobedience of which he is charged. The proof of general notification promulgating the order does not satisfy the requirements of the section. 63 Ind. Cas. 865=22 Cr. L. J. 705 (Lah.).

4. Interpretation—"Promulgate."

—S. 188—"Promulgate"—Meeting convened against order of Police Commissioner—Order held duly promulgated under S. 188.

On 19th July 1920, the Commissioner of Police issued an order, styling it a "notification" under S. 23 (3) of Bombay City Police Act prohibiting the President, the Secretary, the members of the managing Committee and the members of the Girni Kamgar Union from holding, convening, or calling together any assembly of mill hands or employers of the textile mills of Bombay for one week from the date of the order. The notification was duly promulgated in the mill area. On 13th July, 1929, a circular was issued purporting to be signed by six persons including the accused inviting the strikers to attend the meeting. The meeting was held in the evening and in consequence the accused were placed before a Magistrate who convicted them under I.P.C., S. 143:

Held, that in issuing the order under S. 23 (3) the Commissioner of Police properly exercised his discretion for the preservation of the public peace and safety and that it was lawfully promulgated within the meaning of Penal Code, S. 188.

Held further, that the order in writing was not vitiated by the mis-description as a notification. 1929 Cr. C. 545=31 Bom. L. R. 1151=A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 433.

Per Walsh, Ag. C. J.—Prima facie "promulgate" seems to indicate, if not a formal document printed or written, at any rate some form of publication. 5. Prosecution for offence—Complaint by public servant—Need for.

A Magistrate, passing an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., cannot take cognizance of an offence under S. 188, Penal Code, for disobedience of his own order. (1936) 164 Ind. Cas. 434=61 C.L.J. 579=37 Cr. L. J. 936=39 C.W.N. 1053.

—S. 188 — Injunction passed under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, without inquiry—Disobedience.

A Magistrate who has passed an injunction under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, without inquiry, cannot take cognizance of an offence under S. 188. 20 C.W.N. 981=17 Cr.L.J. 464=36 Ind. Cas. 144.

—S. 188—Prosecution under—When proper.

Prosecution under S. 188 should not be sanctioned unless all elements necessary for conviction are proved. 57 Ind. Cas. 915=21 Cr.L.J. 675 (Cal.).

—S. 188—Disobedience of order under S. 144 of Cr. P. Code—Cr. P. Code, Ss. 195 and 487.

Cognizance of a case under S. 188, I.P.C., cannot be taken except in accordance with the S. 195, Cr.P.C. Under S. 487, Cr. P.C., the Magistrate whose order is disobeyed is not competent to try the case. 23 C.W.N. 520=29 C.L.J. 382=20 Cr.L.J. 557=51 Ind. Cas. 845.

—S. 188—Disobedience of order under S. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V 1898)—Sanction to prosecute, essentials for granting.

A Magistrate should not sanction a prosecution under S. 188, Penal Code, unless he thinks that all the elements necessary for a conviction are present. Where the order sanctioning a prosecution under S. 188, Penal Code, for an alleged disobedience of an order under S. 144, Cr.P.C., did not show that the disobedience caused or tended to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury or a riot, the High Court set it aside in revision. 5 Ind. Cas. 154=11 Cr.L.J. 49=14 C.W.N. 234.

—S. 188—Prosecution for disobedience to order promulgated by Government—No sanction necessary.—See Cr.P.C., S. 195. 24 M. 70.

6. Miscellaneous.

—S. 188—Carrying out of State, of goods contrary to Ruler's order—Recovery of customs penalty—Prosecution if dispensed with.

Where persons carry out of the State goods contrary to orders of the Ruler and customs penalty is recovered from him at the outpost, that cannot dispense with the prosecution of the accused for an offence under S. 188, I.P. Code, which they have committed by their act. 51 Cr.L.J. 1330=A.I.R. 1950 Kut. 62.

—S. 188—Prior proceedings under S. 291, I.P. Code—Acquittal—Subsequent proceedings for offence under S. 188—Bar.

Where a person has been proceeded against under S. 291, Penal Code, for flagrant disobedience of an order of the Court to discontinue a nuisance and acquitted before anything can be done against such a person under S. 188, Penal Code, a complaint is necessary under S. 195, Cr.P. Code and S. 403 is no bar to such proceedings. 1930 Cr.C. 1231=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1055.

—S. 188—Interference with property under Receiver in spite of Court's order—Act also punishable under Penal Code.

Where a Receiver had been appointed by the Court, and an order had been passed giving him possession of the property and the Court had decided that the tenants from the mortgagor-defendant had no right to take the crops, nor had they any right to remain on the land, the cutting and taking away of crops on such land by such tenants is contempt of Court. The fact that these acts are punishable under the Penal Code, does not make the contempt punishable under the Code, and consequently, it cannot be said that the High Court has no right to take cognizance of such contempt.

In initiation of contempt proceedings, in the above circumstances, the proper procedure is that the plaintiff should apply to the Court to obtain the protection of the Court after the appointment of a Receiver rather than that the Receiver should make the application himself. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 684=37 Cr.L.J. 65=40 C.W.N. 413=159 Ind. Cas. 180.

No appeal lies against the refusal of a public servant to file a complaint under S. 188. A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 336=1939 M.W.N. 119=49 L.W. 387 (1)=40 Cr.L.J. 568 (2)=181 Ind. Cas. 557.

—S. 188—Duty of Crown to abide by law.

It is the duty of the Crown and of every branch of the executive to abide by and obey the law. If there is any difficulty in ascertaining it, the Courts are open to the Crown to sue, and it is the duty of the executive in cases of doubt to ascertain the law in order to obey it, not to disregard it. A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 65=3 B.R. 248 (2)=16 P.L.T. 95=16 Pat. 159=166 Ind. Cas. 966 (S.B.).

—S. 188—Interpretation.

Per Sulaiman, J.—To be justified in directing a certain act to be done or not to be done is one thing, and be legally empowered to order its commission or omission, with the consequence of the disobedience being punishable under Section 188 of the Indian Penal Code, is quite another. 85 Ind. Cas. 823=47 All. 205=22 A.L.J. 1049=26 Cr.L.J. 599=6 L.R.A.Cr. 1=A.I.R. 1925 All. 165.

—S. 189—Applicability—“Threat of injury”—What amounts to.

S. 189, I. P. Code, can have no application to a case where there is nothing to show that the accused held out any threat of injury to a public servant. To amount to a threat there must be a declaration of an intention to inflict injury, loss or pain to another. In the absence of such a declaration amounting to a threat, there can be no prosecution under S. 189, I.P. Code. 4 A.I.Cr.D. 729.

—S. 189—Mere threat uttered as exhibition of bad temper.

It is of the essence of an offence under S. 189, Penal Code that the threat or injury should have been held out for the purpose of inducing a public servant to do any act or to forbear or delay the doing of an act. A mere threat, uttered as an exhibition of bad temper or in the course of an altercation, is not necessarily an offence under S. 189. A.I.R. 1936 All. 171=37 Cr.L.J. 212=1936 A.W.R. 28=(1936) A.L.J. 195=160 Ind. Cas. 17.

—S. 189.

Defendant's written statement containing defamatory matter regarding plaintiff's son—Plaintiff applying to Court for striking out these matters—Notice on defendant, by plaintiff's son, demanding payment of damages within certain time or else he would institute action for defamation—Application and notice held no contempt of Court. A.I.R. 1940 All. 114=1939 A.L.J. 1157=41 Cr.L.J. 390=1939 A.W.R. 887=187 Ind. Cas. 65.

—S. 189—Person addressing threatening notice to counsel demanding withdrawal of certain allegations of fact made in written statement of his client.

A person addressed a notice to a counsel demanding that certain allegations in the written statement of his client should be withdrawn unconditionally and an apology tendered on pain of legal proceedings being taken against him. Another letter was sent by him or some one interested in him to the client complaining against the counsel for his refusal to withdraw the allegation described as foolish;

Held, that in sending the letter containing threats to the applicant's counsel the person made a clear invasion of the counsel's right to represent his client's case loyally and properly and further interfered with the due performance of his duty towards his client. The addressing of the notice and the letter was, therefore, calculated to interfere with and to obstruct or divert the course of justice. The sender was, therefore, clearly guilty of contempt of Court. A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 110=1939 N.L.J. 461=I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 69=41 Cr.L.J. 709=189 Ind. Cas. 58.

Where the accused simply threatened the public servant not to go through the door which was not the proper entrance and did not threaten him not to attach the cattle, he cannot be convicted under S. 189. 1939 M.W.N. 1271.

—S. 189—Essentials of offence.

Two Police constables went at night to the house of a dagi who was under surveillance under the Bengal Police Regulations and called him out from a public street. The accused who was a brother of the dagi came out with a lathi in his hand and enquired why they came. After the facts were explained the accused threatened the constables with breaking their heads. While this happened the dagi came out and stood by:

Held, that the accused was guilty of an offence under S. 189. A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 448=58 C. 392=32 Cr.L.J. 1181=134 Ind. Cas. 536.

—S. 189—Elements of offence—Threat of injury to public servant necessary.

Before an offence under S. 189 can be made out, it must be shown that there was a threat of injury to a public servant for the purpose of inducing him to do any act or forbear or delay to do any act connected with the exercise of his public functions. A process-server has no right to enter into a house without obtaining permission of the owner. Merely abusing the process-server therefore will not constitute an offence under S. 189. I.P.C. 39 Mad. 561=28 M.L.J. 505=2 L.W. 463=17 M.L.T. 398=(1915) M.W.N. 365=16 Cr.L.J. 477=29 Ind. Cas. 109.

Injury in S. 189 implies an illegal harm; but the mere threat to bring a legal complaint either before a Court or before a constable's superiors is not an injury. 93 Ind. Cas. 48=6 Lah. 558=27 Cr.L.J. 400=27 P.L.R. 87=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 139.

—S. 189—Separate convictions.

Separate convictions under both sections are bad when the accused is found to have refused to follow the Court peon when arrested under civil warrant and threatened to use violence—Whole occurrence falls under S. 189, Penal Code. 82 Ind. Cas. 163=25 Cr.L.J. 1297=A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 183.

—S. 190—Injury, what is.

A threat for the institution of a civil suit for a mere declaration of right against a person who is objecting to that right cannot be said to be an injury within S. 190. 92 Ind. Cas. 863=24 A.L.J. 314=27 Cr.L.J. 351=7 L.R.A.Cr. 51=A.I.R. 1926 All. 277.

1. Basis for prosecution.

—S. 191 and Cr. P. Code (V of 1898), S. 360—Prosecution for perjury on deposition not read over to witness.

It cannot be said that if a deposition is not read over it cannot be found to be false. Its falsity or otherwise does not depend upon its being read over or not. The sole object behind the provision under S. 360, Cr.P. Code, requiring the deposition to be read over is only to have an accurate record of the deposition. If it is not read over it is only an irregularity. So even if a deposition is not read over, if it is false, the deponent can be prosecuted for perjury. 1950 A.W.R. 323=A.I.R. 1950 A. 501=51 Cr.L.J. 1346=1950 A.L.J. 277.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Memorandum of evidence taken under Special Criminal Courts Ordinance 2 (II) of 1942 not read over to witness—Prosecution for perjury would not be expedient.

Where the memorandum of evidence taken down by the Special Judge was in no case read over to the witness who gave evidence, the protection given by the law to the witness is lost and it would be judicially inexpedient to prosecute the witness for perjury. A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 38=I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 788=(1945) N.L.J. 551.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Deposition not read over to witness, can't be basis of prosecution.

Where the provisions of Order 18, Rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code have not been fully complied with, e.g., when the deposition of a witness has not been read over to him after it is recorded it is not permissible to prosecute the witness on his previous statement thus informally recorded and to supplement such omission by means of extrinsic evidence, although every departure from the letter of the law not offending against the spirit of it, should not derogate from the evidentiary value of a record of Court. 42 Cal. 240, Foll. 28 Mad. 308, Foll. 81 Ind. Cas. 803=51 Cal. 236=25 Cr.L.J. 1027=A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 705.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

For the purpose of a prosecution under S. 193 depositions to which the procedure laid down in S. 360 has not been applied, cannot be properly used. S. 360 applies equally to accused as well as witnesses. 62 Ind. Cas. 584=2 P.L.T. 300=22 Cr.L.J. 568=1921 P.H.C.C. 139=A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 149.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Deposition not read—Conviction bad.

If the deposition is not read to the witness and acknowledged by him to be correct, it is bad to convict him under S. 193. The omission to read is more than irregularity. The deposition is the only evidence admissible of the statements alleged to have been made by a witness. (1918) M.W.N. 239, not Foll. 42 Mad. 561=36 M.L.J. 296=9 L.W. 349=(1919) M.W.N. 183=25 M.L.T. 356=20 Cr.L.J. 379=50 Ind. Cas. 987.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Perjury—Evidence Act, Ss. 80 and 91—Deposition not read over—Sanction.

Deposition not read over to the deponent, cannot be used in sanction proceedings as it will be evidence under S. 80, Evidence Act only if it is taken in accordance with law. S. 91 of the Evidence Act prevents other evidence being given. 13 Cr.L.J. 569, 12 C.W.N. 845, 28 M. 308, 36 Ind. Cas. 955, Foll. 11 Bur. L.T. 202=18 Cr.L.J. 960=42 Ind. Cas. 326.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Deposition not taken in accordance with law—Cr.P.C., S. 360.

A conviction for perjury in respect of statements made in a deposition not read in the presence of the parties as required by law when the deposition has been agreed by party as having been made by him is not bad in law. 28 M. 308, diss. from. 7 Ind. Cas. 414=34 Mad. 141=8 M.L.T. 117=11 C.L.J. 432=20 M.L.J. 943.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Statement in deposition not read over to witness in presence of accused or his pleader—Cr.P.C., S. 360, non-compliance with effect of.

A witness cannot be convicted under S. 193, for having made false statement in his deposition before a Criminal Court when the deposition was not read over to him in the presence of the accused or his pleader in accordance with the provisions of S. 310, Cr.P.C. 28 M. 308, Foll. 12 C.W.N. 845.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Deposition in civil case—Perjury conviction for—C. P. C., S. 183, non-compliance with—Inadmissibility of deposition—Secondary evidence.

A conviction for perjury cannot be sustained where the statement alleged to constitute the perjury is contained in a deposition in a civil case not taken in accordance with the provisions of the C. P. C., neither the deposition nor any secondary evidence of the statement being admissible in evidence in such a case. Where the witness was taken aside by the clerk and his evidence has read over to him in a place where neither the judge nor the vakils were present:

Held, that no conviction could be had for perjury on any statement contained in a deposition so taken. (1904) 28 M. 308=2 Cr.L.J. 756.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Hearsay evidence.

When the evidence is hearsay evidence, a Magistrate should not record it, and if under a mistake of law he records it, such evidence cannot form the basis of criminal prosecution. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 828=38 P.L.R. 16=37 Cr.L.J. 1043=164 Ind. Cas. 1057.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Hearsay evidence.

Hearsay evidence given by witnesses cannot be made the subject of a prosecution under S. 193, nor can the Magistrate be justified in taking action under S. 476, Cr.P.C. 7 A.L.J. 618=11 Cr.L.J. 351=6 Ind. Cas. 390.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Perjury case written complaint, no basis for—But examination on oath can be basis.

As a written complaint is not verified nor is it required by law to be verified it cannot by itself be used as a basis for prosecution for perjury. But the examination of the complainant under S. 200 being taken on oath and signed by the complainant can be so used though it does not bear any certificate by the Magistrate that the same was read over to the complainant. The evident object of getting this substance of the examination of the complaint signed by him or her is to make use of it, in case of need, as against the complainant's subsequent deposition as a witness for starting against him, if need be, a prosecution for perjury on the ground that the two statements contradict each other. 89 Ind. Cas. 713=26 Cr.L.J. 1401=A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 141.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

Where a pardon has been tendered, not during an inquiry under the Criminal Procedure Code, and the approver makes a statement under the pardon, such statement cannot form the basis of an alternative charge of an offence punishable under Section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860. 64 Ind. Cas. 40=46 Bom. 61=23 Bom. L.R. 884=A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 138.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Statement recorded under S. 164.

Although a statement recorded under S. 164, Cr. P. C., is not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, it comes within the meaning of the words 'evidence in any other case' in S. 193, Penal Code. It can be linked with a statement which is evidence in a stage of the judicial proceeding following on the investigation so that the two can be said to be a series of acts on which an alternative charge can be framed under S. 236, Cr. P. Code of intentionally giving false evidence. 60 Ind. Cas. 593=45 Bom. 834=23 Bom. L.R. 1=22 Cr.L.J. 241=A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 3 (F.B.)

—Ss. 191 and 193—False evidence—Prosecution in the alternative in respect of statements made under S. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code and subsequently as a witness in Court.

A complaint was made to the police charging T, S and a third person with having committed an offence under S. 420 of the Indian Penal Code. During the investigation T was examined on oath by a Magistrate under the provisions of S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As the result of the police investigation S was placed on his trial, and T appeared as a prosecution-witness and made a statement which appeared to the Court to be contradictory of his statement previously made under S. 164. Held, that there was no legal objection to the prosecution of T on a charge in the alternative under S. 193 of the Indian Penal Code. 22 A. 115, Foll. 1908 A.W.N. 73. See also 28 B. 533.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Basis for prosecution—Recital in judgment if can take place of deposition.

The prosecution must prove conclusively that the statement made by the accused was necessarily a false statement, before a conviction can be sustained under S. 193, I. P. C. The recital in a judgment of a statement made by a witness is not the same thing as a record of the deposition of the witness. Nor can such recital be accepted as evidence under S. 80 of the Evidence Act and it, therefore, cannot form the basis of a prosecution under S. 193, I. P. C. 21 Cr.L.J. 500=56 Ind. Cas. 660 (Pat.)

—Ss. 191 and 193—Basis for prosecution—Confession.

A 'confession' cannot be made the basis of a prosecution for perjury.

Whether a statement is taken as a statement or as a 'confession' the record can be used only for the purpose for which it was taken. A statement cannot be used as a 'confession', i. e., as an admission of the truth of the facts set out in it. 39 Mad. 977=20 M.L.T. 21=17 Cr.L.J. 195=34 Ind. Cas. 307.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Statement made to police officers under S. 162, Cr. P. C., cannot be made the foundation of a prosecution under S. 193, I. P. C. —See: Cr. P. C., S. 476. 1908 A.W.N. 22=4 A.L.J. 811.

—Ss. 191 and 193—False evidence—Statement to police officer:—See 5 C.W.N. 65=28 C. 348.

2. Charge.

—Ss. 191, 193, 196, 471.

Fact showing offence under Ss. 196, 471, 193, Penal Code and its abetment:

Held, that it is immaterial that no other section except S. 193 has therein been cited.

Also held (Obiter).—That even on a pure and a simple complaint of an offence under S. 193, the Court could take cognizance and convict the accused of an offence under S. 196 or S. 471, if the facts disclosed it. A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 192=1944 N.L.J. 174=I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 589=46 Cr.L.J. 80=215 Ind. Cas. 265.

—Ss. 191, 193, 467—Complaint under S. 193—Conviction under S. 467 also—Legality.

Where the accused against whom a complaint is lodged only under S. 193, is convicted also of an offence under S. 467, the conviction is irregular and made without jurisdiction in view of S. 195, Criminal P. C. A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 67=1937 Pesh. L.J. 67=38 Cr.L.J. 748=169 Ind. Cas. 44.

—Ss. 191, 193, 471 — Production of forged receipts in Court to support defence.

The defendants in a suit handed over a number of receipts to their Vakil along with their written statement and these receipts were filed in Court but they did nothing further. The receipts were held to be forgeries and the Judge filed a complaint for an offence against S. 193, I. P. C. The defendants were found guilty under Ss. 193 and 471:

Held (i), that it was not open to the Appellate Court on finding that the accused were not guilty of an offence under S. 193, to convict them for abetment of an offence under that section on the same charge;

(ii) that it was open to the Sessions Judge to convict the appellants under S. 471 even though the Civil Court had only referred to S. 193 in its complaint. A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 280=1935 M.W.N. 1346=70 M.L.J. 109=43 L.W. 226=37 Cr.L.J. 421=161 Ind. Cas. 196.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

Where prosecution is legally instituted by the Civil Court under S. 181, I. P. C., the Appellate Court can under S. 423, Criminal P. C., alter in proper cases the finding to S. 193, I. P. C., and convict under it. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 263=38 Cr.L.J. 455=1.L.R. (1937) Nag. 102=167 Ind. Cas. 845.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Complaint under Ss. 193 and 211, I. P. C.—Provisions of S. 198, Cr. P. Code complied with—Magistrate can frame charge under S. 500, I. P. C.

Where the complaint purported to be under Ss. 193 and 211, Indian Penal Code, but the Magistrate, after hearing the evidence, framed the charge of defamation, under S. 500, Indian Penal Code, and convicted the accused under that section:

Held: It is quite sufficient that the complainant shall state the true facts in his own language, and it is for the Magistrate to apply the law to those facts. If, in the opinion of the Magistrate, the offence disclosed fell under S. 500, Penal Code, the Magistrate was at liberty to proceed and frame a charge under that section, provided the complainant satisfied the conditions of S. 198 of the Cr. P. Code whatever may have been the section of the Penal Code recited in the complaint. 23 P. R. (Cr.) 1895, Foll. 95 Ind. Cas. 305=6 Lah. 375=26 P. L. R. 552=27 Cr. L. J. 769=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 631.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Charge must set out the specific answer alleged to be false.

A charge under S. 193, was as follows: "That you intentionally gave false evidence in answer to certain of the following questions put to you in the course of your evidence before the said Court." Then followed the 50 questions and the answers thereto. Which answers were alleged to be false did not appear in the charge sheet:

Held, that no accused person reading such a charge could say what he was called on to answer. 76 Ind. Cas. 417=25 Cr.L.J. 177=38 C.L.J. 163=A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 104.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Perjury—Details of charge—Duty to state.

The object of specifying the offence and the occasion when the offence is committed is to give not only notice to the accused, but also to the trying Court of specific offences against the accused. In a case under S. 193 of the I. P. C. for perjury when the prosecution is based upon the certain statements being false made by the accused, it is essential to set out the exact statements in detail upon which the prosecution wants to proceed. (1918) P.H.C.C. 13=4 Pat. L.W. 44=19 Cr.L.J. 169=43 Ind. Cas. 585.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements.

Where a charge is made against a person for making two contradictory statements not absolutely irreconcilable, when the charge does not set forth the contradictory statements, and accused is not allowed to adduce evidence, the trial is irregular and the charge is defective and insufficient. If the deposition recorded does not appear to be read over to the witness in the presence of the accused, it is not admissible in evidence. (1917) P.H.C.C. 299=2 Pat. L. —Ss. 191 and 193—Separate charges, when necessary.

The making of any number of false statements in the same deposition, is one aggregate case of giving false evidence. ### 3. Contradictory statements.

—Ss. 191 and 193 and Cr. P. Code (V of 1898), S. 476—Contradictory statements by witnesses—Explanation that they were threatened by the police at one stage and prisoners at another—No evidence of such threat—Should be proceeded against for prejury.

In a capital case where irreconcilable or totally contradictory statements are made by witnesses and the only explanation offered is that at one stage they were threatened by the prisoners and at another stage by the police and there is no evidence of such threats, the witnesses in such a case should proceeded against under S. 193, I. P. Code, read with S. 476, Cr. P. Code and complaint should be made in order to determine whether they are liable to be convicted of the offence of perjury. 1948 M.W.N. 85=61 L.W. 100=A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 471=49 Cr.L.J. 713=(1948) 1 M.L.J. 116.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Affidavit read out to person and signed by him while drunk—If can be prosecuted under S. 193 for giving contrary evidence.

Where an affidavit prepared for a person and read out to him while he is drunk is signed by him, its contents cannot be said to have been properly understood by him and he cannot, therefore, be prosecuted for perjury under S. 193, I. P. C., for giving evidence contrary to the allegations in the affidavit. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 148=41 Cr.L.J. 687=188 Ind. Cas. 795.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Evidence.

An accused who was a witness in a criminal case made two conflicting statements on oath, one of which was admittedly false. He was convicted under S. 191, I. P. C. The Magistrate framed no charge in the alternative under S. 236, Criminal P. C. He came to the conclusion that one of the statements was false, on the statements of the accused himself, who, in his opinion, was a liar. Besides the statement of the accused himself there was no other evidence to show as to which of the statements was true:

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the accused could not be convicted. A.I.R. 1939 Sind 170=1.L.R. (1939) Kar. 280=40 Cr. L. J. 707=182 Ind. Cas. 914.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements by approver.

In a case where contradictory statements have been made on different occasions, sanction to prosecute cannot be refused unless it is established that the approver made one of the two statements under undue influence. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 868=35 Cr. L. J. 111=146 Ind. Cas. 461.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statement.

In every case of contradictory statements it is not desirable to prosecute a witness. A prosecution in these circumstances should be undertaken when it appears to Court that it is expedient in the interest of justice that a complaint should be made under S. 476, Cr. P. Code. 33 C.W.N. 664=1929 Cr. C. 26=A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 390.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Two depositions contradictory—They must be wholly irreconcilable to prove perjury.

Where two depositions of a witness contradict each other, in order to establish the charge of perjury it is necessary to prove that the two statements are wholly irreconcilable.

There are cases in which a person might honestly and conscientiously swear to a particular fact from the best of his recollection and belief, and from other circumstances at a subsequent time he might be convinced that he was wrong and swear to the reverse, without meaning to swear falsely on either of the two occasions. 107 Ind. Cas. 100=29 P. L. R. 14=29 Cr. L. J. 212=9 A.I.Cr.R. 305=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 125.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements.

No person should be convicted under S. 193, I.P.C., unless it be proved that it is impossible that the statements of the accused made on oath can be true. 5 Pat. L. J. 23=54 Ind. Cas. 633.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements.

A charge of perjury based on two contradictory statements can be successful only if the statements are necessarily and irreconcilably contradictory of each other. (1915) M. W. N. 34=16 Cr. L. J. 14=26 Ind. Cas. 318.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements.

A sanction to prosecute for perjury should not be given on the basis of two contradictory statements where the two statements are reconcilable, and every possible presumption must be in favour of such reconciliation. 7 A. 44, Foll. 7 S.L.R. 108=15 Cr. L. J. 488=24 Ind. Cas. 576.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements—Presumption.

Where a charge for perjury is based on two contradictory statements, every possible presumption in favour of their reconciliation should be made. 7 S.L.R. 96=15 Cr. L. J. 379=23 Ind. Cas. 747.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements—When a person can be convicted.

A person should not be convicted under S. 193 for contradictory statements when the statements are not absolutely irreconcilable with each other. 5 S.L.R. 129=13 Cr. L. J. 23=13 Ind. Cas. 215.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements—If conviction can be on strength of other statements than the one in question.

A conviction under S. 193 in respect of a particular statement cannot be had merely on the strength of other contradictory statements made by the accused previously. 5 S. L. R. 136=13 Cr. L. J. 28=13 Ind. Cas. 220.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements—Gist—Irreconcilable.

The gist of the offence under S. 193 is that the meaning of the word in the two statements taken in the most ordinary and natural way in the light of the contest, must be irreconcilable. An accused cannot be convicted of perjury if at the time of making the second statement, he was not asked to explain his first deposition in the light of the second. 8 M.L.T. 86=11 Cr. L. J. 353=(1910) M. W. N. 397=6 Ind. Cas. 409.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements—Perjury—Conviction for.

Per Jenkins, C. J.—To convict an accused of giving false evidence it is necessary to show not only that he has made a statement which is false, but also that he either knew or believed it to be false or did not believe it to be true. In the case of contradictory statements, although the Court may believe that on the one or the other occasion the prisoner swore that was not true, it is not a necessary consequence that he committed perjury; for there are cases in which a person might very honestly and conscientiously swear to a particular fact from the best of his recollection and belief and from other circumstances at a subsequent time be convinced that he was wrong and swear to the reverse and without meaning to swear falsely either time. Per Chandavarkar, J.—In the case of perjury arising out of contradictory statements the Court dealing with them should not convict unless fully satisfied that the statements are from every point of view irreconcilable, and if the contradiction consist in two statements opposed to each other as to matters of inference or opinion on which a man may take one view at one time and a contrary view at another there can be no perjury unless he has on oath stated facts on which his first statements was based and then denied those facts on oath on a subsequent occasion. Per Aston, J.—In a case of perjury what the Court has to consider is merely the evidence, and any explanation the accused may offer and not every possible explanation which ingenuity may imagine after the trial is over. (1904) 6 Bom. L.R. 379=28 B. 533.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements in one and the same deposition—Deposition in one trial but on different dates—Deposition of each date signed separately—Legality of conviction—Alternative charge—Criminal Procedure Code, S. 236, ill. (b).

Per Bhashyam Aiyangar, J.—A witness cannot be convicted under S. 193 of the Penal Code for intentionally making contradictory statements in one and the same deposition, though the portions containing the statements are deposed to on different dates and signed by the witness separately, 10 C. 937, opinion of Norris, J., approved. The doctrine that a witness can be convicted of perjury simply on the ground that one or other of two contradictory statements intentionally made by him must be false without proving which of them is false as applicable to cases where the statements are contained in different depositions discussed. The above doctrine cannot be applied to cases of contradictory statements contained in the same deposition. Per Benson and Moore, JJ.—A conviction for intentionally making contradictory statements in the same deposition is legal. (1902) 26 M. 55.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

Where one of the two contradictory statements was made by the witness after the accused was discharged from the case:

Held, that that statement cannot be availed of by the accused for applying for prosecution of the witness for perjury. 89 Ind. Cas. 713=26 Cr.L.J. 1401=A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 141.

—S. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements—One statement not taken in proper form—Effect of—Conviction—Legality of.

A conviction cannot be had under S. 193 in respect of two contradictory statements where one of those statements has been made by the accused in the course of examination as a complainant under S. 200 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but does not bear his signature in accordance with the provisions of that section. The record not being made in accordance with the law, cannot be used as evidence of the statement made. (1902) 6 C.W.N. 840.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements—Perjury—Conflicting statements.

Every possible presumption should be made in favour of good faith. It is undesirable that the witness should be afraid to correct mistakes for fear of being prosecuted for perjury. He should be allowed to correct innocent mistakes as otherwise the object of cross-examination will be frustrated.

It is doubtful whether contradictory statements made in one and the same deposition can be the subject of a prosecution for perjury. 9 S.L.R. 202=17 Cr.L.J. 240=34 Ind. Cas. 656.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

There is no provision of law which requires that a witness should be given an opportunity to explain discrepancies in his evidence. But it is open to a witness if he wishes to do so to explain at the time when the deposition is read out to him. 33 C.W.N. 664=1929 Cr.C. 26=A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 390.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Contradictory statements—Essentials of conviction.

Under S. 193, I. P. C., an attention of a person charged with giving false evidence should be drawn to his previous statements so as to enable him to reconcile his statement with the true state of things, since intentional false evidence is essential under S. 193, I.P.C. (1917) P.H.C.C. 267=18 Cr.L.J. 772=41 Ind. Cas. 148.

4. Declarations and verified statements.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

A man who voluntarily and officially verifies a statement, when the law does not want him to do so does not render himself liable to punishment.

But a person is under a legal obligation to verify the allegations of fact made in the plaint and pleadings. If he verifies falsely, he comes under the clutches of S. 191 and is liable to be punished under S. 193, for giving false evidence.

A Court of Justice cannot use any declarations as evidence, unless they are of the nature of declarations contemplated in O. 19, Civil P. C., i. e., in the form of affidavits. It is only when the Court orders any fact to be proved by the affidavit of any witness, that it could be used as evidence, not otherwise.

The declarations or verified statements are of two kinds: (i) Declarations which a person is bound by law to make such as the verification of pleadings under the Civil P. C., (ii) Declarations which a person makes for the purpose of their being used as evidence such as affidavits filed under O. 19, Civil P. C. Of these, the second kind of declaration alone can be used as evidence and can, therefore, found a conviction of the offence under S. 193, I. P. C. When a person who is called upon to produce a document in his possession under O. 16, R. 6, Civil P. C. submits a verified statement that he is not in possession or control of the document, such a statement does not come under second kind described above. Nor is it of the first kind but even if it were it cannot be used as evidence. This voluntarily verified statement does not render him liable to punishment. A. I. R. 1943 Nag. 17=1942 N.L.J. 547=44 Cr.L.J. 313=I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 547=204 Ind. Cas. 605.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Written statement in suit—False verification to—Liability.

Since under O. 6, R. 15, C. P. Code there is an express provision of law requiring the defendant to confirm the truth of the statement made by him in the preceding clauses of his written statement, if he does so knowing that that verification is false, he is declared by legislature in S. 191 as giving false evidence thereby making him liable under S. 193. 1930 A.L.J. 955=A.I.R. 1930 All. 490.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

A person presenting a verified petition for substitution of parties, containing a false statement of the death of a defendant cannot be considered to fall within the mischief of S. 193, as verification is not required for a petition for substitution of parties. 102 Ind. —Ss. 191 and 193—Scope of.

S. 191, I. P. C., was framed in the way in which it stands only with the intention of bringing verifications of statements in pleadings by a person knowing them to be untrue within S. 193, I. P. C. 43 Cal. 1001=20 C.W.N. 1192=34 Ind. Cas. 235.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Pleadings—False verification—Intent to defraud.

The offence under S. 193 of the Code is one against public justice and an intentionally false verification in pleadings is an offence under S. 193 whether the accused did or did not intend to defraud the judgment-debtor. 16 W.R. Cr. 37, 26 A. 509, 6 A. 626, App. 7 S.L.R. 25 = 14 Cr.L.J. 456 = 20 Ind. Cas. 616.

An application for transfer is not a part of the defence of an accused person and statements made by an accused in an affidavit in support of an application for transfer do not enjoy the immunity conferred by S. 342 of the Cr. —Ss. 191 and 193 — Petition containing false statements — Plea that signature was affixed to a blank paper.

Signing and verifying a petition containing false statements is an offence punishable under S. 193, I.P.C., and it makes no difference that at the time when the signature and verification were appended the petition was blank. (1904) 6 Bom. L.R. 886.

5. Essentials of offence.

—S. 191 — Offence under — False evidence on matter not material to enquiry.

It is only S. 192, I. P. Code, which requires that the fabricated false evidence should affect a point material to the result of the proceeding in which it appears. This provision is omitted in S. 191, I. P. Code, which defines the offence of giving false evidence and nowhere lay down the above restrictive proviso. If the statement made is designedly false the accused is liable irrespective of the fact whether the statement had a material bearing or not upon the matter under enquiry before the Court. The materiality or immateriality can have a bearing upon the sentence to be passed. I.L.R. (1949) Nag. 355 = 3 A.I.Cr.D. 389 = 50 Cr. L. J. 842 = A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 303 = 1949 N.L.J. 90.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Element of materiality of evidence is material not for conviction but for determining expediency of prosecution.

The element of materiality of evidence to the trial of a case does not enter into the definition of the offence of perjury under S. 191, Penal Code, and a person is liable to be convicted of the offence even if his statement is not material. But that becomes a material consideration for deciding whether or not a prosecution for perjury should be launched. A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 38 (41) = I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 788 = (1945) N. L. J. 551.

—S. 191.

So far as the language of S. 191 goes, it is not strictly necessary that the statement should be material to the inquiry, so long as it was made by a person who was bound by oath to state the truth. A.I.R. 1933 All. 318 = 34 Cr. L. J. 686 = 144 Ind. Cas. 194.

—S. 191.

If the statement made is designedly false the accused is liable irrespective of the fact whether the statement had a material bearing or not upon the matter under enquiry before the Court. The materiality or immateriality can have a bearing upon the sentence to be passed. 120 Ind. Cas. 122=30 Cr.L.J. 1154=1930 A.L.J. 251=1929 Cr.C. 664=A.I.R. 1929 All. 936.

—S. 191—Perjury—Materiality of evidence—English law.

The law of England requires that a false statement in order to support a charge should be material to the question in dispute, but this qualification is not imposed by the Penal Code. (1904) 6 Bom. L. R. 324=28 B. 479.

—S. 191—Materiality of statement—Statement which ought not to have influenced the Judge.

The fact that a statement should not have influenced the judge's decision does not ipso facto make it immaterial. (1904) A.W.N. 52=26 A. 371.

—S. 191—False evidence—Perjury not necessarily on a point material to the case.

Semble:—To constitute the offence defined by S. 191 it is not necessary that the false evidence should be concerning a question material to the decision of the case in which it is given; it is sufficient if the false evidence is intentionally given, that is to say, if the person making that statement makes it advisedly knowing it to be false, and with the intention of deceiving the court and of leading it to be supposed that that which he states is true. But if the false evidence does not bear directly on a material issue in the case, being relative to or incidental to trivial matters only that would be a matter to be taken into consideration in fixing the sentence. (1904) A. W. N. 115=26 A. 509=1 A.L.J. 236.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Perjury.

For a conviction under S. 193, it is a material element that the false evidence should be given so as to cause the person who in such proceedings is to form an opinion on evidence to entertain an erroneous opinion touching any point material to the result of such proceedings. 1903 A.W.N. 68.

—S. 191—Falsity of contents of affidavit sworn to and certified on "personal knowledge and belief"—If an offence under S. 191.

Unless it is proved that a person who has sworn to an affidavit and certified generally on "personal knowledge and belief" has deliberately made the statements which are false to his knowledge no offence is committed under S. 191, I. P. Code. I.L.R. (1947) All. 155=228 Ind. Cas. 169=1946 A.L.J. 499=48 Cr.L.J. 106=A.I.R. 1947 All. 235=1946 A.L.W. 485=1941 A.W.R. (H.C.) 548=1946 A.Cr.C. 141.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Rash and credulous statements.

A person cannot be punished for perjury or abetment thereof for being merely rash and credulous of facts alleged by him to be true. A.I.R. 1944 Sind 155=I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 133=46 Cr.L.J. 223=217 Ind. Cas. 182.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

In order to sustain the conviction the statement must be intentionally false. (1934) 36 P.L.R. 527.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Intention.

The intention of the accused is an essential ingredient in the constitution of the offence of perjury. The question of intention goes to the root of the matter and when the accused has proved that he did not intentionally make any false statement, he is entitled to an acquittal on the charge. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 65=35 Cr.L.J. 390=11 O.W.N. 87=147 Ind. Cas. 395.

—S. 191—Essentials.

In order to sustain an indictment for perjury the prosecution must establish, inter alia, two things: (1) that the statement was false; and (2) that it was known or believed to be false or not believed to be true. In other words, the statement must be intentionally false. 107 Ind. Cas. 100=29 P.L.R. 14=29 Cr.L.J. 212=9 A.I.Cr.R. 505=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 125.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

There can be no offence if a statement though false was made without an intention to make it, and it is only the intentional making of a false statement that the law condemns and punishes. 89 Ind. Cas. 713=26 Cr.L.J. 1401=A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 141.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Statement capable of reasonable construction—No perjury.

The intention to commit perjury must be clearly present before a person charged with that offence can properly be convicted of it and a statement capable of being construed in any reasonable way in such committing that it does not show a clear intention of committing perjury or a deliberate attempt to make a false statement, does not per se contain the elements of the offence. 72 Ind. Cas. 887=1 Pat. L.R. Cr. 17=24 Cr.L.J. 471=A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 381.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

To support a conviction under S. 193, there must be absolute certainty about the falsity of the statement and the accused's lack of full faith in his own words. 72 Ind. Cas. 161=4 P.L.T. 683=1 Pat.L.R. Cr. 142=24 Cr.L.J. 321=A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 276.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Suppression of circumstances.

In the case of perjury the statement must be literally false. Mere suppression of circumstances when fact stated is true is no perjury. 9 S.L.R. 170=17 Cr.L.J. 96=32 Ind. Cas. 688.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Essentials for conviction.

The gist of the offence under S. 193, is that the two statements, of which one is alleged to be false must be irreconcilable. (1910) 8 M.L.T. 86=11 Cr.L.J. 353=1910 M.W.N. 397=6 Ind. Cas. 409.

—Ss. 191 and 193—For offence of perjury to be complete deponent must leave Court under lie with which he begins by deceiving it.

The gist of an offence of perjury is the fact that it amounts to an attempt to mislead and deceive the Court. For the offence to be complete the deponent must leave the Court under the lie with which he began by deceiving it.

Where a witness makes a statement in his examination-in-chief contradictory to his previous deposition but in his cross-examination goes back to his previous position, the whole evidence must be read together and no offence of perjury is committed. A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 189, Affirmed. 117 Ind. Cas. 210=30 Cr.L.J. 724=1929 Cr.C. 456=A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 279.

False evidence to be punishable must have been given in a proceeding in which the accused was bound by law to speak the truth. 65 Ind. Cas. 434=23 Cr.L.J. 82=6 P.W.R. 1922 Cr.=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 133.

6. Evidence.

- (a) Admissibility
- (b) Proof of oath
- (c) Proof of offence.

6 (a). Evidence—Admissibility.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

A person was charged of having given false evidence in a will case.

Held: that the judgment in the will case and the depositions of other witnesses in the will case are not admissible against the accused in the perjury case, the depositions would be relevant only to corroborate the statements of the same witnesses at their trial. 76 Ind. Cas. 417=25 Cr.L.J. 177=38 C.L.J. 163=A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 104.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Evidence Act, S. 91—C. P. Code, O. XVIII, R. 5.

S. 91 of the Evidence Act bars the admission of the secondry evidence in proving a witness's statement where it was not read over to him according to requirements of the Rule 5 of the order XVIII of the C.P.C. 1 Lah. 461=58 Ind. Cas. 830=21 Cr.L.J. 830.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Perjury—Deposition not read over—Cr. P. Code, S. 360—Evidence Act, S. 80.

A deposition should not have been treated as a nullity on a trial for perjury merely because of the irregularity in not reading over to the deponent in the presence of the accused or his pleader, if could be proved by other evidence, e.g., by evidence that the witness admitted it to be correct when it was read over to him and the evidence of the Judge or Magistrate who recorded it. S. 80 of the Evidence Act contemplates that the deposition which it is proposed to use as evidence should have all the guarantee of authenticity which the law prescribes, one of them being that the Magistrate shall have signed it only after it has been read over to the witness in the presence of the accused or his pleader, in order that the witness and the accused may have an opportunity of pointing out mistakes. 12 Bur L.T. 167=20 Cr.L.J. 506=10 L.B.R. 16=51 Ind. Cas. 666.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Deposition—Not noted to have been read over to accused—Effect—Presumption—Evidence Act, S. 80.

A person may be convicted of the offence of having given false evidence before a Civil Court though the Court had made no note in writing to the effect that the evidence has been read out to the deponent. In the absence of evidence that the deposition was not read out, the Magistrate ought to assume that the Judge of the Civil Court complied with the provisions of O. 18, R. 5 of the C. P. Code. 28 P.R.Cr. 1918=39 P.W.R. Cr. 1918=16 P.L.R. 1919=19 Cr.L.J. 972=47 Ind. Cas. 872.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Irregularity in taking down deposition—Effect of C. P. Code, O. 18, R. 5.

Where a deposition is read out by a clerk to the witness in an adjoining hall from where the Judge was visible though at a distance from him, the deposition is admissible in evidence in a prosecution under S. 193, I.P.C. 28 M 303, not Foll. Irregularity in regarding a deposition goes to its weight not to its admissibility. (1918) M. W. N. 239=7 L. W. 435=19 Cr. L.J. 603=24 M.L.T. 242=45 Ind. Cas. 507.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Statements to be read out.

For the conviction of a person under S. 193 for making declarations on oath, which may be before or after issues in a civil suit, such statements when recorded are to be read out to be deponent as required by law. 12 P.R. 1917 Cr=15 P.W.R. 1917 Cr.=18 Cr.L.J. 607=39 Ind. Cas. 847.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Evidence—Previous deposition.

In a trial for giving false evidence, the record of a previous deposition given by the accused is relevant and necessary evidence. Such record is not inadmissible under S. 145 of the Evidence Act, which has no application to the case, nor because the actual vernacular words were not taken down. In an appeal by the local Government under S. 417, Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court is a Court of appeal on matters of fact as well as of law, and must decide questions of fact from the whole of the evidence on record. (1908) 9 C.L.J. 378=10 Cr.L.J. 499=4 Ind. Cas. 124.

—Ss. 191 and 193—False statement in a deposition—Deposition not in form—Proof by extraneous evidence.

Where a person is accused of a false statement in a deposition and the deposition cannot be put in as it was not in the form required by law. Quaere:—Whether it can be proved by extraneous evidence. (1902) 6 C.W.N. 840.

6 (b). Evidence—Proof of oath.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

The law requires the Magistrate to examine witness on affirmation or oath, and under Ill. (c) to S. 114, Evidence Act, there is a presumption that the proper procedure was followed. It may, therefore, be presumed that the statement of a witness was made on affirmation. Even if it was made on affirmation, S. 14, Oaths Act requires the witness to state the truth when giving evidence, and being so required he commits the offence defined in S. 191 if he makes a statement that he knew to be false. 1939 Nag. L. Jour. 396.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Proof of oath.

In perjury cases, the administration of oath to the accused should be proved by the prosecution like any other fact. 20 Cr.L.J. 370=50 Ind. Cas. 978 (All.).

—Ss. 191 and 193—Proof of oath—Perjury—Evidence of—Evidence Act, S. 91.

The only evidence in a case under S. 193, I.P.C., regarding the statement made by witnesses including the fact of their having been taken an oath, is the record of deposition prepared by the Magistrate. That record only is admissible under S. 91 of the Indian Evidence Act read with S. 80 of that Act. (1918) P.H.C.C. 13=4 Pat. L.W. 44=19 Cr.L.J. 169=43 Ind. Cas. 585.

6 (c). Evidence—Proof of offence.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Circumstantial evidence.

—Ss. 191 and 193—One man's oath.

A conviction for perjury can be sustained on the strength of one man's oath against another only when it is impossible to conceive of him telling a lie or the person's word is so strongly corroborated that no reasonable Judge could do otherwise than believe him. 1942 N.L.J. 327.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Testimony of single witness, whether sufficient.

The rule of the English Common Law that the testimony of a single witness is not sufficient to sustain an indictment for perjury is not a safe guide for the Indian Courts which are bound by the statute law of India. A.I.R. 1931 All 362=32 Cr.L.J. 780=53 A. 598=131 Ind. Cas. 594.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Inspector not sending a person for trial—Statement by eye-witness incriminating him—Whether amounts to perjury.

From the mere fact that an investigating Sub-Inspector or possibly some unknown superior of his has chosen not to send up a person for trial, it cannot be said that any eye-witness who makes some statement about such a person that directly or indirectly incriminates him, has committed perjury. A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 106=37 Cr.L.J. 619=162 Ind. Cas. 300.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Perjury trial—Opinion of handwriting expert and judge's opinion—Conviction bad.

Where in a trial for perjury in respect of a promissory note which the accused said on oath was in his handwriting, the Magistrate admitted in evidence the opinion of a handwriting expert against the accused without his being examined on oath and also had his own opinion after comparing the handwriting of the promissory note with various other handwritings, that the writing was not of the accused:

Held, that a conviction under S. 193 based on these materials is bad. The proposition that a Judge should not impart his personal knowledge into his judgments and that if he wishes to rely on facts within his knowledge, he must go to the witness box and depose to them on oath is no doubt correct in the main, but it does not apply to facts of which a Judge is permitted to take judicial notice and nowhere in the Indian Evidence Act is it laid down that a Judge must not look at exhibits produced in Court or partly base his judgment on them. 11 W.R.Cr. 25, Foll.

No man can be convicted of giving false evidence except on proof of facts which, if accepted as true, shew not merely that it is incredible, but that it is impossible that the statements of the party accused made on oath can be true. If the inference from the facts proved, falls short of this, there is nothing on which a conviction can stand; because assuming all that is proved to be true, it is still possible that no crime was committed. 76 Ind. Cas. 425=1 Rang. 290=25 Cr.L.J. 185=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 17.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Statements by accused should be proved to be impossible and not merely incredible.

In the case of an offence under S. 193, it must be shown that it was impossible that the statements made by the accused could be true. It is not sufficient to show that the statements were incredible. A.I.R. 1942 Nag 80=1942 N.L.J. 257=43 Cr.L.J. 649=I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 695=201 Ind. Cas. 170.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

In a prosecution under S. 193, it is incumbent on the prosecution to show first that the statement made by the accused was false and secondly, that they knew it or believed it to be false or did not believe it to be true at the time they made the statement. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 145=4 B.R. 327=39 Cr.L.J. 358=173 Ind. Cas. 738.

—Ss. 191, 193, 199—Duty of prosecution.

In prosecutions under Ss. 193 or 199, it is sufficient for the prosecution to show that the statement is false and thus throw the burden of proof on the accused to establish good faith as a defence, but the prosecution must show affirmatively the knowledge of the accused that the evidence given or declaration made was false or his belief in its being false or absence of a belief in its truth.

The real question in such cases is of the state of mind of the accused at the time of filing the declaration. A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 133=34 Cr.L.J. 917=144 Ind. Cas. 1011.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

From the fact that a person is guilty of culpable cowardice it is not safe to infer that he is not only a coward but also a perjurer. A.I.R. 1934 Sind 6=35 Cr.L.J. 736=148 Ind. Cas. 672.

—Ss. 191 and 193—False statement—Intention—Presumption.

Where accused's statement is proved to be false, it can be presumed that he "intentionally" gave false evidence—Accused in execution Court making statement that decree against him was adjusted on certain dates—Dates material factor for trial of case—In trial Court accused never suggesting that he gave those dates on mistaken belief—Held, statement was false and accused did not believe it to be true while making it. 22 O.C. 236, Foll. 116 Ind. Cas. 643=30 Cr.L.J. 655=1929 Cr. C. 83=13 A.I.Cr.R. 78=A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 193.

—Ss. 191 and 193—False evidence—Conclusive proof of the charge—Necessity.

During the proceedings of a certain case, a witness stated that he had no knowledge of the fact that his son was proceeded against and avoided conviction by apologizing. Proceedings were then taken against him under S. 193, I. P. C., for false evidence. During the trial it was not conclusively proved that he was present in the village at the time of arrest of his son:

Held, that the conviction was illegal. The mere fact that the accused heard of the arrest of his son between certain periods was not sufficient to warrant his conviction on the charge laid against him. 106 Ind. Cas. 98=9 L.L.J. 414=28 Cr.L.J. 1010=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 874.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

No man can be convicted for giving false evidence except on proof of facts which, if accepted as true, show not merely that it is incredible, but that it is impossible that the statement of the party accused made on oath can be true. If the inference from the facts proved, falls short of this, there is nothing on which a conviction can stand; because assuming all that is proved to be true, it is still possible that no crime was committed. 76 Ind. Cas. 425=1 Rang. 290=25 Cr.L.J. 185=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 17.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

Mere malice or absence of reasonable enquiry as to the facts alleged is not sufficient for a conviction under S. 193 of the Code. It must be proved that the statement must be false to the knowledge of the person or that he did not believe the facts to be true. 61 Ind. Cas. 521=22 Cr.L.J. 393=L.R. 2 A. (Cr.) 94 (All.)

—Ss. 191 and 193—Suit on promissory note—Presumption as to passing of consideration for promote—Applicability to criminal trial.

In a prosecution for perjury under S. 193 of the Code arising out of a civil suit on a promissory note in which the accused denied the receipt of consideration it is for the prosecution to prove the passing of consideration, as the presumption of law under the Negotiable Instruments Act as to the passing of consideration for a promissory note is not applicable to a criminal trial. 59 Ind. Cas. 198=22 Cr.L.J. 54=18 A.L.J. 1151.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Falsity of statement—Degree of proof.

To justify a conviction for perjury, it is not necessary to prove that the statement of the party accused is impossible. It is sufficient to prove that it is incredible. 22 O.C. 236=21 Cr.L.J. 12=54 Ind. Cas. 60.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Duty of prosecution to prove specific statements false.

In a case under S. 193 of the Penal Code, it must be proved beyond all reasonable doubts that the particular portion of the statement alleged to have been made by the accused is false. 20 Cr.L.J. 519=51 Ind. Cas. 679 (Lah.)

—Ss. 191 and 193—Grounds for conviction—Statement admitted to be false.

A witness who deliberately gives false evidence and when confronted with incontestible proof of his falsehood admits it to be false, is guilty of perjury. 13 Cr.L.J. 752=17 Ind. Cas. 64 (Mad.)

—Ss. 191 and 193—Three different statements.

A person making three different statements at three different stages of proceedings should not necessarily be prosecuted for perjury. All the circumstances of the case should be looked to. 3 Bur. L.T. 119=11 Cr.L.J. 734=8 Ind. Cas. 947.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Perjury—Evidence sufficiency of.

In a suit for ejectment from a certain house, defendant pleaded that he was the owner of the house, plaintiff produced two Kirayanamas executed by the defendant, which showed that he was a tenant. Defendant said that he had left his signature on blank papers on which plaintiff subsequently filled up the contents of the Kirayanamas; he, however, subsequently endorsed on the back of the documents Tahrir Tasliam Hai and on the strength of the endorsement he was charged for perjury. Held, that the endorsement alone was not sufficient for conviction. 11 Cr.L.J. 485=7 Ind. Cas. 420 (Cal.)

—Ss. 191 and 193—Grounds for conviction—Cr. P. C. (Act V of 1898), S. 195.

The primary consideration for prosecution for perjury is that a false statement should be made intentionally, and where it is not found that a false statement was made intentionally, it was held that sanction to prosecution was illegal especially when the statement does not affect the credibility of the witness, and is wholly irrelevant. 13 C.W.N. 422=9 Cr.L.J. 282=1 Ind. Cas. 287.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Evidence—Appreciation—Criminal case.

A Criminal trial is not a litigious proceeding. When there is unmistakable conflict in the evidence of a witness for the prosecution the alternative most unfavourable to the accused is not to be accepted as a necessity merely because the witness has not been asked which version he prefers. (1907) 9 Bom. L.R. 212=5 Cr. L. J. 202.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Statement as to benami nature or otherwise of a transaction—Proof.

A prosecution for perjury in regard to a statement as to the benami nature of a transaction or otherwise should not be allowed to go on. Suspicion, however strong, is not equivalent to proof. In order to convict a person of perjury, it must be shown that the statement said to have been false could not but be false. (1906) 4 C.L.J. 558=10 C.W.N. 1099.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Prosecution, duty of—False statements—Knowledge.

In a charge, under S. 193, I. P. C., of intentionally giving false evidence, the prosecution is bound to prove affirmatively by clear and positive evidence, that the statement made by the accused is false and was made by him with the knowledge that it was false. In this case the evidence having failed to establish that, the High Court, as a court of revision, interfered in the interests of justice. (1905) 2 C.L.J. 101=2 Cr.L.J. 455.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Long statement—Mode of proof—False evidence—Cr. P. C., S. 162.

It is irregular in a charge of intentionally giving false evidence to put the whole of a long statement bodily to a witness at once, and in such a case no conviction can properly be had except on proof that the accused person had made to the police officer each and every one of the statements contained in the document. (1900) 5 C.W.N. 65=28 C. 348.

7. Expediency of prosecution.

—Ss. 191 and 193 and Cr. P. Code (V of 1898), S. 476—Prosecution witness in murder trial making conflicting statements—Prosecution for perjury—Delay in filing complaint under S. 476—Materiality.

Where a prosecution witness in a murder trial makes statements which are clearly conflicting in regard to the occurrence and it is not possible to reconcile them, it would be expedient in the interest of justice that he should be directed to be prosecuted under S. 193, Penal Code. The fact that there was a delay in filing the application under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, would not be material in such circumstances. 51 Cr.L.J. 1187=A.I.R. 1950 Ajmer 37 (2).

—Ss. 191 and 193—Prosecution under—Desirability—Statement under S. 164, Cr. P. Code, before Taluk Magistrate by illiterate accused—Denial in the preliminary enquiry.

Where the accused who were illiterate persons gave a statement under S. 164, Cr. P. Code, that they had actually witnessed the assault which eventually resulted in the death of the deceased person, but later before the preliminary enquiry they varied their statements denying the earlier story and saying they were forced to make the earlier statement before the Taluk Magistrate as they were coerced by the Police:

Held, that the prosecution of the accused for an offence under S. 193, I. P. Code, would not be in the interests of justice, as they being illiterate it could not be ruled out that they were forced to make the statements which they did under S. 164, Cr. P. Code and spoke the truth before the Court. 1948 M.W.N. 815=A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 502=50 Cr.L.J. 775=(1948) 2 M.L.J. 558.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Prosecution when inadvisable.

It is inadvisable to prosecute under S. 193, if a witness reverts to the truth in the course of a trial, more especially when the witness was not a willing witness or the previous statement was given under circumstances indicating that pressure might have been used. A. I. R. 1934 Sind 155=36 Cr.L.J. 10=152 Ind. Cas. 254.

—Ss. 191 and 193—No reasonable probability of conviction—Prosecution is not expedient.

Where the basis for the prosecution is very flimsy and there is no reasonable probability of conviction the prosecution of witnesses for perjury is not judicially expedient. A. I. R. 1946 Nag. 38=I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 788=(1945) N.L.J. 551.

—Ss. 191 and 193—False evidence—Sanction to prosecute should not be granted unless there are chances of conviction.

Sanction ought not to be given unless the Court giving the sanction has satisfied itself that there are very favourable chances of obtaining a conviction.

When sanction is given to prosecute for giving false evidence, the actual statements, which are alleged to be false, should be mentioned in the sanction. 65 Ind. Cas. 640=24 Bom. L.R. 45=23 Cr. L.J. 176=A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 38.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Statement made with view to appropriate credibility—Cause of justice not hampered.

Where the complainant made an inaccurate statement that he had been acquitted in a certain case, with a view to appropriate some credibility for himself and the statement did not hamper the course of justice:

Held, that it was not a case in which the interest of justice would be advanced by prosecuting the person. A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 295=26 P.L.T. 216=12 B.R. 131=47 Cr. L.J. 177=221 Ind. Cas. 407.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Complaint when should be lodged.

Though it is ordinarily in the interest of justice to bring the perjurer to book and check such offences it is the duty of the Court to see whether it would ultimately promote the interests of justice if the perjurer is prosecuted. Where it is transparent that the criminal case is calculated to hamper the fair trial in the Civil Court, no prosecution for perjury should be lodged till after the case is decided by the Civil Court. A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 72=41 Cr. L.J. 182=(1939) N.L.J. 562=185 Ind. Cas. 400.

—Ss. 191 and 193 — Complaint when to be made.

It is only when a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court, is of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of Justice that an enquiry should be made into any offence referred to in S. 193 sub-s. (1), Cl. (b) or Cl. (c), Criminal P.C., which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, that such Court may, after such preliminary enquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction to try the complaint:

Held, that it was not expedient in the interests of justice that the accused should be prosecuted for an alleged offence of perjury. A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 373=37 Cr. L.J. 885=1936 O.W.N. 763=164 Ind. Cas. 107.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

Matter in dispute one in which it is difficult to arrive at certainty — Criminal prosecution against witness should be discouraged. A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 162=2 B.R. 112=37 Cr. L.J. 193=159 Ind. Cas. 817.

—Ss. 191 and 193

Though every act of perjury is an offence, it does not follow that every perjurer should be charged. 1934 M.W.N. 243.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Every perjurer not to be charged though perjury is an offence.

Perjury is a concomitant of a Court of law, the question always being one of degree. Every act of perjury is in strict law, an offence, but it does not follow that on that account every perjurer should be charged. A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 230=34 Cr. L.J. 948 (1)=145 Ind. Cas. 371.

—Ss. 191 and 193 — A prosecuting B for perjury—B acquitted and A prosecuted for the same offence upon the Magistrate's complaint —A found not guilty—A applying that B should be again tried for perjury — It is improper to continue such cycle of prosecution.

There is no such invariable rule that justice must ultimately be done. Cases occur where a matter is left in doubt and real justice is not done. It is inadvisable that in following such a will o-the-wisp as absolute justice parties should be put to enormous expense and the time of Courts should be wasted.

On the motion of A, B was prosecuted under S. 477-A, Penal Code and was acquitted by the Magistrate upon whose complaint A was tried for perjury. The Magistrate holding the enquiry came to the conclusion that A was not guilty and he was acquitted. Thereupon A applied that B should be tried for perjury:

Held, that such cycle of cases should be stopped and it was improper to continue such criminal prosecution. 110 Ind. Cas. 816=26 A.L.J. 137=9 L.R. A.Cr. 137=10 A.I.Cr.R. 442=29 Cr. L.J. 784= A.I.R. 1928 All. 548.

—Ss. 191 and 193 — Perjury — Slight discrepancy—Confusion of mind.

A prosecution for perjury under S. 193 of the Penal Code should not be ordered where the statements complained of, are discrepant owing to inaccuracies of mind and are not deliberately false. 19 Cr. L.J. 230=43 Ind. Cas. 822 (Cal.)

8. Retracted statement.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Retracted statement.

Section 288, Criminal P. C., enables a Magistrate to bring on record as substantive evidence, the evidence of a witness who falsely resiles in the Court of Session from his former statement and the question of witness's prosecution for perjury can be considered after. A.I.R. 1936 Sind 140=37 Cr.L.J. 1045=164 Ind. Cas. 1036.

—Ss. 191 and 193 — Witness deliberately deceiving Court—Subsequent application weeks after to correct statements—Held, prosecution proper.

Although witnesses should be encouraged to speak the truth and not bound down to falsehoods, this purpose will not be achieved if a witness is allowed to leave the witness-box, having deliberately deceived the Court by his false evidence, with the knowledge that he can weeks after, if he fears a prosecution for perjury, be recalled to correct his false statements. To say that in no case should a witness be prosecuted if at any stage in the course of a trial, however prolonged, he be recalled on his own application or on the application of any one else to speak the truth is, to go too far.

Where, therefore, a witness who deliberately deceived the Court by giving false evidence is prosecuted under S. 193, I. P. C., and after some weeks he applies to the Court to be examined again to correct certain incorrect statements made by him:

Held, that it is true a witness must be allowed a locus poenitentia in the interests of justice, but there must be some reasonable limit as to its extent, and in this case, that reasonable limit has been far exceeded. A.I.R. 1937 Sind 116=31 S.L.R. 77=38 Cr.L.J. 873=170 Ind. Cas. 360.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Retracted statements.

Where the accused retracts his false statements, made on solemn oath in a witness-box, only when he discovers that his fraud has been detected, no Court can infer from the subsequent correction or retraction that there is no intention to give false evidence. 120 Ind. Cas. 507=1930 Cr. C. 125=24 S.L.R. 7=31 Cr.L.J. 135=A.I.R. 1930 Sind 61.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

It is inadvisable to prosecute a man under S. 193 if he has reverted to the truth in the course of the trial. 112 Ind. Cas. 468=29 Cr.L.J. 1044=11 A.I.Cr.R. 398 (Lah.).

—Ss. 191 and 193—Retracted statements in same deposition—No conviction for perjury.

If a witness makes a statement and later in the course of the same deposition contradicts it and says it was untrue, the whole deposition amounts to no more than the second statement. He cannot be convicted of perjury in the alternative, in one or the other of the two statements, and if the first can be proved to be false he cannot be convicted of more than attempt to commit perjury. 103 Ind. Cas. 101=23 N.L.R. 35=28 Cr.L.J. 645=A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 189.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Witness withdrawing his previous statement in same deposition as being false—No offence is committed.

A witness should be given a locus penitentiae and an opportunity to correct himself, and if he corrects himself immediately afterwards, or on a second thought in the same deposition, a prosecution for perjury would not lie. The essence of the offence of perjury consists in an attempt to mislead and deceive the Court. 96 Ind. Cas. 505=27 Cr.L.J. 953=A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 517.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

When a false statement is made and is at once retracted by the witness and is admitted by him that he made it through mistake, he must not be convicted under S. 193. 34 P.W.R. 1911 (Cr.), Foll. 89 Ind. Cas. 1028=26 Cr.L.J. 1460=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 646.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

A witness is not guilty of perjury if he corrects a statement of his, previously made in the same deposition. 83 Ind. Cas. 490=26 Cr. L. J. 10=11 O.L.J. 309=A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 373.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Retracted statements—Immediate retraction on fresh thought is no perjury.

A witness is entitled to locus penitentiae and an opportunity, to correct himself and if, when he gets that opportunity, he recalls to his mind any fact about which he had made a statement which was not quite accurate, a prosecution for perjury will hardly be desirable. No statement made by a witness in a deposition can be regarded as completed statement until the deposition is finished and corrected, if necessary, for till then it is open to the witness to qualify any statement or to correct it himself. 16 O.C. 81, Foll. 74 Ind. Cas. 443=21 A.L.J. 673=24 Cr. L. J. 779=A.I.R. 1924 All. 83.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Retraction by witness of a statement in the same deposition—No inference of perjury.

It is open to a witness to correct himself on second thought or on being reminded of any fact which might have escaped his memory, and the subsequent correction or retraction by a witness of his statement in the same deposition does not necessarily predicate the existence of an intention to give false evidence with regard to the statement so corrected or retracted, if the correction or retraction can be otherwise satisfactorily explained. 16 O.C. 81, followed. 69 Ind. Cas. 92=25 O.C. 139=23 Cr.L.J. 652=A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 198.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Subsequent correction of mistakes.

Perjury being an attempt to mislead and deceive the Court, a witness who after being informed of various circumstances by Court, acknowledges the falsity of his previous statement, and corrects it, is not guilty of perjury, as a witness is always given a fair opportunity to correct his answer by reading over the deposition as a whole. 12 P.R. 1917 Cr.=15 P.W.R. 1917 Cr.=18 Cr.L.J. 607=39 Ind. Cas. 847.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Retracted statements—Contradictory statements in the same deposition—Intention.

It is desirable to give witnesses a locus penitentiae and an opportunity to correct themselves and if they do correct themselves immediately afterwards or on second thought the same deposition, a prosecution for perjury would hardly be desirable. Intention to give false evidence is necessary to constitute offence under S. 193. This will be gathered from the surrounding circumstances and the subsequent correction or retraction by a witness of his statement in the same deposition might negative the existence of such intention. 16 O.C. 81=14 Cr.L.J. 280=19 Ind. Cas. 712.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Retracted statements—False statement by witness—Immediate retraction—Prosecution whether desirable.

It is undesirable to prosecute a person for giving false evidence, where immediately after making a false statement he retracts it. 34 P.W.R. 1911 Cr.=230=P.L.R. 1911=12 Cr. L. J. 405=11 Ind. Cas. 589.

9. Several false statements.

—S. 191—Offence under—Several false statements.

The offence of perjury is intimately connected with the statements made. There would be as many different offences as there are false statements. 111 Ind. Cas. 122=10 A. I. Cr. R. 269=9 L.R.A.Cr. 121=29 Cr.L.J. 794=A.I.R. 1928 All. 706.

False statements by a witness at different times and on different subjects during one deposition—Each statement is separate offence. 100 Ind. Cas. 981=7 A.I.Cr.R. 505=28 Cr.L.J. 373=51 Bom. 310=29 Bom.L.R. 170=A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 177.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Number of false statements in the same deposition.

The making of any number of false statements in the same deposition is one aggregate case of giving false evidence and the charge of false evidence cannot be multiplied according to the number of false statements contained in the deposition. (1909) 13 C.W.N. 942=36 C. 808=9 C.L.J. 690=10 Cr.L.J. 150=2 Ind. Cas. 697.

10. Time for prosecuting.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Time for prosecuting.

A Magistrate is not justified in directing prosecution for perjury under S. 193, I.P.C. of a witness one the conclusion of his deposition and before the conclusion of the trial if he makes a statement not desired by the prosecution and is afterwards declared hostile. 1 Pat. L. W. 545=18 Cr.L.J. 626=39 Ind. Cas. 994.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Time for prosecuting—Case pending—Direction for prosecution of witness for perjury.

It is improper to direct the prosecution of a witness under S. 193, I. P. C., while the case in connection with which he is said to have made a false statement is still pending in the Sessions Court. 18 C.W.N. 1342=16 Cr.L.J. 147=27 Ind. Cas. 211.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Time for prosecuting.

It is highly improper to arrest a witness for the defence, for giving false evidence, while the defence evidence is being taken. 4 Bur. L.T. 189=12 Cr.L.J. 465=11 Ind. Cas. 1001.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Prosecution for perjury when should be instituted.

A prosecution for perjury should be instituted as soon as possible after the decision of the case. 11 Cr.L.J. 140=5 Ind. Cas. 469=7 A.L.J. 50.

11. Miscellaneous.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

Where a patwari, in order to save the trouble of taking down the evidence, was directed by a revenue Court to prepare a written statement according to his papers and file it, and where the patwari made such a statement on oath, the statement cannot be called a public document which it was his duty to prepare, and therefore on proof of patwari's statement being false, he could not be prosecuted for an offence under S. 218 but under S. 193, Penal Code, for giving false evidence: 5 All. 553, Foll. 118 Ind. Cas. 232=1929 A.L.J. 512=10 L.R.A.Cr. 90=12 A.I.Cr.R. 22=30 Cr.L.J. 874=1929 Cr. C. 1=A.I.R. 1929 All. 374.

—Ss. 191 and 193.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Evidence given under special oath.

Evidence given under special oath is conclusive only as against the person who offers to be bound by it; but does not prevent the court from attempting to establish that a particular statement made by the appellant was false in fact and false to his knowledge. 82 Ind. Cas. 359=26 Bom. L.R. 713=26 Cr.L.J. 1287=A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 511.

—Ss. 191, 193, 201—Concealment by accused of his own guilt.

An accused person cannot be charged either with giving or fabricating false evidence with the sole object of diverting suspicion from himself and concealing his guilt in regard to a crime with which he is charged. (1906) A.W.N. 191=28 A. 705.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Cr. P. C., S. 133—Accused person—Examination on oath.

A person against whom proceedings under S. 133, Cr. P. C., are taken is not an accused person, and he commits an offence under S. 193, I. P. C., if he makes false statements during his examination on oath in the proceedings. (1905) 9 C.W.N. 983=2 C.L.J. 149.

—Ss. 191, 193, Cl. (2)—Proceedings under Land Registration Act—Witness if "bound to state truth" in such proceeding—Land Registration Act, Ss. 52, 53, 84—Cr. P. C., S. 195—Sanction to prosecute.

In a proceeding held by a Sub-Deputy Collector under Ss. 52, 84 of the Land Registration Act, a witness is "bound to state the truth" within the meaning of S. 191, I. P. C., and a person who made a false statement before the Sub-Deputy Collector would be rightly convicted under the latter part of S. 193 of the Penal Code, even if the proceeding was not a judicial proceeding within the meaning of that section. (1904) 9 C.W.N. 127.

—Ss. 191 and 193—Scope of—Necessity for widening.

—S. 193—Power to administer oath.

In proceedings under sections of the Cr. P. Code in which there is nothing said about examining persons on oath, the Magistrate has the power to administer the oath and persons speaking falsely before such Magistrate are liable under S. 193. 17 Cr.L.J. 491=34 P.R. 1916 Cr.=36 Ind. Cas. 171.

—S. 193—Stay of Criminal Proceedings—Pending Civil Proceedings—Discretion.

A criminal proceeding under S. 193 for statements made in a civil suit pending appeal should not ordinarily be ordered to be stayed pending the disposal of the appeal, but it is a matter entirely within the Magistrate's discretion. 8 S.L.R. 20=15 Cr.L.J. 661=25 Ind. Cas. 989.

—Ss. 191, 193, 209—Separate convictions for dishonestly making a false claim and for falsely attesting the plaint in the same matter—Separate conviction, illegal:

Held, that a person could not be convicted both of fraudulently and dishonestly making a false claim in court of justice and of falsely attesting plaint in the false case, the latter being an essential ingredient of the former offence. 1901 A.W.N. 187.

—S. 191—False evidence—Civil action—Right of suit.

The giving of false evidence, no matter how malicious and mala fide it may be, furnishes no right to sue in a civil court, the only remedy being a prosecution for perjury. The mere fact that the giving of false evidence is alleged to be the result of conspiracy to obtain the conviction of a person of a criminal offence does not make any difference. The tutoring of a man to give false evidence amounts to the "causing of a circumstance to exist" within S. 192: 29 All. 351, Foll; 16 Cr. L. J. 667, Diss. from. 105 Ind. Cas. 662=25 A.L.J. 1077=8 A.I.Cr.R. 342=8 L.R.A.Cr. 140=28 Cr.L.J. 950=A.I.R. 1927 All. 721.

2 (a). Offence under section—Essentials.

—S. 192.

Under S. 192, it is the intention that creates the criminal offence and not the fact as to whether under the terms of the law the document is admissible in evidence. A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 449=42 Cr.L.J. 93=I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 465=191 Ind. Cas. 165.

—Ss. 192 and 194.

Quaere.—Whether to enter a false record in a Police diary can be said to be fabricating evidence at all, especially as Ss. 162 and 172, Criminal P.C., appear to negative the admissibility of the entry as evidence save for the purpose of contradicting a witness whose statement is recorded in writing, or of contradicting the Police Officer himself. A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 124=34 Cr.L.J. 322=37 M.L.W. 584=64 M.L.J. 466=1933 M.W.N. 409=10 O.W.N. 522=37 C.W.N. 514=57 C.L.J. 177=14 P.L.T. 305=1933 A.L.J. 645=35 Bom.L.R. 507=142 Ind. Cas. 335 (P.C.)

—S. 192—Making false entry with intention of using it in evidence—Entry inadmissible in evidence—Effect of.

A person is guilty of fabricating false evidence when he makes a false entry in a document intending that it shall appear in evidence and mislead the Judge or Magistrate. The mere fact that the entry is not legally admissible in evidence cannot affect his guilt. 56 P.L.R. 1918=13 P. W. R. (Cr.) 1918=19 Cr.L.J. 141=43 Ind. Cas. 429.

—Ss. 192 and 193—False evidence—Fabrication of document—Admissibility—Intention.

Under S. 192 of the I.P.C. it is the intention that creates the criminal offence and not the fact as to whether under the terms of the law the document is admissible in evidence. The correctness of the decisions on the point is open to question. 16 Cr.L.J. 620=30 Ind. Cas. 444 (Cal.)

—S. 192—Fabrication of evidence not admissible—If possible.

There can be no fabrication of false evidence within S. 192 if the evidence is not in itself admissible. I.P.R. 1914 (Cr.)=139 P.L.R. 1914=15 Cr.L.J. 344=23 Ind. Cas. 696.

—Ss. 192 and 193—False statement made in the recital of title in a document—Statement not admissible in evidence against persons against whose interest such statement is made.

A person does not commit the offence of fabricating false evidence punishable under S. 193, Indian Penal Code, by making a false statement in the recital of title to property in a document when such statement is not admissible in evidence against the person or persons against whose interest such statement is made. (1905) 2 C. L. J. 46=2 Cr.L.J. 383.

—S. 192—Ingredients of—Offence under.

The essence of the offence under S. 192, consist in this, that a false entry must be under S. 192, made in a book or record or a false statement must be made in a document. Secondly, that a false entry of false statement must be made with a certain intention, namely, that the false entry or false statement may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding or any other proceeding taken by law before a public servant. Thirdly, a false entry or statement so appearing in evidence may cause any person in such proceeding who has to form an opinion upon the evidence to entertain an erroneous opinion. Fourthly, the erroneous opinion must be touching upon a material point, that is to say, a point material to the result of the said proceeding. A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 42=38 Cr. L. J. 700=169 Ind. Cas. 64.

—Ss. 192 and 193—Intention is gist of offence.

It is incorrect to say that S. 193, is not intended to be applicable to an act done by an offender to screen himself from punishment, and is only applicable to an act done by the offender for the purpose of getting another person into trouble.

Per Jack, J.—An accused could only be guilty under S. 193, if he had the intention of fabricating evidence in order that it should appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding or in a proceeding taken by law before a public servant, as such or an arbitrator as laid down in S. 193. The prosecution must, therefore, show that there was such an intention and that the accused did not fabricate evidence merely to screen himself in the belief that his conduct would result in no proceedings whatever being taken. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 304=37 Cr.L.J. 698=62 C. 666=162 Ind. Cas. 910.

—Ss. 192 and 193—Intention to divert suspicion and conceal one's guilt.

The mere intention to divert suspicion and conceal one's guilt need not necessarily amount to fabricating evidence which may appear in a judicial proceeding or in a proceeding taken before a public servant or before an arbitrator so that such authorised person would form a different opinion. But if the act of an accused person comes within the language of S. 192, he cannot take shelter

—S. 192—Judicial proceeding need not be pending.

It is not essential for the purpose of these sections that the judicial proceedings in which the person intends to use the false evidence must be pending at the date of the fabrication. 59 Ind. Cas. 193=45 Bom. 668=22 Cr.L.J. 49=A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 366=22 Bom.L.R. 1239.

—S. 192.

For the purpose of S. 192 no judicial proceeding need be pending at the time of the fabrication. It is enough that there is a reasonable prospect of such a proceeding, having regard to the circumstances of the case and that the document is intended to be used in such a proceeding. 59 Ind. Cas. 135=22 Cr.L.J. 23=22 Bom.L.R. 1229.

—S. 192—Document not leading to form erroneous opinion.

There is no fabricating of false evidence if document produced does not lead to the forming of an erroneous opinion touching a particular point, but rather to the forming of a correct opinion. 40 All. 35=15 A.L.J. 819=19 Cr.L.J. 2=42 Ind. Cas. 914.

—S. 192—Fabricating false document—False statement by implication.

A person commits the offence of fabricating false evidence, if he makes a document which, though it may not contain any false statement in express terms, yet contains false recitals which imply such a false statement. (1905) 10 C.W.N. 220=3 Cr.L.J. 196.

—Ss. 192 and 193—Essentials for conviction.

In order to convict a person of fabricating false evidence under S. 193, it is necessary to find that the person intended that the fabrication may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding or in a proceeding taken by law before a public servant as such as before an arbitrator. Where the accused by falsely representing to the Marriage Registrar that a certain marriage had been solemnized induced the Registrar to make a false entry of the registration of the marriage:

Held—That the accused cannot be convicted of the offence of fabricating false evidence under S. 193, in the absence of the finding that the intention of the accused was the false entry in the Marriage Register might appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding or some other proceeding of a like nature as contemplated by S. 192. (1907) 11 C.W.N. 911=6 Cr.L.J. 162.

—Ss. 192 and 193—Signature without reading—Liability.

A person signing a report without reading it cannot be said to know that the report was false. It is not an offence under S. 193, I.P.C. 17 A.L.J. 574=20 Cr.L.J. 268=50 Ind. Cas. 28.

—S. 192—"Purpose of being used."

The purpose with which a document might have been prepared is a matter of inference. 90 Ind. Cas. 534=42 C.L.J. 215=26 Cr.L.J. 1574=A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 224.

2 (b). Offence under section—What is and what is not.

—Ss. 192 and 193.

An Amin making a false return on an execution process is guilty of the offence under S. 193. A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 9=(1944) 2 M.L.J. 157=57 L.W. 465=1944 M.W.N. 684=46 Cr.L.J. 259=217 Ind. Cas. 236=1.L.R. (1945) Mad. 459.

—Ss. 192 and 193—Offence of abetment of making false document and fabricating false evidence.

An offence of abetting the making of a false document can be committed by attesting the document even if the document does not require attestation to complete it, if the person who brought the document into existence intended that it should be attested and that the accused should be one of the attestors. The document in such circumstances is, therefore, not complete until the accused had signed it. He, therefore, abets the making of a false document and where he must have known that the document is intended to be used for the purpose for which it is made he is also guilty under S. 193 of fabricating false evidence. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 92=43 Cr.L.J. 227=(1941) 2 M.L.J. 746=1941 M.W.N. 1036=197 Ind. Cas. 630.

—Ss. 192 and 193.

The mere fact that a document would be ultimately inadmissible in evidence does not necessarily take it out of the mischief of S. 193.

The accused were charged under S. 193, for fabricating a document purporting to be a kabuliyat executed by them in favour of the complainant. It contained a recital to the effect that the land-lord (the complainant) had agreed to accept this document and to grant a lease of the lands to which it related, to the accused:

Held, that the document satisfied the definition of fabricating false evidence contained in S. 192, because it might certainly lead the Court before which it was produced to come to the conclusion that the document was genuine and that it had the effect of creating a lease of lands in the accused's favour:

Held further, that the question whether it was the intention of the accused to use the document in a judicial proceeding became a question of inference. A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 419=1.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 465=42 Cr.L.J. 93=191 Ind. Cas. 165.

—Ss. 192 and 193.

An entry would be a false entry or a statement in a record or document would be a false entry if it does either by reason of some false additions or of some material omissions misrepresent the truth. The omission may be illegal or may not be illegal. The thing to consider is what is the effect of the omission on the entry as made or on the statement as occurring in a document:

Held, that the officer in charge of thana was not guilty of offence under S. 192 inasmuch as it was not proved that he had any motive in making the omission in recording report.

Held also, that he was not bound by law to record a verbatim report of non-cognisable offence, the substance only of the report being sufficient. A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 42=38 Cr.L.J. 700=169 Ind. Cas. 64.

—Ss. 192 and 193.

Fabricated account books relied in the enquiry before the Income-tax Officer—Offence is punishable under S. 193, I. P. C. (1937) 20 N.L.J. 214.

—Ss. 192, 193, 465—Fabrication of electoral roll.

Procuring by improper, dishonest and fraudulent means, the entry in the finally published electoral roll, of the names of persons who were not legally eligible to vote, and wilfully and improperly omitting from the electoral roll the names of certain other persons entitled to vote, and fraudulently and dishonestly altering the electoral roll after its final publication, by inserting certain names therein without lawful authority are offences punishable under Ss. 193 and 465. A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 838=39 C.W.N. 20=36 Cr.L.J. 385=62 Cal. 275=153 Ind. Cas. 657.

—Ss. 192, 193, 471 — Third party forging endorsement on pro-note.

Where a person entrusted a promissory note with a Vakil's clerk for filing a suit thereon and the latter failed to file a suit within the period of limitation but but after that period forged an endorsement of payment on the pro-note and caused the suit to be filed:

Held, that the act of the Vakil's clerk fell within S. 193, and complaint of the Court was necessary for his prosecution. A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 413=37 L.W. 547=1933 M.W.N. 217=34 Cr. L.J. 800=144 Ind. Cas. 519.

—Ss. 192 and 193.

Persons producing the forged receipt and the attestors can be convicted under S. 193. 1932 M.W.N. 454.

—Ss. 192 and 194—False dying declaration.

While a false dying declaration may well, in certain circumstances, go in as evidence, the intent that it may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding and cause an erroneous opinion to be entertained touching a point material to the result of such a proceeding, which is an essential ingredient in the definition cannot easily be inferred of a man who was thought to be dying at the time and did nothing by himself or by his friends to communicate with or seek any redress from the authorities. The intent of knowledge necessary under S. 194 presents an even greater difficulty in the application of that section, for it postulates a feeling in the mind of the petitioner that his recovery was impossible. 129 Ind. Cas. 87=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 550.

—Ss. 192, 193 and 199 — False affidavit intended to be used in a judicial proceeding but voluntarily made—It is an offence both under Ss. 193 and 199.

Where an identifier swore a false affidavit intended to be used in a judicial proceeding although no affidavit was required from the identifier:

Held, that the offence of fabricating false evidence within the meaning of S. 193 was complete.

Held, further, that the false affidavit is also punishable under S. 199, as the Court was authorized under the circular orders of the High Court and O. 19, C.P. Code, to receive an affidavit from an identifier as evidence of the fact of service of summons. 106 Ind. Cas. 703=6 Pat. 760=29 Cr.L.J. 111=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 161.

—Ss. 192 and 193 — Accused sending waste paper by insured packet, purporting to contain currency notes in satisfaction of his debt due to addressee—Application to file the acknowledgment in suit by the addressee—Accused is guilty under section.

A owed B certain amount. He sent a registered and insured packet to B, purporting to contain currency notes in settlement of debt and got acknowledgment of the receipt of the packet. The packet was found to contain waste paper. B sued A for the debt. A applied to Court to admit the acknowledgment in evidence.

Held, that A was neither guilty under S. 417 for cheating, nor of attempt to cheat. A's action amounted to preparation.

To satisfy the definition of cheating there must be immediate causation, and the act itself must involve the probability. It is not enough to say that the signed acknowledgment is likely to be used as to cause damage; the act of signing itself must be likely to cause damage:

Held, further that A was guilty under S. 193 for fabricating false evidence in judicial proceedings and sanction under S. 195, Cr.P. Code, was necessary. 99 Ind. Cas. 102=24 M.L.W. 725=28 Cr.L.J. 70=38 M.L.T. 187=7 A.I.Cr.R. 7=A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 199=51 M.L.J. 800.

—Ss. 192 and 193.

Where the accused forged a kabuliyat:

Held, that the inference that the intention of the accused in preparing the document was that the document in question should be used in a judicial proceeding, even though such a proceeding, had not in fact been instituted, is a reasonable one. 90 Ind. Cas. 534=42 C.L.J. 215=26 Cr. L.J. 1574=A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 224.

—Ss. 192 and 193.

Making false claim against railway for detention of goods by over-stating of value is punishable under S. 193. 75 Ind. Cas. 703=25 Cr. L.J. 15=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 35.

—Ss. 192 and 193 — Fabricating false document to support claim of marriage in judicial proceedings—Intention to injure the woman and her husband — Accused is guilty under Ss. 193 and 423.

An accused had unsuccessfully tried to marry a woman. Thereafter he got registered a document containing a false recital that he had married her and purported to transfer certain land to her in lieu of her dower:

Held, that he was acting in furtherance of his desire to secure the person of the woman and thus, in the circumstances, he could only do by judicial proceedings. Therefore, his intention was to use this document and the false statements therein in judicial proceedings and thereby mislead the Judge. So accused was guilty under S. 193, I.P.C.

The words "fraud" "fraudulently" and "to defraud" do not connote deprivation of property and the deception of the person so deprived. Deprivation of property, actual or intended, is not an essential ingredient in fraud, or the intention to defraud, and it is not essential that the person deceived or to be deceived and the person injured or intended to be injured should be one and the same.

In the present case in addition to an intention to deceive and mislead, the further intention to cause injury to the woman and her true husband, and to support accused's own false claim to that status is clearly to be deduced from the facts. So the accused was guilty under S. 423, I.P.C. also. 66 Ind. Cas. 996=48 Cal. 911=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 226.

—Ss. 192 and 193.

A person fabricating a false rent-note showing that a house has been let to him for a certain period is guilty under S. 193 of the Code. 59 Ind. Cas. 135=22 Cr. L.J. 23=22 Bom. L.R. 1229.

—Ss. 192 and 193 — Witnessing service of summons on wrong person.

Witnessing the service of summons on a wrong person is no offence under S. 193, I.P.C. unless it is proved that accused was aware that service was to be expected on a different person. 20 Cr. L.J. 641=52 Ind. Cas. 417.

—Ss. 192 and 193—Kabuliyat—False recital.

The accused had executed a Kabuliyat with false recitals designedly made. The Kabuliyat was accepted by the complainant:

Held, that the Kabuliyat would be evidence against the complainant and that the accused would be guilty under S. 193 of the Penal Code. 46 Cal. 986=29 C.L.J. 522=20 Cr.L.J. 574=52 Ind. Cas. 62.

—Ss. 192, 193 and 465—Fabrication of false evidence—Disonest intention.

Where with a view to get a refund of the stamp duty on a conveyance which had fallen through, the accused altered its date so as to apply in time to the Collector for refund without knowing that even without the alteration, the application would be in time: Held, that there was a dishonest and fraudulent intention and they were guilty of fabricating and abetting the fabrication of false evidence under Ss. 192 and 193, I.P.C. and not forgery. 6 Cal. 482, Ref. 28 C.L.J. 213=19 Cr.L.J. 971=47 Ind. Cas. 871.

—Ss. 192, 193 and 209—Suing wrong person on a genuine pro-note—Offence.

Where a plaintiff institutes a suit against a wrong person of a similar name but on a genuine promissory note, not dishonestly and intentionally, a sanction to prosecute under Ss. 193 and 209, I.P.C., cannot be granted. 16 Cr.L.J. 154=8 Bur. L.T. 79=27 Ind. Cas. 218.

—Ss. 192, 193 and 463—Endorsement on mortgage-deed of payment—Intention to cheat—Offences committed.

A false endorsement on a mortgage-deed of payment is an offence coming within the purview of Ss. 193 and 463 of the Indian Penal Code. 12 A.L.J. 104=15 Cr. L.J. 221=22 Ind. Cas. 1005.

—Ss. 192, 193 and 210—Effect of—Mistake in specifying property.

The decree for sale of half a house was passed; the applicant for execution preferred one application for half of the house, but subsequent application for whole of the house; Held, there was no criminal or dishonest intention under S. 210 or 193, I.P.C. 7 A.L.J. 93=11 Cr.L.J. 202=5 Ind. Cas. 695.

—S. 192—Fabricating false evidence—Definition.

One Cheda Lal, whose brother Debi was an accused person applied to the Court on behalf of the accused asking that the witnesses for the prosecution might first of all be made to identify Debi. The Court assenting to this request, Cheda Lal produced before the Court twelve men none of whom could be identified as Debi by any of the prosecution witnesses. Upon being asked by the Court where Debi was, Cheda Lal pointed out a man who upon further investigation was discovered to be wearing a false moustache and could be not Debi at all, but one Chimman. Held, upon these facts, that Cheda was rightly convicted of fabricating false evidence having regard to the definition contained in S. 192. 1907 A.W.N. 107=4 A.L.J. 237=29 A. 351.

—Ss. 192 and 193—Fabricating false evidence—Putting in the signature of dead person.

Per Banerji, J.—The fact that a person put in the signature of a dead person to an application for partition along with his own as part of the verification thereof does not constitute fabrication of false evidence within the meaning of S. 193, I.P.C., because (1) the law does not require the verification; (2) the signature below the verification cannot be used as evidence of the fact that an application was made by the deceased man; (3) it was not necessary that all persons should have made the application to enable the Revenue authorities to take action and therefore the signature was not material. 1905 A.W.N. 52=2 A.L.J. 203.

—Ss. 192, 193, 511 — Fabrication of false evidence—Attempt to commit forgery.

A person who obtained a stamp paper in the name of X, by making his servant personate X and had in his possession with the object of forging a document as if executed by X was held guilty of abetment of fabrication of false evidence, though not of an attempt to commit forgery. (1902) A.W.N. 196=25 A. 75.

—Ss. 192 and 193.

Charges of fabricating false evidence and extortion are not private disputes as neither of these offences is compoundable. A.I.R. 1936 Sind 146=30 S.L.R. 217=37 Cr.L.J. 1086=164 Ind. Cas. 1020.

Whether a person can be said to have intentionally given false evidence within the meaning of S. 193, I.P. Code, is a pure question of fact. Where the Courts below have approached the case in an erroneous way and have not taken into consideration the circumstances under which the alleged false statements in the nature of hearsay were made, the finding of intentionally giving false evidence cannot be accepted in revision. 49 Cr.L.J. 188=A.I.R. 1948 Sind 76.

No prosecution will lie under S. 193, I. P. C., for giving false evidence or fabricating false evidence in respect of proceedings before Debt Settlement Board as they are not judicial proceedings. A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 286=44 C.W.N. 550=41 Cr. L. J. 662=I. L. R. (1940) 2 Cal. 14=188 Ind. Cas. 686.

—S. 193, Expl. 2—False statement under S. 164, Criminal P. C.

A statement under S. 164, Criminal P. C., is not evidence in a stage of judicial proceeding within the meaning of Expl. 2, S. 193, I.P.C., and a person cannot, therefore, be convicted under part 1 of S. 193 in respect of such a statement. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 254=33 P.L.R. 179=33 Cr.L.J. 413 (2)=137 Ind. Cas. 131.

—Ss. 192 and 193—Stage of Judicial proceeding—Giving false evidence—Magistrate recording evidence acting beyond jurisdiction—Third class Magistrate recording statement under S. 164, Cr. P. Code.

A third class Magistrate not being empowered to commit for trial, cannot deal judicially with any stage of the proceedings in a case exclusively triable by a Court of Session. If such Magistrate records a statement under S. 164, Cr. P. Code in a case of that nature, such statement would not be evidence in a stage of judicial proceedings within the meaning of Ss. 191 and 193, I.P.C. 11 B. 702, Foll. 14 Bom. L.R. 753=13 Cr.L.J. 709=16 Ind. Cas. 517.

A Magistrate when acting under S. 164, Cr. P. C. as a court is entitled to administer an oath. An investigation under Chapter XIV, Cr. P. —S. 193—Inquiry under S. 11 of the Frontier Crimes Regulations is not a judicial proceeding.

Inquiry by the Magistrate, elaka under orders from the District Magistrate to find out whether action under S. 11 of the Frontier Crimes Regulation is necessary, is not a judicial proceeding and giving false evidence therein is no offence under S. 193. 82 Ind. W. N. 1107=14 Cr. L. J. 102=18 Ind. Cas. 662.

—Ss. 193 and 211—Judicial proceedings, meaning of—Statement to Magistrate as head of police—Conviction under S. 193—If sustainable—Oath.

Where a statement against a police officer was made to a District Magistrate as the head of the police, and not as a Magistrate and the Magistrate examined the maker of the statement on oath and after finding the statement to be a baseless one, convicted the latter under S. 193, I.P.C. Held, that the conviction could not stand, and also that it was unnecessary and perhaps unlawful to administer oath to him. 35 All. 102=11 A.L.J. 15=14 Cr.L.J. 56=18 Ind. Cas. 344.

—S. 193—Judicial proceedings, meaning of.

A proceeding subsequent to setting aside ex-parte decree on application of one against whom the suit was dismissed, is not judicial proceeding. 8 A.L.J. 674=12 Cr.L.J. 373=11 Ind. Cas. 141.

—S. 193—Judicial proceedings, meaning of—Punjab Land Alienation Act, (XIII of 1900), S. 19.

A mortgagee having produced a copy of the mortgage-deed before the Deputy Commissioner, that officer referred it to the Tahsildar for investigation and report. The Tahsildar did not make an inquiry. Before the Naib Tahsildar, the mortgagee stated that no payments were made by the mortgagor to him. On enquiry, payments were found to have been made and were endorsed on the back of the original mortgage-deed and the document was withheld for that reason. The Deputy Commissioner sanctioned prosecution of the mortgagee for falsification of evidence by fraudulently producing the copy of the mortgage-deed and making a false statement before the Naib Tahsildar. Held, that the prosecution was illegal for (1) the mere production of the copy did not amount to falsification of evidence and (2) the proceedings before the Naib Tahsildar were ultra vires. 80 P.L.R. 1910=11 Cr.L.J. 601=8 Ind. Cas. 243.

3. Procedure for taking cognizance of offence.

See also: Cr.P.C., Ss. 195 and 476.

—S. 193.

The filing of a complaint by a proper person is a condition necessary to the taking cognizance of an offence under S. 193, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 326=1942-1 M.L.J. 105=1942 M.W.N. 126=55 L.W. 321=43 Cr.L.J. 738=201 Ind. Cas. 437.

—Ss. 193 and 500—Offence under both sections—Complaint by person defamed under S. 500—Maintainability—Complaint by Court under S. 195, Criminal Procedure Code—If essential.

Per Govinda Menon, J.—Even when the Court before which the alleged defamer had given evidence finds that the deposition is false, it is open to the person defamed to institute proceedings under S. 499, Penal Code, without the Court filing a complaint in accordance with the provisions of S. 195, Criminal Procedure Code. All the more so is such a complaint unnecessary where a defamatory statement is made by a witness in the course of a judicial proceeding and the Court has not adjudicated upon the truth or falsity of it, where the Court was deprived of an opportunity of so adjudicating; in all such cases it is open to the party defamed to take proceedings under S. 499, Penal Code. (1941) 2 M.L.J. 618=1.L.R. (1942) Mad. 158, approved.

Per Balakrishna Aiyar, J.—Where an alleged offence falls both under Ss. 193 and 500 of the Penal Code a complaint of the Court is not necessary to enable a Magistrate to take cognizance of a complaint under S. 500 of the Penal Code alone.

Per Basheer Ahmed Sayeed, J.—Any statement or averment made in the course of judicial proceedings whether false or true could be made the subject-matter of a criminal prosecution by a person aggrieved when the said statement or averment or evidence is also capable of being brought within the scope of S. 193 of the Penal Code, without a complaint given by the Court before which the statement or averment was made or evidence given. 1950 M.W.N. 878=(1950) 2 M.L.J. 686=A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 34 (F.B.).

—S. 193—Complaint by Court necessary.

A complaint by the Court is necessary for a prosecution for an offence under S. 193, and the parties cannot be permitted to evade that provision of law by filing a complaint of defamation. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 677=51 L.W. 491=1940 M.W.N. 392=(1940) 1 M.L.J. 689=41 Cr.L.J. 906=190 Ind. Cas. 358.

—S. 193.

A complainant cannot avoid the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P.C., by making a complaint for a lesser offence. An Amin who makes a false return of an execution process is guilty of an offence under S. 193, I.P.C., and a complaint in respect of it must be made by the Court, and the complainant cannot avoid the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P.C., by filing a complaint under S. 167, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 9=57 L.W. 465=(1944) 2 M.L.J. 157=1944 M.W.N. 684=46 Cr.L.J. 259=217 Ind. Cas. 236.

—S. 193.

The accused were charged under Ss. 193, 211, 218 and 220, I.P.C., in respect of proceedings under S. 109, Criminal P.C. There was no complaint filed by the Magistrate before whom the proceedings were pending:

Held, that the offences under Ss. 193 and 211, were committed in relation to proceedings pending in the Court of the Magistrate, and no Court could take cognizance of these offences except on the complaint in writing of the Magistrate in whose Court these proceedings were pending or of some other Court to which the Magistrate in question, was subordinate. The charges under these sections, therefore, must be quashed. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 802=39 P.L.R. 1011=39 Cr.L.J. 122=172 Ind. Cas. 373.

—S. 193.

If the offence falls under both the heads S. 193 and S. 218, I.P.C., and forms part of a single act, the complaint cannot be permitted to proceed for an offence under S. 218 only, which does not require sanction. 1935 M.W.N. 1344.

—S. 193—Complaint by Collector acting without jurisdiction, effect of.

The summary investigation which a Collector holds under S. 14, Ben. Patni Regulation (VIII of 1819), is one in the course of which proofs can be called for and as the result of which an award may be made. The Collector holding the investigation, therefore, is a tribunal which would come within the meaning of the word 'Court.' Consequently, a complaint under S. 193, I.P.C. cannot be taken cognizance of except upon the complaint of that Court. The Deputy Collector is a Court though he may not have been acting with jurisdiction. It is not correct to say that an offence under

S. 193, I.P.C., which is an offence against public justice and so not cognizable without the complaint of the Court concerned or some Court to which it is subordinate, would be cognizable on the complaint of some other person or body when the Court itself was acting without jurisdiction. A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 457=35 Cr.L.J. 946=38 C.W.N. 578=61 C. 792=149 Ind. Cas. 363.

—S. 193.

A person cannot be prosecuted under S. 471, I.P.C., when the facts alleged constitute an offence under S. 193, for which a complaint by the Court is necessary. A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 413=37 M.L.W. 547=1933 M.W.N. 217=34 Cr.L.J. 800=144 Ind. Cas. 519.

—S. 193—Evidence—Crucial date.

Where an offence is committed under S. 193, I.P.C., in respect of proceedings in a Court of law which are contemplated but which in fact are never started, S. 195, Criminal P.C., does not apply, and although an offence has been committed under S. 193, I.P.C., the Magistrate can take cognizance of it without getting any complaint from a Court.

Although for the purpose of determining whether an offence has been committed under S. 193, I.P.C., the crucial date is the date on which the offence was committed, yet for the purpose of seeing whether a complaint by the Court is necessary under S. 195, Criminal P.C., the crucial date is not the date when the offence is committed but the date when the Court takes cognizance of the offence.

Though proceedings contemplated at the date of the offence are sufficient to constitute the offence under S. 193, I.P.C., proceedings contemplated at the date when the Magistrate takes cognizance are not sufficient to bring the case within S. 195, Criminal P.C.

Where the charge is that the evidence has been fabricated in connection with proceedings which are only contemplated by the accused, it is upon the prosecution (Crown) to prove the fact that proceedings were contemplated. A.I.R. 1932 Pcm. 185=34 Bom.L.R. 294=58 Bom. 213=33 Cr.L.J. 386=137 Ind.Cas. 134.

—S. 193.

Where a party who has brought a civil suit has not himself fabricated the evidence in relation to that suit but is challenging certain evidence the opposite party might produce against him, to his prejudice as being false and fabricated and it is not produced and the party succeeds in the suit, party is entitled to file a complaint against the other party under Ss. 192 and 193, Penal Code, and it is not necessary that the Court should file complaint under S. 195 (b), Cr. P. Code. 32 Bom. L. R. 589=A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 337.

—S. 193—Sanction.

—S. 193—Who can grant sanction—Offence against public justice—Sanction.

An offence under S. 193 of the I. P. C. is an offence against public justice. The person best qualified to say whether a prosecution should or should not be instituted is the Judge before whom the evidence was given and who had considered all the facts of the case. 9 A.L.J. 538=13 Cr. L.J. 496=15 Ind. Cas. 496.

—S. 193—Accused not given opportunity to explain.

The accused in the course of a report to the Police regarding theft of certain articles mentioned that he missed Rs. 410 which he had left in an unlocked drawer. During the examination on being asked where he got this money from, he answered that it was part of the amount of Rs. 500 which he had borrowed from his hostess. This lady was examined first as to some other questions and then without further introduction she was asked whether she had lent the accused the amount of Rs. 500, she shook her head and said she did not lend him Rs. 500 and then after a pause, added, as far as she could remember. The next question asked to her was also on another subject. The accused was prosecuted for perjury:

Held, that as the question put to the lady about the loan was an isolated one without explaining to her what the question was directed to or the circumstances, and as no opportunity was given her to explain her isolated answers nor the accused re-called to amplify the evidence he had given, it appeared as if a trap had been laid in this way for the accused and that a charge of perjury ought not to be thus lightly made or based upon a mere isolated answer:

Held, also that although the Code gives a Magistrate or a Judge a full discretion as to whether or not he shall give the accused an opportunity to show cause why a complaint should not be made against him, this was a case in which the learned Magistrate ought to have given notice to the accused before making the complaint because the accused might well have been able to explain more fully the circumstances in which he gave his evidence, and to satisfy the Magistrate that in fact, he had not made any false statement. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 606=34 Cr.L.J. 833=144 Ind. Cas. 846.

—S. 193—Application for transfer with sworn affidavit—Denial of allegations by accused by counter affidavit and also by trial Magistrate's statement—Complaint against applicant under S. 193 on the basis of counter affidavit and Magistrate's statement, propriety of.

An application was put in for the transfer of a case on the ground that the accused person had been seen coming away from the compound of the trying Magistrate. This fact was sworn by an affidavit. The accused denied this statement by a counter-affidavit and the trying Magistrate also denied it by his own statement. A complaint under S. 193, I.P.C., was ordered to be drawn up against the complainant. It was contended that a complaint could not be drawn up on the basis of the counter-affidavit and the Magistrate's statement:

Held, that it was an unwise course to make a complaint on the basis of the counter affidavit and the trial Magistrate's statement, when the difficulty could have been overcome by directing an inquiry under S. 476, Criminal P.C. and the objections raised could thus have been avoided. A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 344=53 C.L.J. 184=32 Cr.L.J. 674=58 Cal. 1211=35 C.W.N. 690=131 Ind. Cas. 262.

—S. 193—Contents of complaint.

In prosecution for perjury, the complainant Court should point out particular statement made as deposition as being in its opinion false and that the maker knew it to be false or did not believe it to be true. 1936 M.W.N. 464.

—S. 193—Complaint under—Particulars necessary.

A complaint generally ought to contain sufficient particulars as to the offence with which a man is charged, and in the case of an offence under S. 193, a complaint ought to mention the particulars, for S. 193 consists of two parts: one relating to false statements and the other to the fabrication of false evidence. If it is a false statement that is complained of then the false statement should be set out in detail. It should not be left to the trying Court to find out what statements are false and what statements are not false. 90 Ind. Cas. 661=26 Cr.L.J. 1539=1925 M.W.N. 470=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1157.

—S. 193.

A complaint of offence under S. 193, I. P. C., must state what was the false evidence given by the accused.

It is not for the Magistrate to fish about in order to find out what statements the complaining Court may have considered to be false. The complaint itself must make it clear; otherwise a complaint under S. 193 cannot stand. 86 Ind. Cas. 449=48 Mad. 395=21 M.L.W. 664=26 Cr.L.J. 801=A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 609=48 M.L.J. 290.

4. Sentence.

—S. 193—False statement under S. 164, Criminal P.C. contradicted at his trial—Heavy penalty if proper.

The Court should not impose a heavy penalty in a case where the accused who has made a false statement under S. 164, Criminal P.C., and has contradicted it in his evidence, is alternatively convicted under S. 193, I. P. C. Where, however, the statement at the trial is false it would be much more serious matter calling for severe sentence. A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 385=42 Bom. L. R. 745=42 Cr.L.J. 155=191 Ind. Cas. 336.

—S. 193—Statements need not be material for decision of suit but for purpose of sentence.

It is not necessary that the statements which form the subject-matter of a charge under S. 193, should be material for the decision of the suit and the question can only be considered for the purpose

—S. 193—Extenuating circumstances.

The accused committed perjury in the Court of a Magistrate but had done his best to put the matter right before the Tribunal. He had been actually in the lock-up for almost 18 months. He was a student when he was arrested and 5 years of his life had been wasted. He might have been prosecuted for a failure to comply with the terms under which he was given a pardon but he had not in fact been prosecuted:

Held, that the sentence of 18 months was too severe and should be reduced to one of 6 months. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 981=16 Lah. 153=36 Cr.L.J. 402=37 P.L.R. 534=153 Ind. Cas. 547.

—S. 193.

The sentence of imprisonment with the alternative of fine is not in accordance with S. 193 which provides for imprisonment and fine. 1933 M.W.N. 896.

—S. 193—Sentence.

Giving false answers to questions which should not have been asked but were asked—Perjury is committed but sentence should be light. 90 Ind. Cas. 715=7 P.L.T. 428=26 Cr. L. J. 1611=A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 168.

—S. 193.

S. 193 does not say that there are two kinds of perjury, but that if perjury is committed in the stage of a judicial proceeding it may be punished more severely than if committed in any other case. The offence is perjury wherever it may be committed. 60 Ind. Cas. 593=45 Bom. 834=23 Bom. L.R. 1=22 Cr.L.J. 241=A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 3 (F.B.)

—S. 193 — Lenient sentence — Intending surety put unnecessary questions—Perjury.

Where an intending surety committed perjury in the matter of answering a question as to whether he was imprisoned 30 years prior to that date, their Lordships observed that a lenient punishment should be given. (1904) A.W.N. 52=26 A. 371.

The police in contravention to their departmental rules, took photographs of under-trial prisoners:

Held, that the inference, without proof, of their intention necessarily to use the same for fabricating false evidence could not be drawn. 14 A.L.J. 688=17 Cr. L.J. 431=35 Ind. Cas. 991.

—S. 195—Inducing witness to give false evidence.

Where the accused person persuaded a witness in a case to make a statement that the latter saw certain persons committing a dacoity. Held, this is not sufficient to convict the accused under S. 195, I.P.C. 16 Cr. L.J. 667=30 Ind. Cas. 651 (All.)

—S. 195—Ingredients of offence under.

To sustain a conviction under S. 195, I.P.C., it is not only necessary to prove that the accused spoke falsely, but also that he knew he was speaking falsely. 6 M.L.T. 91=10 Cr. L.J. 7=2 Ind. Cas. 431.

—S. 196—Income-tax proceedings—Applicability—Production of false account books.

Section 37, being a penal section, has to be construed strictly. There is no reference whatsoever in the section itself to S. 196, I.P.C., therefore, a person cannot be prosecuted under S. 196 for producing account books in pursuance of notice under S. 23 (2) where the books were found to be false. 104 Ind. Cas. 90=31 C. W. N. 996=43 C.L.J. 550=8 A.I. Cr. R. 445=28 Cr. L.J. 887=A.I.R. 1127 Cal. 724.

—S. 196—Applicability—Assertions in affidavit on information—Not proved incorrect—No perjury.

A person commits no perjury when the assertions which he makes are, according to his affidavit, not from his personal knowledge but from what he had been told, and where there is nothing whatever to show that the assertions are not correct. 74 Ind. Cas. 75=21 A.L.J. 88=21 Cr. L.J. 747=4 L.R.A. Cr. 6=A.I.R. 1923 All. 175.

—S. 196.

The use of evidence contemplated in S. 196, is use by a party or witness and not use by the Court. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 83=19 P.L.T. 51=16 Pat. 51=39 Cr. L.J. 314=4 B.R. 274=173 Ind. Cas. 432.

—S. 196.

An offence under S. 196, I.P.C., can be held to have been committed only if it is shown that the evidence which the accused used or attempted to use as true or genuine was in existence at the time.

Accused relied on an entry in the almanac of a witness who had appeared in the Court in obedience to the summons issued on him. He was neither examined nor asked to produce the almanac. Thus there was no material before the Court to enable it to hold that the almanac which witness had been called to produce was in existence or that it contained any false entry:

—S. 196 — Essentials — Knowledge of the falsity.

In the absence of any evidence that the accused knew that the interpolation in an account complained about, was a false statement, the mere fact that it was he who produced the accounts into Court cannot support a conviction under S. 196. 86 Ind. Cas. 449=48 Mad. 395=21 M.L.W. 664=26 Cr. L.J. 801=A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 609=48 M.L.J. 290.

—S. 196—Corrupt use—Production of document under Court's orders—Swearing as to its genuineness.

It is an essential element of the offence under S. 196 that the documents should have been corruptly used or attempted to be used as true or genuine evidence.

Where the appellants produced the documents in Court, in obedience to an order of Court to that effect:

Held, that the appellants were not guilty under S. 196 as independent volition on their part was entirely absent. 36 Mad. 387, Foll.

Held: further that their having sworn in evidence that the documents were genuine does not make them guilty under this section. 36 Mad. 302, Foll. 85 Ind. Cas. 253=26 Cr. L.J. 509=3 Bur. L.J. 349=3 Rang. 36=A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 191.

—S. 196—Corrupt use — Inducing a public servant to give false evidence—Using evidence knowing it to be false—Defence to a criminal charge—Not sufficient to absolve.

The accused, who wanted to prove alibi in a case in which he was charged with assault, produced as his witness the patil of another village to prove his absence in the village at the time of the assault and produced a cattle pound receipt. His defence having been disbelieved, he was charged under Section 196 of the Penal Code for the offence of using false evidence as true 'corruptly.'

Held, in giving false evidence on behalf of the accused, the patil had a corrupt motive and therefore the accused is guilty of the offence of corruptly using false evidence as true. Corrupt use of the fabricated evidence by the accused came under the scope of Section 196 of the Code, because in order to support his false defence the accused induced a public servant to produce a fabricated document.

Per Macleod, C. J.—It is clear that the use of the false evidence with knowledge that it is false must ordinarily be corrupt from its very nature, and the onus lies on the accused to show that there are circumstances in the case which prevent its being corrupt. The fact that he was defending himself against a criminal charge is not enough.

Per Shah, J.—His position as an accused person must be taken into consideration in determining on the evidence in a particular case whether he uses it corruptly or not. 64 Ind. Cas. 503=23 Cr. L.J. 23=46 Bom. 317=23 Bom. L.R. 987=A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 99.

—S. 196—Intention to procure false conviction—If 'corrupt'.

'Corruptly' in S. 196 connotes a motive not necessarily connected with the passing of money as an inducement and an intention to procure a false conviction is a corrupt intention. 1 P.R. 1914 Cr.=139 P.L.R. 1914=15 Cr. L.J. 344=23 Ind. Cas. 696.

—S. 196—Attempt to procure a medical certificate.

A mere attempt to get a medical certificate which is refused does not fall under S. 196. 17 Cr. L.J. 388=35 Ind. Cas. 820 (Mad.).

—S. 196—Punishment—Must be deterrent.

The offences under Ss. 196 and 465 are indeed serious and difficult to detect and consequently call for deterrent punishment. 97 Ind. Cas. 805=50 Bom. 783=28 Bom. L.R. 1051=27 Cr. L.J. 1173=A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 555.

—S. 197—Applicability—Certificate under Post Office Savings Bank rules not certificate contemplated by S. 191.

The certificate given under the Post Office Savings Bank rule that in the case of female depositors withdrawing by their authorised agents under Rule 18 the agent must sign a certificate on the application for withdrawal to the effect "Certified that the depositor is on this day alive and sane" is not a certificate either prescribed by the Government Savings Banks Act or by statutory rules made thereunder. The rule is made for the general conduct of the Post Office business and therefore signing such certificate after a female depositor's death is not an offence under S. 197.

Per Subrawardy, J.—The certificate contemplated by S. 197 is a certificate which is required by law to be given or signed for the purpose of being used in evidence in the course of administration of justice. 91 Ind. Cas. 988=42 C.L.J. 557=30 C.W.N. 120=27 Cr. L.J. 182=A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 258.

—Ss. 197, 198—Medical certificate.

What S. 197 contemplates is that the certificate should by some provision of law be admissible in evidence as such certificate without further proof. A medical certificate is not per se evidence of the illness of a person certified to be ill therein. A medical certificate is not, therefore, a certificate relating to any fact of which such certificate is by law admissible in evidence. Hence, issuing and user of a medical certificate in a criminal proceeding stating contrary to the fact that the accused was ill, would render neither the accused nor the issuer of certificate liable under S. 197 or S. 198. A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 40=I.L.R. (1942) 1 Cal. 573=44 Cr. L.J. 292=204 Ind. Cas. 412.

—S. 197—False affidavit—Accused not protected.

Where the law does not prohibit the administration of an oath or solemn affirmation and where in fact the practice of the Court directs that an oath or solemn affirmation must be administered before the affidavit is accepted, there cannot be any protection for an accused person who commits perjury in such a document. The fact the affidavit was made for supporting transfer application in a case in which he was an accused is immaterial: 19 All. 200 and 28 All. 331, Doubtful and not Foll. 123 Ind. Cas. 854=1930 Cr.C. 158=31 Cr.L.J. 600=7 O.W.N. 9=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 62.

—S. 197—Application under the Land Registration Act—False statement.

A person who had his name registered by an application under the Bengal Land Registration Act, alleging that the real person is dead, is not liable to be prosecuted under S. 197, I.P.C., as the Land Registration Act does not require a certificate to be signed or given. 3 Pat. L.W. 201=18 Cr.L.J. 978=42 Ind. Cas. 594.

—Ss. 197 and 198—Certificate—Signed petition.

A signed petition filed in Court is not a certificate under Ss. 197 and 198, I.P.C. The word 'certificate' in Ss. 197 and 198 has not the force of certification. 20 C.W.N. 520=23 C.L.J. 423=17 Cr.L.J. 140=33 Ind. Cas. 316.

—S. 198.

Injuries on complainant slight—Doctor certifying that they were severe:

Held, that complainant's or his pleader's prosecution under S. 198 is misconceived. A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 448=46 Cr.L.J. 187=216 Ind. Cas. 321.

—Ss. 198, 197, 196—Certificate referred to in S. 198, nature of.

Section 198, must be read along with S. 197. Upon reading these sections it is manifest that the certificate which is referred to in S. 198 must be one which is either "required by law to be given or signed" or "is by law admissible in evidence". Section 197 contemplates that "the certificate" should by some provision of law be admissible in evidence as such a certificate without further proof.

Consequently, a person cannot be convicted for an offence under S. 198, with reference to filing a birth certificate of his father from the President of the Municipality, since the certificate cannot be treated as evidence, unless it is formally proved by the Chairman who granted it. A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 467=18 P.L.T. 271=16 Pat. 21=38 Cr.L.J. 1011=4 B.R. 3=3 C.L.T. 10=170 Ind. Cas. 997.

—S. 199—Applicability—Munsif's Court—Srishtadar—Affidavit affirmed before him and filed in case before Additional Munsif—False declaration in—Conviction—Legality—Offence.

Under S. 3 of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, the Court of the Munsif is one Court though there may be several officers working as Munsifs in the same district. Each officer does not constitute a separate or different Court, though Munsifs posted to one district are often called first, second and additional Munsif. A Srishtadar of the Court of the Munsif is, ex officio, a Commissioner of Affidavits in respect of matters and causes arising within and subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of the Munsif. He is therefore competent to administer oaths or affidavits in respect of affidavits filed in causes before the Additional Munsif, when he functions as Srishtadar for both officers, and such an affidavit is a legal declaration. If, therefore, false allegations are made in such an affidavit, the person making such allegations is liable to conviction under S. 199, I. P. Code. 25 Pat. 273=12 Cut. L.T. 21=13 B.R. 246=A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 54=48 Cr.L.J. 258.

Section 199 does not apply to applications for execution of decrees containing false averments. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 65=11 O.W.N. 87=35 Cr.L.J. 390=147 Ind. Cas. 395.

—S. 199—Affidavits—Oath administered by one having no authority to administer—Section does not apply.

A nazir of Civil Court has no authority to administer oath for the purposes of an affidavit or statement to be used in a Criminal Court and a person making such statement cannot be convicted under S. 199. 116 Ind. Cas. 248=31 Bom. L.R. 144=30 Cr.L.J. 593=13 A.I.Cr.R. 14=A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 136.

—S. 199—Under S. 539-A, Cr. P. Code—Grounds of belief not stated—Section applies.

Where a deponent while swearing an affidavit under S. 539-A, Cr.P. Code swears of his personal knowledge of the truth of his allegations and the allegations are ultimately found to be false, he is guilty under S. 199, I.P.C. although he has not separately stated what facts he had reasonable grounds to believe to be true as required by third clause of the section: 14 Cal. 653, Dist. 116 Ind. Cas. 755=30 Cr.L.J. 645=13 A.I.Cr.R. 91=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 156.

—S. 199—Ingredients of offence.

In order to convict a person under S. 199, the prosecution has to prove that he either knew or believed his statement to be false or that he did not believe it to be true. Where there is reasonable possibility that the defence story was true, these essential ingredients would not be established. 12 B.R. 289=222 Ind. Cas. 620=47 Cr.L.J. 317=A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 251.

—S. 199—Charge under S. 199, Penal Code and Special Marriage Act, S. 21—Burden of proof.

In a charge under S. 199, Penal Code read with S. 21, Special Marriage Act, the burden of proving that the declaration made was false and that the deponent knew or had reason to believe that it was false, is on the prosecution. Where in a case, the prosecution had failed to discharge this burden, the accused is entitled to an acquittal. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 155=9 Luck. 561=11 O.W.N. 404=35 Cr.L.J. 744=148 Ind. Cas. 689.

—Ss. 199, 200—Presentation of false affidavit.

It is an elementary principle of criminal law that when the section creating an offence mentions in the definition of the offence a particular state of mind on the part of the offender as being an ingredient in the offence, the burden of proof is thereby placed on the prosecution to establish that such a state of mind was present in the accused at the time of committing the act charged. The burden of proof in a charge under S. 199, Penal Code is on the prosecution to show that at the time of making the affidavit the accused either knew or believed it to be false, or did not believe it to be true.

The accused in an affidavit filed in a rent suit in a Civil Court stated that his tenant died on a particular date, but on a counter-affidavit filed by the tenant's husband the Court came to the conclusion that the date of death as alleged in the accused's affidavit was not the correct one and directed the presentation of a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C., for the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence under S. 199, Penal Code.

Held, that it was wrong to say under S. 106, Evidence Act, that the burden of proof as to the date of the tenant's death was on the accused on the ground that it was a matter particularly within his knowledge; and that the burden lay on the prosecution of proving every ingredient comprised in the definition of the offence, and in the absence of such evidence the conviction could not stand.

An affidavit which is inadmissible merely on the ground of some informality is still a declaration within the meaning of Ss. 199, 200, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 513=34 Cr.L.J. 912=14 P.L.T. 679=144 Ind. Cas. 587.

—S. 199—Burden of proof—On prosecution.

In the case of a prosecution for making a false statement it is for the prosecution to prove that the statement of the accused was false, and not for the accused to prove that it was true. 108 Ind. Cas. 124=29 Cr.L.J. 336=9 A.I.Cr.R. 91=9 L. R. A. Cr. 3=A.I.R. 1928 All. 182.

—S. 199.

Comparing S. 199, with S. 191, which defines the offence of 'giving false evidence' known as perjury in English Law, it is clear that the declaration contemplated in S. 199, is a species of the genus of declarations contemplated in S. 191, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 17=1912=N.L.J. 547=44 Cr.L.J. 313=I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 547=204 Ind. Cas. 605.

—S. 199—Reckless allegations in affidavit.

Tendency on the part of applicants to make reckless allegations in the affidavits filed in the High Court deprecated.

Held, after considering the facts, that it was expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made into an offence under S. 199. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 631=41 Cr.L.J. 702=6 B.R. 754=188 Ind. Cas. 854.

—S. 199—False declaration and reckless statement—Effect of.

Under S. 199, I.P.C., a statement must be one which is either false to the knowledge of the person making it or which he ought to have known to be false or could not have believed to be true. Statements made in a reckless or haphazard manner, though untrue in fact do not constitute an offence under the section when the person making them immediately admits the mistake and corrects them. 18 Cr.L.J. 636=6 L.W. 241=22 M.L.T. 298=33 M.L.J. 545=39 Ind. Cas. 1004.

—S. 199—Affidavit merely repeating statement of another.

Where a person in swearing to an affidavit only repeats what another person had written in the notice, it will not have the effect of establishing that the accused swore to a false affidavit. A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 211=17 P.L.T. 612=38 Cr.L.J. 216=3 B.R. 164=166 Ind. Cas. 352.

—S. 199—Insolvency petition containing false statements.

The statements in a petition of insolvency are very analogous to statements made in ordinary civil pleadings—statements which are verified by law on the part of the person who places them on the record. But they certainly do not constitute evidence which is bound to be accepted by the Court. A petition in insolvency unbacked or uncorroborated by other evidence would not be accepted by the Court against the interests of any other person who was concerned in the question of the petitioner's insolvency.

Where in an insolvency petition a false statement was made that the petitioner had not been an insolvent before, and on this being proved to be untrue, prosecution under S. 199, was launched:

Held, that this petition could not be used as evidence to prove that in fact he had not filed such a petition and no offence under S. 199, was committed. A. I. R. 1936 Cal. 801=38 Cr.L.J. 408=I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal. 504=167 Ind. Cas. 525.

—S. 199—Declaration made under S. 21, Special Marriage Act, 1872.

Apostasy or change of religion or a declaration that one does not profess any of the known or revealed religions of the world is not per se criminal offence. The offence contemplated in S. 21, Special Marriage Act, only deals with the declaration of a profession of want of belief in the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion at the time when the declaration was made. If at the time when a person contracts a marriage under the Special Marriage Act, he makes a declaration that he does not profess any of these religions, then it cannot be said against him that because he was born into the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion and had not formally renounced any of these religions before he made his declaration, he is guilty of an offence under S. 199, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 155=11 O.W.N. 404=9 Luck. 561=35 Cr.L.J. 744=148 Ind. Cas. 689.

—S. 199—Written statement—False declaration verified in—No offence.

An allegation in a written statement is not evidence of any fact, which a Court is bound or authorized by law to receive and, therefore, false declaration in a written statement which is verified as required by the provisions of O. 6, R. 15, C.P. Code, but of which the Court has not ordered proof by affidavit, cannot be the basis of a conviction under S. 199. 100 Ind. Cas.

—S. 199—False declaration—Mamlatdar—Abkari licence.

Accused made a false declaration before a Mamlatdar with a view to obtain a certificate of solvency for the purpose of securing a licence from Abkari authorities. Held, that no offence was committed under S. 199, I.P.C. inasmuch as no Court of justice or any public servant was either bound or authorised by law to receive the declaration in evidence. 17 Bom. —Ss. 199, 114, 466—False declaration—Registrar of Mahamedan Marriages if bound or authorized to take evidence—Forgery of public register.

Where one X by personating as P before the Mohamedan Registrar of marriages, obtained the registration of P's divorce from his wife, and the appellant identified X as P before the registrar:—Held, that the appellant was not guilty of an offence under S. 199, in as much as the registrar was not bound or authorised by law to receive his statement in evidence. But whether he was guilty of an offence under S. 466 and 114, I.P.C., would depend chiefly on whether he knew that X was not P or had no knowledge whether he was P or not. (1904) 9 C.W.N. 69.

—S. 199—Affidavit—False statement—Material point—Declaration signed by village Munsif.

A statement made in an affidavit in which the declarant is signed by a village Munsif may render the declarant liable for perjury for which sanction may properly be obtained. Where an affidavit in cases in which evidence may be given by affidavit is intended to be used in a judicial proceeding before a Court of justice and the declarant has made a statement therein that is false to his knowledge touching any point material to the object for which the affidavit is to be used, the declarant will be guilty under S. 199, I.P.C. 1. Applicability.

—S. 201—Applicability—Husband and wife—Dead body of child hidden in house—Husband absent and refusing outsiders to enter house and search in the absence of her husband—Offence.

Under the law a wife is completely free from disclosing any communication made to her by her husband during the subsistence of their marriage, which may incriminate her husband. It is the policy of the law as well that a wife should not be guilty of harbouring her felonious husband because the law conceives a legal unity between the spouses.

Where, therefore, a wife does not allow outsiders to enter her house, where the dead body of a murdered child is hidden, in the absence of her husband, and refuses to allow others to enter and search the house until her husband appears and allows it, no inference should be deduced so as to ascribe to her any criminal intention or motive; nor can her act make her guilty of an offence under S. 201, I. P. Code. 29 P.L.J. 171=A.I.R. 1949 Pat. 80=50 Cr.L.J. 124.

—Ss. 201, 149 and 511—Applicability—Act with an intention to commit an offence under S. 201—No disappearance of any evidence of the commission of an offence—Offence made out.

Where the accused were seen by the P. Ws. carrying the body of a deceased man along a foot-path and on being confronted and questioned by the P. Ws. gave certain versions found to be untrue and left the body in the foot-path and disappeared from the place:

Held, all the circumstances put together left one with no doubt whatever that the accused knew that the deceased man had been murdered and their conduct showed that their intention was to hide either the scene of murder or the murderer or to cause disappearance of other evidence of the crime. They did an act in furtherance of the intention of committing the crime though an offence under S. 201, I. P. Code, had not been completed by the act. As a matter of fact there had not been any disappearance of any evidence of the commission of the offence, since the dead body had been left and not taken away and secreted or burnt or buried. Hence the offence committed is only an attempt to cause the disappearance of the evidence of the offence and the accused could not be convicted of an offence under S. 201, I. P. Code, read with S. 149, I. P. Code, but only under S. 201, I. P. Code, read with S. 511, I. P. Code. 61 L. W. 703=1948 M.W.N. 682=A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 270=50 Cr.L.J. 324=(1948) 2 M.L.J. 375.

—Ss. 201 to 203—Applicability of.

Per Rowland, J.—The true principle is that there is no law preventing the main offender being convicted under Ss. 201 to 203, but in practice no Court will convict an accused both of the main offence and under these sections. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 550=22 P.L.T. 1035=7 B.R. 802=42 Cr.L.J. 603=194 Ind. Cas. 622.

—S. 201—Applicability.

The section applies merely to the person who screens the principal or actual offender and not to the principal or actual offender himself; 22 Cal. 638, Foll. 91 Ind. Cas. 541=27 Cr.L.J. 109=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 209.

—S. 201—Applicability—Accused under threat of being shot, disposing of body of deceased—Threat ceasing—Body disposed of—Offence under S. 201 is committed—Person giving threat—Also commits offence under S. 201.

Where certain persons who are directed under threat of being shot to take away and dispose of the body of a murdered person to a place from where it was not likely to be recovered, do so even after the danger of instant death is removed, i. e., when the person threatening goes away and ceases to accompany them. Such persons are along with the person threatening them, guilty under S. 201, I.P.C., and the statements of such persons admitting the facts amount to confession. The person directing the disposal of the body by threatening to shoot, is also guilty under S. 201, and the mere fact that he was not present when the body was actually thrown in jungle makes no difference. A.I.R. 1938 All. 91=1937 A.L.J. 1253=39 Cr.L.J. 364=1937 A.W.R. 1099=173 Ind. Cas. 838.

—S. 201—Applicability—Secretly burying body of man just murdered.

A person who secretly buries the headless body of a man just murdered is prima facie guilty under S. 201 unless he can establish that his act was innocent. It is not necessary for a conviction that the accused should be aware of the identity of the offender, or that the offender himself must have been convicted. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 516=34 P.L.R. 637=34 Cr.L.J. 683=144 Ind. Cas. 12.

—Ss. 201, 302—Applicability — Different acts forming parts of same transaction.

The question whether or not different offences by two or more persons have been committed in the same transaction, is a question of fact, to be determined with reference to the circumstances of each particular case. The tests applied to decide whether different acts are parts of the same transaction are proximity of time, unity of place, unity of purpose or design and continuity of action. The essential tests are continuity of action and unity of purpose. If the act is done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as accessory to what preceded it, the two acts must be regarded as forming parts of the same transaction.

Where according to the prosecution two persons join in laying a false trail after a murder and the actual false information suggestive of a burglary given by one of them is only an incident of this transaction, the murder, the fabrication of evidence to suggest burglary and the false information given by one of them are so connected together as to form one transaction and each of the accused will be punishable under S. 201, Penal Code, even without a specific charge framed in that behalf. A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 136=34 Cr.L.J. 503=29 N.L.R. 251=143 Ind. Cas. 17.

Section 201 does not relate to the principal offender but to persons other than the actual criminal who by causing the evidence of the offence to disappear, assist the principal to escape the consequence of his offence.

But a person cannot escape conviction under this section merely because he has been charged also with the principal offence, or because there are some grounds for suspicion that he might be the principal culprit; it is also not necessary that, in order to justify a conviction under S. 201, it must be found that the principal offender is some known person, because there do arise cases where the principal offender may be unknown or untraced. A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 172=10 Pat. 140=32 Cr.L.J. 975=12 P.L.T. 746=132 Ind. Cas. 876.

—Ss. 201 to 203—Applicability — Omission to give information—Grave and sudden death—Obligation to inform—Failure—Liability.

In the case of grave and sudden death the offender himself is under an obligation to give information and he can be convicted for breach of that law under Ss. 201 to 203, I.P.C. In practice, if he has been convicted of the offence itself, no court will think it worthwhile to convict him also under Ss. 201 to 203, I.P.C. But if the commission of the main offence is not brought home to him, then he can be convicted under Ss. 201 to 203, I.P.C. 1930 M.W.N. 489=54 Mad. 68=59 M.L.J. 677=32 M.L.W. 389=129 Ind. Cas. 230=A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 870.

—S. 201—Applicability — Removal of corpse—Constitutes offence.

The mere removal of a body from one place to another so as to remove traces of the place where the murder took place, or indications which might implicate a particular individual, even though such removal does not remove undoubted evidence that a murder has taken place, is within the section. 97 Ind. Cas. 44=49 All 57=24 A.L.J. 958=27 Cr.L.J. 1068=7 L.R.A. Cr. 156=A.I.R. 1926 All. 737.

—S. 201—Applicability—Causing evidence of one's own offence to disappear—Section does not apply.

S. 201 does not apply to a criminal causing evidence of his own crime to disappear but applies to a person who screens the actual offender and no question of abetment can possibly arise in such a case; 22 Cal. 638; 12 C.P.L.R. 17 (Cr.), Foll. 91 Ind. Cas. 236=21 N.L.R. 86=27 Cr.L.J. 60=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 407.

—Ss. 201, 203 and 211—Applicability—False information to police implicating innocent person—Screening of real offender.

A person who gives false information to police accusing another of an offence of murder in order to screen the real offender commits offences not only under Ss. 201 and 203, I.P.C., but also under S. 211. 46 Cal. 427=19 Cr.L.J. 903=47 Ind. Cas. 275.

—S. 201—Applicability—Concealing body of murdered person.

Concealing or otherwise disposing of the body of the murdered person means causing disappearance of evidence and is therefore punishable under S. 201, I.P.C. 8 P.W.R. 1909=10 Cr.L.J. 321=3 Ind. Cas. 622.

2. Case of suicide.

—S. 201—Case of suicide—Causing evidence of suicide to disappear.

Obiter.—No conviction under S. 201 can be had against an accused person who has done nothing more than to cause to disappear the evidence of suicide. A.I.R. 1934 Sind 139=36 Cr.L.J. 83=28 Sind L.R. 387=152 Ind. Cas. 376.

—Ss. 201, 302 and 309—Concealment of dead body—Case of suicide—offence.

The removal of the concealment of the body of a person not proved to have been murdered but proved to have committed suicide does not amount to an offence under S. 201, I.P.C. 17 P.W.R. (Cr.) 1911=12 Cr.L.J. 425=11 Ind. Cas. 609.

3. Conviction under—Legality.

—S. 201 — Conviction under — Legality — Disinterring of incriminating articles from the place pointed out by accused—Inferences—Determination of probable inference.

It is impossible to lay down any absolute rule on the point, whether when an accused person leads the Police to a place not his own or in his exclusive possession, e.g., a jungle, waste, river-bed or pond and from there disinters some incriminating article, the Court is entitled to infer that the accused himself must have put that article there. The decision of the question will, in each case, depend on a variety of facts. In such a case, ordinarily, the hypotheses that are possible are: (1) that the accused saw someone bury the article there; (2) that someone told the accused that the article lay buried in that place; and (3) that the accused himself alone or with others, buried the article there. The third hypothesis is undoubtedly the most natural and prominent in such a case and if the other two hypotheses are excluded or are not reasonably possible, there is no reason why the Court should not hold the third hypothesis proved. In determining which of these three possible hypotheses is more probable and presents such degree of certainty that the Court, like a reasonable man, ought to act upon the assumption of its existence, the Court shall have to consider a variety of circumstances. The Court must have regard to the situation of the place where the article was buried, the accused's relationship with the person suspected and the explanation, if any, given by the accused of his knowledge of the place. The stress which is often laid by the authorities on the question who owns the land as distinguished from the question in whose possession is the land from where stolen property is recovered is an emphasis on an immaterial circumstance. Such cases do not differ from those where property is recovered from a jungle waste, river-bed, pond or cave.

No rule of law can be laid down that in such cases, the Court is not justified in drawing the inference that the accused himself placed the incriminating article at the place pointed out by him. The true position is that it is for the Court in each case to draw any such inference as may be legitimate or reasonable in the circumstances. The question what inference from a relevant fact may be drawn as to existence or otherwise of a fact in issue and with what degree of certainty, is, in each case, a matter for the Judge to determine on the facts of that case and cannot be regulated by a generalization. The outstanding fact in such cases is that the discovery of the incriminating article from a place which is hidden from public view but is pointed out by the accused unmistakably shows that the accused was in some way privy to the felony. This is the most natural and prominent inference which the Court will draw under S. 114, Evidence Act, and the fact being within the peculiar knowledge of the accused, it is for him to show that he acquired knowledge of the place of concealment in some other way. If, therefore, the prisoner makes no attempt to explain how he acquired knowledge of the place, leave aside the question of proving the truth of the explanation; if given, there is nothing in law to prevent the Court from convicting him if, after considering all the surrounding circumstances and bearing in mind the other possible hypotheses and the principle that it is better that ten guilty men should escape than one innocent man be punished, the Court comes to the conclusion that the accused himself must have put the article or articles there, it not only may, but it is its duty to convict.

The accused S was tried with three others for the murder of a man. The Sessions Judge acquitted all the accused persons on the charge of murder; but he convicted S alone under S. 201, Penal Code. Accused S had made a statement to the investigating officer to the effect that he, together with the three other persons, had placed the dead body of the deceased in a cave and that he would point out the place. He led the investigating officer to a place in the jungle and pointed out a cave as the place where he and the others had kept the dead body. The mouth of the cave was covered with stones. When the stones were removed, the dead body was found inside the cave. The cave was in the hills and at a considerable distance from the abadi and there was nothing to show that it was the only cave in the locality or that it had any particular name or that it was of such a character that any other person could have described the cave in such a manner as to enable the accused to take the Police directly to this cave. The question was whether the mere fact that the accused took the Police to a cave and pointed it out as a place where the body of the deceased lay was sufficient for his conviction under S. 201:

Held, that in the circumstances, if the accused himself had not put the body in the cave or taken part in the disposal of the body, he would not have known that the body was inside the cave. Nor could it be believed that the accused was actuated by such a high sense of moral obligation that for the precious information about the place of concealment of the body that he might have received from some one, he would rather swing than betray the confidence reposed in him by his informant. Therefore, the hypothesis that the accused might have heard from someone that the body was in the cave was not, in the circumstances of this case, a reasonable hypothesis. The hypothesis that the accused might have seen someone else put the body in the cave was also not reasonably possible, because, in the first place, such acts of disposal are done secretly and not in the presence of others, and secondly, if that had been the fact, the accused, when tried for his life, could easily have said that he saw some one put the body in the cave and not denied having led the Police to the cave. The only other hypothesis left, therefore, was that the accused himself or with the assistance of others, put the body in the cave from where it was found. He was, therefore, rightly convicted under S. 201. A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 27=46 Cr. L.J. 407=218 Ind. Cas. 145.

—Ss. 201 to 203—Conviction under Ss. 201 to 203—Legality.

Per Shearer, J. — A person who, having committed an offence, subsequently causes evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear, does not in so doing, commit another separate and distinct offence for which the Courts have in strict law jurisdiction to impose a separate punishment.

—Ss. 201 and 302—Accused charged under S. 302—Conviction under S. 201, legality of.

The mere possession by a person, of the property of the deceased immediately after the murder, is sufficient to prove his guilt under S. 201, I.P.C.

If the accused is charged with the offence of murder but the evidence discloses an offence under S. 201, I.P.C., he may under S. 237, Criminal P.C., be convicted of the offence under S. 201.

When there is a strong circumstantial evidence against an accused person that he was in the presence of a murdered man just before or at the time when the murder was committed, it is safe to conclude, especially when the property of the deceased is recovered from him that he committed the murder. But if the accused can offer some explanation the burden is on the prosecution to show that it could not be true. 1937 M.W.N. 544.

—S. 201—Conviction under—Legality—Accused suspected of murder—Conviction under, if illegal.

A conviction under S. 201 is not illegal merely because the accused gave false information to prevent himself from being harassed by the Police or merely because it may be a fact or it is suspected that the accused is guilty of the murder himself. —S. 201—Legality of conviction—Acquittal of principal offence—No bar to conviction for proved offence.

When an accused person has been acquitted of a charge of committing a crime, the fact that he had been suspected and tried of the principal offence would not prevent his conviction under S. 201, if there is clear proof that he has caused the evidence to disappear in order to screen some unknown offender from legal punishment: 6 P.R. 1902 Cr.; 1 P.R. 1904 Cr.; 46 Cal. 427; A.I.R. 1926 All. 737; A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 262; 1 L.B.R. 316 and A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 130 (P.C.), Foll.; 22 Cal. 638; 3 C.L.J. 333; and A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 407; Dist. from; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 209, Dist. 110 Ind. —Ss. 201 and 300—Murder—Separate conviction for offence under S. 201—Legality.

A separate sentence under S. 201, I. P. C., along with a conviction of the accused of murder is illegal. 16 Cr.L.J. 583=30 Ind. Cas. 135 (Mad.).

4. Disappearance of evidence—What is.

—S. 201—Removal of corpse of murdered man few yards away.

The removal of the corpse of the murdered man from the place of murder to another place a few yards away will not amount to causing disappearance of any evidence of the commission of the murder. A.I.R. 1939 All. 665=1939 A.L.J. 547=40 Cr.L.J. 948=184 Ind. Cas. 409.

—S. 201—Disappearance of evidence — What is—Pieces of document afterwards found.

A forged document recovered in a damaged condition, is not said to disappear even temporarily under S. 201, I. P. C., if it is complete and fully available for purposes of evidence concerning the alleged offences under Ss. 467 and 471, I. P. C. 16 Cr.L.J. 791=31 Ind. Cas. 647 (All.).

5. Essentials.

—S. 201—Essence of offence under S. 201.

The essence of an offence under S. 201, is the causing of evidence of the commission of an offence to disappear and it cannot be considered correct to say that the mere moving of the body of the deceased with the knowledge that an offence of culpable homicide has been committed, amounts to causing the disappearance of evidence of an offence:

Held, on evidence that there could be no conviction of the individual accused upon a charge under S. 201. A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 456=42 Cr.L.J. 796=45 C.W.N. 633=195 Ind. Cas. 850.

—S. 201—Essentials—Naming or identification or conviction for principal offence of offender is not necessary—Intention of screening offender and giving false information for that purpose is sufficient.

It is not necessary before a conviction can take place under S. 201, that the offender must be named or identified or convicted of the principal offence. If it is clear that the information was given by an accused with the purpose of screening the murderer from legal punishment, then the provisions of S. 201 are to that extent satisfied. The knowledge as to who the offender is may not be available to the prosecution. Nor does S. 201 say that it is necessary before a conviction can be recorded under that section, that the murderer should have been identified and punished. It is sufficient if it is proved that the accused gave false information with the intention of screening the murderer, that is, the offender, from legal punishment. A.I.R. 1937 Sind 28=38 Cr.L.J. 373=30 Sind L.R. 461=167 Ind. Cas. 368.

—S. 201—Essentials—Disappearance of evidence of murder.

When a person was convicted under S. 201, but the only facts proved against him were that he caught hold of the tuft of the deceased when another person stabbed him and that he took part in tying the deceased with a rope and dragging him along for some distance:

Held, that the essential ingredient of an offence under S. 201 being causing the disappearance of evidence of commission of an offence with a view to screen the offender, the acts proved were not sufficient for a conviction under S. 201. A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 36=67 M. L. J. 631=1934 M. W. N. 1281=40 L. W. 770=36 Cr. L. J. 143=152 Ind. Cas. 696 (2).

—S. 201—Essentials—Removal of corpse from scene of murder.

To constitute an offence under S. 201, there must be disappearance of some evidence of the commission of an offence. Removing the corpse of a murdered man from the scene of murder to another place does not come under S. 201 as the removal does not cause the disappearance of some evidence of the commission of the murder. A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 141=37 C. W. N. 348=35 Cr. L. J. 535=147 Ind. Cas. 1028 (1).

—S. 201—Essentials of offence.

Before there can be a conviction under S. 201 it must be proved that an offence, the evidence of which is caused to disappear, has actually been committed. A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 850=33 Cr. L. J. 657=139 Ind. Cas. 89.

—S. 201—Essentials.

Son killing father on small provocation—Cremation conducted with due publicity—No intention of accused to screen himself from the charge of murder—No charge can be sustained under S. 201. 1931 M. W. N. 765.

—S. 201—Essentials—Volition and intention to screen.

The essence of S. 201 is that the accused caused the evidence of the commission of the offence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment.

P murdered H and ordered B to help him, carrying the corpse to a ditch and burying the wearing apparel.

Held: that the offence under S. 201 was not proved against B. B in helping to carry the corpse to the ditch was acting under orders of P and she appeared to have been bullied into doing the act. B's acts were not voluntary nor done with the intention of screening the offence from punishment. 120 Ind. Cas. 268=31 Cr. L. J. 37=1930 Cr. C. 61=A. I. R. 1930 All. 45.

—S. 201—Essentials—Intention to screen necessary—Mere knowledge not sufficient—Presumption as to intent.

Under S. 201 mere knowledge on the part of the accused that his act is likely to screen the principal offender is not sufficient, but actual intention must be established. Whether the requisite intention is proved or not is a question to be decided on the facts of each case. Ordinarily, where the Crown has satisfactorily proved that (a) an offence has been committed for which some person is criminally responsible and (b) that the accused caused the disappearance of the evidence of the commission of the offence or gave false information concerning it, as the case may be, a presumption arises in favour of the Crown that the accused did act with the requisite intent. That presumption may, however, be rebutted by circumstances or by direct evidence. Where it is so rebutted the accused is entitled to be acquitted except where he is charged with giving false information, in which case he may still be convicted under S. 203. 103 Ind. Cas. 402=21 S. L. R. 206=8 A. I. C. R. 353=28 Cr. L. J. 674=A. I. R. 1927 Sind 241.

There is nothing in the section to require the Crown to prove that the accused intended to screen a specified offender. An intention to screen an offender unknown to the Crown is sufficient; A. I. R. 1925 Sind 257, Expl. 103 Ind. Cas. 402=21 S. L. R. 206=8 A. I. C. R. 353=28 Cr. L. J. 674=A. I. R. 1927 Sind 241.

—S. 201—Essentials—Intention to screen a specified offender, necessary.

One of the ingredients of the offence under this section is the intention to screen a specified offender, 3 All. 279, Foll. In order to justify a conviction under the section it is necessary that an offence for which some person has been convicted or is criminally responsible should have been committed. 86 Ind. Cas. 961=19 S. L. R. 6=26 Cr. L. J. 897=A. I. R. 1925 Sind 257.

—S. 201—Essentials—Destruction of evidence—If requires to be proved.

For an offence under S. 201, it is not necessary to prove complete destruction of evidence. So an offence under that section is committed if the corpse of a man is buried with intent to conceal the fact. 5 S. L. R. 123=13 Cr. L. J. 18=13 Ind. Cas. 210.

—S. 201—Essentials—Concealment should be by a third person—Evidence recorded in a previous trial imported into a subsequent trial for another offence—Irregularity—Criminal Procedure Code, S. 537.

Under S. 201 the concealment must be concealment by a third person and not by the person who is charged with having committed the offence and aided or abetted the same. It is also necessary that the disappearance of evidence should be after the offence. The accused was tried for abetment of murder and acquitted. He was again put up for trial for an offence under S. 201 with respect to the same offence. At the request of the pleader of the accused and with the consent of the Government Pleader the evidence recorded by the Judge at the previous trial was accepted as evidence in the second case. Held, that the procedure adopted was irregular and was cured by S. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898. Per Russel, J.—"The procedure which was adopted in this case must never be followed under any circumstances whatever. The evidence of all the witnesses before the judge and assessors must be viva voce except in the case of evidence given by a medical officer which under certain circumstances need not be viva voce. (1906) 8 Bom. L. R. 538=4 Cr. L. J. 89.

6. Interpretation.

—S. 201—Interpretation—"Evidence"—Meaning of—Not evidence of witnesses, etc.—Material object making the crime evident.

The expression "any evidence of the commission of that offence" refers not to evidence in the extensive sense in which that word is used in the Evidence Act, but to evidence in its primary sense as meaning anything that is likely to make the crime evident, such as the existence of a wounded corps or of blood stains, fabricated documents, or similar material objects indicating that an offence had been committed. The statements of a witness and Panchanamas do not constitute such evidence. 15 Bom. L.R. 578, Ref. 63 Ind. Cas. 145=23 Bom. L.R. 823=22 Cr.L.J. 609=A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 115.

—S. 201 — Interpretation—'Offence' — Not the offence committed—Offence the accused knew had been committed.

Under S. 201, I.P.C., it is necessary for the Court to decide not so much what the offence, the evidence of which had been concealed, had been committed, as what offence the accused knew or had reason to believe had been committed. The Court must treat him to be a stranger to the crime, who had merely witnessed it. 54 Mad. 68=59 M.L.J. 677=32 M.L.W. 384=129 Ind. Cas. 230=A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 870=1930 M.W.N. 489.

—S. 201—Interpretation—"Offender"—Not the person charged.

It is settled law that a principal cannot be convicted as an accessory and it may well be presumed that in enacting this section the legislature never intended to depart from that rule, if it be so, the offender in S. 201 must needs refer to a person other than the person charged. A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 262; A.I.R. 1925 Sind 306 and A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 407, Foll; A.I.R. 1926 All. 737, not Foll. 103 Ind. Cas. 402=21 S.L.R. 206=8 A.I.Cr.R. 353=28 Cr.L.J. 674=A.I.R. 1927 Sind 241.

7. Scope.

—S. 201—Offender, if can be convicted of concealing evidence of offence committed by himself.

The language of S. 201, Penal Code, is perfectly general and there is really no justification for holding that the offender cannot be punished for concealing evidence or causing disappearance of evidence of the commission of the offence by himself. 49 All. 57, Rel. on 1949 A.W.R. 54=A.I.R. 1949 All. 329=50 Cr.L.J. 527.

—S. 201—Scope.

Punishment for offence under cannot be awarded without deciding what the offence was, the evidence of which the accused caused to disappear. 51 Cr.L.J. 1178=A.I.R. 1950 Kut. 54.

—S. 201—Scope—Information, need not be given to Police or Magistrate.

The information need not be given to the Police or Magistrate under S. 201, and it is immaterial whether that information is volunteered or given in reply to enquiries. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 898=1940 M.W.N. 803=41 Cr.L.J. 950=(1940) 2 M.L.J. 315=52 M.L.W. 349=190 Ind. Cas. 573.

—Ss. 201, 326 — Scope — Accused committing offence and concealing evidence can be convicted for both the offences.

It may be that a principal in England cannot be convicted also as an accessory after the fact, but that rule can have no effect on the Indian Law which is contained in definite Acts. Section 201, makes it punishable to remove evidence of the commission of a crime and it is nowhere said either in the I.P.C., or in the Criminal P.C., that a man who commits an offence, and then conceals the evidence, cannot be convicted both of the offence and of concealing the evidence. A.I.R. 1937 All. 14=1936 A.L.J. 1310=38 Cr.L.J. 193=166 Ind. Cas. 369.

—S. 201—Scope.

—Ss. 201, 302—Scope—Charge under both sections—No certainty as to commission of principal offence—Charge for principal offence, whether bars conviction under S. 201.

Where it is impossible to say definitely that a person has committed the principal offence, he cannot escape conviction under S. 201, merely because he has been charged also with the principal offence, or because there are grounds for suspicion that he might be the principal culprit. A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 748=1932 M.W.N. 461=33 Cr.L.J. 814=56 Mad. 63=36 L.W. 798=64 M.L.J. 153=139 Ind. Cas. 725.

—S. 201—Scope—Itself an offence—Destruction of all evidence—Not necessary.

Removal of dead body from the house to a distant place does amount to causing an evidence of the commission of the offence to disappear. S. 201 cannot be confined to the destruction of the evidence of the murder itself. The words "any evidence of the commission of that offence" clearly include any evidence of the commission by the offender of that offence. 86 Ind. Cas. 52=26 Cr.L.J. 676=47 All. 306=23 A.L.J. 25=6 L.R.A. Cr. 68=A.I.R. 1925 All. 315.

—S. 201—Scope—Removing traces of crime—Offender can be guilty of.

A person who has actually committed a crime himself, whether murder or any other crime, cannot be said to be less guilty of removing traces thereof if it is proved against him that he has done so, because he was the person who actually committed the offence. A.I.R. 1925 All. 315, Appr.; 8 All. 252, Diss. from. 97 Ind. Cas. 44=49 All. 57=24 A.L.J. 958=27 Cr.L.J. 1068=7 L.R.A. Cr. 156=A.I.R. 1929 All. 737.

—Ss. 201 and 302—Scope—Murder—Propriety of alternative indictments—Principal, if can be convicted under S. 201.

S. 201, I.P.C., is an attempt to define the position known in England as that of an accessory after the fact. A principal cannot be convicted as an accessory. If it is impossible to say, definitely, though strongly suspected, that an accused was guilty of murder, mere suspicion does not bar a conviction under S. 201. But if it is accepted as a proved fact that the accused disposed of a dead body and if the acceptance of that fact completes the chain of circumstantial evidence which proves beyond doubt that the accused were actual principals present at the murder and taking part in the murder they cannot be convicted of the minor offence of causing evidence of the murder to disappear though by an error of the Judge or by a misconception of the position by the Public Prosecutor the charge of murder is subsequently withdrawn. Per Chapman, J.—It is unsatisfactory that one Court should charge the accused as principal and the other as accessory after the fact. 20 C.W.N. 166=23 C.L.J. 333=17 Cr.L.J. 4=32 Ind. Cas. 132.

—S. 201 — Scope — Screening offender—Offender unknown—Person causing disappearance of evidence—Whether liable.

S. 201 does not require the accused to be aware of the offender's identity whom he intends to hide. Mere intention to screen any offender falls under the section. The illustrations to a section are only the cases decided under it; and so should not be allowed to control its plain meaning. Motive and intention are two different things; the motive induces a man to commit an offence. A person suspecting his sons to be the murderers, caused the evidence of the murder to disappear. The sons were acquitted of trial. Held, that the ordinary consequence of his act was to screen any offender; and if the consequence be contemplated, he had the intention prescribed by S. 201, though he cannot be held guilty of screening his sons. 6 S.L.R. 76=13 Cr.L.J. 721=16 Ind. Cas. 753.

8. Sentence.

Devil dancers attempting to cure a woman by branding her—Death due to injuries—Woman's husband burying her due to panic—Conviction under S. 201;

Held, that it was possible to reduce the sentence of the husband of the deceased under S. 201 on the ground that his action was due to panic rather than a deliberate attempt to shield his confederates from punishment. A.I.R. 1935 All. 282=36 Cr.L.J. 346=1935 A.W.R. 57=153 Ind. Cas. 425.

—S. 201—Sentence—Depends on the offence that accused knew was committed.

For the purposes of calculating the punishment to be awarded under S. 201, it is necessary for the Court to decide, not so much what offence, the evidence of which has been concealed has been committed, as what offence the accused knew or had reason to believe had been committed. Where, therefore, a person himself charged but acquitted of the actual crime, is convicted under S. 201 the Court must treat him as a stranger to the crime, as one who had merely witnessed it, while calculating the sentence to be passed. 54 Mad. 68=59 M.L.J. 677=32 M.L.W. 389=1930 M.W.N. 489=129 Ind. Cas. 230=A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 870.

9. Sufficiency of evidence.

—S. 201 — Applicability — Concealment of weapon with which offence is alleged to have been committed—Offence—Statement of witness and panchanamas—If evidence of the commission of the offence.

Sharif, J.—The concealment of a weapon (bar-chha) with which an alleged murder is committed is not "to cause any evidence of the commission of the offence to disappear" within the meaning of S. 201, I. P. Code. The weapon itself is no evidence of the commission of the offence, but is only an instrument with which an offence could have been committed, and its discovery at the instance of an accused person indicates no more than that he knew where it was to be found. Nor do the statement of a witness and panchanamas constitute evidence of the commission of the offence.

Teja Singh, J.—There cannot be the slightest doubt that the weapon with which an offence is committed is a very valuable piece of evidence of its commission, more so when the offence is said to be of murder, and the weapon is blood-stained. If a person conceals that weapon, provided his intention in doing so is to screen the offender, he is guilty of the offence of causing that evidence to disappear. 231 Ind. Cas. 400=48 Cr.L.J. 786.

—S. 201—Sufficiency of evidence.

When an accused is found guilty of the offence of murder, the facts that 2nd accused met the first on the evening of the date of murder and knew the place where certain articles belonging to the deceased which she had carried with her on that fateful evening were to be found, lead to grave suspicion against accused No. 2 but are not sufficient to warrant his conviction either for murder or for intentional concealment of evidence. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 316 (319)=1940 M.W.N. 764=52 L.W. 284=I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 1028=42 Cr. L. J. 466=193 Ind. Cas. 814.

—S. 201—Sufficiency of evidence.

The recovery of the body pointed out by the accused would be very strong evidence of an offence under S. 201. 177 Ind. Cas. 909=1938 M.W.N. 866=48 L. W. 332=39 Cr.L.J. 977.

—S. 201—Sufficiency of evidence.

Where the head of the deceased was found after two hours' search in a tank and it was pleaded by the accused that he only knew that the head was there, and where witnesses also contradicted each other regarding search—Held, under the circumstances it was unsafe to convict him under S. 201, I.P.C. or S. 302. (36) 1936 M.W.N. 1389.

—S. 201—Sufficiency of evidence—Knowledge of murder and of the place where the bodies were—Jewellery on the body traced to accused—Confession to lambardar.

A who was charged under S. 302 knew where the bodies of the murdered persons were. He also knew that murder had been committed. The jewellery removed by him from the dead body was subsequently produced and identified. Moreover, he confessed his guilt to the lambardar of the village,

Held, that it was not safe to rely upon the confession made to the lambardar and therefore he could not be convicted under S. 302. But the evidence was sufficient to convict him under S. 201. 111 Ind. Cas. 449=29 P.L.R. 486=29 Cr.L.J. 865=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 858.

—S. 201—Sufficiency of evidence—Motive for crime—Tracks of accused traced—Shoe and body discovered at his instance—Ample evidence.

B and S were charged under S. 302, Penal Code, for the murder of R, who, according to the village rumour, was in intrigue with G's wife, M, sister to B. S was the brother of G. A tracker followed the tracks with directions from villagers to the Ahata of S and G. Shoes of R were recovered at the instance of B. The tracker found tracks of B and S, leading to the place where the body was later found buried. Dead body of R was found at the instance of the confession made by S.

Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to establish charge under S. 302 but was ample to establish an offence under S. 201, Penal Code. 112 Ind. Cas. 347=9 Lah. 671=29 Cr.L.J. 1019=11 A.I.Cr.R. 284=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 476.

10. Miscellaneous.

—S. 201—Miscellaneous — Mis-direction to jury.

Omission of Judge to point out to jury the real meaning of S. 201, I.P.C., constitutes mis-direction of prime importance and hence, is sufficient to vitiate the verdict of jury. A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 144=34 C.W.N. 348=35 Cr.L.J. 535=147 Ind. Cas. 1028 (1).

—S. 201—Miscellaneous—Causing evidence about the locality to disappear—Intention to screen—A question of fact.

The ordinary inference to be drawn from the conduct of persons who have been concerned in a murder in a house, and who have removed the body to another place, is that they do so with the intention of causing, at any rate, the true evidence about the locality, in which the murder took place to disappear. Whether such evidence was caused to disappear, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment is a question to be decided from the circumstances of the case; 47 All. 306, Rel. on.

Three men were sleeping close to the deceased man. Some one came in the night and struck the man with a violent blow severing the neck from body. Subsequently, these persons removed the corpse to another room, broke bars of the windows and obliterated blood marks in original place, thereby causing evidence of locality of murder to disappear and putting police on wrong scent as to murderer:

Held, that the fact that none of them was disturbed was improbable and it must be held that those persons must have had an intention of screening the murderer or murderers. 123 Ind. Cas. 886=31 Cr.L.J. 575=6 Q.W.N. 1017=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 113.

—S. 202—Object — Not punitive—Facilities for investigation otherwise obtained—No conviction under.

The provisions of the section are not intended to be punitive in themselves but are intended to facilitate information as to the commission of an offence and thereby to facilitate steps being taken in the investigation of the same.

Where all this object was attained by what happened in the case and particularly by what the Chaukidar had informed the Sub-Inspector in the clearest terms in the presence of the person accused under S. 202, he cannot be convicted under that section. 4 Cal. 623; 20 Cal. 316 and 7 Mad. 436, Foll. 65 Ind. Cas. 626=8 O.L.J. 590=A.I.R. 1921 Oudh 227.

—S. 202—Failure to give information under Cr.P.C., S. 44.

A person witnessing a commission of an offence and failing to give information to the nearest Magistrate or police officer as required by S. 44 of Cr.P.C., is guilty of an offence under S. 202 of Penal Code. 16 N.L.R. 30=21 Cr.L.J. 486=56 Ind. Cas. 582.

—Ss. 202 and 201—Nature of offences under —Difference—Charge under S. 201—Conviction under S. 202.

An offence under S. 202 is not a minor one included under S. 201. The requisite for an offence under S. 202 is the duty of the accused to give information of the offence which is not required under S. 201. So if a person is charged under S. 201 he cannot be convicted under S. 202 without a charge being framed under that section. 5 S.L.R. 123=13 Cr. L.J. 18=13 Ind. Cas. 210.

—S. 203—Any information knowing it to be false.

The section applies where information is voluntarily given and not when it is extracted by police in an examination. 3 U.B.R. (1920) 204=57 Ind. Cas. 940.

—S. 203—'Giving information'—Meaning of.

Statements of the accused examined as witnesses under S. 164 of the witness made to the police do not amount to information within S. 203. 'Gives information' means volunteers information. 6 S.L.R. 143=14 Cr.L.J. 252=19 Ind. Cas. 508.

—S. 203—Scope of—Person answering questions put to him—Liability for conviction for giving false information.

S. 203 contemplates information volunteered by a person. A person cannot be convicted under this section if he makes false statements to the police in the course of their investigation and that only in reply to questions put to him. 11 Cr. L.J. 438=7 A.L.J. 1150=7 Ind. Cas. 50.

—S. 203—Statement to police—No statement volunteered—Offence — False evidence as a witness to the police in the course of the investigation in reply to questions put to him.

The section 203, only contemplates information volunteered by some person. Where the accused while being examined by the police in answer to questions put to him falsely stated that certain persons had committed theft and melted stolen property: Held, that he could not be convicted under S. 203. 7 Ind. Cas. 50=(1910) 11 Cr.L.J. 438 =7 A.L.J. 1150.

—S. 204—Mere refusal to produce document.

A mere refusal to produce documents though not an offence under S. 204, a refusal to produce a document, with the intention, otherwise proved, of keeping the document secret may well be sufficient evidence to prove a secretion within the meaning of the section. An honest refusal to produce a document is obviously not a "secretion" of a document within the meaning of the section. But where there is a refusal coupled with a secret dealing with the document or with a dealing intended to be kept secret, an offence under S. 204, is committed. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 217=40 Cr.L.J. 75=1.L.R. (1939) Kar. 238=178 Ind. Cas. 381.

—S. 204—Original document destroyed—Another prepared and written by the same scribe.

A document—a panchayatnama—drawn up by a police officer at the time of investigation, was destroyed by him for interlineations and scratches and having got it rewritten by the same scribe and signed by the same Panchas. Held, that the newly presented documents was the original produced compulsorily by the police officer, the first being considered as the only rough notes. Hence his conviction under S. 204, Penal Code, cannot be supported. 14 Bom. L.R. 1163=13 Cr.L.J. 912=17 Ind. Cas. 1008.

—S. 205—Security bond lodged for purpose of succession certificate whether act in suit.

By the ordinary rule of construction all the acts detailed in S. 205, are acts "in any suit or criminal prosecution." Proceedings under the Succession Act and some other proceedings are not acts in any suit. Hence, a security bond lodged for the purpose of a succession certificate is not an act in a suit. —S. 205—Accused representing as servant of another getting notice under S. 158-B, Bengal Tenancy Act served on such person.

Where an accused personates as a servant of another person and gets a notice under S. 158-B, Bengal Tenancy Act, to be served on such person by writing before the Civil Court process-server, apne malik ka namaka notice para, it is not a case of falsely personating another person within the meaning of S. 205, and he cannot be convicted under that section. —Ss. 206 and 395 and Cr. P. Code (V of 1898), S. 195 (1) (b)—Attachment before judgment of cattle—Cattle left in the custody of sureties—Forcible removal of such cattle by owner and others after commission of dacoity armed with deadly weapons—Written complaint of attaching Court under S. 195 (1) (b)—Necessity.

While certain cattle were in the custody of sureties after an attachment before judgment, the owner of the cattle along with others went in a body and committed dacoity armed with deadly weapons and forcibly removed them. On a question whether a written complaint of the attaching Court under S. 195 (1), Cr.P. Code, was necessary even before an inquiry into the charge of dacoity could be made:

Held, that the elements constituting the offences under Ss. 206 and 395 are not only not identical but the one under S. 395 is a much graver offence involving certain additional ingredients and it cannot be said that for such an offence the sanction of Civil Court is necessary for the prosecution of the accused. 1947 M.W.N. 667 (1)=60 L.W. 445=49 Cr.L.J. 71=A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 115=(1947) 2 M.L.J. 119.

—S. 206—Fraudulent removal or concealment is gist of offence under.

The wording of S. 206, clearly makes fraudulent removal or concealment a matter of the essence of the offence. Where the prosecution story is that the petitioners forcibly cut the crops and removed them in spite of the remonstrances of the peon and the constable, and there is no trace of any fraudulent removal or concealment, the conviction under S. 206 is bad. The plaintiff instituted a partition suit in respect of his father's estate, impleading his brother and his mother as defendants. A receiver was appointed to receive all the moneys due to the estate and to pay off all the moneys due by the estate. The plaintiff's brother defendant No. 1 in spite of the protests from the receiver and the plaintiff and previous warnings by the Court took away a certain amount from the funds of the family publishing business:

Held, that the defendant was guilty of contempt of Court. A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 487=71 C.L.J. 409=44 C.W.N. 925=190 Ind. Cas. 678.

—S. 206—Accused judgment-debtor immediately after giving undertaking to Court not to transfer certain property, transferring it—Case falls under S. 206.

The word "fraudulently" in the I.P.C., ordinarily connotes firstly, an element of deceit to secrecy and secondly, an intention to cause injury. Where the accused judgment-debtor immediately after giving an undertaking to the Court not to transfer certain property, transfers the same in favour of his son by a sale deed with the knowledge that his son would be in a position to claim the property as his own, the intention to cause injury clearly exists in such a case and the case falls under S. 206, I. P. C.; it does not matter whether or not the creditor might by taking troublesome proceedings in the Civil Court to circumvent the transfer. —Ss. 206, 406—Intention.

An offence punishable under S. 406, is substantially a different offence from the one punishable under S. 206. The criminal intention necessary for an offence punishable under S. 206 is that of fraudulent prevention of property or any interest therein from being forfeited or taken in execution of a decree or order. Such an intention is materially different from the intention required in an offence punishable under S. 406. A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 46=38 Bom. L.R. 1192=Cr. L.J. 272=166 Ind. Cas. 731.

On the property being sold, the property was found to be less than that delivered to him. On refusal of permission to prosecute, the judgment-debtor filed a complaint under Ss. 403, 206 and 109:

Held, that no offence under S. 206, being made out on facts, sanction to prosecute was not necessary:

Held, also that the word 'taken' in S. 206 was used in the sense of 'seized' or 'taken possession of'. A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 46=38 Cr.L.J. 272=38 Bom. L.R. 1192=166 Ind. Cas. 731.

—S. 206—Interpretation—"Civil suit" must be actually pending.

—S. 206—Removal of property not liable under decree.

—S. 206—Assignment of decree under attachment—Fraudulent removal or concealment of property of decree under attachment.

The assignment by the decree-holder of a decree obtained upon the basis of a debt which is under attachment does not per se amount to the commission of the offence defined in S. 206 inasmuch as such assignment cannot affect the rights of the attaching creditors. 3 A.L.J. 38=(1906) A.W.N. 26.

—S. 206—Public Demands Recovery Act—Certificate—Decree—Attachment—Fraudulent removal.

C.) has the force and effect of a decree of a civil court, as regards the remedies for enforcing the same and money due under such certificate must be regarded as money due under a decree of a civil court; and a removal of crops under attachment in execution of such a certificate amounts to an offence punishable under S. 206 of the Penal Code. —S. 208—Fraudulent execution of decree.

The complainant mortgaged certain lands to the accused in pursuance of the agreement between the parties in satisfaction of a decree which the accused held against the complainant. But the accused in spite of this proceeded to execute the —S. 209—Attempt to execute decree—If offence.

—S. 209—Manager dealing with claim under Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876, is not Court—False claim made to Manager—Conviction under, if legal.

The essential characteristic of a Court is that it is authorised by law to decide, in accordance with law, disputes between parties that appear before it. In dealing with claims against the estate under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, the manager is not deciding a dispute between two parties who have appeared before him for the determination of their dispute. Consequently, a manager in dealing with a claim under the Act is not a Court. That being so, a person cannot be convicted under S. 209, I. P. C. for making a false claim before the manager. A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 515=1 B.R. 872=16 P.L.T. 693=36 Cr.L.J. 1354=15 Pat. 69=158 Ind. Cas. 324.

—S. 209—Duty of Court.

All Courts should be careful when a complaint of defamation is filed in respect of proceedings in a Civil Court, to see whether the provisions of S. 209, I. P. C., read with S. 195, Criminal P. C., have not been evaded. A.I.R. 1935 Sind 81=36 Cr.L.J. 881=156 Ind. Cas. 219.

—Ss. 209, 499—Court's duty.

As a general rule it is undesirable that people should be hampered in their access to the Courts and in getting justice by the fear that if they are unsuccessful, they may be prosecuted for defamation and therefore all Courts should be careful when a complaint of defamation is filed in respect of proceedings in a Civil Court to see whether the provisions of S. 209, Penal Code, and Criminal P. C., generally have not been evaded. A.I.R. 1934 Sind 114=36 Cr.L.J. 78=28 Sind L.R. 251=152 Ind. Cas. 346.

—S. 209—Burden of proof.

It will not be enough in a proceeding under S. 209, to show that the plaintiff in the Civil Court failed to discharge the burden of proof. Nor is it sufficient to show that in the evidence adduced for the plaintiff there were discrepancies or improbabilities which made it impossible for the Court to rely with confidence on their evidence or even which made it improbable that the fact alleged was true. In a prosecution based on the allegation that a false claim was wilfully presented, the prosecution will have to prove affirmatively that the case was false one. —Ss. 209, 210—Obtaining attachment for amount not due.

A complaint under S. 210, Penal Code, would lie where a person fraudulently obtains an attachment of property against another for an amount not due from the latter. A complaint under S. 209 would also lie in such a case. A.I.R. 1931 All. 305=32 Cr.L.J. 367=1931 A.L.J. 117=53 All. 416=129 Ind. Cas. 264.

—S. 209—Essentials—Knowledge of falsity.

To justify a sanction to prosecute for an offence under S. 209 of the Penal Code, a mere dismissal of the plaintiff's suit is not enough. It must be proved that the claim was to his knowledge false. 61 Ind. Cas. 995=22 Cr.L.J. 467 (Pat.)

—Ss. 209 and 210—Court in which decree was obtained incompetent to try the suit—Offence.

To bring a case under S. 209, it is immaterial whether the Court in which the false claim was instituted had jurisdiction to try the suit. If a person obtains a decree fraudulently for a sum not due, the case would fall under S. 210 of the Code whether the Court had or had not power to pass the decree. 20 Cr.L.J. 698=52 Ind. Cas. 666 (All.)

—S. 210 — Applicability — Charge under S. 120-B read with S. 210—Conspiracy for making false claim in Court and to obtain decree upon it—Decree not obtained—Offence.

In a charge under S. 120-B read with S. 210 I. P. Code, in respect of a conspiracy to file a false claim in a Court of Justice and to obtain or attempt to obtain a decree upon it, it is not necessary for the application of S. 210, I.P. Code, that a decree should have been obtained upon the claim. When the Court holds the claim false, no decree could be passed and S. 210 is not inapplicable on the ground. 226 Ind. Cas. 631=A.I.R. 1947 Sind 49.

—S. 210—Decree-holder getting execution application dismissed before order of attachment—If commits offence.

Where on an execution application the Court passes an order that an attachment has to be made after the decree-holder files an affidavit giving the movable property of the judgment-debtor, but the decree-holder does not file any affidavit or pay any process fee and has his execution case dismissed, he cannot be said to have caused the decree to be executed against the judgment-debtor, and he does not, therefore, commit an offence under S. 210, I.P. Code. I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 686=227 Ind. Cas. 233=1946 N.L.J. 402=A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 350=47 Cr.L.J. 1031.

—S. 210, S. 195, Cr.P.C.—Scope and applicability.

Where the facts primarily and essentially disclose an offence under S. 210, I.P.C., the other offences alleged, being merely subsidiary to the main offence, the complainant should not be permitted to evade the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P.C., by omitting S. 210 from the complaint.

The bar of S. 195, Criminal P.C. applies even against an accused, who was not party to the civil proceedings, but was proceeded against as an abettor of an offence under S. 210, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1944 Sind 130=46 Cr.L.J. 97=215 Ind. Cas. 302.

Order 21, R. 2 (3), Civil P.C. does not prohibit the executing Court from making an enquiry under S. 476, Criminal P.C., into an alleged adjustment with a view to file a complaint under S. 210, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 148=9 Rang. 104=132 Ind. Cas. 713.

—S. 210—Execution petition—Omission to enter part-satisfaction—Fraud must be established.

H had obtained a decree for Rs. 578-12-0 against one U. A sum of Rs. 276-12-0 was recovered in execution. H put in another application for execution of his decree claiming the full decretal amount, i.e., Rs. 578-12-0 with costs. The sum of Rs. 276-12-0 which he had realized in part-satisfaction of the decree was not shown in the appropriate column. Eventually, a house was sold in satisfaction of the decree and the full amount was realized by H. U the applicant subsequently discovered that H had recovered more than what was really due on the basis of the decree and applied to the execution Court for sanctioning prosecution of H under S. 210, Penal Code:

Held, for sustaining a charge under S. 210 it must be established that the person charged acted 'fraudulently.' Although H omitted to state the amount realized in his application for execution, it was very doubtful, if he acted fraudulently.

The Judgment-debtors did not raise any objection as to the excess claimed by the decree-holder for nearly two years although they raised various other objections in the meantime. The case was therefore not a fit case for sanctioning prosecution of H under S. 210. 116 Ind. Cas. 711=11 L.L.J. 103=30 P.L.R. 392=30 Cr.L.J. 666=13 A.I.Cr.R. 99=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 676.

The applicant a dealer in saltpetre brought a suit against the East Indian Railway for damages for detention of his goods and obtained a decree. It was found that the value of the goods when purchased was over-stated in the suit with a view to the claim for damages, and the depositions of both the applicant and his munim on this point were apparently false:

Held, that a sanction to prosecute them under S. 193, I.P.C. was rightly granted. 75 Ind. Cas. 703=25 Cr.L.J. 15=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 35.

—S. 210—Execution application—Mis-stating decretal amount—Whether liable.

Where in an execution application, the decree-holder after referring to the final decree mis-stated its previous terms he cannot be held liable under S. 210 of the I.P.C. as it is the duty of the executing Court to verify the amount due. 11 P.W.R. 1914 Cr.=64 P.L.R. 1914=15 Cr.L.J. 263=23 Ind. —S. 210—Cr. Pro. Code, S. 195—Decree-holder omitting to mention a claim.

In an application for execution the decree-holder did not mention certain sum received by him. Held, that there was a prima facie case against the accused, and a sanction under S. 195, Cr.P.C., for trial for an offence under S. 210, I.P.C., was good. 59 P.L.R. 1911=12 Cr.L.J. 189=59 P.W.R. 1911 Cr.=10 Ind. —S. 210—Sale of more than what the decree allowed—Criminal intention.

M obtained a decree for sale of half of certain property. He executed the decree thrice. First, he applied for sale of the half but in his second application which was infructuous, he applied for the sale of the whole property and actually got the same sold by his third application. On the judgment-debtor's objection part of the property was exempted and the decree-holder was put on his trial for an offence under S. 193, which in appeal was changed to S. 210. Held, that the facts proved did not establish a criminal intention. 5 Ind. Cas. 695=(1909) 11 Cr.L.J. 202=7 A.L.J. 93.

—S. 210—Fraudulent decree not set aside by a civil court—Evidence.

If it is alleged that a decree has been obtained by fraud, the fact that the decree has not been set aside might be evidence to prove there was no fraud, but it cannot be a bar to the prosecution under S. 210. (1905) 33 C. 193.

1. Applicability.

—S. 211—Applicability.

An offence constituted by a false complaint against unknown persons is not one under S. 211, but one under S. 182. A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 288=42 Cr.L.J. 624=194 Ind. Cas. 799.

—S. 211—Applicability.

Where the case was taken on file after investigation by the Police under S. 202, Criminal P.C., the subsequent discharge of the accused would not justify the making of a complaint under S. 211, I.P.C. 196 Ind. Cas. 557=1941 M.W.N. 463 (1)=43 Cr.L.J. 32.

—S. 211—Applicability—Failure of complainant to prove his case.

The failure of a complainant to prove his case may result in the dismissal of his complaint under S. 203, Criminal P.C., or at later stages in the discharge or acquittal of the accused; but it will not by itself warrant his prosecution under S. 211, I.P.C., for bringing a false case. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 419=7 B.R. 420=42 Cr.L.J. 332=192 Ind. Cas. 836.

—S. 211—Applicability.

The failure of a complainant to prove his case is not the same thing as the institution of a malicious-

—S. 211—Applicability.

If the complaint in its generality was bona fide, the fact that one accused person had been wrongly identified cannot be regarded as a ground for instituting a prosecution under S. 211. A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 178=5 B.R. 203=40 Cr.L.J. 157=179 Ind. Cas. 167.

—Ss. 211, 182—Applicability.

Section 211 may cover the institution of proceedings through the Police as well as by way of complaint to the Magistrate direct. Where a complaint is made both to the Police and a Magistrate, the Magistrate's jurisdiction overrides that of the Police, and the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P.C., cannot be evaded by placing an offence under S. 195 (1) (a). Where, upon information given to the Police by the accused a third person is arrested on a charge of murder and challaned to the Court of a Magistrate by whom, however, he is subsequently discharged and the prosecution case is that the accused is responsible for the proceedings instituted against the third person, the offence committed by the accused is one under S. 211 and not under S. 182, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1939 Sind 274=41 Cr.L.J. 8=184 Ind. Cas. 243.

—S. 211—Applicability.

Woman demanding investigation and punishment to Sub-Inspector who is alleged to have raped her—Sub-Inspector not found guilty of charge—Complaint by Sub-Inspector against woman for false charge:

Held, woman was guilty of offence under S. 211 and not under S. 182. 17 N.L.J. 189=A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 69.

—S. 211—Applicability.

It is in the interests of justice that a man who brings a false charge of murder against any person should be prosecuted if a prima facie case is made out against him. 151 Ind. Cas. 691 (1)=35 P.L.R. 593=35 Cr. L.J. 1392.

—Ss. 211, 500—Applicability—Dismissal of complaint—Second complaint alleging—defamation—Maintainability of.

If on the dismissal of a complaint under S. 211, a second complaint under S. 211 can be filed, then the complainant can certainly file a second complaint on the same facts, but instead of alleging an offence under S. 211 allege an offence under S. 500. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 40=35 Cr. L.J. 802=148 Ind. Cas. 845.

—S. 211—Applicability—False information to police—Prosecution not launched—Trial of informant by Magistrate.

Where the offence under S. 211 consists in giving false information to the police and the case does not go further than a police inquiry, the offence falls within para. (1) S. 211 and not within para. (2) even though the charge made in the report is one of murder. Where the Magistrate commits the informant to the Sessions the committal is bad, and is liable to be quashed. 6 A.L.J. 989, Followed. 129 Ind. Cas. 369=1930 Cr. C. 1202=A.I.R. 1930 All. 818.

—S. 211—Applicability—False information to police—To a police officer charging his subordinate officer—S. 211 and not S. 182 applies.

Where the charge against the accused was that he gave false information to a public servant, namely, the Superintendent of Police that he and his mother had been unlawfully confined by a certain Police Officer and that money had been extorted wrongly from them, held, that the offence fell under S. 211 and not under S. 182, I.P.C. and that the case could not be tried summarily. 34 C.W.N. 556=1930 Cr.C. 1111=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 711=128 Ind. Cas. 208.

—S. 211 — Applicability — No charge in any Court nor trial nor proceeding for offence complained—Section does not apply.

Where the person at whose instance proceedings under S. 211, Penal Code, are initiated against a false complainant, is never charged in any Court, nor is he ever put upon his trial before any Magistrate, nor were any proceedings taken against him before the Court in which another person who was alleged by the false complainant to be his accomplice was involved, it cannot be said that the offence under S. 211, Penal Code, was an offence which was committed in or in relation to any proceeding in Court, though another person against whom also false complaint was made in the same transaction is tried in Court: A.I.R. 1924 All. 779, Foll. 19 P.R. 1917 Cr. and 34 All. 522, no longer good law; 43 Cal. 1152 and 44 Cal. 650, Ref. to. 109 Ind. Cas. 685=9 Lah. 408=13 L.L.J. 218=29 Cr. L.J. 605=10 A.I.Cr.R. 313=29 P.L.R. 515=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 259.

—S. 211—Applicability and scope— Ss. 211 and 182 distinguished.

Sections 182 and 211, Penal Code in reality differ fundamentally as regards the ingredients of the offence concerned.

Section 182 is primarily intended for cases of false information which do not ordinarily involve a particular allegation or charge against a specified and definite person. S. 211 covers cases where there is a definite information or charge with reference to a criminal offence against a particular person. 105 Ind. Cas. 454=23 N.L.R. 136=28 Cr. L.J. 934=9 A.I.Cr.R. 87=10 N.L.J. 191=A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 17.

—S. 211—Applicability — False information to Police—Complaint dismissed—Offence under S. 211 and not under S. 182.

The false information to the police was followed by a complaint to the Magistrate on the same facts and the same charge. The Magistrate tried the complaint and classified it to be false. The police preferred a complaint under S. 182 for false information given to them;

Held, that the offence alleged fell under S. 211 and a complaint by the magistrate before whom the charge was made was necessary. 112 Ind. Cas. 468=29 Cr. L.J. 1044=11 A.I.Cr.R. 272=A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 243.

—S. 211—Applicability and scope—Report of a police officer against his Subordinate— Not a police report—Conviction bad.

Offences under Section 211, I.P.C., fall under two categories only. First is a complaint to a Magistrate, second is a report, of a cognizable offence to a police officer. In the present case the letter was, no doubt addressed to a police officer. Whether or not it was that police officer's duty to institute proceedings against his subordinate, if he thought fit, to have the subordinate prosecuted and for that purpose he were to make a report to a Magistrate, such a report would not be a police report for the purpose of Section 190 (b) of the Cr. P.C. Conviction of complainant under Section 211, I.P.C. is therefore, bad in such a case. 69 Ind. Cas. 81=9 O.L.J. 342=23 Cr.L.J. 641=26 O.C. 44=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 4.

—S. 211—Applicability — Report to make enquiry on suspected theft.

S. 211 contemplates a false charge to an officer of the Court to set the law in motion; hence a report made to an officer for making inquiry with respect to a suspicion of theft is a false report at the utmost, and would not come under S. 211, I. P. C. 17 M. 129; 31 M. 506, Foll. 39 All. 715=15 A.L.J. 767=18 C.L.J. 1017=42 Ind. Cas. 761.

—S. 211 — Applicability — False charge against several—Single or separate offences.

A person who lays an information containing a false charge against a number of persons commits a distinct offence against each of the persons against whom he makes a charge and may be separately prosecuted under S. 211, I. P. C., for each of such offences. 11 Bur. L.T. 136=19 Cr.L.J. 1002=48 Ind. Cas. 342.

—S. 211—Applicability—False charge to Police.

The making of a false charge before the Police falls within the first portion of S. 211, 14 C. 633, Foll. (1903) 7 C.W.N. 556.

2. Complaint.

—S. 211—Complaint — Complaint to Police followed by a complaint to Magistrate.

Where an alleged false complaint is first made to the Police and then to a Court, a complaint under S. 211 subsequently filed is a complaint of an offence alleged to have been committed in, or in relation to a proceeding in Court and cannot be taken cognisance of except on a complaint of the Court. A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 7=47 Bom. L.R. 664=47 Cr.L.J. 321=223 Ind. Cas. 35.

—S. 211 — Complaint — Complainant not appearing before Magistrate.

Where a complaint made by a person is preferred by the Police, and the complainant does not appear before the Magistrate there is no proceeding in any Court and a complaint by the Magistrate is not necessary for the prosecution of the complainant under S. 211, Penal Code, in respect of a cognizable offence. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 579=1941 M.W.N. 222=53 L.W. 358=42 Cr.L.J. 649=195 Ind. Cas. 233.

—S. 211—Complaint—Complaint by private person under S. 195, Criminal P. C., is legal.

Offence under S. 211, not committed in or in relation to any Court—Private person can make a complaint of such offence. A.I.R. 1939 Sind 65=40 Cr.L.J. 461=I.L.R. (1939) Kar. 388=180 Ind. Cas. 650.

—Ss. 211, 500—Complaint.

The appellant, a woman, made a report to the Police charging one A and other persons unknown with having confined and raped her. On inquiry the Police were of the opinion that the case was not a true one, and they declined to take action. She then filed a complaint in Court definitely charging A and B with having confined and raped her. The charge being found false, the complaint was dismissed and A and B filed complaint against her for having defamed them:

Held, that what she was doing was not defaming these persons but bringing a (possibly a false) charge against them. If her complaint was a false one, her object in making it was not to defame these persons so much as to harass them and cause them the inconvenience of being subject to criminal proceedings for which offence, S. 211, Penal Code, was the appropriate section and the Magistrate could not take cognizance of it except on complaint in writing of the Court as required by the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P. C. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 163=36 Cr.L.J. 970=156 Ind. Cas. 598.

—S. 211—Complaint—Complaint by three Magistrates—Order of discharge passed by two—Legality.

Where an order of discharge was passed by two Magistrates of a Bench but the complaint of an offence under S. 211, was made by three Magistrates and it was urged that this was an illegality:

Held, that this was a very technical matter and the High Court would not interfere on a ground of this kind in revision. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 430=10 O.W.N. 1037=35 Cr.L.J. 121=146 Ind. Cas. 638.

—S. 211—Complaint — Dying declaration—Accusation contained in—Made to a Magistrate—Does not amount to complaint.

An accusation contained in a dying declaration made to a Magistrate stands on no better footing than an accusation made to a private individual, such as the compounder in the hospital, without any statutory obligation to move in the matter at all: 11 Ind. Cas. 617; 17 Cal. 574; 30 Cal. 415; 19 Bom. 51 and 26 Mad. 640, Ref. 129 Ind. Cas. 87=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 550.

—S. 211 — Complaint — Court has power suo motu.

Even where accused persons do not desire to take action under S. 211, I.P.C. a Court of law has authority to complain against a false complainant under S. 182. 112 Ind. Cas. 770=30 Cr. L. J. 2=9 A.I.Cr.R. 475=9 A.I.Cr.R. 446=9 L.R.A.Cr. 78=9 L.R.A.Cr. 71=A.I.R. 1928 All. 333.

—S. 211—Complaint—No complaint under S. 195, Cr.P. Code, necessary.

When a false charge has been made only to the police, but the person making the false charge has not applied to the Magistrate and no Court proceedings whatever have ensued, no complaint is necessary under S. 195, Cr.P. Code, before a prosecution under S. 211, Penal Code, can be instituted against the informant: 43 Cal. 1152, Foll.: A.I.R. 1924 All. 779, Appr.; 34 All. 522, Doubtful. 105 Ind. Cas. 454=23 N.L.R. 136=10 N.L.J. 191=28 Cr. L. J. 934=9 A.I.Cr.R. 87=A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 17.

—S. 211 — Complaint — Complaint filed in Court—No report to police—Police cannot proceed under S. 211.

Accused filed a complaint of dacoity in the Court and afterwards in reply to certain questions put to him by the Sub-Inspector of Police made a statement that he had been decoited by certain persons and that he had filed a complaint in Court. Police upon investigation found that the complaint was false and the accused was sent up for trial on a charge under S. 211 by the Police:

Held, that the statement to the police did not amount to a report and as proceedings were started in Court, complaint by Court was necessary to initiate proceedings under S. 211 and that police was not competent to proceed against the accused. 96 Ind. Cas. 870=26 Cr.L.J. 1014=24 A. L. J. 816=7 L.R.A.Cr. 145=A.I.R. 1926 All. 613.

—S. 211—Complaint—Investigation by Police — Non-cognizable offence — Police have no power—Complaint must be preferred.

The petitioner made a statement to the Village Munsif that a dacoity was committed in his house and mentioned certain persons as having taken part in the dacoity. The Village Munsif forwarded the complaint to the Police, who held an investigation and referred the case as false. The Sub-Magistrate to whom the papers were sent, accepted the referred charge-sheet and struck the case off his file. The police put in a charge-sheet before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate against the petitioner for an offence under S. 211, I.P.C. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferred the case to the Second Class Magistrate who had acted on the referred charge-sheet in the alleged dacoity case.

Held, that this was not a case in which the police could start proceedings of their own accord. The offence under S. 211 is a non-cognizable one and the Police were not empowered to investigate into a non-cognizable offence and charge the petitioner. It was open either to the accused in the alleged dacoity case or to the Village Munsif, or any Police Officer to prefer complaint under S. 190, Cr.P.Code, in which case the Magistrate before whom the complaint is made might take the case on his file after taking a sworn statement from the complainant. As such course was not adopted in this case, the proceedings were illegal. 90 Ind. Cas. 398=1925 M.W.N. 317=22 M.L.W. 209=26 Cr.L.J. 1550=A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 672.

—S. 211—Complaint—Meaning of.

Application by complainant asking for judicial enquiry of the charge made by him which the police had reported to be false, is a complaint. 20 Cr. L. J. 389=50 Ind. Cas. 997 (Pat.).

—S. 211—Complaint — Hearsay evidence — Telegram sent—No complaint—No prosecution can be ordered—Cr.P.C., S. 193.

A Chaprasi sent a telegram to the Collector saying that the Tahsildar and certain others in his absence entered his house and forcibly inoculated his wife and children. The Collector sent the telegram to a Magistrate who examined the Chaprasi and certain witnesses who stated that they had heard that the complainant's house was forcibly entered into. Finding the statement false he directed the prosecution of the complainant and his witnesses. Held, that the complaint was no complaint in law and a prosecution could not be maintained against the Chaprasi under S. 211. A hearsay statement should not be recorded by a Magistrate while recording the deposition of a witness. If such a statement is recorded it cannot be made the subject of prosecution under S. 193. (1910) 11 Cr.L.J. 351=6 Ind. Cas. 380=7 A.L.J. 618.

3. Essentials.

—S. 211—Essentials.

The elements of an offence under S. 211 are firstly that a false charge should be brought; secondly, that the person bringing it should know that there was no just or lawful ground for such proceeding or charge, and thirdly, that it should be brought to cause injury to the persons against whom it was made. Where the only finding recorded is that a false complaint was brought, it is not sufficient to support a conviction under S. 211. A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 288=40 Cr.L.J. 605=181 Ind. Cas. 916.

—S. 211—Essentials.

The complainant must have falsely charged such person with having committed an offence, that is to say, the person must be innocent. The complainant must have known that there is no just or lawful ground for the proceeding or charge, that is to say, there is no penalty in this section for incautious or negligible acceptance of information which the complainant might have learnt by enquiry to be unreliable. Thirdly, there must have been an intention to cause injury to the person.

The last can in some cases be inferred from the relation of the parties when the other two elements are established. As regards the other two ingredients, it is important to remember that there is a difference between suspicion and evidence. The prosecution will have to establish facts irreconcilable with the innocence of the accused. A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 178=5 B.R. 203=40 Cr.L.J. 157=179 Ind. Cas. 167.

—S. 211—Essentials—Material sufficient for prima facie case — Mere belief—Dismissal of complaint—No grounds.

A mere belief without any foundation whatsoever does not justify a Court of justice to send a man for trial. Before a Court orders a prosecution under S. 211, there must be enough materials to justify a complaint being filed, i.e., there must be enough materials to show that there is a prima facie case. A dismissal of complaint does not justify a Court in prosecuting the complainant under S. 211. 98 Ind. Cas. 465=27 Cr. L. J. 1345=A.I.R. 1927 All. 107.

—S. 211—Essentials—Failure to prove case—Not sufficient ground—Intent to cause injury or knowledge of falsity essential.

The fact that the complainant fails to prove his case is by itself not sufficient to sanction a prosecution under S. 211 of the Indian Penal Code. It must be established satisfactorily in the mind of the Judge or the Magistrate that the complaint was made with intent to cause injury or that it was a false complaint made with the knowledge that it was false. 83 Ind. Cas. 701=6 P.L.T. 365=26 Cr. L. J. 14=A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 329.

—S. 211—Essentials—Complaint without just cause—Action without due care or caution—Sufficient grounds—S. 182 distinguished.

Under S. 211 of the Penal Code if the accused makes his complaint without any just grounds and acts without due care or caution it is enough to constitute an offence. But under S. 182 the information given to a public servant should not only be false in fact but it must be false to the knowledge or belief of the informant and the mere fact that the accused had reasons to believe it to be false is not sufficient. 82 Ind. Cas. 718=25 Cr. L.J. 1358=19 S.L.R. 91=A.I.R. 1925 Sind 184.

—S. 211—Essentials — Malice or failure to make reasonable enquiry — Not sufficient ground.

A man cannot be convicted of perjury for having acted maliciously or for having failed to make a reasonable enquiry with regard to the facts alleged by him to be true. It must be proved that he made some statements which he knew to be false and which he believed to be false or which he did not believe to be true. 61 Ind. Cas. 521=22 Cr.L.J. 393=L. R. 2 A. (Cr.) 94 (All.).

—S. 211—Essentials—Specific offence—Mere suggestion.

S. 211 requires a specific offence charged with the object of setting the criminal law in motion and not a mere suggestion or inference against the accused, the circumstances of, and the form of making statement being considered.

Prosecution should not be ordered, merely because pleader for accused, charges another with the offence. 10 Bur. L.T. 259=18 Cr.L.J. 2=36 Ind. Cas. 834.

—S. 211—Essentials—Report of an offence without any one being named—as the perpetrator thereof.

Before a case can be instituted under S. 211 it must be proved that the person accused instituted or cause to be instituted a criminal proceeding against a particular person with intent to cause injury to that person. 4 A.L.J. 361=1907 A.W.N. 149.

—S. 211—Essentials of offence under.

Two principles are to be remembered: (1) that failure of a complainant to establish the truth of his allegation does not mean that the complaint was false; (2) that to secure a conviction it must be established beyond reasonable doubt that the circumstances are not merely consistent with the guilt of the accused, but entirely inconsistent with his innocence. 16 C.L.J. 453=17 C.W.N. 379=13 Cr.L.J. 897=17 Ind. Cas. 993.

—S. 211—Essentials for a prosecution under —Disposal of complaint a preliminary necessity.

A complaint must, according to the law as laid down in the decisions of the Calcutta High Court, be dealt with under S. 203, Cr.P.C., before a prosecution under S. 211, Indian Penal Code, can be instituted against the person who presents it. The correctness of those decisions doubted. (1905) 33 Cal. 1=10 C.W.N. 158=2 C.L.J. 228=2 Cr.L.J. 615.

4. Evidence and proof.

—S. 211—Evidence—Proof to establish offence.

In order to prove an offence under S. 211, it will be necessary for the prosecution to establish, that the prosecution brought by the appellant against the respondent was brought with intent to cause injury to the respondent; secondly, that the charge made against the respondent was false, and thirdly, that it was made with the knowledge on the part of the appellant that there was no just or lawful ground for such charge. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 473=38 Cr.L.J. 226=166 Ind. Cas. 489.

—S. 211—Evidence.

In order to successfully prosecute an accused under S. 211, it is necessary for the prosecution to establish that the primary intention of the accused when he made the statement, the basis of the charge, was to cause injury to the persons mentioned by him. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 246=33 P.L.R. 174=33 Cr.L.J. 409=13 Lah. 568=137 Ind. Cas. 157.

—S. 211—Evidence and proof—Rest on prosecution.

Where a person is charged under S. 211 of making a false report it is not for him to make out that his report was true until it has been clearly traversed by evidence produced by the prosecution showing that it was false. 113 Ind. Cas. 455=2 M.Cr.C. 78=30 Cr.L.J. 167=30 M.L.W. 795=12 A.I.Cr.R. 71=A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 496.

—S. 211—Evidence and proof—Absence of reasonable grounds—Knowledge of the same—Burden on prosecution.

In order to bring home a charge under S. 211 the prosecution must establish that there are no just and lawful grounds for the action taken and that the accused knew this. The mere communication of a suspicion to the police does not amount to a charge of a criminal offence. 88 Ind. Cas. 525=6 Lah. 28=26 Cr.L.J. 1165=26 P.L.R. 131=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 325.

—S. 211—Evidence and proof—Duty of prosecution—Failure of accused to examine witness, if implies guilt.

In a case under S. 211 the prosecution has to prove clearly that the charge was wilfully false to the knowledge of the maker thereof and if they fail to do so, the mere fact of the accused failing to examine any one as defence witness will not imply his guilt having been proved. 18 C.W.N. 391=15 Cr. L.J. 355=23 Ind. Cas. 723.

—S. 211—Evidence and proof—False charge —Proofs of falsity—Quantum of proof.

To establish falsity more than mere failure to prove the complaint would be necessary. (1902) 4 Bom. L.R. 645.

5. False charge.

—S. 211.

Statement to police of suspicion that particular person has committed an offence—Does not amount to a charge. 6 L. 28, 14 Ind. Cas. 767 and 46 A. 906, rel. on. I.L.R. (1950) Nag. 208=A.I.R. 1950 Nag. 20=51 Cr.L.J. 267=1949 N.L.J. 604.

—S. 211 — "False charge" —Petition to a Assistant Superintendent of Police charging certain persons with commission of cognisable offence—Inquiry by Sub-Inspector in charge of thana—Case found maliciously false—Offence under S. 211, is committed.

Where upon a petition by the accused to the Assistant Superintendent of Police charging certain persons of commission of a cognizable offence, he directs an enquiry and having received a report from the Sub-Inspector in charge of the thana that the case was maliciously false, makes a complaint against the accused for prosecuting him under S. 211, Penal Code, the complaint is proper and an offence is committed even though the offence complained of was enquired into by the Sub-Inspector. A cognizable offence can be enquired into either by the Police Officer in charge of the Police Station or by any officer to whom he was subordinate and within whose jurisdiction the offence was said to have been committed. The Assistant Superintendent of Police having taken action on the petition and directed an enquiry, was in a position to get the offender punished. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 625=41 Cr.L.J. 409=6 B.R. 424=187 Ind. Cas. 128.

—S. 211—False charge—False allegation against Subordinate Judge that he committed offence under S. 196, made to District Judge.

The expression "falsely charges" in S. 211, must be construed along with the words which speak of the institution of proceedings in the earlier part of the section, so that the test is "whether the person who made the statement which is alleged to constitute the charge did so with the intention and object of setting the criminal law in motion against the person against whom the statement is directed." An accusation made to a person who has nothing to do under the law with setting the criminal law in motion would thus not amount to a charge within the section. False allegations of an offence under S. 196, Penal Code, against a Subordinate Judge made to such an authority as a District Judge for the purpose of obtaining sanction to prosecute, amounts to the making of a charge within the meaning of S. 211. Since the object in making the allegation to the District Judge is to set the criminal law in motion, and the District Judge has statutory power to further that object, though the sanction of the Local Government is also necessary before any Criminal Court can take cognizance of the offence. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 83=16 Pat. 571=19 P.L.T. 51=39 Cr.L.J. 314=4 B.R. 274=173 Ind. Cas. 432.

—S. 211—"False charge"—False petition to Superintendent of Police for protection from oppression of head constable.

For an allegation to amount to a false charge, as contemplated under S. 211, Penal Code, it must be made with the intention and object of setting the criminal law in motion. A false petition to the Superintendent of Police praying for the protection of the petitioner from the oppression of a head constable which may be effected by some departmental action, does not amount to such a false charge. The charge must be embodied either in a complaint to the Magistrate or in a report of a cognizable offence to a Police Officer:

Held, that the conviction under S. 211, could not also be altered to one under S. 182, since none of the Police Officers to whom the complaint was addressed by the petitioner had taken the trouble of presenting a complaint against him as required by S. 195, Criminal P.C. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 624=39 P.L.R. 238=38 Cr.L.J. 1070=171 Ind. Cas. 333.

—S. 211—False charge.

Where allegations are substantially true and there is no mention of particular section when preferring a charge before the Police, conviction under S. 211, could not be sustained. 20 Nag. L. Jour. 92.

—S. 211—False charge—Falsity of complaint.

In a charge under S. 211, what is to be considered is the nature of the complaint or charge made by the accused; in other words, whether the complaint is substantially true and what is false is a mere fringe to the complaint or whether the substantial complaint is false and what is true is a mere fringe, or in other words, a mere accessory circumstance.

If A believes what B told him and in good faith orders B to file a complaint, the fact that B's story turned out to be untrue will be no ground for criminal prosecution of A, even if, during the inquiry he assists in the production of evidence. It is necessary to prove also that A believed in its falsity. A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 84=3 B.R. 347=38 Cr.L.J. 462=167 Ind. Cas. 852.

Where a person gives information to a Police Officer which amounts to a complaint of a cognizable offence, any statement made by another person to the Police afterwards, however false it might have been, is a statement made in Police investigation and cannot be made the foundation of a prosecution under S. 211, Penal Code, even though the Police Officer who received the first information did not record the same in writing as required by S. 154, Criminal P.C. A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 160=1935 M.W.N. 1197=43 M.L.W. 261=37 Cr.L.J. 357=160 Ind. Cas. 988.

Where a person does not confine himself to reporting what he knew of the facts, stating his suspicions and leaving the matter to be further investigated by the Police, but he definitely alleged his belief in the guilt of certain men and insists on Court proceedings being taken against them, it amounts to a charge within the meaning of S. 211. And as soon as the charge is made, the offence under S. 211 is complete and the injured party can file a complaint against the informant under S. 211 irrespective of the fact that the latter files a complaint subsequently. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 21=35 Cr.L.J. 1259=151 Ind. Cas. 185.

—S. 211—False charge.

An allegation will amount to a false charge under S. 211, only if made with the intention and object of setting the criminal law in motion. An allegation made to the Superintendent of Police to the effect that a Sub-Inspector had committed bribery and extortion does not amount to a false charge as contemplated under S. 211. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 511=59 Cal. 334=33 Cr.L.J. 631=138 Ind. Cas. 551.

—S. 211—False charge.

The word 'charge' as used in S. 211, implies that the allegation or accusation of an offence against another should be made to a person who, or to a tribunal, which is competent to take action against the person complained against. The test is whether the person making the charge intended to set the criminal law in motion against the person charged. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 246=33 P.L.R. 174=33 Cr.L.J. 409=13 Lah. 468=137 Ind. ## —S. 211—Charge—Charge against several—Only some proceeded against in Court—No charge against the rest.

Where a charge is made against several people but one of them is not proceeded against and is not charged in Court, the fact that the others are charged in Court does not make the charge against the former a charge in Court: 34 All. 522, Dissented from. 82 Ind. ## —S. 211—False charge—What amounts to.

—S. 211—False charge—Causing police search to be made—Indicating guilt—Amounts to.

Causing police search to be made and identifying property as being unlawfully in complainant's possession and indicating to the police that the complainant was guilty amounts to charge within the meaning of S. 211. 82 Ind. ## —S. 211—False charge—Statement to police under S. 162, Cr.P.C.

A statement made under S. 162 to a police is not a complaint or charge. If it is made after the institution of proceedings, it cannot be made the basis of prosecution under S. 211, I.P.C. 8 M.L.T. 87=11 Cr.L.J. 286=20 M.L.J. 132=5 Ind. Cas. 908.

—S. 211—False charge—Cr. P. Code, S. 157.

A telegram that a dacoity had taken place without mentioning names is not an institution of a false charge within S. 211 and is not 'information received' within S. 157, Cr. P. Code. 1 L.W. 355= (1914) M.W.N. 382=15 Cr.L.J. 622=25 Ind. Cas. 630.

Held, that the petition did not amount criminal charge within the meaning of S. 211. 8 A.L.J. 1106=12 Cr.L.J. 433=11 Ind. Cas. 617.

—S. 211—False charge—Information to village Magistrate or other persons mentioned in S. 45, Cr.P.C., which they are found to transmit—Information and charge, distinction between: Per Benson and Munro, JJ. (Sankaran Nair, J. dissenting):—

A false complaint to a village magistrate or other persons merely in S. 45, Cr.P.C. of an offence which the village magistrate or other person is required by the section to forward to higher authorities is an offence under S. 211, I.P.C. It may be otherwise if the information be one which is not required by S. 45, Cr. P. C. to be so forwarded:—31 M. 506 dissented from. Obiter:—Every information of an offence does not necessarily amount to a charge of an offence. A man might give the information which he had heard from others and without himself alleging its truth. Per Sankaran Nair, J.:—The statement given to the village Magistrate is not one made under S. 154, I. P. C. Nor is it the institution of a criminal proceedings. The information given to the village Magistrate is distinguishable now what is known as "criminal information." The statement itself need not be transmitted under S. 45, Cr.P.C. and it is only the information that has to be transmitted and consequently no offence under S. 211, I.P.C. can be said to be committed. A false charge under S. 211, I.P.C. must not be understood in any restricted or technical sense, but in its ordinary meaning of a false accusation made to any authority bound by law to investigate it or to take any steps in regard to it, such as giving information of it to superior authorities with a view to investigation or other proceedings and the institution of criminal proceedings includes the setting of the criminal law in motion. 17 C. 574, ref. to. If an aggrieved person gives false information of an offence to the Station House Officer under S. 154, Cr. P. C., he may be proceeded against under S. 211, I. P. C. (1909) 32 M. 258=5 M. L. ## —S. 211—False charge—False complaint need not be followed by summons.

To constitute the offence provided for by S. 211, it is sufficient that a false complaint should be made against any person. It is not necessary that summons should be issued upon such complaint, 1904 A.W.N. 10=26 A. 244.

—S. 211 — "Falsely charged" — Test—Sentence.

The 'test' to find out whether there was a false charge is "did the person who made the charge intend to set the Criminal law in motion against the person against whom the charge is made"; and the fact that the statement to the Police officer should have been reduced to writing in accordance with S. 154, Cr.P.C., does not prevent the statement from being a false charge. A distinction was drawn between the case of one who persisted in the charge and another who withdrew from it at a very early stage. (1903) 27 M. 127.

—S. 211—False charge—'Charges'—'Gives information'—Difference between—Intention.

The word "charges" as used in S. 211 means something different from "gives information." The words "falsely charged" must be construed with reference to the words which speak of the institution of proceedings, the test being where the person making the statement alleged to constitute the "charge" does so with the intention and object of setting the criminal law in motion against the person against whom the statement is directed, which may be inferred from the language of the statement and the circumstances under which it is made. A person who makes a petition merely with a view to prevent a recurrence of the incident (such as "tutoring" in this case) and not with a view that the authorities should take criminal proceedings is not making a "charge" within the meaning of the section. (1903) 26 M. 640.

—S. 211—False charge involving true facts also—False prosecution, test of.

S. 211, I.P.C., contemplates an indivisible charge. Where a charge is partly true and partly false, the proper test is whether the charge is substantially true or false, i. e., whether the main charge is false and what is true is only a mere fringe of the reverse. No definite rule can be laid down for all cases. (1001) 5 C.W.N. 727.

6. Graver and lesser offence.

—S. 211—Graver and lesser offence.

An offence falling under S. 182 is included in the more serious offence falling under S. 211 and a prosecution for a false charge may be either under S. 182 or S. 211, though clearly, if S. 211 does apply and the false charge is serious, a prosecution should be under the more serious charge under S. 211. —S. 211—Graver and lesser offence—Charge for offence under Ss. 182 and 211—Conviction for minor offence only—Legality.

As soon as a false complaint has been made to the police the person who made the complaint is guilty of an offence under S. 182 and a repetition of the same complaint to a different person will not exonerate him from guilt regarding the earlier offence. Where the accused is found to have committed two distinct offences under Ss. 182 and 211, I. P. Code the prosecution may be for either offence though generally it should be for the more serious offence. 128 Ind. Cas. 836=8 Rang. 499=1931 Cr. C. 28=A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 12.

—S. 211—Graver and lesser offence—Offence falling under Ss. 211 and 182—Prosecution for minor offence under S. 182 improper.

P went to the police station and made allegations against one B and A to the effect that they had jointly committed robbery on him, in the course of which, one of them caused hurt to him. The police investigated the case, found it to be false and finally classified it as such, thereupon, P lodged a complaint in Court against B and A on the same facts and for the same offence. The Magistrate on receipt of it directed the police for enquiry and report. On receipt of the police report, the Magistrate dismissed the complaint, classifying the case as "false." Then the officer-in-charge of the police station filed a complaint against P under S. 182 Penal Code.

Held, that though the offence alleged against the petitioner fell under both S. 182 and S. 211, prosecution under S. 182 was quite improper. To permit such prosecution will be contrary to the general principle that a prosecution for a lesser offence should not be launched when the facts constitute a graver offence: 5 Cal. 184; 32 Cal. 180; 15 All. 336; 44 Cal. 650; A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 483; 7 Bom. 184; 32 Cal. 180; and 2 U.B.R. 95; Rel. on. 114 Ind. Cas. 685=30 Cr.L.J. 342=6 Rang. 578=A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 254.

—S. 211—Graver and lesser offence—Definite statement to police—Different from mere information to Police—Section applies.

There is an essential difference between a mere information to the Police and a definite statement to it that a certain person has committed a certain particular offence. In the latter case, which is much graver than the former, S. 211 of the Penal Code applies. A.I.R. 1924 All. 779, Ref. 85 Ind. Cas. 818=26 Cr.L.J. 594=6 L.R.A.Cr. 71=A.I.R. 1925 All. 472.

—S. 211—Graver and lesser offence—No jurisdiction for the grave—Investigation by Magistrate into the lesser—If empowered.

Where a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of an offence under S. 211 for want of proper complaint he can investigate the complaint as regards S. 182. 88 Ind. Cas. 1045=5 Pat. 33=6 P. L. T. 515=26 Cr.L.J. 1269=1926 P.H.C.C. 106=A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 717.

—S. 211—Graver and lesser offence—Sanction for graver offence refused—Fresh charge on minor offence, not requiring sanction—Improper.

Where the charge might have been made against the accused under section 182 or section 211, Held, it seems to be contrary to public policy and to the recognised principles of the administration of the criminal law, when a charge has been launched which requires sanction by a particular authority and that authority has refused sanction, to hold that it is open to a complainant to alter his election, shift his ground and start a fresh charge on an alternative section which does not require sanction. 68 Ind. Cas. 32=20 A.L.J. 775=45 All. 11=23 Cr.L.J. 496=A.I.R. 1922 All. 502.

Where there have been Court proceedings in consequence of a false report to the police, then S. 211 is the appropriate section to apply, and is so in any event, where the case is a serious one. 1 U.B.R. 134, Rel. on.

But this does not of necessity make a prosecution under Section 182 illegal. It is a question of expediency whether the High Court will quash the conviction for the minor offence under Section 182 and direct a trial for the graver one under Section 211. 7 M.H.C. App. 5, Rel. on. 34 All. 522. 32 Cal. 180 and 15 Bom.L.R. 574, Ref. 64 Ind. Cas. 839=11 L.B.R. 43=A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 43.

—Ss. 211, 182—Graver and lesser offence.

Prosecution for a false charge may be under S. 182 or S. 211, I.P.C.; but if the false charge be a serious one, the graver S. 211 should be applied and the trial should be full and fair. 5 C. 184, 7 C.L.R. 382, Foll.; 5 C.W.N. 727, doubted; 17 C. 574 F.B. Com. on. (1904) 32 C. 180.

7. Instituting criminal proceedings.

—S. 211—"Criminal proceeding"—Meaning of—Proceeding under S. 107, Cr. P. Code—If and when amounts to.

The expression "Criminal proceeding" means a proceeding which lies under the law of procedure in a criminal Court, and which is in accordance with some requirement of, or is performed under some power conferred by the relevant procedural provisions. In a proceeding under S. 107, Cr. P. Code, the receipt of information against a person by whom a breach of the peace is apprehended, and the verification of such information are not provided for in that section, and it must therefore be held that the mere making of a complaint, whether orally or in writing, against such a person and any steps which the Magistrate may take to verify the truth of the allegations before he issues notice to such a person are not within the expression "criminal proceeding" as used in S. 211, I. P. Code. But if the magistrate, acting upon the information laid before him, issues notice to such person, the person laying the information must be held to have instituted a "criminal proceeding." Where however the Magistrate refuses to issue notice, there is no "criminal proceeding," and if the information be false and malicious, the action in law would be provided, not by S. 211, but by S. 182, I.P. Code. Pak L.R. (1948) Lah. 53=A.I.R. 1949 Lah. 28=50 Cr.L.J. 244 (F.B.)

—S. 211—Instituting criminal proceedings—False charge to Police.

The criminal proceedings are just as much instituted within the meaning of S. 211, Penal Code, when first information of a cognizable offence is given to the Police under S. 154, Criminal P. C., as when a complaint is made direct to a Magistrate under S. 200. But there is an essential difference between a mere information to the Police and a definite statement to it that a certain person has committed a certain particular offence. In the latter case, which is much graver than the former, S. 211, Penal Code, applies. A person who sets the criminal law in motion by making a false charge to the Police of a cognizable offence by definitely charging a person with having come to his house for the purpose of committing a dacoity and insisting on investigation, institutes criminal proceedings within the meaning of S. 211, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 100=1941 O.W.N. 1072=42 Cr.L.J. 833=1941 A.W.R.C.C. 298=196 Ind. Cas. 262.

—S. 211—Instituting criminal proceedings.

The mere fact of giving evidence alone cannot by any stretch of reasoning be tantamount to the institution of proceedings within the meaning of S. 211. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 828=38 P.L.R. 16=37 Cr.L.J. 1043=164 Ind. Cas. 1057.

—S. 211—Instituting criminal proceedings.

The laying of an information which the Police Officer has power to investigate and the causing of that officer to investigate amounts to institution of criminal proceedings. Consequently, where the accused reports to two Police Officers, one of whom has no jurisdiction, while the other has, the accused must be held to have instituted proceedings and the offence under S. 211, is committed, though partially, at each place. A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 358=17 P.L.T. 472=2 B.R. 643 (2)=37 Cr.L.J. 862=163 Ind. Cas. 805.

—Ss. 211, 182—Instituting criminal proceedings—Proof of intention to get criminal proceedings started against person charged is necessary.

A person actually institutes criminal proceedings upon making a complaint as defined in S. 4 (g), Criminal P. C., and a person also institutes criminal proceedings upon reporting the commission of a cognizable offence to the Police who are empowered to investigate the allegation. It is true that a Criminal Court can take cognizance of an offence not only upon the receipt of a complaint or upon the report of a Police Officer, but also under S. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., upon information received from any person, but it cannot be said that a person who gives information to a Court without a view to that Court taking action under the Criminal P. C., thereby himself institutes criminal proceedings. In order to render an allegation a complaint, it must be made "with a view to a Magistrate taking action under the Criminal P. C." Where, therefore, a telegram alleging that a certain offence has taken place does not contain a prayer asking the addressee to take action as contemplated by the Code, there must be clear proof that this was the petitioner's intention before it can be held that he submitted a complaint.

Where telegrams were sent to the Deputy Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner and District Superintendent of Police that a certain Sub-Inspector had committed certain offence against the sender, and on Magisterial inquiry the allegations were found to be incorrect and the sender was prosecuted under S. 211, Penal Code:

Held, that in the absence of proof that the telegrams were sent with a view to the authorities taking criminal proceedings against the person charged, he could not be convicted under S. 211 but his conduct was punishable under S. 182. A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 66=37 Cr.L.J. 604=162 Ind. Cas. 140.

—S. 211—Instituting criminal proceedings.

A false charge and institution of criminal proceedings are not exclusive though they are not co-extensive and the latter phrase applies to a report to the Police of a cognizable offence. A false charge made to the Police of a non-cognizable offence will be a false charge which will not amount to the institution of criminal proceedings. But if a report of a cognizable offence is made to the Police, the machinery of law is set in motion by the report and the criminal proceedings instituted within the meaning of S. 211. A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 112=35 Cr.L.J. 1410=151 Ind. Cas. 816.

—S. 211—Instituting criminal proceedings.

A person, who applies to a Magistrate for an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., against another institutes a criminal proceeding within the meaning of S. 211, Penal Code. 1933 M.W.N. 1263.

—S. 211—Instituting criminal proceedings—Allegation to Police of non-cognizable offence.

A false charge of a non-cognizable offence made to the Police is not an institution of criminal proceedings as the Police have no power to take any proceedings in non-cognizable cases without the order of a Magistrate. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 511=59 Cal. 334=33 Cr.L.J. 631=138 Ind. Cas. 551.

—S. 211—Instituting criminal proceedings—Charge of cognizable offence.

The making of a false charge to the Police of a cognisable offence is the institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of S. 211. Where the accused made a report of an alleged offence under S. 304, and thereby caused the Police to make an investigation:

Held, that the accused must be deemed to have instituted a criminal proceedings within the meaning of S. 211. A.I.R. 1931 All. 269=1931 A.L.J. 177=33 Cr.L.J. 256=136 Ind. Cas. 277.

—S. 211—Instituting criminal proceedings—Charge to Police of cognizable offence.

Setting the criminal law in motion by making a charge to the Police of a cognizable offence against a person does not amount to the institution of criminal proceedings against that person within the meaning of S. 211. A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 134=32 Cr.L.J. 1009=27 N.L.R. 275=133 Ind. Cas. 398 (F.B.).

—S. 211—Institution of criminal proceedings—Application for relief from Police torture—Not a complaint—No offence even if false.

The applicant was tortured by the police under the suspicion of theft and he therefore prayed that the enquiry be directed to be made in the presence of the officer and that it be ordered that the police should not trouble him in any way. The Magistrate treated this as a complaint, took evidence and wrote a brief order dismissing the complaint under section 203, Cr. P. Code, in which he did not refer to the witnesses or discuss their evidence. He then took proceedings under section 476 against the applicant, and (P. W. 14) one other who was said by the police in their report to have instigated the applicant to file the application. The applicant was ordered to be prosecuted under S. 211 and the other man under S. 211 read with section 109 and section 193, Indian Penal Code:

Held, that no offence under section 211 was committed as there was no intention to set the law in motion against anybody. —S. 211—Instituting criminal proceedings—Accusation before Village Magistrate of murder—Criminal proceedings, institution of.

An accusation of murder made to the Village Magistrate who under S. 14, Reg. XI of 1816, has authority to arrest any person whom he suspects of having committed the murder of a person whose body is found, as it was in this case, within his jurisdiction is a charge within the meaning of S. 211, even though it does not amount to the institution of criminal proceedings or even though no criminal proceedings follow it owing to the Police on investigation referring the charges as false. (1903) 27 M. 129.

—S. 211—Institute Cr. Proceedings—Meaning.

Under S. 211 answers to questions put by a police officer under S. 161, Cr. P. C. do not amount to institution of criminal proceedings or preferring a false charge. 6 M.L.T. 133=11 Cr.L.J. 164=4 Ind. Cas. 1061.

8. Interpretation.

—S. 211—Interpretation.

The words "be instituted" in second part of S. 211 do not denote the past tense as is sometimes contended. The words denote the passive mood. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 213=40 Cr.L.J. 12=1 L.R. (1939) Kar. 241=178 Ind. Cas. 218.

—S. 211—Interpretation.

There is no distinction between the first and second parts of S. 211, Penal Code, between proceedings before the Police and the proceedings before the Magistrate. The second part of S. 211 must be read with the first part and the second part refers to 'such criminal proceedings'. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 213=40 Cr.L.J. 12=1 L.R. (1939) Kar. 241=178 Ind. Cas. 218.

—S. 211—Interpretation.

The word "falsely charges" used in S. 211, must be read with the preceding words of that section and imply a false charge to a person in authority made with a view to setting the criminal law in motion. The question here is one of intention. A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 66=37 Cr.L.J. 604=162 Ind. Cas. 140.

—S. 211—Interpretation—"Falsely charging".

"Falsely charging" means a false accusation made to any authority bound by law to investigate it or to take any step in regard to it. 32 Mad. 258, Ref. 129 Ind. Cas. 87=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 550.

—S. 211—Interpretation—Charge and proceedings—Must be made in British India.

On general rules of construction it seems that the criminal proceedings and false charge within S. 211 must mean proceedings and charge in British India where the Indian Penal Code is in force though a person may be able to institute such proceedings or make such a charge while he is actually in foreign territory. The criminal proceedings taken and the false charge made before the Vyra Court in the Baroda State are not within the scope of the section. 77 Ind. Cas. 189=47 Bom. 907=25 Bom. L.R. 772=25 Cr. L. J. 333=A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 51.

—S. 211—Interpretation—Court proceedings followed, accused discharged—Offence committed "in relation to proceedings."

The petitioner himself planted a mould in respondent's house and gave information to the Police that respondent was counterfeiting coin. The respondent was prosecuted but was discharged. Subsequently, the Court granted an application for sanction to prosecute the petitioner for an offence under S. 211, I.P.C. On application to revoke the sanction on the ground that the offence was not committed "in or in relation to any proceeding in the Court":

Held, that the facts alleged against the petitioner did constitute an offence in relation to the proceedings before the Magistrate. 84 Ind. Cas. 863=2 Bur.L.J. 289=26 Cr.L.J. 383=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 211.

—S. 211 — Interpretation — "Institution" meaning of.

The term 'institution' in Section 211, Indian Penal Code means the institution either by the Police or others in some Criminal Court in consequence of accused's action. 65 Ind. Cas. 434=23 Cr. L. J. 82=6 P. W. R. Cr. 1922=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 133.

9. Jurisdiction.

—S. 211—Territorial jurisdiction in regard to an offence under—False charge made in letter posted from a mofussil station to a public officer in Madras—Offence where completed—Court at mofussil station, if has jurisdiction to take cognizance and try the accused for the offence under S. 211.

The accused posted a letter at Kumbakonam addressed to the Inspector General of Police, Madras, wherein he alleged that a village munsif of a neighbouring village had received illegal gratification. This complaint, on investigation was found to be absolutely groundless. The accused was charged before the Additional First Class Magistrate, Kumbakonam, of an offence under S. 211, I. P. Code. On a petition to quash the proceedings on the ground that the Court at Kumbakonam had no territorial jurisdiction to enquire into the case:

Held, that the offence can be said to be completed only when the letter reached the destination, i. e., the office of the Inspector General of Police, Madras. It cannot be said that by merely posting the letter, the accused had attempted to commit the offence. The Court at Kumbakonam which had taken cognizance of the offence had acted without jurisdiction and the charge framed has to be quashed. I.L.R. (1949) Mad. 893=61 L.W. 15=49 Cr. L. J. 335=A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 292=1948 M.W.N. 3=(1948) 1 M.L.J. 21.

—S. 211 — Jurisdiction — False charge of dacoity.

No doubt the criminal law may be set in motion by giving information to the Police of a cognizable offence, but unless proceedings are instituted in a Court of law, it is not correct to say that criminal proceedings have been instituted. A mere charge, however serious (e. g., dacoity) which gets no further than a Police inquiry, does not give rise to a case triable only by a Court of Session. If the matter gets into Court, and a man is put on his trial on false charge, that is a much more serious matter. If the case gets no further than a Police inquiry, it falls within the first part of S. 211, and, therefore, the First Class Magistrate has jurisdiction to try it. A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 414=43 Bom. L. R. 858=I.L.R. (1942) Bom. 22=43 Cr.L.J. 240=197 Ind. Cas. 598.

—S. 211—Jurisdiction—Complaint by woman to Police that certain person raped her—Police finding case to be false on investigation—Offence by woman, if comes under first part of S. 211—Whether can be tried by first Class Magistrate.

The criminal proceedings referred to in S. 211 must be regarded as proceedings before a Magistrate. A man who makes a false charge, which fails to result in any proceedings before a Magistrate, owing to his clumsiness or for some similar reason is saved from himself to a certain extent by the action of the Police in throwing out the case, and he has merely "falsely charged", he has neither initiated criminal proceedings nor caused them to be initiated. If owing to his greater skill, he has succeeded in getting the Police to arrest his enemy and place him before a Court, then his greater skill has succeeded in involving himself perhaps in an offence for which he can be more heavily punished, because he would then have caused criminal proceedings to be instituted. If he had gone directly to the magistrate with the idea that the Magistrate will harass his enemy by summoning him to Court, then he has "instituted criminal proceedings" himself and the annoyance or dishonour which he has placed on his enemy has again made him liable to heavier punishment.

Where, therefore, a woman reports to the Police that a certain person had committed an offence of rape on her and the Police investigate the case but find it to be false, the offence committed by the woman comes under first part of S. 211, and she can be legally tried by a Magistrate of the First Class. —S. 211—Jurisdiction—Erroneously and in good faith taken over by Magistrate—Prosecution for false complaint—Not sustainable.

If a Magistrate not empowered by law to take cognizance of an offence under S. 190 (1) (a) erroneously and in good faith does so, although his proceedings shall not be set aside merely on the ground of his not being so empowered, it will not have the effect of making the complainant liable for prosecution for a false complaint by reason of the Magistrate's having taken cognizance of it without power to do so: A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 400, Foll. 17 Cal. 574 and 32 Mad. 258, Dist. 129 Ind. Cas. 87=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 550.

—S. 211—Jurisdiction—Preliminary inquiry on complaint ordered by one Court—Subsequent complaint by police to another Court—Latter Court has no jurisdiction.

A person made a complaint against Abkari Inspector's Naik to the police and as the police took no action he filed a complaint in the Court of a Magistrate and the Magistrate ordered a preliminary enquiry. The police subsequently filed complaint against the person in the Court of another Magistrate charging him under Ss. 182 and 211 with regard to the complaint which he had made to the police.

Held, that the latter Court could not take cognizance of the complaint filed by the police against the person, the preliminary enquiry of the first Court not having been completed and no complaint by the first Court having been made: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 95; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 851; A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 254; Rel. on. 115 Ind. —S. 211—Jurisdiction—Dismissal of complaint—Same Magistrate acting under S. 211—Competency.

Where a false complaint is lodged and dismissed, the Magistrate dismissing the complaint is not competent to proceed against the complainant under S. 211, Penal Code. He should make a complaint under S. 195, Cr. P. Code. 96 Ind. Cas. 651=5 Pat. 450=7 P.L.T. 716=27 Cr.L.J. 987=7 A. I. Cr. R. 20=A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 368.

—S. 211—Jurisdiction—False charge—Jurisdiction of magistrate—Commitment to court of session.

Where the offence consists in the giving of false information to the Police and the case does not go further than a Police enquiry, the offence falls within the first paragraph of S. 211. Where the Magistrate commits the accused for trial to the Court of Session only on the ground that the fine or sentence which he may impose will not be adequate to meet the ends of justice, the commitment is bad in law. (1909) 6 A.L.J. 989=4 Ind. Cas. 812.

10. Notice.

—S. 211—Notice—Opportunity to substantiate charge.

The law does not require that an opportunity should be given to a person accused under S. 211, on the basis of a false report to impugn that report nor is there any general principle of natural justice which requires the issue of a notice to the accused in such a case. False information was given to the police in a cognizable case. The investigating police officer complained against the informant under S. 211. The information was prima facie false and it would have been impossible for the informant to establish its truth. Until proceedings had been taken under S. 211 the informant never protested against mode of the investigation. The Magistrate was not uncertain as regards the regularity of the investigation;

Held, that the Magistrate could dispense with calling on the informant to show cause against the proceedings. 117 Ind. Cas. 647=7 Pat. 408=30 Cr.L.J. 842=10 P.L.T. 827=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 70.

A trial for an offence under S. 211, merely on the report of the police that the information given by the accused was false, without giving the accused an opportunity to prove the truth of the information given by him, is bad. 99 Ind. Cas. 408=31 C.W.N. 124=28 Cr.L.J. 152=A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 175.

—S. 211—Notice—Must be given before sanction is ordered.

A Magistrate does not exercise a proper discretion in ordering a complainant to be prosecuted under S. 211 I.P.C., merely on the receipt of a police report that the complaint is false. The complainant should be given a reasonable time and full opportunity to prove his case before sanction is given for his prosecution. 103 Ind. —S. 211—Practice—Original case practice that complainant should not be tried under S. 211, till disposal of his case is merely rule of safety and not based on any statute.

The practice that a complainant or first informant should not be prosecuted under S. 211 until his complaint or police case has been disposed of is not based on any statute and is merely a precautionary rule of safety in respect of a special class or criminal cases. While a prosecution under S. 211 might in certain circumstances be delayed or even set aside in accordance with this practice, the practice could per se be no ground for setting aside a conviction under S. 211 before disposal of the main case. 125 Ind. A petition to a magistrate impugning the correctness of the police report that the charge brought by the petitioner is false, and praying that the accused may be brought to trial is a complaint within the meaning of S. 4, Cr.P.C. According to the practice of the Calcutta Court, when a person institutes before the police criminal proceedings, which on inquiry are found to have no justification, before he can be prosecuted for an offence under S. 211, I.P. C., he must have an opportunity afforded him of proving his case against the accused, and if he chooses to impugn the correctness of the police inquiry by petition, he is entitled to have the person complained against tried on the charge the Police and the Magistrate consider false, or else his statement must be recorded by the magistrate on oath and his complaint dismissed under S. 203, Cr.P.C. 14 C. 707 F. ## 12. Procedure.

—S. 211—Procedure—Charge sheet by Sub-Inspector in non-cognizable offence is proper.

In a non-cognizable case filing of a charge-sheet by a Sub-Inspector with regard to an offence punishable under S. 211, Penal Code, alleging that a false complaint has been sent to him through the Village Magistrate of an offence under the Arms Act, is a proper method of bringing the case before the Court. —S. 211—Procedure—Complaint must be verified and dealt with under S. 200, Criminal P. C.

If a Magistrate is going to make a charge against a person of an offence under S. 211, Penal Code, the complaint which the Magistrate holds to be false must have been verified and dealt with by the Court according to law. For instance when the complaint is made to the Magistrate, he is bound to take cognizance of it under S. 200, Criminal P.C., and he is bound to verify the complaint in the ordinary way. The Criminal P.C. does not contemplate that when the Magistrate has received a formal complaint he need not follow the procedure set out in S. 200, Criminal P. C., but can straightway send it to the Police under S. 156 (3), Criminal P. C., and then upon issue of B summary make a complaint of a false charge. The word "may" under S. 190, Criminal P. C., does not mean that Magistrate may refuse to take cognizance of an offence upon a complaint duly made to him. A.I.R. 1939.

—Ss. 211, 193—Procedure—Magistrate declining to prosecute—District Magistrate directing prosecution—Trial Magistrate commencing prosecution—Propriety.

Once a Magistrate passes an order declining to take action under Ss. 211 and 193, Penal Code, that order can be displaced only by the order of the Appellate Court under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. The District Magistrate has no power to direct the prosecution and if the Magistrate in making the complaint allows himself to be guided by the wishes of a superior executive officer acting in that capacity, he manifestly acts improperly and contrary to law. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 145=4 B.R. 327=39 Cr.L. J. 358=173 Ind. Cas. 738.

—Ss. 211, 500—Procedure—False report by woman that her modesty was insulted by servants of complainant at his instigation.

A woman made a false report in the Police Station that a certain malguzar called her up and told his servants to pollute her (kujat karo) whereupon they dragged her away and insulted her modesty by taking off her dhoti, beating her and turning her out with her person exposed:

Held, that to attribute such conduct to a person in the respectable position of a malguzar like the non-applicant would tend to lower him in the estimation of right thinking persons of his community and would, therefore, amount to defamation.

Even though the allegations of the prosecution may, in such a case, amount to an offence under S. 211, the complainant is not precluded from proceeding under S. 500. When the complainant merely asks for redress of his personal grievance, he is entitled to do so and the accused cannot be heard to say that she prefers the more serious section because the procedure under it would be more favourable to her. —S. 211—Procedure—Great delay in filing complaint.

In charges under S. 211, great delay should not be tolerated, and such delay alone is a sufficiently good reason for refusing to proceed with the complaint; it is not in the public interest that persons should be allowed to come forward eighteen months after an alleged false charge has been made and to require a Court to enquire into such matter. Held, that the procedure was irregular as it amounted to trying jointly distinct offences against two sets of accused without any suggestion that the charges could be tried jointly, but when no prejudice has been caused to the accused by this procedure adopted by the Magistrate, the High Court will not interfere on this ground especially when it is evident that the objection has been waived in the trial Court. ### 13. Sanction.

—S. 211—Sanction of Magistrate.

The accused was given shelter for the night in the house of B. In course of the night, he attempted to take advantage of B's wife. As a result of this he was braten by B. He then went to the Police Station and brought an entirely false charge of robbery against B. The Police reported the case to be a false one and prayed for the prosecution of the accused under S. 211. The Magistrate called upon the accused to show cause why he should not be prosecuted, and the accused then filed what is known as a "narazi petition." The case then proceeded to trial, and the accused was in due course convicted:

Held, that the sanction of the Magistrate who dealt with the "narazi petition" was not necessary before the prosecution started. A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 273=43 C.W.N. 279=I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 318=40 Cr.L.J. 785=183 Ind. Cas. 384.

—S. 211—Sanction of Local Government.

Cognizance of complaint under S. 211, cannot be taken against person for action taken by him as Deputy Commissioner of Police, without the previous sanction of the Local Govt. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 242=37 Cr.L.J. 723=162 Ind. Cas. 988.

—S. 211—Sanction—Accused not party in proceedings—Court may proceed suo motu.

Court may make a complaint against a person, under S. 476 for an offence under S. 211, Penal Code if it is of opinion that the proceedings before the Court were caused to be started by that person though he was not a party to a proceeding before it. A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 321, Foll.; 37 Cal. 250 and 7 C.L.J. 375, Ref. 52 C.L.J. 149=127 Ind. Cas. 65=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 671.

—S. 211—Sanction—Report to police—Subsequent complaint to Court—Dismissed—Sanction not necessary.

P complained on 9th October 1927 to the police that certain persons committed an offence. Subsequently he lodged a complaint in the Court of a Magistrate on the same allegations on 17th October and the complaint was dismissed after inquiry. The Superintendent of Police, then sent a written complaint to the District Magistrate for the prosecution of P:

Held, the offence, if any, committed by P was complete before he went to Court with his complaint, and therefore it could not be said that the offence was committed in, or in relation to any proceeding in any Court. Sanction of the Court under S. 195 (1) (b) was therefore not necessary. A. I. R. 1924 All. 779, Foll. 111 Ind. Cas. 858=29 Cr.L.J. 938=10 L.R.A. —S. 211—Sanction—Information followed by complaint to Court—Court not investigating.

Where an information to the police is followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and the same charge, the sanction of complaint of the Court itself under S. 195 (1) (b) of the Code is necessary before the Court could take cognizance of an offence punishable under S. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, in respect of the false charge made to the police, on the ground that it was an offence committed in relation to a proceeding in Court. The fact that the complaint was not investigated by the Court, does not make any difference. 43 Cal. 1157 and 44 Cal. 650, followed. 86 Ind. —S. 211—Sanction—Complaint should be dealt with.

As a matter of judicial prudence, sanction to prosecute for making a false complaint ought not to be granted until the complaint is properly dealt with and dismissed. 75 Ind. Cas. 543=24 Cr.L.J. 954=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 115.

—S. 211—Sanction—Difference of opinion.

—S. 211—Sanction of Court—Information to police followed by complaint to Magistrate—Complaint false.

Sanction of the Court is necessary for offence under this section if the information to police is followed by complaint to Magistrate who, after investigation, finds the complaint false. 44 Cal. 650=20 C.W.N. 1347=18 Cr.L.J. 25=25 C.L.J. 59=36 Ind. Cas. 857.

—Ss. 211 and 182—Sanction—Search on suspicion.

During an investigation, the police were told that they should search certain houses and there was reason to suspect the conduct of the owners of those houses. Held, that it does not amount to a charge within the meaning of S. 211, I.P.C. Prosecution under S. 182, I.P.C., must be instituted on the sanction or the complaint of the public servant to whom the false information was given. (1915) M.W.N. 272=16 Cr.L.J. 423=28 Ind. Cas. 999.

—S. 211—Sanction to prosecute—Inquiry in granting sanction—Report of Police—Magistrate—Criminal Procedure Code Ss. 201-203.

Before granting any sanction under S. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, the Magistrate ought to observe all the formalities prescribed in Ss. 201-203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In other words he should examine the complainant and then afterwards he might refer the matter to the Police, and when the Police report is received by him then he may determine whether the complaint is true or false. That gives him jurisdiction to exercise his discretion and determine the question as to the truth or otherwise of the complaint. There is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure which compels a Magistrate in express terms to examine any or all of the witnesses whom the complainant wishes to adduce, before dismissing a complaint and granting sanction under S. 211 of the Indian Penal Code. It may be contrary to justice to do that, but whether it is so or not must depend on the circumstances of each case. 11 Cr. L. J. 338=5 Ind. Cas. 971=12 Bom. L.R. 229.

—S. 211—Sanction—Commitment without sanction.

A commitment to sessions for an offence under S. 211 on the complaint of a Public prosecutor with reference to a false charge brought by the accused in relation to a proceeding in a Court of justice, was illegal as the sanction of the Court is required and as it could not delegate the duty of filing complaint to the Public Prosecutor. A person who gives a report to the police against others, who upon the report are sent for trial, commits an offence in relation to a judicial proceeding. 19 P.R. 1917 Cr=20 P.W.R. 1917 Cr=18 Cr.L.J. 548=39 Ind. —S. 211—Cr. P. C., Ss. 195, 439—Sanction—False case—Sanction to prosecute—Complaint to Deputy Commissioner as executive officer—Order sanctioning prosecution of complainant as District Magistrate.

The Petitioner made certain allegations against an overseer of a Municipality to the Deputy Commissioner of the District. On the report of the Secretary of the Municipal Committee, the Deputy Commissioner did not take any action on the complaint. The plaintiff applied to the Sessions Judge for revision but the application was rejected. On the application of the overseer the Deputy Commissioner or District Magistrate sanctioned the prosecution of the petitioner. Held, that the order granting sanction was illegal, for, in the absence of a regular enquiry into the complaint the District Magistrate had absolutely nothing to go upon when he granted sanction. 37 P.L.R. 1909=1 Ind. —S. 212—Scope and applicability—Trial for offence under—Where can be had—Harbouring absconder—Whether offence.

S. 212 applies to the harbouring of persons who have actually committed an offence and has no application to the harbouring of persons not being criminals who merely abscond to avoid or delay a judicial investigation. For a conviction under this section, it must be established that the accused knew or had reason to believe that an offence had been committed by the person harboured. Merely knowing that the person harboured is proclaimed offender is not enough, for it does not follow from this that the accused knew that the person harboured had, in fact, committed an offence.

Under S. 212, first thing to be proved is that an offence has been committed by the person harboured. Until actually he is convicted, he is like every one else, entitled to the presumption that he is innocent. Until the Court has pronounced upon the fact, the prosecution for harbouring him would be premature. The proper course is to hold up the trial till then. A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 74=24 Pat. 604=224 Ind. —S. 212—Interpretation—No proof of accused having knowledge or reasonable belief—Conviction bad—"Know" "has reason to believe" and "offender" explained.

A person can be supposed to "know" where there is a direct appeal to his senses. Person "has reason to believe" under S. 26 if he has sufficient cause to believe the thing but not otherwise. The word "offender" used under S. 212 means a person who has contravened the provisions of any criminal law, which is punishable either with death, transportation, imprisonment or fine. Where there is neither affirmative nor any circumstantial evidence to bring home to the door of the accused that he knew or had reason to believe that the person he was harbouring was an offender within the meaning of S. 212, his conviction under S. 212 cannot be sustained. 121 Ind. —Ss. 213 and 214—'Concealing'—'Screening'—Acquittal.

The words 'concealing' and 'screening' in Ss. 213 and 214 of the Code presuppose an actual commission of an offence or the guilt of the person screened and where there is no such principal offence there can be no subsidiary offence under the two sections. 14 Mad. 400 and 12-A, 432, Rel. on.

Where a person has been tried and acquitted of the principal offence, it is not open to another Court to hold for purposes of Ss. 213 and 214 of the Code that the offence was committed. 37 Bom. 658=15 Bom. L. R. 694=14 Cr.L.J. 453=20 Ind. Cas. 613.

—S. 213—Essentials for conviction—Actual concealment or screening must be proved—Subsequent prosecution—Offence not purged.

For conviction under S. 213, actual concealment or screening even for a short time may be sufficient, but there must be some concealment or screening actually proved. If such is proved and there is further the acceptance of or attempt to obtain or agreement to accept the gratification or restitution as a consideration for the same, the offence is complete. The fact that the very same person subsequently did prosecute even to conviction would not purge the offence. 84 Ind. Cas. 649=52 Cal. 151=40 C. L. J. 278=26 Cr. L. J. 345=A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 85.

—S. 213—Ingredients of offence—Actual concealment or screening or forbearing—If necessary.

S. 213, I. P. Code, does not require that there should be an actual concealment of an offence or the screening of any person from any punishment, or the actual forbearing of taking any proceedings. It is sufficient to constitute an offence under the section, if an illegal gratification is received in consideration of a promise to conceal an offence or screen any person from legal punishment or desist from taking any proceedings. 37 Bom. 658, dist.; 52 Cal. 151, not foll. I.L.R. (1949) Bom. 334=51 Cr. L. J. 84=51 Bom. L. R. 564=3 A.I.Cr.D. 476=A.I.R. 1949 Bom. 405.

—Ss. 213 and 214—Requirements of Existence of offence—Concealed must be proved.

For a conviction under the above sections, it is essential that the screened offences should first be proved to have been committed. 23 C. 420; 37 B. 658, Foll. 46 Ind. Cas. 424 (Nag.)

—S. 214—Scope—Person tried separately for an offence under R. 81 (4), Defence of India Rules, and under S. 214, Penal Code, for concealing offence under R. 81 (4)—Conviction in both trials—On appeal, conviction under Rule 81 (4) set aside—Revision against conviction under S. 214—Held conviction under S. 214 must be set aside as Court was bound to assume that no offence under R. 81 (4) was committed—Criminal P. C., Section 403.

A Court dealing with a charge under S. 214, Penal Code, is not entitled to question or review the correctness of the decision of another Court acquitting a person charged with having committed the offence which the person before it is charged with having attempted to conceal.

The accused was tried and convicted for an offence under R. 81 (4), Defence of India Rules, for exporting certain goods without permit. He was also tried separately for offering a gift to conceal the above offence, under S. 214, Penal Code, and was convicted.

On appeal the conviction under R. 81 (4) was set aside and the accused was acquitted. The accused therefore filed a revision against his conviction under S. 214:

Held, the Court was bound to proceed on the assumption that no offence under R. 81 (4) Defence of India Rules, was committed. The accused could not therefore be said to have committed an offence under S. 214, Penal Code, and his conviction should be set aside. A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 101=12 B. R. 650=226 Ind. —S. 214—Illegal gratification — Offer of money for not proceeding with compoundable offence.

The accused in breach of forest rules worked two saw-pits and when discovered by the Forest Officer offered him Rs. 5 and asked him not to proceed with the case. Held, that the offer of Rs. 5 did not amount to an offence under S. 214, I.P.C., and the fact that the Forest Officer was not authorised to compound the offence, did not make any difference if the offence was compoundable. 6 L.B.R. 48=13 Cr.L.J. 574=15 Ind.Cas. 990.

1. Actual or suspected thief.

—S. 215—Scope of—Actual thief, if excluded from liability under the section.

There is nothing in S. 215 of the Penal Code which excludes an actual thief from liability under it, if in addition to committing theft, he also tries to realise money by a promise to return the stolen articles. Such an act which is independent of the act of stealing constitutes different offence. Hence an actual thief or a person suspected to be the thief can be convicted under S. 215, I.P. Code. I.L.R. (1947) All. 469=1947 A.L.J. 48=1947 A.L.W. 33=1947 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1=230 Ind. Cas. 420=1947 O.W.N. (H.C.) 19=1947 A.Cr.C. 21 (2)=48 Cr.L.J. 640=A.I.R. 1947 A. 225 (F.B.).

—Ss. 215, 379—Actual thief also taking gratification.

Obiter.—It cannot be said that S. 215 does not apply to the actual thief because he is under no legal obligation to bring himself to justice. All that the section says is that the person who takes the gratification shall be punished, unless he uses all means in his power to bring the actual thief to justice. No doubt the wording of the section makes it apply in the majority of cases to offenders other than the actual thief. But cases may well occur, where a thief having stolen cattle without a view to obtain money by restoring them to the owner, may offer to restore them for a gratification merely because he knows that detection is becoming imminent. Hence there is nothing illegal in the double conviction of the actual thief who also takes a gratification, (Ss. 215 and 379 Penal Code.).

But it is only in exceptional circumstances that a more severe sentence should be passed for both offences than would have been inflicted for the theft alone. A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 340=1941 Rang.L.R. 582=43 Cr.L.J. 426=198 Ind. Cas. 766.

A person suspected of theft may, if the prosecution fails to prove the fact of theft by him, be convicted under S. 215. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 500=39 Cr.L.J. 887=19 P.L.T. 776=4 B.R. 818=17 Pat. 677=177 Ind. Cas. 344.

—S. 215—Actual thief.

S. 215 is not intended to apply to the actual thief, but to some one who takes any gratification on account of helping the owner to recover the stolen property without at the same time using all the means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended and convicted of the offence. 23 All. 81; 26 M.L.J. 598, Foll. 88 Ind. ## —S. 215—The thief himself offering to recover—Guilty of.

Where a bullock was stolen and the accused took money in order to bring back the animal which he knew to be stolen and where he took no steps to bring the thieves to justice:

—S. 215—Actual thief—Defence — Accused being the thief—No defence.

It is no defence to a charge under S. 215 for the accused to say that he was the actual thief of the stolen property. The accused must take steps to bring the offender to justice. 110 Ind. Cas. 592=22 S.L.R. 450=23 Cr.L.J. 736=A.I.R. 1928 Sind 168.

—Ss. 215 and 378—Actual thief—Applicability—Double conviction.

S. 215 does not apply to the thief himself and therefore when a man is convicted of theft, he ought not to be convicted also under S. 215. A double conviction and sentence under Ss. 379 and 215, I.P.C., is unsustainable. 2 U.B.R. (1914) 43=16 Cr.L.J. 421=28 Ind. Cas. 997.

—S. 215—Actual thief—Applicability.

S. 215, does not apply to the thief, but to one who, in league with him gets some gratification for helping the owner to recover the stolen property without using, at the same time, all the means in his power to cause the thief to be apprehended and convicted of the offence. 23 A. 81=1900 A.W.N. 205.

2. Attempt.

—Ss. 215, 511—Attempt.

In the substantive offence under S. 215, Penal Code, there is a giver and a taker: in an attempt to commit the offence there is merely a proposal or an attempt to enter into an agreement to take from a person who is being induced to give and the person making such a proposal can be convicted of an attempt to commit an offence under S. 215. A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 205=1941 Rang. L.R. 395=43 Cr.L.J. 57=196 Ind. Cas. 714.

—S. 215—Attempt—Proposal to recover for consideration is an attempt.

In order to be guilty of an attempt of the commission of the offence under S. 215, mere proposal to the owner of the lost property to recover it on the receipt of a certain amount on the condition that the thieves should not be prosecuted is sufficient. 76 Ind. Cas. 191=20 A.L.J. 927=45 All. 159=4 L.R.A. Cr. 1=25 Cr.L.J. 127=A.I.R. 1923 All. 83.

3. Essential ingredients.

—S. 215—Essentials of offence under.

Section 215 aims primarily at professional trackers and other persons who, being usually in league with thieves or well aware of their proceedings, obtain money for recovery of stolen property without making any effort to bring the offenders to justice. The section has three essential ingredients: first, taking or agreeing consenting to take any gratification under pretence or on account of helping any person to recover any movable property; secondly, that the owner of such property must have been deprived of it by an offence punishable under the Penal Code; and thirdly, that the person in question, having taken or agreed to take the gratification, must not have used all means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended and convicted of the offence. The section has nothing to do with any illegal gratification.

The complainant's bullock disappeared one day. The circumstances showed that the bullock might have strayed. The accused offered to recover the bullock if certain amount was paid by the complainant. The complainant refused to accept it and the accused did nothing further:

Held, that the second ingredient of S. 215 referred to above was not present and the accused could not be convicted. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 548=7 B.R. 23=41 Cr.L.J. 902=190 Ind. Cas. 382.

—S. 215—Essential ingredients—Knowledge of offender.

Knowledge of the offender is not a necessary ingredient of an offence under S. 215. It may well be that a person who receives money for discovering stolen property, may in the course of his investigations, obtain information which, if followed up, would lead to the apprehension of the offender. If he withholds that information from the proper authorities, it is obvious that it cannot be said that he used his best endeavour to cause the offender to be apprehended. A.I.R. 1938 All. 440=1938 A.L.J. 531=1 L.R. (1938) All. 681=1938 A.W.R. 362=39 Cr.L.J. 808=176 Ind. Cas. 785.

—S. 215—Essential ingredients—Benefit of doubt.

The important point under S. 215, is that the offender should know the criminal and screen him. It is not an offence to take money from another in order to help him to find stolen property and to convict the thief. In order that the act should come within the scope of S. 215, there should be evidence first, that property has been stolen; second, that the accused knew the criminal, and third, that he has failed to use all means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended. When some of these important points appear to be open to reasonable doubt, the accused should be given the benefit of the doubt. A.I.R. 1935 Sind 105=36 Cr.L.J. 1464=158 Ind. Cas. 498.

—S. 215—Essential ingredients.

A conviction under S. 215 cannot be sustained in the absence of evidence to show that the loss of the movable property was by means of the commission of an offence punishable under the I.P.C. A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 241=11 Pat. 392=13 P.L.T. 732=33 Cr.L.J. 709=139 Ind. Cas. 76.

—S. 215—Essential ingredients.

Where the accused merely undertakes to endeavour to trace out and restore the lost property on payment of some remuneration, upon this circumstance alone the accused cannot be said to be guilty of an offence under S. 215, unless over and above that, the prosecution proves that the property has been lost by the commission of an offence and that the accused is endeavouring to screen the offender from justice and is not using all means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended and convicted of the offence which he has committed. A.I.R. 1931 All. 710=32 Cr.L.J. 1072=1932 A.L.J. 103=54 All. 55=133 Ind. Cas. 800.

—S. 215—Ingredients.

It is necessary, in order to maintain a conviction under S. 215, to prove that the complainant had been deprived of his property by an offence punishable under the Code. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 157=32 P.L.R. 38=32 Cr.L.J. 729=131 Ind. Cas. 369.

—S. 215—Essential ingredients.

To constitute an offence under S. 215, it must be proved that a person is deprived of movable property by an offence punishable under the Code. 11 Cr.L.J. 295=6 Ind. Cas. 250.

—S. 215—Essential ingredients—Cow lost in grazing ground—Taking money and promising to return cow, if offence.

For an offence under S. 215, it is necessary that the movable property in question should have been taken out of the possession of some person by means of an offence punishable under the Code. Where therefore the accused promised for a sum of Rs. 12 to return the complainant's cow lost while grazing in a field, but neither returned the cow nor the money, the accused is not guilty under S. 215, I.P.C. as there was no proof that any offence had been committed in respect of the cow. 9 P.R. 1915 Cr.=16 Cr.L.J. 541=28 P.L.R. 1916=29 Ind. Cas. 669.

4. Graver and lesser offence.

—S. 215—Graver and lesser offence—Ransom had, but property not returned—Conviction for major offence under S. 420—Tenability.

When the accused person has taken a ransom for the restoration of stolen property and fails to return that property to the person, who has paid him the ransom, he can be convicted under S. 420, I.P.C., and the conviction need not be confined to one under S. 215, I.P.C.

Per Robinson, C.J.—The general rule which should guide the Courts is to convict of and punish for the most serious offence that is established, provided of course, that the accused has been charged with and has had an opportunity of meeting the charge of that offence. There is no ground for holding that the Legislature meant to confine the Court to that offence when the facts proved amount to another and more serious offence. 73 Ind. Cas. 145=1 Bur. L.J. 179=11 L.B.R. 422=24 Cr.L.J. 529=A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 37.

5. Onus.

—S. 215—Offence under—Onus.

In the case of a prosecution for an offence under S. 215 of the Penal Code, it is not for the prosecution to prove the negative that the accused did not use all his power to cause the offender to be apprehended. It is for the defence to establish the positive fact that they did all in their power to cause the offender to be apprehended. I.L.R. (1947) All. 469=1947 A.L.J. 48=1947 A.L.W. 33=1947 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1=230 Ind. Cas. 420=1947 O.W.N. (H.C.) 19=1947 A.Cr.C. 21 (2)=48 Cr.L.J. 640=A.I.R. 1947 A. 225 (F.B.).

—S. 215—Benefit of exception—Onus.

Screening or attempting to screen the offender is not a necessary ingredient under S. 215.

The proviso to S. 215 is only an exception to the liability under the section and once the elements of an offence under S. 215 have been established by evidence the onus of proving that the person charged is entitled to the benefit of the exception, is on the defence. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 599=37 C.W.N. 360=34 Cr.L.J. 1015=145 Ind. Cas. 569.

—S. 215—Onus.

In a charge under S. 215, the burden of proving that the accused had used all the means in their power to bring about the apprehension of the offenders is upon them. A.I.R. 1938 All. 440=1938 A.L.J. 531=I.L.R. (1938) All. 681=1938 A.W.R. 362=39 Cr.L.J. 808=176 Ind. Cas. 785.

—S. 215—Benefit of exception—Onus.

Once the elements of an offence under S. 215 have been established by evidence, the onus of proving that the person charged is entitled to the benefit of the exception is on the defence particularly so where there has been a spontaneous demand by the accused of money in circumstances indicating an intention not to bring the offender to justice. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 590=4 B.R. 818=39 Cr.L.J. 887=19 P.L.T. 776=17 Pat. 677=177 Ind. Cas. 344.

6. Scope and applicability.

—S. 215—Scope and applicability.

Person's cow missing from place where it was let loose for grazing—Accused approaching him some months later and promising to find out culprit for consideration and taking money—No evidence that cow was stolen—Accused cannot be convicted under S. 215. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 138=7 B.R. 22=41 Cr.L.J. 922=190 Ind. Cas. 387.

—S. 215—Scope and applicability—Bullock straying at night disappearing—Person taking money and showing owner bullock tied up by somebody in jungle—It, guilty under.

The word 'deprive' in S. 215, cannot be interpreted in a narrow sense to mean "taken out of possession of." To deprive a person of any article may be either to take it away from him or to prevent him from getting possession of it if he would have done so in the normal course of events. Where, therefore, in a case, a bullock strays at night and disappears and is subsequently found to be tied up to a tree in the jungle by an unknown person, the person who tied it up in the jungle is depriving the owner of possession of it because normally a bullock which went away would return to its owner in the ordinary course and by being tied up it would be prevented from so doing. In such a case, the Court is entitled quite fairly to make the inference that the bullock had either been stolen or misappropriated dishonestly by some person. In either case, some offence is committed and that offence prevented the owner from retaining or obtaining possession of his property so that he was deprived of possession of it. A person, therefore, who takes money for pointing out the bullock so tied up in the jungle, is guilty of an offence under S. 215. A.I.R. 1938 All. 440=1938 A.L.J. 531=I.L.R. (1938) All. 681=39 Cr.L.J. 808=1938 A.W.R. 362=176 Ind. Cas. 785.

—S. 215—Scope and applicability—Accused demanding amount to get back stolen cycle.

Where a cycle of the complainant is stolen and the accused accosts him and tells him that if he gives certain amount, his cycle can be recovered, the very terms in which the complainant is approached implies that there was expected to be no questions asked as to the actual offender and no attempt at his apprehension or conviction. The accused is, therefore, guilty under S. 215, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1938 Pat 590=4 B.R. 818=30 Cr. L. J. 887=19 P.L.T. 776=17 Pat. 677=177 Ind. Cas. 344.

—S. 215 — Scope and applicability — Stray donkey.

Where the evidence shows that the accused took a sum of money and gave a receipt in the presence of witnesses under promise of return of a donkey that had gone astray and though it may be that the donkey he had to return was a donkey that was stolen, there is nothing upon the record to show that it was so, and the charge shows that the donkey was a stray donkey and not a stolen donkey, no offence under S. 215, is disclosed and a conviction under S. 215 is not maintainable even if the accused pleads guilty. A.I.R. 1936 Sind 145=30 Sind L. R. 96=37 Cr.L.J. 1038 (1)=164 Ind. Cas. 934.

—S. 215—Scope and applicability—Punishment of trafficking in crime does not apply to the thief—Failure to trace, not knowing the offender—No offence.

The primary aim of the section is to punish all trafficking in crime, by which a person knowing that property has been obtained by crime, and knowing the criminal, makes a profit out of the crime, while screening the offender from justice. The section is not intended to apply to the actual thief, but to some one who, being in league with the thief, receives some gratification on account of helping the owner to recover stolen property, without at the same time using all the means in his power to cause the thief to be apprehended and convicted of his offence.

Where the accused was offered a certain sum to trace out and to restore certain horses which had been lost to their rightful owner and which work he undertook but failed and there was no evidence that the accused ever knew who the offender was:

—Ss. 215 and 411 — Scope and applicability — Stolen property—Agreement with owner for return.

If a person in possession of stolen property enters into an agreement with the owner for the restoration of such property without helping to bring the thief to justice cannot be convicted of an offence under S. 215, but only of an offence under S. 411 of the Code, 23 A. 81, Fol. 26 M.L.J. 598=15 Cr.L.J. 471=24 Ind.Cas. 351.

—Ss. 216, 40—Applicability.

Person harboured wanted for offence punishable with imprisonment of less than one year—Harbourn cannot be convicted under S. 216—Definition of 'offence' in S. 40 does not affect S. 216. A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 51=1942 O.W.N. 682=44 Cr.L.J. 90=1942 A.W.R.C.C. 353 (2)=18 Luck. 617=203 Ind. Cas. 499.

—S. 216—Applicability — Knowledge subsequent to harbouring—Harbouring first without knowledge—Assisting evasion of apprehension after knowledge—Offence committed.

A person was charged for harbouring a proclaimed offender. There was no satisfactory evidence on record to show that the accused knew that the person harboured was a proclaimed offender till Police officer informed him to that effect. But after the police officer had so informed him, the accused gave false information in order to assist evading apprehension and eventually the offender was found in his house:

Held, that the false information given after having been informed that person was a proclaimed offender is sufficient to bring the accused within the purview of S. 216. 1930 Cr.C. 73=11 L.L.J. 377=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 99.

—S. 216—Applicability—Harbouring an escaped person.

Harbouring or concealing a person for whose arrest an order has been passed by a public servant to enforce a punishment already passed is an offence under S. 216. 11 C.L.J. 109=11 Cr.L.J. 95=5 Ind. Cas. 311.

—S. 216—Essentials.

A person cannot be convicted under S. 216, I.P.C. unless it is proved by legal evidence that an order for the arrest to the person alleged to have been harboured was made. It must also be proved that the accused knew of the order and harboured the person concerned with such knowledge. A proclamation issued under S. 87, Criminal P.C., reciting that a warrant of arrest had been issued, is neither a legal evidence of the issue of the warrant nor is it equivalent to notice of its contents either to the public or even to inhabitants of the place where it is published. There can be no proof of knowledge without proof of the issue of warrant of arrest. A.I.R. 1944 P.C. 54=48 C.W.N. 477=1944 M.W.N. 440=57 L.W. 374=10 B.R. 667=45 Cr.L.J. 721=1944 A.L.J. 388=1941 A.W.R.P.C. 40=46 Bom. L.R. 844=(1944) 1 M.L.J. 515=71 I.A. 83=I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 237=214 Ind. Cas. 1=I.L.R. (1944) Kar. P.C. 273 (P.C.).

—S. 216—Essentials—Mere finding of absconder in house—Issue of proclamation.

The mere fact that an absconder is found in the house of another person is not sufficient to involve the owner of the house in an offence under S. 216, unless all other elements of the offence are established. Among other things, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the knowledge of the accused person as required by S. 216, and here, too, the fact that a proclamation had been made sometime before the arrest is not conclusive evidence of the knowledge of the so-called offender. A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 19=40 P.L.R. 934=40 Cr. L. J. 243 (1)=179 Ind. Cas. 651.

—S. 216—Essential—Legal warrant of arrest—Intention to prevent apprehension.

In order to convict a person under S. 216, it must be shown that the warrant to arrest the alleged offender was a legal one, and that the harbouring was with the intention of preventing him from being apprehended. 108 Ind. Cas. 27=52 Bom. 151=30 Bom. L.R. 70=29 Cr.L.J. 317=9 A.I.Cr.R. 563=A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 184.

—S. 216—Essentials—Harboured person need not be found guilty—Order of apprehension sufficient—Acquittal, a consideration in sentence.

It is not an essential ingredient of the offence under S. 216 that the person harboured should be found guilty. It is enough to show that against the person harboured order of apprehension had been issued for an offence, that is to say, for an offence alleged against him. Although, however, the acquittal of the person harboured cannot affect the legality of the conviction, it may well be taken into consideration in awarding sentence. 113 Ind. Cas. 545=52 Mad. 73=1 M. Cr. C. 253=1928 M.W.N. 588=28 M.L.W. 403=30 Cr.L.J. 183=12 A.I.Cr.R. 51=A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1147=55 M.L.J. 503.

—S. 216—Essentials.

—S. 216—Essentials—Proclaimed offence—Publication in Criminal Intelligence Gazette—Whether sufficient notice—Offender adopting false name—Inference—Harbouring—Proof of.

The knowledge of the harbourer cannot be presumed from a mere publication of the name of the offender in the Cr. Intelligence Gazette nor can it be inferred from the offenders adopting false name and the harbourer misdescribing him as his relation.

To establish an offence under S. 216 it must be proved that (1) public servant ordered the arrest of a certain person, (2) that the harbourer knew of such order and (3) did harbour with the intention of preventing his apprehension. 1 O.L.J. 30=15 Cr.L.J. 349=23 Ind. Cas. 701.

—S. 216—Giving meal—By itself no offence.

The mere giving of a meal to those who are proclaimed offenders is not an offence within the meaning of S. 216 because in the absence of any evidence to that effect it cannot be held that the intention of the appellants was to prevent them from being apprehended. 84 Ind. Cas. 1050=6 L.L.J. 481=26 Cr.L.J. 410=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 289.

—S. 216—Interpretation and scope—Word "knowing" meaning of.

"Knowing" means something more than "having reason to believe." Knowing implies a fact which can be known and imports knowledge of something actual by means of authentic or authoritative information although it does not necessarily import actual evidence of the senses. A person cannot "know" of a warrant of arrest, unless it has actually been issued but he may have reason to believe that a warrant has been issued, though it may not have been issued. Hence, there can be no proof of knowledge without proof of the issue of the warrant of arrest. A.I.R. 1944 P.C. 54=48 C.W.N. 477=57 L.W. 374=1044 M.W.N. 440=10 B.R. 667=45 Cr.L.J. 721=1044 A.L.J. 388=1044 A.W.R.P.C. 40=46 Bom. L.R. 844=(1944) 1 M.L.J. 515=71 I.A. 83=I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 237=214 Ind. Cas. 1=I.L.R. (1944) Kar. P.C. 273 (P.C.)

—S. 216—Interpretation and scope.

"Harbour" includes the supplying a person with shelter, food, drink, money, clothes, arms, ammunition or means of conveyance, or the assisting a person in any way to avoid apprehension. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 294=36 Cr.L.J. 1384 (2)=158 Ind. Cas. 500.

—S. 216—"Harbour"—Meaning of.

The word 'harbour' in S. 216 must be construed liberally. The person at whose instance harbouring is effected commits the offence, although the house in which the harboured person stays may belong to a different person. 14 Bom. L.R. 583=13 Cr.L.J. 701=16 Ind. Cas. 509.

—S. 216—Interpretation—Assisting evasion of apprehension is harbouring—No time limit.

The word "harbour" does not only mean to provide shelter, food and clothing but includes "the assisting of a person in any way to evade apprehension." There is no time limit for the duration of this offence, which is complete as soon as it is committed. It is immaterial whether the evasion lasts six hours or six years, 73 Ind. Cas. 691=5 L.L.J. 329=24 Cr.L.J. 659=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 223.

—S. 216—Interpretation and scope—"Order a person to be apprehended for an offence," meaning of—"Punishable," meaning of.

It is an offence under S. 216. to harbour or conceal a person for whose apprehension an order has been passed by a public servant even when such apprehension is sought to be made not for the purpose of trying him for an offence that he may have committed, but for enforcing a punishment already inflicted on him for having committed the offence. The expression "order a person to be apprehended for an offence" in S. 216, means only that the offence is the cause sine qua non of the apprehension. The word "punishable" in the latter part of the section is used merely for the purpose of describing particular classes of offences in relation to which the punishment indicated in the section is to be inflicted; and it does not indicate that in a particular case the offence must not have been punished. 5 Ind. Cas. 311=11 Cr.L.J. 95=11 C.L.J. 109.

—S. 216-A—Abetment of dacoity—What is.

A person is not a dacoit, in respect of whom the Court is satisfied that his connection with the gang is limited to certain acts, which in themselves do not amount to dacoity or abetment thereof though the acts may be punishable under S. 216-A. 13 O.C. 235=11 Cr.L.J. 551=7 Ind. Cas. 1006.

—S. 216-A — Applicability — Harboursing dacoits—S. 216-A, I. P. C. and not S. 110, Cr. P. Code applies.

The legislature did not desire that the provisions of S. 110, Cr. P. Code should be applied to a person suspected of harbouring dacoits, the intention being that such a man should be dealt with under the substantive portion of the Penal Code, i. e., S. 216-A. 116 Ind. Cas. 804=1929 A.L.J. 93=51 All. 459=11 A.I.Cr.R. 250=10 L.R.A.Cr. 34=30 Cr.L.J. 694=A.I.R. 1928 All. 682.

—S. 216-A—Charge under of harbouring person alleged to have committed dacoity—Acquittal of persons harboured of substantive offence of dacoity — Effect — Persons who harboured them—If can be held guilty.

When persons charged with the substantive offence of dacoity or robbery have been acquitted of that offence another person who is said to have intended to screen them from legal punishment in respect of that offence cannot be held guilty of harbouring the alleged offenders under S. 216-A. I. P. Code. I.L.R. (1047) Mad. 793=1947 M.W.N. 51=229 Ind. Cas. 167=48 Cr.L.J. 287=60 L.W. 326=A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 303=(1946) 2 M.L.J. 482.

—S. 216-A — Essentials — Not Dacoits in general—Connection with a particular dacoity essential.

It is not enough to attract the penalty of the section that a person should be harbouring dacoits in general but the section renders it penal to harbour persons who intend to commit a particular dacoity. 87 Ind. Cas. 916=19 S.L.R. 111=26 Cr.L.J. 1028=A.I.R. 1925 Sind 295.

—S. 216-B.—Applicability—Mere knowledge of whereabouts of offender.

The word 'harbour' in S. 216-B, includes the supplying a person with shelter, food, drink, money, clothes, arms, ammunition or means of conveyance or the assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension. Mere knowledge of the whereabouts of an offender does not amount to harbouring him.

The petitioner's son was charged with an offence under S. 17 (2), Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, in April 1932 and the said son absconded and could not be found. The petitioner was appointed a Special Police Officer and was directed to produce his son at the Police Station. The son was produced and the petitioner was convicted under S. 212:

Held, that merely from this fact, he was not guilty under S. 216-B. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 550=39 C.W.N. 317=157 Ind. Cas. 1030 (1).

—S. 216-B—Assistance, what is—Every kind of assistance—Warning of approach of Police.

The words "assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension" are general and will include every kind of assistance.

The accused's brother was wanted by the Police; on the appearance of the police to apprehend his brother, the accused gave a sign to him by which he took warning and escaped.

Held: that the accused was guilty though to a very slight extent. 25 All. 261 Diss. 26 C.L.J. 241, Foll. 89 Ind. Cas. 152=12 O.L.J. 270=2 O.W.N. 260=26 Cr.L.J. 1288=A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 423.

—S. 216-B—"Harbouring," — Assistance in any manner to evade apprehension—Warning of the approach of Police—An offence.

S. 216 (B) lays down that the word "harbour" includes the assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension. The idea that it, nevertheless, does not include giving false information to the Police with a view to assisting an outlaw to escape appears little short of a negation of the law, and one might almost say that such a view constitutes a direct encouragement to defeat the forces of law and order in dealing with what can only be described as a menace to the public. A warning given to a proclaimed offender of the approach of the police is an offence under S. 216-B, I.P.C. 72 Ind. Cas. 949=24 Cr.L.J. 485 (Lah.).

—S. 216-B—"Harbouring"—False information—Warning.

Giving false information to police about proclaimed offender or warning him of approach of police in order to enable him to escape is offence. 25 All. 261, Dissented: 21 C.W.N. 1062 and 72 Ind. Cas. 949, Foll. 94 Ind. Cas. 131=7 Lah. 30=

In order to constitute harbouring, the words 'Assisting a person in any way' need not be limited to methods Ejusdem Generis with supplying other necessary things. 26 C.L.J. 141=21 C.W.N. 1062=18 Cr.L.J. 731=40 Ind. Cas. 731.

—S. 216-B—"Harbouring"—Telling lies and thereby inducing the Police to desist in their attempt—"Assisting a person to evade apprehension."

The words "assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension" must be meant to point to some method ejusdem generis with those specified in the section and to not include "lying" as to the whereabouts of the accused with a view to induce the Police to desist in their attempt. 1903 A.W.N. 29=25 A. 261.

—S. 216-B—Lending pony.

—Ss. 217 and 411—Applicability and scope—Police retaining property found in search—Offence not proved—Procedure for disposal—Failure to report—Effect.

A police constable retaining for himself a piece of gold found in a search for stolen property but not proved to be part of the stolen property, without reporting his possession to his superior officers under S. 523, Cr.P.C. is guilty of an offence under S. 217, I.P.C. 16 Cr. —Ss. 217, 218—Essentials of offence.

For a conviction under Ss. 217 and 218, it is not necessary as in the case of a charge under S. 201 to establish that an offence has actually been committed. It would be sufficient if the circumstances are such that a reasonable inference can be drawn therefrom that the accused had a certain knowledge at the time he did the act, namely, a knowledge that he was likely by his act to save a person from legal punishment. Whether he had that knowledge or not can be inferred only from the circumstances of the case. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 850=33 Cr.L.J. 657=139 Ind. Cas. 89.

—S. 217—Sanction—Proceedings started before sanction—Validity—Sanction given subsequently—Sufficiency.

The very nature of the offence defined in S. 217, I. P. Code, makes it clear that sanction for prosecution for the offence under the section is clearly required and the sanction has to be obtained before proceedings are started. Sanction given or obtained after the institution of the proceeding is not sufficient to validate the proceedings. 224 Ind. Cas. 422=47 Cr.L.J. 623=A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 29.

—S. 218—Applicability—Patwari filing false statement on oath—N duty to prepare—Liable under S. 193 and not under S. 218.

Where a patwari, in order to save the trouble of taking down the evidence, was directed by a revenue Court to prepare a written statement according to his papers and file it, and where the patwari made such a statement on oath, the statement cannot be called a public document which it was his duty to prepare, and therefore on proof of patwari's statement being false, he could not be prosecuted for an offence under S. 218 but under S. 193, Penal Code, for giving false evidence: 5 All. 553, Foll. 118 Ind. Cas. 232=1929 A.L.J. 512=10 L.R.A.Cr. 90=30 Cr.L.J. 874=12 A.I.Cr.R. 22=1929 Cr.C. 1=A.I.R. 1929 All. 374.

—S. 218—Applicability—Intentionally framing an incorrect public record by a public servant.

A Police Inspector was charged with having falsely entered in his diary that certain cartmen told him that they were not beaten by dacoits, Held, that this was not of itself sufficient for a conviction under S. 218, I.P.C. Where a Police Inspector without endeavouring to enquire into the truth of the entry in his diary destroyed certain records which falsified it and substituted fresh note books, he must be deemed to have framed an incorrect public record intentionally. (1911) 2 M.W.N. 44=12 Cr.L.J. 455=11 Ind. Cas. 799.

—Ss. 218, 220, 193 and 211—Effect of no complaint by magistrate—Accused charged under these sections in respect of proceeding under S. 109 Criminal P. C.—No complaint by Magistrate—Charges under Ss. 193, 211, held should be quashed—Complaint held not necessary for charges, under Ss. 218, 220. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 802=39 P.L.R. 1011=39 Cr.L.J. 122=172 Ind. Cas. 373.

—S. 218—Essentials—Recording statements not made—Destroying those made—Recording circumstances not transpired.

A conviction under S. 218 can be maintained only where it is established that during the investigation the accused recorded statements which were not made before him or destroyed the statements that were actually made or made a record of circumstances which, as a matter of fact, did not transpire before him.

Where a Sub-Inspector recorded what was stated before him and he recorded what he actually witnessed, and where it was possible that he had a motive for recording the statement made before him knowing them to be false:

—S. 218—Gist of offence under.

Under S. 218, I.P.C., the question is not whether the accused will be able to accomplish the object he had in view, but whether he made the entries in question with the intention to cause or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause loss and injury. The fact that the accused conceived a foolish plan of injuring in retaliation of the disgrace inflicted upon him by his arrest, is no ground for exculpating him from the offence which he has committed. A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 595=1938 M.W.N. 345=47 L.W. 542=(1938) 1 M. L. J. 876=39 Cr.L.J. 875=177 Ind. Cas. 489.

—S. 218—Guilt of offender—Immaterial—Sufficient if offence is brought to notice officially.

For the purposes of a charge under S. 218 the actual guilt or otherwise of the offender alleged as sought to be screened from punishment is immaterial. It is quite sufficient that the commission of a cognizable offence has been brought to the notice of the accused officially and that in order to screen the offender the accused prepared the record in a manner which he knew to be incorrect. 86 Ind. Cas. 661=7 L.L.J. 331=26 Cr.L.J. 837=26 P.L.R. 594=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 461.

The word 'charged' in Sec. 218 is not restricted to the narrow meaning of enjoined by a special provision of the law. 123 Ind. Cas. 841=31 Cr.L.J. 584=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 159.

—S. 218—Offence under—Police officer—Report knowingly incorrect—Intent to injure—Guilty.

Where a Sub-Inspector of Police makes a report knowing it to be incorrect and with intent to cause injury to the complainant his act is clearly covered by S. 218. The word "charged" in S. 218 is not restricted to the narrow meaning of enjoined by a special provision of the law. 123 Ind. Cas. 841=31 Cr.L.J. 584=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 159.

—S. 218—Patwari.

A patwari is responsible for the accuracy of all entries in the khasra and must satisfy himself of the facts by inquiries from the persons concerned as well as by the field inspections. Where in making an entry in the khasra he must have known of a transfer of the crop by the Civil Court Amin, and that a particular person was in possession, and fails to enter his name, he is making a wrong entry knowing at the time that the entry he was making was wrong. When such entry is made with a criminal intent to cause loss to the person, offence under S. 218, is committed. A.I.R. 1935 All. 968=1935 A.L.J. 1083=1935 A.W.R. 1066=37 Cr.L.J. 131=159 Ind.Cas. 531.

—S. 218—Proof of actual commission of offence—If necessary for conviction.

For a conviction under S. 218, it is not necessary as in the case of a charge under S. 201 to establish that an offence has actually been committed. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 850=33 Cr.L.J. 657=139 Ind. Cas. 89.

—S. 218—"Record"—Pay sheet drawn up by Railway Officer.

A pay sheet drawn by a Railway Officer is a record within S. 218 of the Code. 1 O.L.J. 209=15 Cr. L. J. 502=24 Ind. Cas. 590.

—S. 218—Scope—Stifling of truth and perversion of the course of justice—Intention to screen—If necessary.

Per Pratt, J.—S. 218 is much wider than S. 201 and embraces cases other than those in which a principal offender is screened. But even as to such cases the words of the section imply that an offence has been committed. The gist of the section is the stifling of truth and the perversion of the course of justice in cases where an offence has been committed. It is not necessary even to prove the intention to screen any particular person. It is sufficient that he knows it to be likely that justice will not be executed and that some one will escape punishment for the offence; 3 Cal. 412 Foll.

Per Fawcett, J.—It is doubtful whether it is unnecessary under S. 218 to prove an intention to screen any particular person. 63 Ind. Cas. 145=23 Bom. L. R. 823=22 Cr. L. J. 609=A. I. R. 1921 Bom. 115.

—S. 219—Essentials.

—Ss. 219, 218—The essence of the offence under S. 219, is (1) that there must be a judicial proceeding, that is a proceeding actually commenced and pending, wherein a party claims relief against another and invites the decision of the Court in regard thereto and not a fictitious one where there is no party litigating and (2) that there must be the making of a real report or a real pronouncement of an order, verdict or decision. Where there is no judicial proceeding at all, everything being a make-believe, there is no making of a report nor a pronouncement of an order, verdict or decision except the making of an entry of such a pronouncement having been made when in fact it was not so made. The accused, a Village-Munsif, charged with preparation of the register of suits filed in his Court and framing it in such a manner which he knew to be incorrect, i.e., making it appear that a certain suit has been filed, cannot be convicted under S. 219, I. P. C., but under S. 218. A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 595=1938 M.W.N. 345=47 L.W. 542=(1938) 1 M.L.J. 876=39 Cr. L. J. 875=177 Ind. Cas. 489.

—S. 219—'Maliciously'—Meaning.

A Village Munsif passing a decree contrary to law and without jurisdiction is guilty of maliciously pronouncing a decision under S. 219, I.P.C. 15 A. L. J. 106=18 Cr. L. J. 527=39 Ind. Cas. 495.

—S. 220—Applicability — Contrary to law—Police officer hand-cutting and rough-handling complainant when latter did not refuse to submit to any arrest—Malicious intention to disgrace complainant on false pretext—Offence.

It is not permissible for a police officer in making an arrest to resort to confining or rough handling, when the person to be arrested submits to the custody, i. e., to the restraint which is necessary and sufficient for the purpose of the arrest. An arrest is complete when there is submission to the custody by word or act, and the police officer cannot under S. 46, Cr. P. Code, confine any person unless that person refuses to submit to custody and it becomes necessary to confine him. Where it is proved that the police officers had no intention at all of arresting a person in a legal and proper manner, and that the person to be arrested was not asked to submit to arrest and did not refuse to submit to custody, but the police officer hand-cuffed and rough-handled him deliberately and maliciously to disgrace him on a false pretext, knowing it to be false and baseless, and told the complainant to shut up when he asked for the reason for such treatment, it must be held that the appellants acted contrary to law, knowing that those acts were contrary to law, and must be held guilty of the offence under S. 220, I.P. Code. 49 Cr. L. J. 178=A.I.R. 1948 Sind 67.

—S. 220—Keeping person in confinement.

The keeping of a person arrested on suspicion of his having committed an offence, in confinement even by a person who had legal authority to do so would be an offence under S. 220, if in the exercise of that authority a person kept another in confinement knowing that in so doing he was acting contrary to law. A.I.R. 1943 F. C. 18=47 C.W.N.F.C. 5=1943 M.W.N. 315=22 Pat. 349=24 P.L.T. 139=(1943) 2 M. L. J. 62=1 L.R. (1943) Kar.F.C. 2 Sup.=44 Cr. L. J. 466=9 B. R. 310=(1943) 5 F. C. R. 7=206 Ind. Cas. 232 (F.C).

—S. 220—Scope and operation.

Liability under S. 220 being one under general law is not affected by the imposition of any liability under S. 61 (c) of Bihar and Orissa Excise Act. A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 229=22 Pat. 76.

—S. 220—Magistrate usurping jurisdiction.

Where the Legislature has provided that an offence because of its gravity or because of the special knowledge required in its trial, shall be tried by a Sessions Court, a First Class Magistrate, however proper be his motives, should not himself remove that case, as it were from its proper Court, the Court of Session, and try it himself by merely altering the numbers of the sections, for, after all the numbers of the sections are mere labels, and what is to be looked at is the allegation of the facts. Where serious offences, such as one under S. 220 against the Sub-Inspector, are to be tried, it is desirable from all points of view, of the public, Police force, the officer concerned, and justice, that these most serious cases should so far as the law permits, be committed to the Court of Session, even if a First Class Magistrate had power to try them.

The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try an offence under S. 220. It is not a case of irregularity such as is referred to in S. 531, Criminal P. C. but is an illegality comparable to those irregularities under S. 530, Criminal P. C., which make proceedings void. A.I.R. 1941 Sind 36=42 Cr. L. J. 460=193 Ind. Cas. 454.

—Ss. 220, 347, 342 — Police Sub-Inspector wrongfully confining persons on charge of gambling and extorting money from them by putting them under fear of prosecution.

The words "corruptly and maliciously" in S. 220, are wide enough to cover confinement for the purpose of extortion. Where a Police Sub-Inspector wrongfully confines certain persons on charges of gambling in futures and extorts money from them by putting them in fear of being challaned in Court upon offences which he knew to be false, the offence falls under S. 220 and not under S. 347 or S. 342 and is triable only by the Court of Session. A.I.R. 1941 Sind 36=42 Cr. L. J. 460=193 Ind. Cas. 454.

—Ss. 220, 348—Joint trial of accused under S. 220 and confederate under S. 348 read with S. 114.

Where the Magistrate by usurping jurisdiction convicts an accused for an offence falling under S. 220, and his confederate under S. 348 read with S. 114 the High Court while quashing the proceedings and committing the case to the Court of Session cannot order that no further proceedings be taken against the confederate merely because he has served a part of his sentence. It is in the interests of all concerned that the confederate and the accused should be tried together for offences which are all part of the same transaction. A.I.R. 1941 Sind 36=42 Cr. L. J. 460=193 Ind. Cas. 454.

—Ss. 220, 218, 193 and 211—Complaint by Court—If necessary.

The offences under Ss. 218 and 220, do not fall within the purview of S. 195, Criminal P.C. These offences are distinct from offences under Ss. 193 and 211, I.P.C. For the purpose of obtaining a conviction under Ss. 218 and 220, I.P.C., the prosecution had to prove facts which were distinct from the facts constituting offences under Ss. 193 and 211, I.P.C. Therefore, proceedings under Ss. 218 and 220, I.P.C., could be continued without a complaint by the Court which dealt with the proceedings under S. 109, Criminal P. C. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 802=39 P.L.R. 1011=39 Cr. L. J. 122=172 Ind. Cas. 373.

—Ss. 220, 323, 504—Abusive words—Police Constable doing duty—Cr.P.C., S. 57—Bombay District Police Act, S. 53.

A Police constable asked the complainant not to create any disturbance on a public road. Upon the complainant's declining to do so, he demanded his name and address which were not given. The Constable, thereupon abused, arrested and dragged the complainant to the Police Chowky and detained him there till his name and address were ascertained. The Police Constable, was on these facts, convicted of offences under Ss. 223 and 504. Held, that the convictions under Ss. 220 and 323 could not stand, but that the accused was rightly convicted under S. 504 as he was found to have addressed the complainant as "Soowar." (1903) 5 Bom. L.R. 597.

—S. 220—Sentence—Considerations—Acts of police officer done under orders of superior officer—Relevancy.

The circumstance that the accused police officers in acting contrary to law were doing so under the instructions of their superior officers and that they had no personal grudge of their own against the complainant who was illegally confined, hand-cuffed and rough-handled, is no defence to the charge under S. 220, I. P. Code, but can be taken into consideration on the question of sentence, i. e., in reduction of the sentence. 49 Cr.L.J. 178=A.I.R. 1948 Sind 67.

—S. 221—Applicability—Private and public duties—Legal obligation wanting—No offence.

The duties of a chowkidar as a private citizen ought not to be confounded with his duties as a public servant. Where the legal obligation of the chowkidar to arrest or detain has not been established, there is no dereliction from his statutory duty within the purview of S. 221; and the chowkidar cannot be penalized for intentionally suffering a pilferer to escape from his detention. 120 Ind.Cas. 205=11 L.R.A.Cr. 8=31 Cr.L.J. 12=1930 A.L.J. 242=13 A.I.Cr.R. 126=1929 Cr. C. 663=A.I.R. 1929 All. 935.

—S. 221—Murder committed in presence of public servants—Murderer allowed to escape.

Where the applicants were legally bound to arrest a man who had committed murder in their presence and they omitted to apprehend him and did it intentionally, and there was nothing involuntary about it, they are legally guilty of an offence under S. 221. Their motive may not have been that they wanted the man to escape, but that they were afraid of getting hurt, but motive must always be distinguished from intention. A.I.R. 1936 All. 651=(1936) A.L.J. 1006=37 Cr.L.J. 1019=1936 A.W.R. 819=164 Ind. Cas. 702.

—S. 222—Intentionally aiding—Preparation to escape—Facilitating attempt—Attempt frustrated—Immaterial.

The fact that the acts proved do not amount to an attempt to escape but constitute only a preparation to escape does not exculpate the accused because the offence of which he has been charged and convicted is the offence of intentionally aiding the prisoners in attempting to escape. It cannot be gainsaid that when the accused does acts done in order to facilitate the attempt of the prisoners to escape and that he does thereby facilitate an attempt to escape he can be properly convicted under S. 222 and it makes no difference that the attempt was in fact frustrated by other circumstances. 119 Ind.

Cas. 762=30 Cr. L. J. 1103=1929 Cr. C. 190=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 631.

—S. 223—Applicability—Negligently suffering prisoner to escape—Conducting prisoner by night.

The only charge against an accused under S. 223, I.P.C., was that he marched the prisoner after sunset, contrary to the Magistrate's direction and the prisoner escaped; Held, that no offence under the section is committed. 6 M.L.T. 247=10 Cr.L.J. 293=3 Ind. Cas. 460.

—S. 223—Applicability—Police men suffering prisoner to escape—Negligence.

The accused, policemen, were conveying a dangerous prisoner in a camel-cart, having hand-cuffed him doubly and having tied a rope round his waist. The prisoner was allowed to get down in order to answer the call of nature whereupon he gave false alarm crying 'Snake' and broke away from the constables. Held, that the constables were not guilty of an offence under S. 223. 15 A.L.J. 883=19 Cr.L.J. 783=43 Ind. Cas. 110.

—S. 223—Criminal Procedure Code, S. 54—Applicability—Escape from lawful custody—Chowkidar.

The Police of an adjoining Native State arrested in British territory one B suspected of having committed an offence in the Native State, and made him over to one D a Chowkidar, from whose custody he escaped. Held, that neither the original arrest nor the subsequent custody by the Chowkidar were lawful, and, therefore, that the Chowkidar could not properly be convicted under S. 223 of the Penal Code. 3 A. 60=27 C. 366; 23 A. 266, ref. to. 1907 A.W.N. 94=29 A. 377. But see 29 A. 575.

—S. 223—Essentials.

Where a jail Warder was charged under S. 223, that he, being a public servant charged with the duty of keeping in confinement certain prisoners who were under trial, negligently suffered these prisoners to escape from confinement:

Held, that under the provisions of S. 223, it must be shown that there was negligence on the part of the accused and that the escape of the prisoners was the consequence of this negligence. Before the Court can decide the question of negligence it must know what the duties of the accused were and unless they are known exactly, it is impossible to find whether he was negligent in the performance of his duties and whether the escape of the prisoners was due to that negligence:

Held also that taking all the circumstances into account and in view of unsatisfactory state of the evidence, which was utterly insufficient to decide whether the warder was in fact negligent in the performance of his duties, he could not be convicted. (1936) 164 Ind. Cas. 265=40 C.W.N. 61=37 Cr.L.J. 918.

—S. 223—Essentials—Negligence—Nature of.

To constitute the offence it must be shown that escape was a natural and probable consequence of the negligence. 11 P.R. 1919 Cr.=20 Cr.L.J. 350=50 Ind. Cas. 830.

—S. 223—Essentials—Escape of prisoner—Negligence—Natural and probable consequence of.

For conviction under S. 223 it must be shown not only that the accused was guilty of negligence but that the escape was at least the natural and probable consequence of his negligence. A, a Police Officer in charge of a thana, left the thana with orders to the writer (head constable) to make arrangements for the escort of certain prisoners. The Head Constable made arrangements and sent the prisoners off. From the custody of the escorts the prisoners escaped; Held, the escape of the prisoners was not the natural and probable consequence of A's negligence. 7 A.L.J. 907=11 Cr.L.J. 478=7 Ind. Cas. 411.

—Ss. 223 and 353—Applicability—Escape from lawful custody—Warrant not signed by anybody—Unnecessary hurt.

As the constable arrested the accused under the cover of a warrant which was bad in law not being signed by the Magistrate issuing it the escape was not illegal. As to other who in effecting the accused's rescue caused unnecessary hurt to the constable they were guilty under S. 323, I.P.C. (1918) P.H.C.C. 285=5 Pat. L. W. 226=19 Cr.L.J. 1000=48 Ind. —Ss. 224, 225 and 147—Applicability and scope—Officer of M thana requesting help from officer of B thana for arrest of accused within B thana and by written order authorising constables to effect arrest—S constable of B thana accompanying constables of M thana and all constables arresting accused—Accused rescued by his party while in actual custody of S constable—Accused held guilty under S. 224 and his rescuers under Ss. 225/147.

In connection with a dacoity case committed within the jurisdiction of M thana the officer-in-charge of that thana had to effect the arrest of the accused residing within B thana. Having previously sent a requisition for help to the officer-in-charge of B thana, the officer of M thana gave a command certificate to three of his constables directing them to arrest the accused mentioning the particulars of the case. This certificate was endorsed by the Assistant Sub-Inspector of B thana to the effect that S. a constable and one dafadar should help the constables of M thana in effecting the arrest of the accused. All the constables and the dafadar went to the house of the accused and duly arrested him. While they were taking him back to the officer-in-charge, the accused shouted for help whereupon the whole party of accused attacked the party of constables and succeeded in rescuing the accused who at that particular time was in the actual charge of S constable of B thana.

Held, that the officer-in-charge of M thana being fully empowered to go into the jurisdiction of B thana under S. 58, Criminal P. C., could have himself arrested the accused. By virtue of his written order the constables of M thana were properly authorised to arrest the accused. Under S. 54 (1) ninthly, Criminal P. C., they were thus fully justified in making the arrest. At the time of the rescue the accused was, therefore, in lawful custody. The fact that S constable of B thana at the time of the rescue was the constable actually holding the accused was not material. The accused was, therefore, guilty under S. 224, Penal Code, and his rescuers were guilty under Ss. 225/147. A.I.R. 1946 Cal. 314=223 Ind. Cas. 96=47 Cr.L.J. 352.

—S. 224—Applicability and scope—Accused arrested by state Police within State for offence committed in State escaping from their custody within British India.

The detention contemplated by S. 224, should necessarily be for any of the offences mentioned in the I.P.C. or under any local or special law applicable to British India. The mere fact that a State adapts the Code of British India as its own does not justify the conclusion that those Codes can be treated as original Codes. This being so a State subject who is arrested within the boundaries of a State by the State Police for any offence committed in that State, cannot be proceeded against under S. 224, if he escapes from the custody of the State Police when he is within the British territory even if that State has adapted the I.P.C. as its own Code. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 44=41 Cr.L.J. 378=I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 570=186 Ind. Cas. 795.

—Ss. 224, 225 and 353—Applicability and scope.

Sub-Inspector not present on spot asking constable to bring certain person to thana—Use of force by constable—Scuffle following and brickbats thrown:

Held, that the person resenting cannot be convicted under S. 224, nor can persons assisting him be convicted under S. 225 and S. 353. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 361=21 P.L.T. 144=6 B.R. 835=41 Cr.L.J. 742=189 Ind. Cas. 539.

—Ss. 224, 186—Applicability—Accused wanted for offence under S. 186—Arrest without warrant—Accused escaping.

Section 54, Criminal P.C., authorises the arrest without warrant firstly of a person concerned in cognizable offence or credibly alleged to have been so concerned. This clause does not apply where the offence for which the accused was wanted was that of obstructing a public officer under S. 186, I.P.C., which is non-cognisable. The section authorises arrest thirdly of any person who has been proclaimed as an offender under this Code and where it is not proved that a proclamation had been issued in respect of an accused wanted under S. 186, I.P.C., his arrest without warrant, is illegal and the accused commits no offence if he escapes from the custody of the constable who arrests him. —S. 224—Applicability—Proceedings under S. 109, Cr.P. Code pending.

A person who escapes from Police custody while proceedings under S. 109, Cr. P. Code, are pending against him commits an offence under S. 225-B and not under S. 224. 77 Ind. Cas. 814=18 S.L.R. 301=25 Cr.L.J. 462=A.I.R. 1925 Sind 193.

—S. 224—Applicability—Surrender after escape—Does not cure the offence.

The fact that accused surrendered himself on the following morning is immaterial. Where the accused was rescued by a number of his friends from the lawful custody of the process-server and he took advantage of this and disappeared, and thus got out of the way of the process-server. Held, the offence was committed. A man legally arrested for an offence must submit to be tried and dealt with according to law. If he gains his liberty before he is delivered by due course of law, he commits the offence of escape. 72 Ind. Cas. 67=11 L.B.R. 449=2 Bur. L.J. 19=24 Cr.L.J. 307=A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 133.

—Ss. 224, 225, 353—Applicability—Resistance to lawful apprehension of one's self—Warrant—Endorsement by initials—Arrest—Resistance.

An endorsement of a warrant of arrest by affixing the initials of the endorser is not invalid. Arrest by the endorsee is valid and resistance to it is an offence under the Penal Code. (1901) 5 C.W.N. 447.

—S. 224—Applicability—Escape from lawful custody—Chowkidar's custody.

A chowkidar is not a police officer within S. 59 of the Cr.P.C. and escape from his custody is no offence as such custody is not lawful. 41 Cal. 17=17 C.W.N. 978=14 Cr.L.J. 494=20 Ind. Cas. 750.

—S. 224—Applicability—Escape from custody—Judgment debtor allowed to go by decree-holder and process-server.

A person arrested in execution of a civil process was allowed to go by the decree-holder and the process-server who had arrested him; held, no offence of escape from lawful custody was committed by the judgment-debtor. 18 M. 401 and 31 M. 271, Dist. 8 M.L.T. 286=(1910) M.W.N. 592=11 Cr.L.J. 477=7 Ind. Cas. 392.

—Ss. 224, 333 and 34—Applicability—Arrest by Chaukidar—Attempt to sell stolen property—Rescue—No common intention.

S. 34 does not apply. 8 Cr. L. R. 61 All.

—Ss. 224, 411—Applicability—Escape from lawful custody—Actual thief arrested by private person while in possession of stolen property not an escape from lawful custody under S. 224, S. 411 not applicable to thief himself.

Semble: That if the owner of the bullock had himself been entitled to make the arrest, the subsequent custody of the prisoner by the Chaukidar would have been a lawful custody. 1901 A.W.N. 77=23 A. 266.

2. Consent or negligence of custodian.

—S. 224—Consent or neglect of custodian.

It has been long established that even when the escape is effected by the consent, or the neglect of the person that kept the prisoner in custody, the latter is no less guilty as neither such illegal consent nor neglect absolves the prisoner from the duty of submitting to the judgment of the law. 31 Mad. 271, 25 M.L.T. 290, Foll. 72 Ind. Cas. 67=11 L.B.R. 449=2 Bur.L.J. 19=24 Cr.L.J. 307=A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 133.

—S. 224—Consent or negligence of custodian—Escape from lawful custody.

A man legally arrested for an offence must submit to be tried and dealt with according to law. If he gains his liberty before he is delivered by due course of law, he commits the offence of "escape" even when the escape is effected by the consent or neglect of the person that kept the prisoner in custody. 18 M. 401 Foll. (1908) 18 M.L.J. 540=31 M. 271.

3. Essentials.

—S. 224—Applicability—Essentials to be proved—Apprehension not proved to be lawful—Custody not lawful—Accused snatched away by others and rescued—Offence—"Intentionally escapes"—Effect of.

Where the prosecution fails to establish that the apprehension of the accused was a lawful one, or that the custody in which he was kept was one in which he could be said to have been lawfully detained, S. 224, I.P.Code cannot apply. To escape or to attempt to escape from such custody is not an offence under S. 224, I.P. Code.

Where the accused has not offered any resistance or obstruction to his apprehension by the Police, but submitted to the police arrest, and subsequently he was snatched away in his hand-cuffed condition by others who broke the hand-cuffs, it cannot be said that he offered resistance or that he "intentionally" escaped from custody; and he is not guilty of an offence under S. 224. I.L.R. (1949) Cut. 623=A.I.R. 1950 Orissa 62=51 Cr.L.J. 679.

—Ss. 224, 225, 342—Essentials—Resistance to execution of illegal warrant.

For a conviction under Ss. 224 and 225, it is essential that the prosecution should show that the apprehension or arrest made or attempted was lawful in every way. A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 171=13 P.L.T. 135=33 Cr.L.J. 706=138 Ind. Cas. 844.

—S. 224—Essentials.

To sustain a charge under S. 224 or S. 225 the arrest and detention should be legal. 81 Ind. Cas. 312=18 M.L.W. 818=25 Cr. L. J. 792=A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 384.

—S. 224—Essentials—Custody—Must be lawful.

—S. 224—Essentials—Confinement in stocks—Escape.

Where a Govandla ryot escaped from the custody of the village servants who were directed to imprison him in stocks for using abusive language under S. 10 of Madras Regulation XI of 1816. Held, that the Lower Courts ought to have considered whether the accused was liable to punishment in stocks or not and on that ground to find whether the custody is legal or not. 18 M.L.T. 310=16 Cr.L. J. 672=30 Ind. Cas. 656.

4. Interpretation.

—S. 224—Interpretation—"For any such offence" and "charged" explained—Escape from lawful arrest on charge subsequently not proved—Still guilty.

An accused person legally arrested for an offence must submit to be tried and dealt with according to law. If he gains his liberty before he is delivered by due course of law he commits the offence of escaping from lawful custody under S. 224; 18 Mad. 401 and 31 Mad. 271, Foll.

The words "for any such offence" in S. 224 mean for any offence with which a person is charged or of which he has been convicted.

The word "charged" is used in the popular sense as implying inculcation of an alleged offence as distinguished from a charge formulated after trial. It would therefore be an offence for a man to escape from custody after he has been lawfully arrested on a charge of having committed an offence although he may not have been subsequently convicted of such latter offence. 28 Cal. 253 Foll. 100 Ind. Cas. 988=29 Bom. L.R. 168=28 Cr.L. J. 380=7 A.I.Cr.R. 485=A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 96.

—S. 224—Interpretation—"obstruction"—Assemblage of crowd with lathis—Arrest abandoned through fear—No obstruction.

Where when a Sub-Inspector of Police was about to arrest an accused, a crowd carrying lathis began to assemble and the Sub-Inspector considered their appearance so formidable that he desisted from his intention of arresting the accused;

Held, that the persons forming the crowd cannot be said to have caused illegal obstruction within the meaning of S. 224 or S. 225 nor was the person to be arrested guilty under S. 224. 86 Ind. Cas. 350=23 A.L. J. 32=6 L.R. A.Cr. 95=26 Cr. L. J. 766=A.I.R. 1925 All. 308.

5. Legality of warrant.

—Ss. 224, 225 and 353—Legality of warrant.

Warrant signed by another Magistrate during absence on duty of Magistrate issuing warrant—Resistance to execution;

Held, that the warrant was legal and that his resistance constituted an offence under Ss. 224, 225 and 353, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 175=13 P.L.T. 167=33 Cr. L. J. 297=142 Ind. Cas. 192.

—S. 224—Legality of warrant—Sheristadar signing warrant "by order"—Legality presumed.

Where a Sheristadar signed the warrant "by order" it was held that the statement that appeared on the face of the warrant that the Sheristadar signed "by order" can be presumed to be true and that in the absence of anything to suggest to the contrary it was held that he was actually the officer appointed by the Court to sign processes as required by rule 24 (2) of O. XXI, C.P.C. 6 C.W.N. 845, Dist. 73 Ind. Cas. 328=37 C.L. J. 331=27 C.W.N. 1042=24 Cr. L. J. 584=A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 584.

—S. 224—Legality of warrant—Arrest—Warrant not addressed by name—Form.

An arrest is not illegal because the warrant for arrest is not addressed by name to the bailiff of the Court. 15 Cr. L. J. 576=(1914) M.W.N. 498=25 Ind. Cas. 328.

—S. 224—Explanation—Sentence.

There is nothing in the explanation to S. 224, to require that a sentence of imprisonment under S. 224 must be made to run consecutively to a sentence imposed for the main offence of which the accused has been convicted. A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 462=36 Bom. L.R. 963=36 Cr. L. J. 282 (1)=153 Ind. Cas. 34.

7. Miscellaneous.

—S. 224—Miscellaneous.

The mere fact that the Police Officer put his hands on the accused's shoulders or caught hold of his wrist without the least intimation to him as to what offence he had been arrested for, can hardly amount to the accused being charged with any offence under S. 224, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 81=1939 O.W.N. 63=40 Cr. L. J. 221=1939 A.W.R. 39=14 Luck. 409=179 Ind. Cas. 498.

—S. 225—Civil warrant not addressed to bailiff by name—Arrest—Legality.

A civil warrant not addressed to a particular bailiff by name is not invalid and the rescuing of a person arrested under such warrant is an offence under S. 225 of the Code. 1 L.W. 500=15 Cr. L. J. 439=24 Ind. Cas. 175.

—S. 225—Attempt to arrest not legal.

No offence is committed under S. 225 where the attempt to arrest is not lawful. 5 L.B.R. 21=10 Cr.L.J. 118=2 Ind. Cas. 619.

—S. 225—Assault on Police constable.

Accused assaulting Police constable in uniform—Matter should not be treated lightly. [Conviction under under Ss. 225 and 353 was altered to S. 323.] A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 95=I.L.R. (1939) Nag. 488=1939 N. L. J. 101=40 Cr. L. J. 905=184 Ind. Cas. 231.

—S. 225—Intention—Burden of Proof—Intention to prevent arrest and lawful power to arrest must be proved by prosecution.

Intention is an important ingredient in an offence under S. 225, Indian Penal Code, as under almost every criminal offence and it is for the prosecution to establish with what intention the accused acted. In the absence of any clear evidence or finding to the contrary, the accused are entitled to the benefit of the doubt as to their actual intentions. Unless it is proved by the evidence on record that intention of the accused was to prevent the arrest, or that the pursuers were lawfully empowered to arrest him; persons stopping them from doing so are not liable under S. 225, Indian Penal Code. 64 Ind. Cas. 371=19 P.L.R. 1922=23 Cr. L. J. 3=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 73.

—S. 225—Lawful custody.

—S. 225—Lawful custody — Arrest by Forest officer without warrant—S. 225.

Under S. 63 a Forest Officer cannot arrest, without warrant, persons committing an offence under S. 29 and his custody is not a lawful custody under S. 63 within the meaning of S. 225, Penal Code. 102 Ind. Cas. 498=54 Cal 296=28 Cr. L. J. 562=A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 516.

—S. 225—Offering resistance—With a view to prevent arrest amounts to.

Threatening a Sub-Inspector of Excise in order to prevent him from making an arrest amounts to offering a resistance and illegal obstruction to lawful apprehension of an offender, but where the obstruction has not been such as to constitute a serious offence the case does not call for heavy punishment. 123 Ind. Cas. 68=31 Cr.L. J. 465=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 344.

—Ss. 225, 323—Rescue from the custody of Chaukidar.

An accused in a dacoity case was released by certain persons from the custody of a village chaukidar and in the course thereof they attacked the chaukidar with lathis inflicting a slight injury to him. The rescued accused was not a proclaimed offender nor was there a written order of Sub-Inspector directing the chaukidar to arrest the accused:

Held, that the custody of the chaukidar being illegal the rescuers were not guilty under S. 225, I.P.C.

Held also, that these persons had a right to defend the accused under S. 97, I.P.C., and were not guilty even under S. 323, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 696=42 Cr. L. J. 199=7 B.R. 236=22 P.L.T. 80=191 Ind. Cas. 590.

On the way to the Police station three persons seized the Chaukidar, and the thief made his escape. Held, that the rescuers were rightly convicted under S. 225. The arrest of the thief having been in the first instance lawful, the requirements of S. 37 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were sufficiently complied with by the person arresting sending him to the Police station in the custody of the Chaukidar, 11 M. 480, Foll; 23 A 266 ref. to. #### —S. 225-A—Legal custody — Arrest without warrant under S. 55, Cr. Pro. Code—Confinement of arrested person—Legal custody.

Section 55, Criminal P. C., is independent of Chap. 8 of the Code, which includes S. 110, although proceedings under that chapter might follow an arrest under S. 55 as a natural sequence and a police officer can therefore arrest or cause to be arrested without warrant or an order of a Magistrate any person who comes within provisions of S. 55. And where such person is arrested without warrant or order of Magistrate, confinement of such person is legal custody within the meaning of S. 225-A. 124 Ind. ##### 1. Arrest.

—S. 225-B—Arrest by oral declaration—Legality.

An arrest by mere oral declaration is not a legal arrest and consequently a person so arrested cannot be convicted under S. 225-B, of the Penal Code. 113 Ind. Cas. 288=30 Cr.L.J. 128.

—S. 225-B—Arrest—What constitutes.

Mere words do not constitute an arrest. There must be touch, confinement or else acquiescence. 9 S. L. R. 141=17 Cr.L.J. 87=32 Ind. Cas. 679.

2. Defective warrant.

—S. 225-B—Defective warrant—Warrant under O. 21, R. 8, Civil P. C., in execution, not bearing seal of the Court—Resistance to it if offence.

In order that an offence under S. 225-B, I. P. C., be constituted, the apprehension must be lawful, that is to say, the warrant on which the arrest was made must have been executed with all due formalities of law. Where the warrant was one issued under O. 21, R. 8, Civil P. C., requiring the seal of the Court under O. 21, R. 24 (2) and was not so sealed, the resistance to the arrest is not an offence under S. 225-B. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 320=1939 Rang. L. R. 445=40 Cr.L.J. 845=183 Ind. Cas. 791.

—S. 225-B—Defective warrant — Warrant of arrest under C. P. Tenancy Act defective.

A warrant of arrest issued under the provisions of C. P. Land Revenue Act must bear the seal of the Court which issues it. The warrant not bearing such a seal has therefore no force and the arrest under it is illegal, and in breaking arrest the person commits no offence and cannot be convicted under S. 225-B, I.P.C., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 45=20 N.L.J. 219=39 Cr.L.J. 118=172 Ind. Cas. 335.

—S. 225-B—Defective warrant.

When a Court exercises the extraordinary powers under S. 136, Civil P. C., the provisions of the section must be strictly observed, and the warrant of arrest must be endorsed to the District Court in which it is to be executed. Hence, a warrant sent to the Munsif is defective, and where a person arrested under such warrant escapes, he cannot be convicted under S. 225-B. I. P. C. A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 603=18 P.L.T. 760=4 B.R. 85=39 Cr.L.J. 2=171 Ind. Cas. 894.

—S. 225-B—Defective warrant—Release of person arrested under defective warrant.

A warrant from a Court for arrest must be issued to some person for execution, and where no name or description of that person is given in the warrant, the person arrested can have no knowledge that the person who presents the warrant is legally authorised to do so. It is of no consequence that the person who is arrested is unable to read the warrant and has no knowledge as to whether the warrant is or is not properly filled up, but it is the duty of the Court to issue a warrant in proper form, and where a warrant is incomplete the subsequent release of a person arrested under such a warrant is not an offence under S. 225-B. A.I.R. 1932 All. 692=(1932) A.L.J. 1073=34 Cr.L.J. 455=55 A. 109=142 Ind. Cas. 887.

—Ss. 225-B, 353—Defective warrant.

Where a warrant for arrest was issued to the central nazir but the latter without endorsing it sent it to a registration clerk and the peons sent by the clerk to arrest the judgment-debtor were assaulted by the judgment-debtor ;

Held, that as there was no proper delegation of authority by the nazir, there was no lawful apprehension and the judgment-debtor could not be convicted under S. 225-B. A.I.R. 1932 All. 227=(1932) A.L.J. 179=23 Cr.L.J. 887=140 Ind. Cas. 118.

—S. 225-B—Defective warrant—Omission of seal—Resistance no offence.

The omission of the seal of the Court on a warrant renders it void and a person offering resistance to apprehension on such a warrant does not commit an offence under S. 225-B. 107 Ind. Cas. 601=9 Lah. 424=9 A.I.Cr.R. 488=30 P.L.R. 660=29 Cr.L.J. 265=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 332.

3. Escape.

—S. 225-B—Escape.

District Munsif, in pursuance of High Courts order, issuing general order that warrants of arrest should thereafter be signed by head clerk—Successor of District Munsif issuing such warrant signed by head clerk—Warrant, held legal and escape therefrom an offence under S. 225-B. A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 536=1938 M.W.N. 316=(1938) 1 M.L.J. 667=47 L.W. 536=39 Cr.L.J. 685=176 Ind. Cas. 138.

—S. 225-B.—Escape—Mere refusal to go with bailiff.

Though once a man has been apprehended and effects his escape, it is immaterial whether at the time he used any force or whether the bailiff was actually present or temporarily absent, a mere refusal to go with the bailiff and sitting down is not an attempt to escape. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 128=34 P.L.R. 668=34 Cr.L.J. 632=143 Ind. Cas. 649 (2).

—S. 225-B—Escape—Judgment-debtor's refusal to follow process-server.

Where a judgment-debtor who was left in the custody of the process-server on his payment of detention batta for two days, did not follow the process-server but made an escape though he appeared in Court on the third day :

Held, that the offence was of escape from lawful custody and that the fact that there was no order in writing for detention was immaterial but the offence being only a technical one, a nominal punishment would meet the ends of justice. A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 278 (279)=1932 M.W.N. 1222=34 Cr.L.J. 284=142 Ind. Cas. 242 (1).

—S. 225-B—Escape—Illegal order —Detention in Court under—Escape—No offence.

A Court passed order under O. 38, R. 3, as follows: "Surety is discharged. Judgment-debtor will remain arrested unless he can produce another surety". He was also orally directed not to leave the Court. In defiance to the order he left the Court. On being prosecuted under S. 225-B:

Held, as no order to find fresh security was passed the order was illegal and the judgment-debtor could not be convicted. 116 Ind. Cas. 709=30 P.L.R. 147=30 Cr.L.J. 663=13 A.I.Cr.R. 94=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 163.

—S. 225-B—Escape—From lawful custody—
Not obstruction—But offence under S. 225-B.

Escape from lawful custody of a process server does not amount to obstruction to a public servant in the discharge of his duties, nor does the act of a person in running away and shutting himself up in a room and refusing to come out constitute voluntary "obstruction", but it constitutes an offence under S. 225-B. 2 B.H.C. 128 (F.B.). Foll. 9 L.L.J. 408=8 A.I.Cr.R. 443=103 Ind. Cas. 833=28 Cr.L.J. 753=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 708.

—S. 225-B—Escape—Arrest not justified.

Where an arrest of a person by the police is not justified by law, and the person escapes from police custody, he is not guilty under S. 225-B. 89 Ind. Cas. 400=26 Cr.L.J. 1360=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 623.

—S. 225-B — Escape — Proceedings under
Cr. P. C., S. 109 pending.

A person who escapes from Police custody while proceedings under S. 109, Criminal P. C. are pending against him commits an offence under S. 225-B and not under S. 224. 77 Ind. Cas. 814=25 Cr.L.J. 462=18 S.L.R. 301=A.I.R. 1925 Sind 193.

under some other provision of law—Not sufficient.

When a constable arrests a man and tells him expressly that he is doing so under a particular authority, which he claims to have, to arrest him and if such arrest is resisted, it will be for the prosecution afterwards to establish that the constable who arrested the man had power to act under the authority that he claimed to have. It is not sufficient for the prosecution afterwards to say that the constable had authority under some other provision of law. A man is entitled to know when a constable is arresting him, under what power he is acting and if he (constable) states that he acts under certain power, which the man knows he has not got, he is entitled to object to arrest and to escape from custody when he is arrested. 81 Ind. —S. 225-B—Escape—Confined in jail for failure to furnish security for good behaviour.

Where a person escapes from a jail in which he was confined under a warrant under S. 128 of the Cr. Pro. Code, by reason of his having failed to find security to be of good behaviour, he commits an offence under S. 225-B and not S. 224, Penal Code. 74 All. 67, Foll. 43 All. 185=A.I.R. 1921 All. 281.

—S. 225-B—Escape—Escape with consent of custodian.

'Escape' in S. 225-B includes also escape which is effected with the consent of the custodian. 18 Mad. 401 and 31 Mad. 271, Foll. 8 M.L.T. 286, not Foll. 25 M.L.T. 290=(1919) M.W.N. 695=9 L.W. 216=20 Cr.L.J. 208=49 Ind. Cas. 656.

—S. 225-B—Escape—Escape on the day of hearing.

The police instituted proceedings under S. 110, Cr. P. C., against the accused and produced him before a Second Class Magistrate who passed an order of remand for his production before a First Class Magistrate. On the day of hearing the accused while on his way to Court escaped from custody. Held, that the escape of the accused was not an offence under S. 225-B as the Second Class Magistrate had no power to order remand under S. 167, Cr. P. Code. 39 Mad. 928=18 Cr.L.J. 403=38 Ind. Cas. 963.

Where the Collector proceeds against the defaulter direct for recovery of arrears of revenue instead of the lambardar, the arrest of the defaulter is legal and his escape from custody is punishable under S. 225-B. 32 All. 116=7 A.L.J. 21=11 Cr.L.J. 137=5 Ind. Cas. 449.

4. Essentials.

—S. 225-B—Essentials—Intentional resistance.

An offence under S. 225-B is committed only when the resistance to arrest is intentional and that can only be when the person who makes the resistance knows that he is being or is about to be arrested. 107 Ind. Cas. 772=29 Cr.L.J. 286=9 A.I. Cr. R. 499=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 324.

—S. 225-B—Essentials—Mere absconding not sufficient—Some overt act of resistance or obstruction necessary.

In order to justify a conviction of a person under S. 225-B, for the offence of intentionally offering resistance or illegal obstruction to the lawful apprehension of himself something more than mere absconding is required; there must be an overt act of resistance or obstruction; some active opposition by show of force. 74 Ind. Cas. 960=1 Rang. 218=2 Bur. L.J. 246=24 Cr.L.J. 848=A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 231.

—S. 225-B—Essentials.

A conviction under the S. 225 (3), I.P.C., requires proof of (1) the production by officer of the warrant of arrest and (2) the arrest or the attempt to arrest a person. 10 Cr.L.R. 3.

5. Obstruction, rescue, resistance.

—S. 225-B—Obstructing arrest of a boy under 7 years—No offence.

Obstruction to the lawful apprehension of a boy under 7 years of age by the police for theft is no offence, for under S. 82, I.P.C., nothing is an offence which is done by a child under 7 years of age. (1915) M.W.N. 543=16 Cr.L.J. 602=30 Ind. Cas. 154.

—S. 225-B—Obstruction to officer—What constitutes.

An officer with a warrant of arrest must show the warrant to the person to be arrested and if the officer is obstructed in his duty, the person can be convicted under S. 225-B more than an evasion of arrest, as to constitute an offence under S. 225-B some, thing or that the accused would not like to be arrested or that a fight would ensue on attempt to arrest, must be proved.

The accused should not be summarily tried in such a serious case. 38 All. 506=14 A.L.J. 731=17 Cr.L.J. 413=35 Ind. Cas. 973.

—S. 225-B—Rescue.

A person cannot rescue himself from the lawful custody, and the conviction against him under S. 225-B cannot stand. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 479=6 B.R. 391=41 Cr.L.J. 381=186 Ind. Cas. 784.

—S. 225-B—Rescue—Search warrant to find a woman unlawfully detained in a house—Woman found in a field and taken custody of—Rescue from custody—No offence.

A search warrant was issued to a police officer to search a house of a particular person to find out a woman who was alleged to be unlawfully detained. She was not found in that house but was found in a field and was taken custody of. Accused rescued her from police custody:

Held, accused cannot be convicted under Ss. 225-B and 353 as they did not rescue the woman from lawful custody within the meaning of S. 225-B, the woman not being taken custody of in accordance with the warrant. 113 Ind. Cas. 578=30 Cr.L.J. 175=11 P.L.T. 31=12 A.I.Cr.R. 24=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 550.

—S. 225-B—Rescuing or obstruction in apprehension.

A person who obstructs a police officer in the apprehension of a deserter from the army or rescues or attempts to rescue him from the custody of the officer is guilty of an offence punishable under S. 225-B, of the Penal Code.

—Ss. 225-B, 353—Rescue from lawful custody—Legality of warrant—Civil Procedure Code, Ss. 82, 174.

An Assistant Collector issued warrants for the arrest of certain witnesses, for whose attendance summonses had been issued, but who had not appeared in obedience thereto. The serving officer had not been able to effect personal service of the summonses, but had affixed copies to the houses of the persons to be served. The court, previous to issuing warrants, did not comply with the provisions of S. 82, C.P.C., though it was apparently of opinion that there had been due service of the summonses. The officers charged with the execution of the warrants arrested one of the witnesses, but they were attacked by N and others and the man they had arrested was rescued. N was convicted under Ss. 225-B and 353, I.P.C.—Held, that even if S. 225-B was not applicable the conviction under S. 353 of the Code was perfectly justified. 1905 A.W.N. 66=27 A. 491.

—Ss. 225-B and 353—Resistance.

Notice and warrant of arrest simultaneously issued by the Civil Court—Judgment-debtor refusing to accept notice and offering resistance when the warrant was sought to be executed:

Held, that the conviction under Ss. 225-B, and 353 was not unlawful. A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 315=13 P.L.T. 502=11 Pat. 743=34 Cr.L.J. 269=142 Ind. Cas. 160.

—S. 225-B—Resistance—Illegal warrant—Warrant for non-payment of tax ultra vires—Resistance not punishable.

Under S. 225-B resistance or obstruction to the apprehension of a person is made punishable only if the apprehension was "lawful," but where the imposition of the tax, for the non-payment of which the warrants are issued, is itself illegal and ultra vires, the resistance to their execution cannot be punishable. 107 Ind. —S. 225-B—Resistance to lawful arrest.

Positive evidence must be adduced to prove the resistance offered to the person producing a warrant of arrest. There must be an Overt Act of resistance or obstruction. 33 P.R. 1918 Cr.=20 Cr.L.J. 64=48 Ind. Cas. 832.

—S. 225-B—Resistance—Warrant of arrest signed by Sheristadar of the Court—Resistance.

Where a warrant for arrest was signed by a Sheristadar duly authorized to sign warrants, and the judgment-debtor resisted its execution:—Held, that he had committed an offence under S. 225-B. (1902) 6 C.W.N. 845.

—Ss. 225-B, 353—Onus—Warrant—Resistance—Mis-description—Identity.

In order to have a conviction for illegal disobedience of a warrant, it is for the prosecution to show that the accused is the person against whom the warrant was issued, or in other words, that he satisfied the description of the person against whom it was issued and not on the accused to show that he was not the person. It is illegal to convict a person under Ss. 225-B and 353 when the warrant attempted to be executed was addressed to the person with a wrong description to which the accused did not answer. (1901) 5 C.W.N. 413=28 C. 399.

6. Revision.

—S. 225-B—Revision—Report by munsiff—Treated as complaint—Prosecution irregular—Acquittal—No revision lies.

The High Court will not interfere in revision with an order of acquittal, passed by Magistrate of competent jurisdiction, on a prosecution for an alleged offence under S. 225-B of the Penal Code, irregularly instituted on a report sent in by a Munsiff which was treated as a complaint. 86 Ind. Cas. 801=23 A.L.J. 189=26 Cr.L.J. 865=47 All. 409=A.I.R. 1925 All. 318.

7. Showing warrant.

—S. 225-B—Showing warrant—Warrant not shown when demanded—Arrest illegal.

Any man who is being arrested, has a right to ask the officer arresting him to show him what power he has to do so. If the arrest is under a warrant, the man arrested is entitled to ask that the warrant be shown to him to see that he is being properly arrested and when the warrant is not shown to him and the arrest is made such an arrest will not be a legal arrest. 81 Ind. Cas. 51=48 Mad. 442=19 M. L. W. 504=34 M.L.T. 952=5 Cr.L. J. 563=A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 555=46 M.L.J. 447.

—S. 225-B—Showing warrant—Mere appraisal of the contents of a civil warrant enough—Must show if desired.

It is not necessary that a Bailiff executing a Civil warrant should in the first instance show the warrant. It is sufficient that he should apprise the person to be arrested of the contents of the warrant and show it if desired: 5 C.W.N. 843, Foll. 66 Ind. Cas. 1003=25 C.W.N. 815=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 79.

8. Miscellaneous.

—S. 225-B—Complaint.

In cases under S. 225-B, the proper person to make the complaint is the officer from whom the escape or rescue, has been effected, but a complaint by another person aware of the facts is not a nullity. A Magistrate is competent to make a complaint as a common informer. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 884=35 Cr.L. J. 86=34 P.L.R. 1020=146 Ind. Cas. 387.

—S. 225-B—Miscellaneous—Legality of warrant—Time extension by one not empowered—Endorsement by competent officer—Warrant is legal.

The Nazir of the Court is incompetent to extend the time for the execution of a warrant, but where extension is endorsed by the same officer who has originally issued the warrant and the endorsement appears on the warrant itself the warrant is legal. 93 Ind. Cas. 1049=43 C.L. J. 234=27 Cr.L. J. 553=A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 605.

—S. 225-B—Miscellaneous — Illegal custody — Judgment-debtor in the custody of a peon.

A Civil Court is not empowered to leave a judgment-debtor in custody of a peon after giving him time to pay up a decretal amount and such detention is not lawful custody within the meaning of the Penal Code. 86 Ind. Cas. 801=23 A.L. J. 189=26 Cr.L. J. 865=47 All. 409=A.I.R. 1925 All. 318.

—S. 226—Applicability—Prisoner under sentence of transportation—Escape of—If can be convicted under S. 226.

A prisoner who escapes from jail where he is confined before undergoing a sentence of transportation and is brought back cannot be convicted under S. 226 because his escape is not a return from transportation within the meaning of that section. 4 M.H.C.R. 152, Foll. 4 Bur. L.T. 261=13 Cr.L. J. 54=13 Ind. Cas. 390.

—S. 227—Conditionally released prisoner.

Under S. 227, it is for the Court to decide whether a conditionally released prisoner has violated the conditions on which remission was granted to him. Until he has been found guilty under S. 227, it is not for the jail authorities to say that he has committed an offence. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 28=34 Cr.L. J. 447=142 Ind. Cas. 728.

—S. 227—Nature of evidence required—What must be proved by documentary evidence — What by oral.

In a case under S. 227 the conviction of the accused, its date and the sentence passed should be proved by documentary evidence. Further the facts that the accused person was granted a remission of punishment and that the conditions on which the remission was granted must also be proved by documentary evidence. But the fact that the accused is the person convicted, sentenced and granted remission and that he has committed a breach of a condition of remission may be proved by oral evidence. The Magistrate should not overlook the requirements of documentary evidence and the accused should not be questioned at all until proper evidence is on the record. 120 Ind. Cas. 692=7 Rang. 355=1929 Cr. C. 446=31 Cr. L. J. 174=A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 278.

—S. 227—Sentence — Exceeding powers under Cr. Pro. Code—Illegal.

There is nothing in either S. 227, Penal Code or Burmah Act to empower any Magistrate to pass a sentence in excess of that which he is empowered under the Criminal P.C., to pass. Thus if a Magistrate sentences a person, convicted under S. 227 of the Code, and under S. 2, Burma Act, for a period which is in excess of his power, the sentence is illegal. 120 Ind. Cas. 693=7 Rang. 358=1929 Cr. C. 464=31 Cr.L. J. 175=A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 279.

1. Appeal to Privy Council.

—S. 228—Appeal to Privy Council.

Interferences with the administration of justice in civil or criminal case or deprecating the authority of the Court in any way, are quasi criminal acts and orders punishing such acts are orders in criminal cases. Appeal to Privy Council—Leave to appeal should only be granted on the principle on which leave to appeal in criminal case is given. A.I.R. 1936 P. C. 141=40 C.W.N. 801=(1936) A.L.J. 671=38 P.L.R. 541=(1936) M.W.N. 619=38 Bom. L. R. 681=1936 A.W.R. 600=64 C.L.J. 36=71 M.L.J. 665=44 L.W. 15=162 Ind. Cas. 92 (P. C.)

2. Contempt.

—S. 228—Contempt—Marrying the minor girl, without Court's permission.

Where a guardian was appointed to a minor girl it being well understood at the time of the appointment that the minor was not to be married without permission of the Court and A gave away the minor girl in marriage while under the guardianship;

Held, that though A's conduct was a disobedience of the Court's order, it did not amount to an offence under S. 228, I.P.C.

Held, also, that A's conduct attracted the operation of the Contempt of Courts Act under which the High Court was empowered to punish Contempt of Courts subordinate to it in the same way as if the contempt had been of the High Court itself. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 142=12 Pat. 1=34 Cr. L. J. 770=14 P.L.T. 605=144 Ind. Cas. 351.

—S. 228—Contempt—Marriage with a ward of Court without consent.

The marriage of a ward of Court requires the consent of the Court and a marriage, or connivance of marriage, with a ward of Court without such consent is, apart from any other consequences which might follow, Contempt of Court liable to be severely punished: 42 Cal. 351, Foll. 108 Ind. Cas. 668=23 S.L.R. 75=A.I.R. 1928 Sind 129.

—S. 228—Contempt—Legal practitioner—Disciplinary power over—Subordinate Court—Jurisdiction.

(Per Full Bench.)—No power to punish for contempt of an inferior Court now exists independently of the Indian Penal Code and the Contempt of Courts Act and no disciplinary power over legal practitioners or power to punish for contempt outside the provisions of the Indian Penal Code is vested in the subordinate Courts. 1930 A. L. J. 402=A.I.R. 1930 All. 225 (S.B.)

—S. 228—Contempt—Exercise of discretion—Technical, slight or trivial—Court may condone—Likely interference with justice—May not interfere unless fair trial is prejudiced.

The Contempt of Court is not a matter of mere form of technicality but of substance, and the jurisdiction to punish for contempt has to be very carefully and cautiously exercised. It is well settled that when the offence is technical or of a slight or trivial nature the Court may condone it. Even if the observation on the subject-matter of a proceeding may be likely to interfere with the course of justice and may technically amount to contempt, the Court may not interfere, if it is not satisfied that such comments were calculated to prejudice the fair trial. 1930 A. L. J. 665=A.I.R. 1930 All. 483.

—S. 228—Contempt—Apology—Tender of—Not a sufficient justification in a serious and grave case.

The mere fact that an apology has been tendered by the accused is not a sufficient reason to secure for him impunity from punishment in a serious and grave contempt case. Rex v. Almon, (1765) Wilmot's Opinions 243, applied. 39 Ind. Cas. 833=6 Lah. 528=26 P.L.R. 772=26 Cr. L. J. 1409=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 1 (F.B.)

—S. 228—Contempt — What is—Reasonable argument or expostulation — Not contempt—Statements amounting to—Undermining of authority.

If reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good, no Court could or would treat that as contempt of Court, but it is a very grave and serious contempt to accuse a Judge of High Court of having decided a case not according to the dictates of justice but in order to please and curry favour with others and to say that the door of justice (clearly including the door of High Court) has been closed against a particular community. Any act done or writing published, calculated to bring a Court or a Judge of the Court into contempt, or to lower its authority is a contempt of Court. Such contempt belongs to the category characterised as "scandalising a Court or a judge." R. v. Gray, (1900) 2 Q. B. 30 and In re Read Huggonson (1742) 2 Atk. 291, applied.

The principle which is the root of and underlies the cases in which persons have been punished for attacks upon Courts and interferences with the due execution of their orders is not the purpose of protecting either the Court as a whole or the individual Judges of the Court from a repetition of them, but of protecting the public, and especially those who, either voluntarily or by compulsion, are subject to its jurisdiction, from the mischief they will incur if the authority of the Tribunal be undermined or impaired. Rex v. Davies (1906) 1, K. B. 32 Foll. 89 Ind. Cas. 833=6 Lah. 528=26 P. L. R. 772=26 Cr. L. J. 1409=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 1 (F.B.).

—S. 228—Contempt—What is—Calling the Judge "a prejudiced Judge"—Intention an inference from words used.

The accused, tried for rioting when asked to make a statement under S. 342, Cr. P. C. called the trial judge, "a prejudiced Judge." When he was asked to withdraw the statement he refused to do so. The Judge then held a proceeding under S. 480, Cr.P.C. and the accused was convicted of an offence punishable under S. 228 of the I.P.C. On appeal:

Held, (Shah, J. dissenting) that, the accused was guilty of the offence charged, for his intention to offer an insult to the Judge was made out first by the words themselves, and, secondly, by the conduct of the accused.

Per Macleod, C. J.—No system of justice can tolerate unbridled licence on the part of a person defending himself or accept, as an excuse for an insult to a Judge that it was necessary for the conduct of the defence or for the establishment of his innocence.

Per Shah, J.—It is impossible to hold that in saying what the accused did say his intention was to offer an insult to the Judge. His conduct is consistent with the view that his intention was to press a defence which was adopted and adhered to without sufficient thought and which was couched in improper language and not to offer an insult to the Judge.

Per Pratt, J.—"The only question is whether the insult was intentional, and on this point it is clear that this intention is an inference attaching to the words themselves, and this inference is not rebutted by any excuse as to the motive with which the accused used the words or the object that he thought would be attained by so doing. 66 Ind. Cas. 821=24 Bom.L.R. 386=46 Bom. 973=23 Cr. L. J. 325=A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 261.

—S. 228—Contempt — What is — Impertinent threat to witness.

An accused person, who during the hearing of a case makes an impertinent threat to a witness in the

—S. 228—Contempt—Time of taking action—Even after final judgment.

The High Courts in India have jurisdiction to punish for contempt of Court where the contempt is made by scandalous attacks on its integrity and impartiality even though after the final judgment has been delivered in a case. (Principles underlying the law of contempt of Court explained). 10 Cal. 109; 2 Q. B. 36, Ref. 69 Ind. Cas. 84=47 Bom. 76=24 Bom. L. R. 928=23 Cr. L. J. 644=A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 426.

—S. 228—Contempt—Indirect answers—Liable under S. 179 not S. 228.

Where a witness, though persistently asked by the Court to give certain information, persisted in giving an indirect answer:

Held, that this amounted to a refusal to answer question and that an offence under S. 179, was committed but not one under S. 228. 84 Ind. Cas. 706=22 A.L.J. 1100=26 Cr.L.J. 354=6 L.R.A.Cr. 14.

—S. 228—Scuffle in Court verandah—Contempt.

The accused had a scuffle with some other person in the verandah of a Court room and the Court Chaprasi intervened and stopped it. No interruption was caused to the Court and there was no intention to insult the Court. Held, that the accused was not guilty of an offence under S. 228, I.P.C. 20 Cr.L.J. 777=53 Ind. Cas. 617 (All.).

—S. 228—Contempt of Court—Procedure.

A coarse expression used by a litigant but not addressed to, but heard by the Court, cannot be treated as an intentional insult or an interruption of proceedings, under S. 228, I.P.C. Litigants are bound to conduct themselves in an orderly manner but too much notice should not be taken of a sudden lapse during a moment of excitement into language which is fortunately too common among the lower class of rustics and is not meant to be taken seriously. Where a litigant is detained and adopts a submissive attitude when brought before the Court later after the excitement has worn off, a due admonition of a petty fine at the most is sufficient for preservation of order. 23 P.W.R. (Cr.) 1912=13 Cr. L. J. 567=15 Ind. Cas. 983.

—Ss. 228, 500—Cr. P. C., S. 476—Contempt.

A notice was issued by a munsif calling upon the petitioner to show cause why he should not be criminally prosecuted for contempt of court and defamation in respect of a petition in an execution matter, praying for time in order to enable the applicant to move the District Judge to transfer the case from the file of the said Munsif to some other court. Cause was shown and the petitioner was committed to the Criminal Court for charges under Ss. 228, 500. Held, that the prosecution under S. 228 of I.P.C., cannot stand. The court in which an offence is committed under that section should try the offender then and there and pass orders under that section. (1907) 6 C.L.J. 713=6 Cr. L. J. 405.

3. Ingredients.

—S. 228—Ingredients—Offence under—Interruption of Court's work by shouting slogans.

S. 228, I. P. Code, makes it quite clear that the insult or interruption must be intentional. It is not enough if the work of the Court was in fact interrupted. It must be shown that the accused knew that the Court was at that time doing judicial work and that having this knowledge he intentionally shouted slogans in order to interrupt that work. I.L.R. (1948) 2 Cal. 50=52 C.W.N. 336.

—S. 228—Ingredients of offence—Intention to insult.

The chief ingredient of the offence contemplated by Section 228 of the Indian Penal Code, is the intention of the offender. The question is not whether a Judicial Officer felt insulted, but whether an insult was actually offered and intended. 93 Ind. Cas. 698=27 Cr. L. J. 474=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 210.

—S. 228—Ingredients—Intentional interruption.

Where there were two accused and where, when the Magistrate was examining the first accused, he found that the two accused were exchanging remarks:

Held, that for a conviction under Penal Code, S. 228, there should be an intentional interruption to the Court and the action of the accused in the Magistrate's Court in the present case did not reasonably suggest such intention and would appear undoubtedly to have been adopted in good faith in their own interests: 10 C.W.N. 1062, Ref. 91 Ind. Cas. 242=8 N.L.J. 190=27 Cr. L. J. 66=22 N.L.J. 1=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 403.

—S. 228—Ingredients—Intention of offender.

The chief ingredient in the offence contemplated by S. 228 is intention of the offender. Where his behaviour may have been objectionable but it could not be said that the petitioner pushed or detained the witness with the intention of insulting or causing any interruption to the Magistrate when he only told him not to go as he had to cross-examine him; Held, no offence was committed. 81 Ind. Cas. 76=25 Cr.L.J. 588=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 88.

—S. 228—Ingredients.

In a case under S. 228 it is material to prove that the act complained of was done intentionally. A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 187.

—S. 228—Ingredients—Audible remark in Court—Interruption—Intention.

An audible remark which interrupted the proceedings in a Court of justice is not enough to sustain a conviction under S. 228. The Court must further be satisfied that the accused intentionally ordered interruption. 29 M.L.J. 274=2 L.W. 686=16 Cr. L. J. 610=30 Ind. Cas. 434.

—S. 228—Ingredients.

A witness refusing to answer questions by counsel or Court is guilty of the offence under S. 228 I.P.C.

To constitute an offence under S. 228 (1) there must be insult or interruption, (2) the insult or interruption must be intentional and (3) the insult must have been offered or the interruption caused to a public servant sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding. It is not necessary that the interruption must delay the proceedings of the Court for any length of time. The point for determination is not the duration of time but the nature of the Act of the accused. 14 P. R. 1918 Cr. = 24 P.W.R. 1918 Cr. = 19 Cr. L. J. 676 = 90 P. L. R. 1918 = 46 Ind. Cas. 36.

—S. 228—Ingredients—Offence under—Interruption—Evidence.

When a person making a noise in Court is charged under S. 228 the record must show the stage of judicial proceeding interrupted and the evidence must establish that such interruption was intentional as such vital irregularities are not cured by S. 537, Cr. Pro. Code. 15 Cr. L. J. 621 = 25 Ind. Cas. 629.

—S. 228—Ingredient of offence.

The principal ingredient of an offence under S. 228 is intentional insult or interruption. Merely uttering words and not keeping silent can hardly be construed as intentional insult or interruption caused by an undefended prisoner during the course of a judicial proceeding against him, especially when there are no materials on the record for a conclusion adverse to the accused. (1906) 10 C.W.N. 1062 = 4 C.L.J. 415.

4. Insulting remarks or interruption.

—S. 228—Applicability—Insult to District Magistrate at private interview—Offence.

A private interview with a District Magistrate is not a stage in a judicial proceeding; and offering insult to that officer at a private interview is not an offence under S. 228, I.P. Code. A.I.R. 1948 Sind 97 = 49 Cr. L. J. 327.

—S. 228—Application for adjournment—Insulting remarks in.

It must be a matter for consideration in each individual case how insulting the expressions used are and whether there was any necessity for the applicant to make use of those expressions in the application which he was actually making to the Court. It is a matter of opinion whether a Court should or should not take notice of gratuitously insulting remarks contained in an application for adjournment. In cases where the words used and the absence of necessity for including insulting suggestions in an application clearly suggest that there was an intention to insult the Court, it is not wise for the Courts to pass over such actions in silence. [Intention to insult held present.] A.I.R. 1943 All. 97 = (1942) A.L.J. 677 = 44 Cr. L. J. 360 = 1942 A.W.R. H. C. 398 = I. L. R. (1943) All. 186 = 205 Ind. Cas. 246.

—S. 228—Insulting remarks or interruption—Petition not properly worded.

Though a petition for adjournment on the ground that accused intended to apply for transfer of the proceedings to another Court is not happily worded, no presumption that the intention of the petitioner was to offer insult to Court can be drawn. 38 All. 284 =

14 A. L. J. 247 = 17 Cr. L. J. 163 = 33 Ind. Cas. 643.

—S. 228—Insulting remarks or interruption—Lawyer calling attention of Court to peon's rude conduct in preventing respectable person from entering court-room.

The mere act of addressing a Presiding Officer of Court during the pendency of a proceeding does not amount to a culpable interruption. "Interruption" as used in S. 228, contemplates something far more serious, far more obstructive than this. Hence, the act of a lawyer in calling the attention of the Presiding Officer of the Court to the rude conduct of the court-peon in preventing a respectable person from entering a court-room does not constitute interruption within the meaning of S. 228. A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 14 = I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 791 = 44 Cr. L. J. 181 = 44 P.L.R. 511 = 204 Ind. Cas. 299.

—S. 228—Insulting remarks or interruption—Lawyer prosecuted under S. 228 refusing to apologise—Remarks that he would make it a test case does not transgress law.

Where a lawyer is in the position of an accused person before the Magistrate in a case under S. 228, neither the Magistrate nor any other person has any right to coerce him into submission or to extort any object guarantee out of him. If, therefore, on being hard pressed by his colleagues, he frankly asserted that he would not tender any apology on the ground that he had committed no offence and that on the question of law involved in the case he would like to secure a pronouncement from the highest tribunal by making it a test case, he would be perfectly within his right and would not transgress any law. A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 14 = 44 P.L.R. 511 = 44 Cr. L. J. 181 = I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 791 = 204 Ind. Cas. 299.

—S. 228—Insulting remarks or interruption—Prayer for bail—Prayer refused not on merits but because lawyer put unnecessary questions—Lawyer is within his rights to resent remarks by Judge to that effect.

An accused cannot be penalized for the fault of his lawyer. His case is to be judged on its own merits and if in the matter of the rejection of bail, the Magistrate throws odium upon the lawyer by refusing his prayer for the release of the accused on bail, for whom he was appearing, on the ground that the lawyer had put unnecessary questions to the prosecution witnesses, thus publicly attributing the misfortune of the accused to incompetence of his lawyer, the lawyer would be within his rights not only to resent the remark made by the Magistrate but also to resent the reason adduced by him for refusing bail to the accused. The conduct of the Magistrate cannot be justified on any judicial principles. A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 14 = 44 P.L.R. 511 = 44 Cr. L. J. 181 = I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 791 = 204 Ind. Cas. 299.

—S. 228—Insulting remarks or interruption—Rude remark not addressed to Court but overheard by Court.

If a remark is not addressed to a Court, however rude or vulgar it may be, it cannot be made the subject of an offence under S. 228, even if the Court happens to overhear it. A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 14 = 44 P.L.R. 511 = 44 Cr. L. J. 181 = I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 791 = 204 Ind. Cas. 299.

—S. 228—Insulting remarks—Statement in application about Judge.

A person was convicted under S. 228, for having made a statement as follows: "Probably as the rumour goes, with a view to avoid this big and stiff case for reasons best known to him, the applicants came to know that he (Mr. P. N. Agha) was reported sick of high blood pressure four days before the case actually started";

Held, that the Judge would have shown judicial balance by not taking notice of this passage in the application and by not taking proceedings under S. 228. A.I.R. 1937 All. 171=38 Cr.L.J. 416 (2)=1936 A.W.R. 967=167 Ind. Cas. 515.

—S. 228—Insult to Court by assessor by his dress.

In order to bring a case within S. 228, I. P. C., and S. 480, Criminal P. C., it must be shown that the assessor intentionally offered an insult to the Court.

Where an assessor who appeared in Court in a dress consisting of a patheran, a cap and a scarf, was fined for being improperly dressed:

Held, that there being no rule as to the dress of assessors, and there being no suggestion that this dress offended against any rule of public decency, or was intended to be insulting to the Court, the Judge had no jurisdiction to fine the assessor. A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 478=35 Bom. L.R. 1025=35 Cr.L.J. 107 (2)=146 Ind. Cas. 550 (2).

—S. 228—Insulting remarks or interruption.

Mere flat refusal to obey the direction of the Magistrate without more, in the shape of offensive words or gesture, cannot be called an insult and in such a case tender of apology should be accepted. (1935) 1935 M.W.N. 704.

—S. 228—Insulting remarks.

Where the Adhigari was sitting as a Court and the accused abused him, the offence committed is under S. 228, and not under S. 186 of the I. P. C. (1934) 1934 M.W.N. 398.

—S. 228 — Insult — Interruption — Pleader's Conduct—Practice.

Under S. 228, the insult or interruption in the Court should be intentional. Some latitude should be allowed to a member of the Bar in insisting in the conduct of his case upon the question being taken down or his objections noted, where the court thinks the question inadmissible or the objections untenable. There ought to be a spirit of give and take between the Bench and the Bar in such matters and every little persistence on the part of the pleader should not be turned into an occasion for a criminal trial unless the pleader's conduct is so clearly vexatious as to lead to the inference that his intention is to insult or interrupt the Court. (1904) 6 Bom. L.R. 541.

5. Judicial proceedings.*—S. 228—Judicial proceedings.

Proceedings before a Debt Settlement Board cannot be regarded as "judicial proceedings" except for the limited purpose of S. 228, I. P. C. A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 216=44 C.W.N. 530=I.L.R. (1940) 2 Cal. 14=41 Cr.L.J. 662=188 Ind. Cas. 686.

—S. 228 — Judicial proceedings — Charge—Prejudice to accused.

Although the wording of the body of the charge may cover an offence under S. 228, still the accused might be prejudiced when no stress is laid on an essential element in charge under S. 228, namely, that the Court must be sitting in a judicial proceeding at the time when the insult is offered. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 275=38 Cr.L.J. 380=I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 245=167 Ind. Cas. 378.

—S. 228 — Judicial proceedings — Procedure—Duty of Court.

In the case of proceedings for contempt of Court under S. 228, the record must show the nature and the stage of the judicial proceedings in which the Court interrupted or insulted was sitting and the nature of the interruption or insult, and omission to set forth the particulars as required by S. 481, Cl. (2), Criminal P. C., is not merely an irregularity which could be corrected by the application of S. 537, but is fatal to the proceedings. A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 193=14 N.L.J. 106=32 Cr.L.J. 1221=134 Ind. Cas. 684.

—S. 228 — Sub-Registrar—Proceedings before, if judicial.

In the absence of a direction by the Local Government as regards the Sub-Registrar being a Civil Court within the meaning of Ss. 480 and 482, Criminal P. C., an offence under S. 228, Penal Code, if committed before a Sub-Registrar cannot be dealt with under Ss. 480 and 482, Criminal P. C. 34 C.W.N. 56=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 366.

6. Printed article.*—S. 228—Printed article—Past life of accused—When amounts to contempt.

Matter published in a news paper relating to the past life of an accused or to his antecedent character, particularly if it suggests an offence similar to that with which he is charged, is contempt of Court, as it must tend to interfere with the fair trial of that charge. 1930 A.L.J. 665=A.I.R. 1930 All. 483.

—S. 228 — Printed article — Public criticism limit of—Test.

If the scope of the inquiry or defence is very wide it cannot be expected that, while the trial is going on, public criticism on all the various subjects involved in the inquiry should be entirely withheld. General comment on these various matters or historical events, so long as they do not directly refer to the part played by the accused, cannot be seriously objected to. Such criticism would not be a comment on pending proceedings at all nor would the publications of such comments ordinarily tend to interfere with the course of justice. The test to be applied is whether the publication is likely to prejudice mankind in favour of or against a party before the case is finally heard or whether it is likely to interfere with the due course of justice. 1930 A.L.J. 665=A.I.R. 1930 All. 483.

—S. 228—Printed article—Pending trial.

The publication of comments on a case which is pending trial in a Court amounts to a contempt of Court if the comments are such as are likely to prejudice the administration of justice in the case. 109 Ind. Cas. 675=6 Rang. 39=29 Cr.L.J. 595=10 A.I.Cr.R. 266=A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 115.

—S. 228—Printed article—Decided case.

The publication of an article in a newspaper referring to a case which has been decided may amount to and be treated as contempt. R. v. Gray, (1900) 2 Q. B. 36 and A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 426, Foll. 89 Ind. Cas. 833=6 Lah. 528=26 P.L.R. 772=26 Cr.L.J. 1409=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 1 (F.B.).

—S. 228 — Printed article — Pending trial—Reflection on character and impartiality of Magistrate—Contempt of lower Court if amounts to contempt of High Court.

Comments in a publication reflecting on the character or impartiality of the Magistrate in the course of the criminal trial, tend to deprive the Court of the power of doing that which is the end for which it exists, i. e., to administer justice duly and impartially, and constitute necessarily a contempt of the Magistrate's Court.

Per Macleod, C. J.—It is not that every contempt of an inferior Court is necessarily a contempt of High Court. It is a question which must be decided on the facts of each case. If the publication of the remarks in an article impedes the due administration of justice, it constitutes a contempt of High Court and it has jurisdiction and powers to deal with it as the King's Bench Division in England has.

Per Shah, J.—The High Court has no power to punish contempts of Criminal Court subordinate to it as the King's Bench has. 65 Ind. Cas. 753=46 Bom. 592=24 Bom. L.R. 16=23 Cr.L.J. 177=A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 52.

—S. 228—Printed article—Contempt of Court—Comment on pending cases—Effect on trial.

Comments on cases pending or allegations against parties to them if published amount ordinarily to contempt on the part of the offender. But the intention of the offender should also be considered. 14 Cr.L.J. 267=19 Ind. Cas. 539 (Cal.)

—S. 230—Applicability—Coin used as ornament—Still Queen's coin.

A coin may still, within the meaning of S. 230, be deemed to be a Queen's coin even though it has ceased to be used as money, and the mere fact that a coin is being used as an ornament by soldering a ring to it does not transform it absolutely into a new article. By removal of that ring the coin in a defaced form will re-appear and may be capable of being accepted by ignorant villagers. The rules in the Resource Manual themselves require that a person who wants to have the defaced coins exchanged must at his own cost remove the solder and then tender the coins. The rules speak of a silver coin which has been defaced. It is obvious, therefore, that when these coins are tendered to a Bank they are not tendered as ornaments or other articles into which coins have been transformed, but are tendered as coins which have been defaced. 93 Ind. Cas. 154=27

—Ss. 230, 239, 420—Definition—"Coin"—Uttering false coin—Cheating.

Where the offence charged consisted of selling, or pawning as genuine, gold mohurs of the reign of Shahjahan, silver rupees of that reign which had been gilt or in some way covered over with gold, it was held that the offence would be that of cheating and not that of uttering false coin. A gold mohur of the reign of Shahjahan cannot be deemed to be "coin" within the meaning of S. 230, as it is not used for the time being as money. 4 A.L.J. 43=1906 A.W.N. 308=29 A. 141.

—Ss. 230, 235, 243—Murshidabad rupees, counterfeiting of.

S. 230, was not intended to and does not apply to Murshidabad rupees. 1905 A.W.N. 184=2 A.L.J. 498=28 A. 62.

—Ss. 230, 243—Possession of counterfeit coin—"Queen's coin"—Murshidabad rupees.

Held, that Murshidabad rupees which had been declared to be current coins by Regulation XXXV of 1793, are "Queen's coin" within the meaning of S. 230, Penal Code, and consequently, the possession of counterfeit Murshidabad rupees with the knowledge that they are counterfeit is an offence falling under S. 243 of the code. (1903) A.W.N. 115.

—Ss. 231—Essentials of offence.

In order to constitute the offence of counterfeiting coins under S. 231 it is not necessary that the intention of the accused should be the practice of deception. It is enough if the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived thereby in order to raise the presumption that the accused intended to practise deception, and the onus is on the accused to prove the contrary. 1907 A.W.N. 289=4 A.L.J. 776=30 A. 93.

—Ss. 232, 235—Prosecution's duty to call persons present at search.

The prosecution is in duty bound to call the persons present at a search unless they were of opinion that those persons would misrepresent facts and would not state what happened, even though they believed the witnesses had formed an opinion unfavourable to the prosecution story. (1904) 9 C.W.N. 438.

—S. 232—Removing rings from coins used as ornaments and restoring the same to circulation—Counterfeiting Queen's coin.

It is not an offence under S. 232 to remove the rings from coins which have been used to form necklaces or other ornaments, and to work up the face of the coins where the ring has been, it not being shown that any material part of the coin has at any time been removed. (1901) A.W.N. 116=23 A. 420.

—S. 232—Sentence—Possessing implements and counterfeiting—One transaction—Sentences for both offences—Illegal.

The accused were charged under Ss. 235 and 232, Penal Code, with being in possession of implements and materials for counterfeiting King's coins and with actually counterfeiting King's coins, and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment under each section:

Held, that the possession of such implements and materials is part and parcel of the transaction of counterfeiting coin and therefore the sentences passed on the appellants under S. 235, Penal Code, were illegal. 14 P.R. 1904 Cr. Foll. 71 Ind. Cas. 700=5 L.L.J. 272=24 Cr.L.J. 236=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 78.

—S. 235—Fact to be proved to justify conviction under—Proof of ownership of building in which counterfeiting materials are found—Necessity.

All that is required to convict a person of an offence under S. 235, I.P. Code is that he should be proved to have been in possession of materials for counterfeiting coins. It is not further necessary that he should be the owner of the building in which the material was found stored. 1950 A.L.J. 516=1950 A.W.R. 526=A.I.R. 1950 A. 732.

—S. 235—Offence under—Knowledge that some one else is in possession of counterfeiting materials.

Under S. 235, I.P. Code, it is the possession of any instrument or material for the purpose of counterfeiting that is made punishable, not the knowledge that some one else is in such possession. Where the accused was in possession of these instruments, other persons who were living with him, (e.g.) his wife or his relations who have come on a short visit to his house, cannot be held guilty of this offence. 1933 Pat. 272, applied. 51 Cr.L.J. 717=A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 97.

—S. 235—Essentials to be proved.

Before an offence can be made out under S. 235, it is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove not only the possession of the instrument or material but also, to prove that the possession was with the intention of using the same for the purpose of counterfeiting coin or with full knowledge and belief that it was intended to be used for that purpose. If the prosecution fails to prove the necessary intention, knowledge or belief, a person cannot be convicted under that section by a mere proof of physical possession of an instrument or material. A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 393=1938 M.W.N. 89=(1938) 1 M.L.J. 482=47 L.W. 173=39 Cr.L.J. 344=173 Ind. Cas. 394.

—S. 235—Essentials to be proved—House belonging to accused raided—Box with counterfeiting materials found—Another person with wife and children found also living in house—No evidence fixing knowledge on accused, of contents of box—Accused held not guilty under S. 235.

A Police party raided a certain kotha belonging to the accused. A tin box was found in it and a number of articles which are used for the purpose of counterfeiting coins, were found in the tin box. One other person was also living in the kotha of the accused. He was grown up man and had got a wife and two children. The kotha was accessible both to the accused as well as to that other person:

Held, that it could not be said with any degree of certainty that the kotha was in the possession of the accused alone. No articles having been recovered from the box which would go to connect the accused with it, and there being no evidence whatsoever to show that the accused was in any way aware of the contents of the tin box, the conviction under S. 235 could not be upheld. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 39.

—S. 235—Essentials—Mere possession no offence—Intention to counterfeit necessary.

Mere possession of instruments and materials capable of counterfeiting coins is no offence. To constitute an offence under S. 235, possession of such instruments should be with the intention of counterfeiting coins and the intention must be proved to establish the charge.

Where the dies found were incapable of striking a complete coin:

Held, it cannot be inferred against the accused that his intention was to manufacture coins. 84 Ind. Cas. 247=5 Lah. 392=26 Cr.L.J. 247=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 22.

—S. 235—Husband and wife—Whose liability.

Where in a case under S. 235, it is sought to make a wife liable along with her husband with whom she is living, it is necessary to prove that possession and control over the instruments and materials for counterfeiting were with her alone or with her also. The mere fact that the wife knew that certain implements and materials were in the possession of her husband and also the place where those implements and materials were to be found, does not necessarily indicate that she herself was in subordinate possession or in any kind of possession of them. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 272=14 P.L.T. 256=35 Cr.L.J. 9=146 Ind. Cas. 474 (1).

—S. 235—Counterfeiting coin—Knowledge—Possession of instruments.

To sustain a conviction under the section not only possession of the instruments for counterfeiting coin is necessary, but also possession within the knowledge of the accused is necessary. 8 Bur. L.T. 131=16 Cr.L.J. 264=28 Ind. Cas. 152.

—Ss. 235 and 243—Counterfeit coins—Possession of—House occupied by joint Hindu family—Liability—Size of articles material.

It is not essential for counterfeit coins that they should exactly resemble genuine coins. It is sufficient that they are such as to cause deception and may be passed for genuine coins. 17 W.R. 364, Foll.

It is also immaterial that they are not of silver but are of some other inferior metal. Where the articles found are large properties and placed in a conspicuous place to which the managing member may have access and over which he could exercise control and which could not be overlooked by him, the presumption that the managing member was in possession, may fairly be made. 6 Bom. L.R. 887, Ref. But where the articles are small ones, the presumption cannot be properly raised. Where counterfeit coins and moulds were found buried in a verandah which was open, with a village path to the south of it, and a road to the west, it was held probable that they were placed there by some enemies of the accused and the accused knew nothing about them. 4 Pat. L.J. 525=(1919) P.H.C.C. 220=20 Cr.L.J. 439=51 Ind. Cas. 263.

—Ss. 235, 243—Counterfeiting Queen's coin—Possession of instruments—Possession of counterfeit coins—Possession—Voluntary possession.

Per Batty, J.—The first essential required by Ss. 235 and 243 is that possession of the instruments and coin should be established against the accused person. To establish such possession it is not sufficient to show that the object in question was in such a position that the accused if he had known it might have exercised power or control over it. There must further be evidence of some circumstance indicating that he intended to exercise such power or control or that he knew that he could do so at will. The possession contemplated is not possession which has never been voluntary; and for the purpose of bringing home to any person the voluntary possession of any object, the mere proof of a fact of which he knows nothing would be valueless. The sections also require in the accused person intention or knowledge as to the use to be made of the objects in possession, and these might be implied from the nature of the objects themselves. But before that stage is reached, there must be some circumstance indicating such intention or knowledge as is inseparable from the notion of conscious retention implied in the word "possession." Such indication may arise from the position of the object in a place which is constantly used by the person accused, and which could not be overlooked by him, or from the bulk of the object itself, or from any circumstance, such as the looking up of the object, which would point to voluntary and conscious possession.

Per Aston, J.:—If we introduce "conscious" or "voluntary" before the word possession where that word is not so qualified in a section of the Indian Penal Code we shall be legislating instead of administering the law with inconvenient consequences such as shifting the burden of proof indicated by Ss. 114 and 106 of the Indian Evidence Act and even altering the substantive Criminal Law. (1904) 6 Bom. L.R. 887.

The offence of counterfeiting coin is very serious and an exemplary sentence should be given. But when a man is being convicted for being in possession of instruments, or materials for counterfeiting coin, it is hardly right to convict him separately for being in possession of various parts of such instruments or materials. 123 Ind. The accused were charged under Ss. 235 and 232, Penal Code with being in possession of implements and materials for counterfeiting King's coins and with actually counterfeiting King's coins, and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment under each section;

Held, that the possession of such implements and materials is part and parcel of the transaction of counterfeiting coin and therefore the sentences passed on the appellants under S. 235, Penal Code, were illegal. 14 P.R. 1904 Cr. A conviction under S. 240, I.P.C., is not sustainable in the absence of a finding that the accused had the knowledge that the coins were counterfeit at the time the accused became possessed of them. Mere delivery of coins knowing that they were counterfeit is not enough. If, however, the facts found fulfil the requirements of S. 241 the conviction can be altered from S. 240 to S. 241. —S. 243—Ingredients—Counterfeit coins in possession of the accused or his servants—Possession meaning.

In a case under S. 243 the jury must be told that they should decide whether the counterfeit coins were in possession of the accused or in possession of his clerk or servant on behalf of the accused, and if they decide that the coins were in possession of the accused they would then have to decide whether he knew at the time when he became so possessed of them, that the coins were counterfeit; and if they decide that the coins were in possession of the clerk or servant on behalf of the accused, whether, when the clerk or servant became possessed of the counterfeit coins, the accused himself knew that they were counterfeit.

—S. 243—Accused living in house along with other persons—Facts to be proved.

It is certainly not intended that no person in possession of a house shall be convicted of being possession of stolen property or counterfeit coin or anything of that kind if there happen to be other people living in the house and if it cannot be positively established that the person convicted had put the incriminating articles in the place where they were found. It must be shown in the first place that the incriminating articles were found in a place in the possession of the person to be convicted. In the next place, it must be shown either by direct evidence or by circumstantial evidence from which a reasonable inference can be drawn that the person to be convicted knew that these particular things were in the place where they were found. A.I.R. 1936 All. 650=1936 A.L.J. 508=37 Cr.L.J. 551=1936 A.W.R. 456=162 Ind. Cas. 295.

—S. 243—Essential to be proved—That accused's possession of counterfeit coins was fraudulent or with intent that fraud may be committed, held not proved.

In the course of a search of the house of the accused in connection with an offence under Ss. 457 and 380, counterfeit coins were recovered from a cloth bundle kept inside a black wooden box under lock and key. The coins were examined and it was found that they were counterfeits, and in fact there was no denial as to this. The defence was that the coins at one time belonged to the S estate and were sold as a part of the estate's property. The purchase was ostensibly made by one M but the accused had a half-share in it, with the result that the counterfeit coins fell in his share. After the purchase it was not shown that any attempt had been made by the petitioner to pass on the coins to other persons as genuine:

Held, that the important element of the offence that the accused was in possession of counterfeit coins "fraudulently", or with intent that fraud may be committed, had not been proved and, therefore, the charge under S. 243, had not been proved against him. A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 533=17 P.L.T. 648=3 B.R. 63=37 Cr.L.J. 1154=165 Ind. Cas. 603.

Mere residence in the house cannot make person liable for the possession of the counterfeit coins. Guilty knowledge must be proved. (1933) 1933 M.W.N. 222.

—S. 243—Presumption of guilty knowledge.

It is difficult to establish by positive evidence that a man in whose possession counterfeit coin is found knew when it came into his possession that it was counterfeit. This difficulty is enhanced when the accused who is in a position to give an explanation refuses to give one. In such a case, the guilty knowledge of the accused has to be inferred from the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the accused. The fact that at the time when the counterfeit coins came into his possession he knew that they were counterfeit need not necessarily be proved by positive evidence. The fact of knowledge can be inferred from his refusal to give explanation of its possession and his conduct and circumstances of the case. A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 335=1943 O.W.N. 113=1943 A.W.R. 31=44 Cr.L.J. 542=206 Ind. Cas. 606.

Where eleven silver pieces of the size of a rupee along with thirty counterfeit rupees, all bearing the same year, were found concealed under bhusa in a locked room, the key of which was in the possession of the accused:

Held, that under S. 114, Evidence Act, the circumstances created a presumption of guilt in the case of the accused that the accused was in possession of the coins fraudulently or with intent to commit fraud.

The High Court will refuse to interfere where the finding of the Appellate Court is neither perverse nor unreasonable. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 85=9 O.W.N. 1198=34 Cr.L.J. 545(2)=143 Ind. Cas. 152.

The onus to prove that the accused knew "at the time when he became possessed of the coin that it was counterfeit" is on the prosecution. Section 106, Evidence Act, do not entitle the prosecution to throw the onus as regards the time of knowledge on the accused without any qualification, but if the prosecution has succeeded in establishing circumstances suggesting that the accused knew at the time he became possessed of the coins that they were counterfeit, then and in that case alone it would be necessary for the accused to lead evidence to show that it was not at the time that he became aware of their counterfeit character. —S. 251—Diminishing weight—Coin soldered to ring and used as ornament—Cutting and clipping and making up deficient weight by solder—Offence under.

The rules in the Resource Manual themselves require that a person who wants to have the defaced coins exchanged must at his own cost remove the solder and then tender the coins. The rules speak of a silver coin which has been defaced. It is obvious therefore, that when these coins are tendered to a Bank they are not tendered as ornaments or other articles into which coins have been transformed, but are tendered as coins which have been defaced. If therefore, an accused person clips and cuts away a coin and makes up the deficient weight by solder with the intention of subsequently delivering it to a Bank, he would certainly be guilty of fraudulently defacing a coin even though on a previous occasion the coin has been used as a wearing

The first part of S. 263, makes it an offence to erase or remove from a stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue any mark put upon it for the purpose of denoting that it has been used, if that erasing or removing is done fraudulently or with intent to cause loss to Government. Therefore, for an offence under the first part of the section it is necessary to prove fraud or an intent to cause loss to Government. Under the second part of the section it is an offence to have in possession any stamp from which the mark put upon it for the purpose of denoting that it has been used has been erased or removed, if these facts are known to the person having such a stamp in his possession. That is to say, it is sufficient to prove that the person in whose possession the stamp was found knew that such a mark had been erased or removed from it and it is not necessary under this part of the section to prove that his possession was fraudulent or with intent to cause loss to Government. There is no necessity under this part of the section for the prosecution to prove that the erasure of the marks or impressions had been done by the accused person or that he had any connection with them. —S. 265—Essentials — Intention to defraud — Onus on prosecution.

Where the accused was getting his grain measured with two kathas, which he borrowed for the purpose from another person, who told him that the kathas were passed by the Notified Area Committee and which were seized by the police, who found them to measure five tolas more than the standard katha and prosecuted the accused who was convicted under S. 265:

Held, that the accused could not be convicted unless it was proved that he knew that the kathas were incorrect or that before he used them, he tampered with them. Unless this was established, fraudulent intention on the part of the accused so as to convict him under S. 265, could not be presumed, one of the principal ingredients of the offence being the use of false measure with intent to defraud. 116 Ind. Cas. 671=30 Cr. L. J. 692=1929 Cr.C. 263=13 A.I.Cr.R. 120=A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 239.

—S. 266—Evidence of knowledge and fraudulent intention.

For purposes of establishing offence under S. 266, Penal Code, the only way in which knowledge and fraudulent intention can be proved is by the possession and the use of the false weights concerned. A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 8=57 L.W. 489 (1)=(1944) 2 M.L.J. 249=46 Cr. L. J. 246=217 Ind. Cas. 146.

—S. 266—Ingredients of offence.

The prosecution has to prove that the person in possession of a false measure knew it to be false and was in possession intending that the same may be fraudulently used. The mere fact that the capacity of the measures seized did not conform to the standard fixed by Government is not sufficient. If a dealer has a measure in his shop which has been tested by Government and certified to be a proper measure, there is no reason to presume that he could have known that it was not a correct measure or that at the time when the stamp was put on this measure, it was not up to the prescribed standard. There is in law no duty cast on the shop-keeper to have the measures tested periodically. If the measures are found to be short, there is no presumption that he was using them fraudulently. Such a presumption cannot arise unless there is evidence to show that he was aware of the fact that the measures were smaller than the standard ones. A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 589=(1943) 1 M.L.J. 486=44 Cr. L. J. 781=1943 M.W.N. 341=238 Ind. Cas. 406.

—S. 266 — Agreement between purchaser and seller that commodity sold should be measured by measure produced by purchaser.

Where both purchaser and seller are well aware of the actual measure being used, there can be no question of fraudulent intent. It is only when the seller purports to sell according to a certain standard and sells below that standard, that he can be said to be guilty of fraud.

Where, therefore, it has been agreed between the seller and the purchaser that a certain commodity should be measured by a measure produced by the purchaser and purchaser has not represented in any way that the measure was the standard measure, the purchaser cannot be said to have fraudulent intent and cannot be convicted under S. 266, Penal Code. —S. 266—Offence under Bombay Weights and Measures Act, whether makes measure false within meaning of S. 266.

The fact that an offence may have been committed under the Bombay Weights and Measures Act does not make the measures false within the meaning of S. 266, Penal Code. According to the ordinary use of language, if a measure is described as false, that means that it is something other than what it purports to be. A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 455=41 Bom. L.R. 977=41 Cr.L.J. 172=185 Ind. Cas. 228.

—S. 266 — Fraudulent intention — Purchaser and seller both aware of measure.

Fraudulent intent is essential for an offence under S. 266, I.P.C., and where both purchaser and seller are aware of the actual measure used there can be no question of fraudulent intent. 40 All. 84=15 A.L.J. 897=19 Cr. L. J. 145=43 Ind. Cas. 433.

—S. 266—Using short weights—Inspection of standard weight—Joint trial of several accused—Irregular.

On information received, the Sub-Inspector in charge of a Police Station inspected certain bazars and on his report the District Magistrate ordered prosecution of 68 persons on a charge of using short weights. All of them were tried together and the prosecution evidence was taken in one case alone. A joint reply on behalf of all the accused was then put in being a statement on solemn affirmation with reference to the list of weights found to be wrong. Treating this as a confession the accused were all convicted. Held, (1) that the joint statement was not a confession, (2) that the method of joint trial adopted by the Magistrate was prejudicial to the accused and irregular and (3) that opportunity should have been given to each of the accused to explain his case separately. 20 P. Where the owners of the houses or shops occupied by the applicants have built certain platforms in front of them to enable the shop-keepers to sit on them for selling their goods and the platforms cause any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general, the persons who built the platforms are guilty of the act which ex hypothesi amounts to a public nuisance. Those who have merely rented the shops and sit on the platforms, cannot be considered to be doing any act amounting to a public nuisance. Before a person can be convicted under S. 273 it must be shown that the article which he has sold or exposed for sale was to his knowledge or belief, noxious as food or drink. 1904 A.W.N. 56=1 A.L.J. 64=26 A. 387.

—S. 273—"Noxious," meaning of—Adulteration of ghee with other vegetable oil.

The word "noxious" in S. 273, means harmful to health or unwholesome. In the absence of evidence to show that the adulteration of ghee with vegetable oil was such as to render it noxious in the above sense, such adulteration cannot be held to constitute an offence under S. 273. 12 C.W.N. 608.

—S. 273—Sale of noxious food—Wheat—Admixture of extraneous substance.

A person cannot be convicted of an offence under S. 273, for selling wheat containing a large admixture of extraneous matter, e. g., dirt, wood, matches charcoal, black seeds. (1904) 6 Bom. L.R. 520.

—S. 277—Spitting in a public well.

A place is public if people are allowed free access even without any legal right; hence spitting into a public well is an offence under S. 277 even though water in it is rendered unfit only to a slight degree. 13 N.L.R. 68=18 Cr. L.J. 650=40 Ind. Cas. 298.

—Ss. 277, 200—River—Fouling the water—Nuisance.

The fouling of the water of a river running in a continuous stream is not an offence under S. 277, but yet it may be an offence under S. 290, if the evidence shows that the act was such as to cause common injury or danger to the public. (1904) 6 Bom. L.R. 52.

—S. 278—Scope—Public, not private nuisance contemplated.

Throwing of a human skull in a highly offensive condition out of malice into a private dwelling house does not warrant conviction under S. 278. The section is directed against a public and not a private nuisance. 116 Ind. Cas. 48=10 P.L.T. 87=30 Cr. L.J. 556=12 A.I. Cr. R. 441=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 113.

2. Essentials for conviction.
3. Offence falling under different heads.
4. Offence under special law.
5. Rash and negligent driving.

1. Enhanced sentence.

Every case of collision between a motor-car and pedestrian must be judged on its merits.

A person was fined Rs. 20 for injuring a woman carrying a load of grass, in a spacious street, by driving his car rashly and negligently. He left her lying in the street after she was so injured and went on his way. He was fined Rs. 20 by the trial Court.

Held, that the offence was a serious one and justified an additional punishment of 3 months rigorous imprisonment. 104 Ind. Cas. 910=4 O.W.N. 768=28 Cr.L.J. 894=A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 441.

2. Essentials for conviction.

—S. 279—Danger to public.

If there is no danger to the public, outside the car who are using the road no offence under S. 279 is committed. 119 Ind. Cas. 536=30 Cr.L.J. 1077=A.I.R. 1930 Sind 64.

3. Offence falling under different heads.

—Ss. 279, 338.

When offence falls under two-heads of I. P. C., such as Ss. 279 and 338, only one sentence should be given. (1935) 1035 M.W.N. 924.

—Ss. 279, 304-A, 338—Conviction.

Where the accused was charged with rash and negligent driving of his motor car with the result that the car collided with a lorry and caused injuries to two persons one of whom died later:

Held, that in the absence of definite evidence to justify the conclusion that he was driving in a rash and negligent manner, he could not be convicted under Ss. 279, 338 and 304-A.

It is not always necessarily rash and negligent to drive on the wrong side of the road. A. I. R. 1933 Oudh 391=10 O.W.N. 823=34 Cr.L.J. 1154=146 Ind. Cas. 28.

—S. 279—Separate convictions—Convictions under Ss. 337 and 304-A, I. P. C.—Separate conviction under S. 279—Sustainability.

Held, that a conviction under S. 279, I. P. C. cannot separately stand if the accused is convicted under S. 337 and 304 of the Code. 1929 M.W.N. 395.

—S. 279—Not proved—No conviction under section.

The finding of a Magistrate that the accused was not guilty of an offence under S. 34 of the Police Act necessarily and logically means that the accused could not be convicted of an offence under S. 279 of the Penal Code. 88 Ind. Cas. 1=23 A.L.J. 436=6 L.R.A.Cr. 143=26 Cr.L.J. 1057=A. I. R. 1925 All. 448.

4. Offence under special law.

—S. 279—Trial under either legal.

The facts which have to be proved in both cases, i. e., under S. 279, I. P. C. and Motor Vehicles Act, S. 5, are substantially the same, and the offence comes equally well under either definition; and there can be no question of prejudice to the accused whether the conviction is under the one or the other. 38 Ind. Cas. 998=23 A.L.J. 790=26 Cr.L.J. 1254=6 L.R.A.Cr. 150=A.I.R. 1925 All. 798.

5. Rash and negligent driving.

—S. 279.

Reckless racing between two tongas on public road—Sub-Inspector of Police and head constables signalling and whistling them to stop—No heed paid by tongawallas—Tongawallas chased and arrested:

Held, that persons driving the tongas had committed offence under S. 279. A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 163=45 Cr.L.J. 699=46 P.L.R. 93=213 Ind. Cas. 208

—S. 279—Riding on pillion of ordinary bicycle in crowded street.

For a man to ride pillion on an ordinary bicycle in a crowded street is a negligent act which is likely to cause injury to the other persons and vehicles there. It would be a negligent act to carry any second person (whatever his age, build or weight) on a bicycle, who is liable to change his position or fall off if this is done on a public way where there is other traffic. A. I. R. 1940 Rang. 176=1940 Rang. I.R. 127=41 Cr.L.J. 693=188 Ind. Cas. 800.

—S. 279.

Section 279 makes rash driving or riding on a public road punishable, if such rash driving or riding endangers human life or is likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person. A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 388=20 P.J.T. 403=40 Cr.L.J. 759 (2)=183 Ind. Cas. 224.

—Ss. 279, 279/114.

Pork Inspector's car chasing car containing illicit pork—Pork Inspector instructing driver to keep chased car in sight—Both cars going at dangerous speed and ignoring traffic signals—Chased car crashing—Chasing car stopped at distance of 100 feet from crashed car—Conviction of driver of chasing car under S. 279 held was proper but sentence of imprisonment was not called for in the circumstances—

Pork Inspector held could not be convicted under Ss. 279-114. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 97=39 Cr.L.J. 535=175 Ind. Cas. 133.

—S. 279.

Tram-car being driven fast but not at excessive speed—Camel cart being driven in same direction parallel to tram-car—Camel suddenly swerving to wrong side and cart colliding with tram—Tram driver held not guilty under S. 279. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 86=I.L.R. (1939) Kar. 13=39 Cr.L.J. 515=175 Ind. Cas. 27.

—Ss. 279, 337—Right of occupants of vehicles to be protected.

The words 'any other person' in S. 279, are very wide and do not distinctly limit to persons on a road, as distinct from the occupants of the particular vehicle which is being rashly or negligently driven. They are wide enough to include the occupants of the vehicle itself and the occupants of a motor-bus have as much right to be protected against rash or negligent driving on the part of the driver of the bus as have other people on the road:

Held, that where the driver had been convicted under S. 337, as he actually caused hurt to some of the occupants of the bus, it was not necessary that he should be convicted under S. 279 also, even if that section is applicable. A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 148=1935 O.W.N. 1026=36 Cr.L.J. 1352=11 Luck. 431=158 Ind. Cas. 305.

—S. 279—Motorist, duties of.

There is a duty on every user of the road to make a reasonable use of it for the purposes of passing along it, and to allow others to do so also. A person driving a motor car has a right to expect that the persons negligently loitering on the road would make way for him, especially when he has seen that they were aware of his approach. Even when they signalled to him to stop he is not bound to do so, whatever the rules of courtesy may be. He has the right to assume that they would get out of the way when they saw him ignore their signals.

Motorists are not the only persons who owe a duty of care; others also have responsibility and must conform to the ordinary usages of the road. A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 65=35 Cr.L.J. 696=30 N.L.R. 317=148 Ind. Cas. 541.

—S. 279—Accused taking care to avoid accident—Complainant mostly responsible—Accused, if guilty.

The appellant was on the wrong side of the road. He drove his car slowly and when he saw the complainant's car come from the opposite direction he put his hand up to give the signal that he was going to turn. The complainant was driving his car at an excessive speed but in spite of all this, the accident occurred. This accident would not have occurred if the complainant had not been driving his car at an excessive speed:

Held, that the accused was not guilty of negligence. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 194=36 Cr.L.J. 178=152 Ind. Cas. 699.

—S. 279—Negligence, when gross and culpable.

Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular which having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 194=36 Cr.L.J. 178=152 Ind. Cas. 699.

—S. 279—Rash and negligent manner—Forcing way past a car in front.

Where the accused saw another car approaching him on its proper side of the road and where he ought to have drawn in behind the water-cart passing in the same direction as the accused and not have attempted to force his way past it in front of the on coming car:

Held, that such conduct on the part of the accused came within the purview of S. 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act, and that the conviction was a proper one. 88 Ind. Cas. 908=23 A.L.J. 790=6 LiR.A.Cr. 150=26 Cr.L.J. 1254=A.I.R. 1925 All. 798.

—S. 279—Wrong side—Sharp corner—Entering into crowded thorough fare—Offence more serious than under Motor Vehicles Act.

The accused was driving on a wrong side of the road at a sharp corner entering into a thoroughfare of a considerable traffic with the result that he came into collision with a motor bicycle, the side car of which was damaged. It was due to the presence of mind of the person who was riding the motor bicycle that no further damage occurred.

Held, that an offence under Section 279, Penal Code, was committed. The offence of the accused was more serious than that contemplated by Section 5 of Act VIII of 1914. That section refers to a person who is driving a car in a manner which would in ordinary circumstances be proper, but owing to the special condition of the road at the time he is riding on it, is improper. 84 Ind. Cas. 253=7 A.I.Cr.R. 503=26 Cr.L.J. 253=16 S.L.R. 147=A.I.R. 1921 Sind 97.

—Ss. 279, 338 and 114—Lorry driver permitting minor boy sitting by his side to drive lorry—If liable for accident as principal offender.

Where a driver of a motor lorry permitted a minor boy who was sitting by his side to drive the lorry and the latter unable to control the lorry while it was going at a high speed made an attempt to stop it by suddenly applying the brakes but the lorry was overturned and some passengers were injured:

Held, that in the circumstances the lorry driver was liable as a principal offender under the provisions of S. 114, I. P. Code. In fact he was the person driving through the hand and instrumentality of the boy to whom he had consciously and knowingly given the steering wheel. He was, therefore, himself liable to be punished for offences under Ss. 338 and 279, I. P. Code 4 A.I.Cr.D. 534=52 P.L.R. 193.

—S. 279—Rash driving in motor—General and special laws.

—S. 280—Running into a boat at anchor.

Running of a launch into a cargo boat at anchor is prima facie evidence of negligence since the duty of steam vessels is to keep out of vessels at anchor. 4 Bur. L.T. 140=12 Cr.L.J. 582=12 Ind. Cas. 846.

—S. 280—Conviction under—Elements necessary.

To support a conviction under S. 280 there must be proof of rashness or negligence as the immediate cause, which endangers human life or is likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person. In awarding a sentence the question of contributory negligence, if any, should be taken into consideration, in mitigation of the punishment. 15 C.W.N. 835=14 C.L.J. 656=12 Cr.L.J. 362=11 Ind. Cas. 130.

—S. 282—Overloading of boats—Negligence of owner—Plea of want of direct knowledge—If affects question of guilt.

An owner, who knowingly or negligently allows overloading of his boats so as to endanger life of persons sailing therein is liable under S. 282 I.P. Code. He cannot plead in defence that the tindal who was in actual charge of the boat was alone liable. (1948) A.L.J. 354, dist. Even if direct knowledge of the owner of the overloading is not proved, his negligence in that he did not take due care and attention will make him liable. 1950 M.W.N. 37=4 A.I.Cr.D. 142=A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 300=51 Cr.L.J. 729=(1949) 2 M.L.J. 773.

—S. 282—Overloading boat in the middle of monsoon.

Criminal negligence is gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care to guard against injury either to the public in general or to the individual in particular which having regard to the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. Thus, in the middle of the monsoon the overloading of a boat would be dangerous and it would be culpable negligence on the part of the accused to leave the whole thing in the hands of the boatman, leaving the passengers to their fate. A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 490=38 C.W.N. 200=61 Cal. 253=35 Cr.L.J. 1373=151 Ind. Cas. 660.

—S. 283—Cart-track lying in patta land of accused closed by them and right to do so claimed.

Where a cart-track lies in the patta land of the accused who have put up a wall across it and claim a right to close it, the proper course would be to proceed against them under S. 133, Criminal P.C. They cannot be convicted under S. 233, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 216=50 L.W. 593=1939 M.W.N. 1259=41 Cr.L.J. 391=186 Ind. Cas. 896.

—S. 283—Intention.

Section 283 does not refer either to a public nuisance or to the intention of the accused. It is one of the sections in Chap. XIV of the Code, which deals with offences affecting the public health, safety, convenience, decency and morals. A public nuisance may undoubtedly be caused without any deliberate intention of causing it, and S. 283, and S. 290, do not refer to the intention of the accused person. The obstruction may be caused by negligence. Where, therefore, the accused places a charpai on a public road and thereby obstructs the Sub-Inspector, he commits the offence under S. 283, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1935 All. 746=36 Cr.L.J. 893=1933 A.L.J. 1057=1935 A.W.R. 814=159 Ind. Cas. 39.

—S. 283—Public way, what is—Pathway over private land—Customary right of way—How established.

A pathway, which lies over a private land and which is used by the villagers, and perhaps by the inhabitants of some of the villages, but with regard to which there is no testimony of universal user sufficient to raise a presumption of dedication to the public, is not a public way within the meaning of S. 283. To establish a customary right of way to the same pathway the Court must be satisfied of the reasonableness and certainty of the user and that such user was not permissive nor exercised by stealth or force and that the right has been exercised for such length of time as to suggest that by agreement or otherwise the usage has become the customary law or the particular locality. 33 C.W.N. 915=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 286.

—S. 283—Essentials for conviction—Obstruction causing danger or injury necessary for conviction.

Proof of obstruction to the road so as to cause danger or injury to any person using the road is necessary for conviction. Therefore where one accused pleaded to be excused, admitting that he obstructed the road under mistake without admitting that danger or injury was caused to any person, conviction cannot be had. 81 Ind. Cas. 195=25 Cr. L. J. 707=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 153.

—S. 283—Responsibility for obstruction—Obstruction by contractor—Owner not liable.

Where building materials are supplied by a contractor who places them on the public road, the person for whom they are supplied cannot be convicted unless he has sanctioned the act. 61 Ind. Cas. 52=19 A.L.J. 25=22 Cr.L.J. 331=A.I.R. 1921 All. 192.

—S. 283—Obstruction—Actual obstruction if necessary.

Where a prabha left lying in a public road could not fail to cause obstruction to a person who had occasion to pass along the road, Held, that though obstruction to any individual was not expressly proved, it was a matter of necessary inference. 38 Mad. 305=16 Cr.L.J. 560=29 Ind. Cas. 832.

—S. 283—Obstruction to public way.

In a case of doubt or difficulty the private reasonable right of a house holder to carry on his business must yield to the public right of user of the street. 35 Bom. 368=13 Bom. L.R. 209=12 Cr.L.J. 258=10 Ind. Cas. 804.

—S. 283—Obstruction, causing in a public way by erection of hut encroaching upon public thoroughfare and not by exposing goods for sale, by lease thereof—Lessee, not liable. (1904) 8 C.W.N. 369.

—S. 283—Obstructing public way or line of navigation.

See 7 C.W.N. 423.

—S. 287—Applicability—S. 304-A distinguished—Under S. 207, rash act not directly cause of death.

Section 304-A only applies to such acts of the accused as are rash and negligent and are directly the cause of death of another person.

F took lease of a flour mill with M as partner who was to act as manager. R was employed to act as Mistri. A shaft with a leather belting was installed in the mill but part of the belting protruded outside the building. Two girls playing nearby were caught in the belting, one being killed and the other crippled.

Held: that the offence by M and R was under S. 287 and not under S. 304-A. They had negligently omitted to take care of the machinery as was sufficient to guard against probable danger to human life but they never intended to cause the injury. The girls had no right to go to the mill compound.

But F who had not taken any active part in the management of the mill could not be held liable even under S. 287. 31 P.L.R. 853=127 Ind. Cas. 153=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 453.

—S. 289—Letting loose domestic animals.

If animals dangerous by nature are let at large, the presumption is in favour of injury to human beings, but domestic animals like a dog are not presumed to be dangerous; hence in order to convict the owner of a dog under this section he must be proved to have known that the dog had a tendency to bite human beings. Essential for a conviction under S. 289, I.P.C. 19 Cr.L.J. 1=42 Ind. Cas. 913 (All).

—S. 289—Negligent management of animal.

Allowing a vicious animal to be at large knowingly raises presumption that the person letting it loose, knows that there is probable danger to human life or limb. 18 Bom. L.R. 682=17 Cr.L.J. 383=35 Ind. Cas. 815.

—S. 289—Essentials necessary to prove.

For a conviction under S. 289, it must be established in the affirmative that the animal in question was likely to cause grievous hurt or danger to human life and that the accused knowingly or negligently omitted to take proper care of such animal. (1904) 1 A.L.J. 605.

x. Collection of crowd.

—S. 290—Collection of crowd—Sale of Satta tickets—Crowd of customers obstructing traffic—No offence.

Where it was alleged that a person was selling satta tickets at his shop with the result that 10 or 15 customers collected outside and obstructed the traffic in the public street adjoining the shop:

Held, that the facts did not constitute an offence under S. 290. The assembling of 10 or 15 customers and the obstruction of traffic could not be considered to be the direct or necessary consequence of the offer of satta tickets for sale; 28 Ind. Cas. 110; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1235 and 14 Mad. 364, Dist. 1929 Cr.C. 368=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 801.

—S. 290—Person responsible for the crowd is more guilty.

If a crowd collects and obstructs the traffic so as to cause a nuisance, the person who is directly responsible for the crowd collecting is obviously not less, but more guilty than the other persons who form the crowd and this would be equally the case whether he were inside or outside his shop at the precise moment when the police appeared. 83 Ind. Cas. 695=22 A.L.J. 662=5 L.R.A.Cr. 98=26 Cr.L.J. 135=A.I.R. 1924 All. 568.

2. Essentials for conviction.

—S. 290—Annoyance to one person sufficient.

It is necessary in order to establish a charge of committing a nuisance in a public place to the annoyance of residents or passengers in the locality, to prove that somebody was annoyed. Annoyance to one person is sufficient. If a public servant, likely a municipal employee whose duty it is to look after the cleanliness of the streets sees anybody easing himself in a public place or street he is not unlikely to be annoyed. 77 Ind. Cas. 188=21 A.L.J. 772=4 L.R.A.Cr. 218=25 Cr.L.J. 332=A.I.R. 1924 All. 194.

3. Joint owner.

—S. 290—Joint owner.

A joint owner is responsible in law for nuisance caused by his property. 115 Ind. Cas. 242=30 Cr.L.J. 432=52 Mad. 79=28 M.L.W. 621=1 M.Cr.C. 317=A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1235=55 M.L.J. 715.

4. Jurisdiction of Court.

—S. 290—Act committed outside British India—Annoyance to person within British India—Jurisdiction of Court.

The accused conducted a marriage procession with music and fireworks in French territory. He was charged in a British Indian Court under S. 290, I.P.C., on the ground that people residing in British territory in the vicinity of the place where the procession was held were disturbed:

Held, that as the offence was committed in French territory, the British Indian Court had no jurisdiction to try the same even though the persons who were annoyed by the music and fireworks lived in British territory. Section 179, Criminal P.C., would not apply to a case of this kind;

Held further, that even if S. 179, Criminal P.C. would apply to a case of this kind, an offence like this could not be enquired into in British India without a certificate or sanction of the Political Agent or the Local Govt. of the place where the offence was committed, as required by S. 188, Criminal P.C. A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 189=1934 M.W.N. 1316=41 L.W. 82=36 Cr.L.J. 467=68 M.L.J. 211=154 Ind. Cas. 146.

—S. 290—Criminal Procedure Code, S. 133—Order directing removal of nuisance—Injunction of Civil Court.

When a Civil Court issues an injunction restraining A at whose instance an order under S. 133 of Cr.P. Code has been passed directing B to remove an alleged nuisance from interfering with nuisance B is not liable to be convicted under S. 290 for the disobedience of its order, because the Criminal Court is bound by the order of the Civil Court. 34 P.W.R. (Cr.) 1917.

5. Occupier & Proprietor of premises—Liability.

—S. 290—Public nuisance—Occupier of premises and proprietor—Criminal liability.

Speaking generally where the user of premises gives rise to a nuisance the person liable under S. 290 is the occupier for the time being, whoever he may be. A proprietor who is not in occupation of the premises is not liable, unless his conduct amounts to an abetment of an offence under that section. The general rule for Criminal Law is that a master is not criminally answerable for the acts of his servant. 46 Cal. 515=22 C.W.N. 1062=22 C.L.J. 262=19 Cr.L.J. 915=47 Ind. Cas. 287.

6. Public nuisance.

—S. 290—Slaughter of cattle, when amounts to nuisance.

If a person wilfully slaughters cattle in a public street so that the groans and blood of the poor beasts are heard and seen by the passers-by, he would commit acts that would necessarily cause nuisance to every one of them, Hindu, European, Muhammadan or other, who is not utterly devoid not merely of refinement, but also of all proper feeling and he undoubtedly would be punishable under S. 290. In determining whether the slaughtering of cattle amounts to public nuisance in each case it will be a question of fact whether the killing was done in such circumstances as to constitute a public nuisance; and in determining that question of fact, in order to obtain a clear and unbiased view, it is advantageous to put out of one's mind all questions of the particular feelings and religious convictions of particular sects; to forget whether the parties are Hindus or Muhammadans to ask oneself whether, had the killing been done, for example, by a butcher in the course of his profession, it would in fact constitute a common nuisance:

Held, on facts that the place of sacrifice of the cow by the Muhammadans could not be said to be in any sense a public one, it being a semi-private place bounded on three sides by walls of buildings and a wall  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet high on the fourth, and that though the case was a marginal one in view of the time and the situation of the place in which the sacrifice was committed, an offence under S. 290, could not be said to have been committed. The fact that some of the Hindus did happen to see the sacrifice of the cow did not justify the inference that the sacrifice was committed with the intention of annoying those Hindus. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 471=44 Cr.L.J. 30=21 Pat. 315=24 P.L.T. 16=203 Ing. Cas. 282.

Where there is an accumulation of water on the fields of the owners of land on the other side of the river, as result of the riparian owners of land on one bank of the river throwing up an embankment on their own land to protect their fields from floods, it cannot be said that the embankment causes a common injury to the public in the vicinity. Consequently, an embankment of this kind even if it tends to cause injury to some owners of property cannot be described as public nuisance. The persons erecting such embankment cannot, therefore, be convicted under S. 290, I.P.C. A. I. R. 1940 Pat. 577=21 P. L. T. 514=42 Cr.L. J. 72=6 C.L.T. 43=191 Ind. Cas. 82.

—S. 290—Passing urine in public place in village.

The mere act of passing urine in any public place would not amount to an offence punishable under S. 290, I. P. C. The essential ingredient of the offence is that the act must cause any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity or must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger or annoyance to the persons who may have occasion to use any public right.

Where a respectable man of fifty-five years passed urine in grazing ground promboke under cover of a tamarind tree in a village to which the Towns Nuisances Act did not apply:

Held, that such an act does not generally cause any annoyance to the villagers in general and the accused was not guilty of an offence under S. 290, I.P.C.

Held further, that the fact that the act took place in the full view of the Police Sub-Inspector could not make it an offence. A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 130=1936 M.W.N. 1151=44 L.W. 806=38 Cr. L. J. 120=166 Ind. Cas. 36.

—S. 292—Obscenity—Test — Books on sexual life—If obscene.

The test of obscenity is this, whether, the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands the publication in question may fall.

Books intended to give advice to married people, and particularly husbands, on how to regulate the sexual side of their lives to the best advantage, that is to say, with a view to promoting their health and mutual happiness, serve a useful purpose when properly written, and they are published on a large scale and widely circulated in all civilised countries including Britain and the United States of America. If such books are effectively to fulfil their intended purpose it is obvious that they must be written in fairly plain language in order to be understood. It cannot be said that the publication of such books should be barred altogether because of the danger, against which it is undoubtedly every difficult to provide effective safeguards, that they may fall into the wrong hands. 48 Cr.L.J. 910=A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 383.

A picture of a woman in the nude is not per se obscene, when there is nothing in it which would shock or offend the taste of any ordinary or decent-minded person. Unless the pictures of nude females are an incentive to sensuality and excite impure thoughts in the minds of ordinary persons of normal temperament who may happen to look at them, they cannot be regarded as obscene within the meaning of S. 292. For the purpose of deciding whether a picture is obscene or not one has to consider to a great extent the surrounding circumstances, the pose, the picture, the suggestive element in the picture, the person into whose hands it is likely to fall, etc., No hard and fast rule can therefore, be laid down for the determination of the matter. A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 290=71 C.L.J. 257=44 C.W.N. 479=41 Cr.L.J. 617=I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 581=188 Ind. Cas. 526.

—S. 292—Publication—Test of obscenity.

In a prosecution under S. 292, the test of obscenity is whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscene is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands a publication of that sort may fall. The test is not whether it will exert a harmful influence on men of wide culture, but how it affects young people of either sex whose minds are impressionable.

The motive of the publishers in publishing the book does not prevent the book from being obscene if the descriptions are obscene. The motive may be taken into account as regards the question of sentence; but whether it is obscene or not depends on the material itself and not upon the reasons for its publication. Where a man publishes a work manifestly obscene he must be taken to have intended the inevitable consequences.

Although in a prosecution under S. 292, it is better and advisable to indicate in the charge how and in what particulars the book is obscene, yet if the accused is not prejudiced in his defence and the prosecution maintains that the whole book is obscene, mere failure of the prosecution to mention particular passages is no reason for interfering in revision. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 651=36 C.W.N. 985=56 C.L.J. 123=60 C. 201=33 Cr.L.J. 771=139 Ind. Cas. 461.

—S. 292—What constitutes offence—Advertisement of photos containing word "asan" not necessarily obscene.

An advertisement of Kok Shashtra contained words, "coloured pictures (photos) of 84 postures (asan) of men and women with interesting descriptions of these." The advertisement did not contain any posture offensive to senses nor did it suggest any indecent, obscene or immoral ideas.

Held, that there was nothing obscene in the word "asan" and it did not necessarily mean the posture formed at co-habitation the advertisement did not come within the purview of S. 292. 110 Ind. Cas. 805 = 10 A.L.C.R. 463 = 29 Cr.L.J. 773 = A.L.R. 1928 Pat. 649.

—S. 292—Religious books—Extracts.

A passage in a religious book may become obscene if it finds a place in a journal intended for the public.

Where the consequences of a publication are likely to introduce in the minds of readers impure thoughts and to insinuate revolting ideas not present in their minds before, the publication is an offence under S. 292. I.P.C. 10 Cr.L.J. 505 = 5 P.R. Cr. 1917 = 39 Ind. Cas. 473.

—S. 292—Descriptions exciting sensuality ought to be avoided in public print.

There should be no printing of descriptions exciting sensuality but descriptions of diseases with appropriate remedies therefor intended only for doctors and patients are not criminal. 18 Cr.L.J. 126 = 7 P.W.R. 1917 Cr. = 25 P.R. 1917 Cr. = 37 Ind. Cas. 478.

—S. 292—Obscene publication—Literary eminence, no justification—Test obscenity—Religious book.

The literary eminence of the author of the book containing obscene matter does not justify the offence under the above section. Where there is a tendency to deprave and corrupt the minds of the readers open to such influences, is the criterion to be applied in determining the question as to whether a particular matter published is obscene or not. 20 B. 193. 32 C. 247, Foll. The publisher of an obscene matter is taken to have intended the natural consequences of the publication. Beyond this the question of intent is not essential to an offence under the section. A publication describing illicit love for another man's wife, and selling at a low price which places it within the reach of all leaves no doubt about its obscene nature in law in spite of the publisher's intention being only to publish classical works. 5 L.W. 237 = 18 Cr.L.J. 153 = 22 M.L.T. 169 = 37 Ind. Cas. 521.

—Ss. 292 and 153—Virulent attack on the head priest of Dawood Bohras.

There were acute differences among the members of the Dawoodi Bohra community as to the exact position of their head priest. The head priest pronounced a kind of social and religious excommunications. Other events subsequent to this rendered the feelings between these parties very acute. The accused who belonged to the minority published two pamphlets, the first of which was published in Ramzan and the second was an elegy on a person who died about the Ramzan month. In the first pamphlet there was provoking language in which there were vulgar abuses and ridiculed the head priest and his followers. The second extolled the merits of the deceased and contained approbrious epithets to the head priest and his followers who created difficulties in the burial of the deceased. These pamphlets were distributed broadcast among the followers of the head priest. Held, Per Shah J. that an offence under S. 292, was not committed by the publication of the first pamphlet since applying the test whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscene was to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to immoral influences it could not be said that the pamphlet was obscene.

Per Hayward, J.—The pamphlet offended against S. 292 as it presented to the mind or view something which delicacy, purity and decency forbade to be expressed. Corruption and depravity of mind are encouraged by the employment of filthy language tending to debase the high purpose of sexual relations even when it is used primarily to arouse religious passions at least retort and repetition of filthy languages will necessarily lower the standards of morality. 22 Bom.L.R. 196 = 62 Ind. Cas. 401.

—S. 292—Obscene book—Test.

The test of obscenity is whether the language complained of would corrupt those whose minds are open to immoral influences. The form of expression and not the actual meaning is important. Distinction should be drawn between obscenity and frankness of expression. 15 Bom. L.R. 307 = 14 Cr.L.J. 248 = 19 Ind. Cas. 504.

—S. 292—Religious books—Extract of passages—Test of obscenity.

A religious publication is not obscene within S. 292 as its tendency is not to deprave moral but if extracts from it contain objectionable matter and have a tendency to deprave or corrupt minds which are open to immoral influences then the fact that they formed part of a religious publication is no ground for publishing it.

The test to determine whether a publication is obscene or not is to see if the tendency of the matter charged as obscene is to deprave and corrupt the minds of the people reading it and if a book has this effect the sale of it is a criminal offence though the author has an ulterior object which is innocent and laudable. 39 Cal. 377 = 15 C.L.J. 151 = 13 Cr.L.J. 177 = 13 Ind. Cas. 993.

—S. 292—Distributing obscene pamphlet—Definition—Intention.

The test of obscenity, with reference to a charge of distributing obscene literature is whether the tendency of the matter is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands a publication of this kind may fall. If a publication is detrimental to public morals and calculated to produce a pernicious effect in depriving and debauching the minds of the persons into whose hands it may come, it will be an obscene publication which it is the intention of the law to suppress. The question whether a publication is or is not obscene is a question of fact. If a publication is in fact obscene, it is no defence to a charge of selling or distributing the same that the intention of the person so charged was innocent. (1905) A.W.N. 203 = 28 A. 100.

—S. 294-A—'Not authorised'—Meaning of—Burden of proof of authorisation—Evidence Act, S. 105—'Keeping'—Meaning.

The words 'not authorised' in S. 294-A mean no more and no less than 'unless authorised or not having been authorised or without authority' and are in the nature of an exception or proviso to S. 405 of the Evidence Act so that the burden of proof of authorisation lies on the accused. 1 K.B.D. 540, Dist.

The mere act of taking income-tax from a club on the profits of lotteries does not constitute authorisation by Government under S. 294-A. The members of the Committee of a club who exercise full control over club matters inclusive of premises, 'keep' the premises of the club within S. 294-A.

2. Chit fund.

—S. 294-A—Chit fund.

By an order, the Govt. declared conducting chitfund as illegal but added that those who were conducting them should wind them up as soon as possible, adding that prosecutions need not be launched unless there were indications of fraud. The object of the Govt. in issuing their order in the form they did was to withhold the prosecutions of persons who were running lotteries in ignorance of the law, provided that they did their best to wind up the lottery and to pay everybody who had subscribed to the lottery. The District Magistrate granted the accused time to re-pay the subscriptions. But on his failure to do so, he was prosecuted for conducting chit fund.

Held, that if he conducted a lottery that was illegal, he was liable to be punished under S. 294-A whatever the action of the Crown might subsequently have been. The order of the Govt. that he should wind up the lottery within a certain time and that he should re-pay the subscriptions within a certain time did not amount to an authorization of the lottery prior to that date. ## —S. 294-A—Kuri chit fund.

A Kuri was promoted for raising funds for a temple. It consisted of 625 subscribers, each subscriber agreeing to pay at the rate of Rs. 3 per month for 50 months, in all amounting to Rs. 150 per ticket. On the 25th of every English month after March 25, 1929 one ticket was to be drawn out of the 625 tickets and the winning ticket paid as prize, Rs. 150, without any liability to pay for future instalments. Fifty such tickets were to be drawn in 50 months and at the end of the 51st month the 575 subscribers who had not drawn prizes were to be repaid without interest, the total amount of their subscription, viz., Rs. 150. The plaintiff took two tickets in the kuri, and had paid Rs. 270 representing 45 monthly payments on the two tickets. He filed a suit against the promoters for a refund of the amount subscribed. In defence it was contended that the agreement between the parties being in respect of a lottery unauthorised by Govt. was for an illegal object; and was, therefore, unenforceable at law.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover as his claim was governed by S. 84, Trusts Act, and he was not in pari delicto with the promoters who were personally liable to refund the amount.

Held, per Full Bench (Venkataramana Rao, J. contra) that the chit fund amounted to a lottery and the promoters committed an offence under S. 294-A, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 225=70 M.L.J. 36=43 L.W. 77=1936 M.W.N. 89 (2)=59 M. 562=162 Ind. Cas. 68 (F.B.).

—S. 294-A—Chit fund—Certainty of distribution of profits—Drawing by lots—Not a lottery.

The plaintiff and the defendant promoted a 'Chit Fund.' A capital fund of Rs. 500 a month was raised by 500 subscribers, subscribing, each one rupee per mensem. At the end of the month, there was a drawing by lot and the subscriber, who drew the ticket was paid Rs. 50 and his connection with the transaction forthwith ceased. This process was repeated month after month, till the end of the 49th month. At the close of the 50th month, each of the remaining subscribers was paid Rs. 50 and the stake-holders divided the profit and the fund was dissolved.

Held that the chit fund was not a lottery.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—In this case, while chance determines the disposal of the interest earned, there is absolute certainty, with reference to the distribution of the capital fund itself. Though it may be said it is a small element of chance that tempts some to join the fund, the dominant feature of the transaction is that it enables a large number to gradually lay by money and receive their savings in a lump sum and the scheme is in their case an incentive to thrift.

The word 'lottery' is not defined either in the Indian Penal Code, or Act 5 of 1844, nor in the English Statutes. When the scheme has for its object the carrying on a legitimate business, the fact that it provides for the distribution of its profits in certain events by lots will not vitiate the scheme. All chit funds, the main object of which is the promotion of co-operation, prudence and thrift ought to be regarded as legitimate, even though there is an element of chance. If by the time a society of this kind became known to the public, all its members were ascertained and there is no invitation to any member of the public to join it, it cannot be said that any person keeps a lottery office, at which the public were invited to join and to pay, within the meaning of the English Acts or S. 294-A of the Indian Penal Code. That is it is not that every lottery constitutes an offence but the keeping of a lottery office, which is a standing invitation to the public, that constitutes the offence.

3. Drawing—Meaning of.

—S. 294-A—See also, Contract Act, S. 30—Lucky numbers calculated arithmetically in lottery is no drawing.

Section 294-A contemplates a physical drawing. The word "drawing" in S. 294-A cannot be ignored and must be given its natural meaning, i.e., lucky numbers being drawn out of an urn, box or other receptacle. It does not mean conducting.

Hence, a person who conducts a lottery in which the lucky numbers are calculated arithmetically is not guilty under S. 294-A. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 404=(1942) 1 M.L.J. 228=55 L.W. 95=1942 M.W.N. 170=43 Cr.L.J. 751=1 L.R. (1942) Mad. 802=201 Ind. Cas. 617.

—S. 294-A—Scheme of lottery not contemplating drawing by mechanical or human agency involving their chance extraction.

The meaning of the term 'drawing' in relation to a lottery is that the lots should be drawn by some mechanical or human agency involving their chance extraction. Where under a scheme there was no physical or mechanical 'drawing' to determine the lucky lots which depended on a sort of arithmetical progression based on an original number to be determined merely by the chance death of a bondholder, then the publication of a scheme involving such a lottery is no offence under S. 294-A. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 840=35 P.L.R. 753=16 L. 51=36 Cr.L.J. 785=155 Ind. Cas. 590.

—S. 294-A—Lottery—Actual drawing essential—Five rupee notes in some cigarette packets—Publishing pamphlet setting out facts—No offence.

The accused, who was a dealer in cigarettes had caused five-rupee notes to be placed in some packets and any purchaser of a packet of the cigarettes sold by the accused stood a chance of getting a packet of the cigarettes containing a five-rupee note. He also published a pamphlet in which these facts were set out. He was accused under S. 294-A of publishing a proposal relating to a lottery.

Held, that the word "drawing" is used in S. 294-A in its physical sense and that the actual drawing of lots is an essential ingredient of the offence under S. 294-A. Although the transaction in question amounted to a lottery. [Barret v. Burden (1893) 63 L.J.M.C. 33; Hunt v. Williams, (1888) 52 J.P. 821; Taylor v. Smetten, (1883) 11 Q.B.D. 207]; as there was no such "drawing" and further as there was no proposal to pay any sum on any event or contingency relative to the drawing of any lot, no offence under S. 294-A was committed; 35 P.R. 1917 Cr.; A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 26, Rel. on; P.R. No. 17 of 1910 Dist. 112 Ind. Cas. 777=30 Cr.L.J. 9=53 Bom. 57=11 A.I.Cr.R. 515=30 Bom. L.R. 1426=A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 550.

—S. 294-A—Drawing—Meaning of—Lottery.

The section does not attack lotteries themselves; what has been rendered punishable is the running of public lotteries. The offence is that of keeping any place for the purpose of drawing any unauthorised lottery. The word 'drawing' is used in the section in its physical sense and the actual drawing of lots is an essential factor in a lottery is that there should be a scheme for distribution of a prize and prizes to be determined solely by chance and if chance so decrees that no prize is to be distributed to the adventures and the stakes are to be appropriated by the organiser of the lottery, the scheme is nevertheless a lottery.

4. Goods—Meaning of.

—S. 294-A — Goods — Includes immovable property.

The expression "goods" in S. 294-A applies not only to movable but also includes immovable property. 99 Ind. Cas. 36=50 Mad. 479=24 M.L.W. 655=1926 M.W.N. 949=38 M.L.T. 136=28 Cr.L.J. 4=7 A.I.Cr.R. 172=A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 66=51 M.L.J. 685.

5. Keeping lottery office.

—S. 294-A—Keeping lottery office—Office for running lottery kept—Lottery moneys received—Offence made out.

The conditions for the application of first clause of the section are complied with, when it is shown that the accused did keep an office where they carried on the necessary preliminary work for running a lottery and received the lottery moneys and which they held out to the public as the place where the lottery would finally be drawn. 69 Ind. Cas. 272=16 M.L.W. 757=23 Cr.L.J. 688=32 M.L.T. 340=A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 187=44 M.L.J. 595.

—S. 294-A—Keeping a Lottery Office—Lottery—Scheme for distribution of prizes—Construction of Penal statute.

For the purposes of S. 294-A office or place means a place or office where the actual drawing of the lottery takes place. Keeping an office for preliminary business is not indictable under the section.

—S. 294-A.

Transaction between definite number of persons—Each one getting his money's worth though some getting less and some more by lot.

Held, no offence committed under S. 294-A. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 136=66 M.L.J. 76=149 Ind. Cas. 489.

—S. 294-A—Scheme for giving of gramophones as prizes to subscribers to monthly chits.

The accused, a cycle and gramophone dealer, started chits for giving away cycles and gramophones as prizes. There were to be 100 subscribers in each section. Each subscriber had to pay Rs. 3 per month and the transactions covered a period of 20 months. There was to be drawing every month for 20 months; the subscriber whose name was drawn was given a cycle or a gramophone and he was relieved from further payment. In the 21st month each of the non-winners was given a cycle or gramophone. The accused was charged under S. 294-A.

Held, that the transaction was clearly a lottery, the accused may be said to have kept a place namely, his shop, for the purpose of drawing a lottery and as he had published the scheme he was guilty of an offence under the latter portion of S. 294-A. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 464=1934 M.W.N. 265=57 M. 923=40 L.W. 26=35 Cr.L.J. 1232=67 M.L.J. 163=150 Ind. Cas. 1119 (D.B.).

—S. 294-A—Sweets purchaser getting ticket entitling him to try his luck at lottery.

Where the applicant shop-keeper had invited every customer to try his luck for half an anna, it was given out that the purchaser of every packet of sweets for half anna was entitled to a separate ticket and each ticket meant a separate chance in lottery.

Held, that what was purchased by each customer of the applicant was not only the packet of sweets, but also a chance in the lottery, that the customers collectively contributed towards a certain fund out of which the accused was able to give away prizes. Calling that fund his profits, or a separate prize-fund made no difference and that the transaction was a lottery within the meaning of S. 294-A. A.I.R. 1934 Sind 69=28 S. L. R. 112=35 Cr. L. J. 1249=150 Ind. Cas. 1093.

—S. 294-A—Lottery, what constitutes.

A lottery is a scheme for distributing prizes by lot or chance. In its simplest form the adventurers contribute to a fund which they agree among themselves shall be unequally divided upon the happening of an agreed event. But it is not essential that the fund out of which the prizes are provided should consist only of sums contributed by the adventurers. Nor does the fact that every adventurer in any event obtains some or even full value for his subscription prevent the scheme from being a lottery. Where therefore in a scheme every person who purchases a ticket at the entrance of a show by so doing contributes to the common fund from which the prizes are taken and every purchaser of a ticket stands an equal chance to draw back four hundred times as much as he had put in the schemes comes within the meaning of 'lottery'.

In the offence provided for under S. 294-A, the actual drawing is an essential ingredient. The word 'drawing' is used in this section in its physical sense and when the section was enacted in 1870, it seems probable that the only form of lottery envisaged by the Legislature was a lottery run on the usual lines in which the winning numbers are actually drawn out of an urn, box or other receptacle. A.I.R. 1934 Sind 149 (2)=36 Cr.L.J. 219 (2)=152 Ind. Cas. 911.

—S. 294-A—Irish Sweepstake.

A circular of the Irish Sweepstake found in the possession of the accused disclosed that the Irish Hospital Sweepstake was expected to reach the large total of L. 50,00,000 or seven crores of rupees and that applications for tickets were to be made with Rs. 7-8-0 per ticket to the accused. The circular also stated that the above money would be divided on each unit of L. 10,00,000 as follows; 50 first prizes of L. 30,000 or over four lacs of rupees each, 50 second prizes of L. 15,000 or over two lacs of rupees each, 50 third of L. 10,000 or over 1½ lacs of rupees each, 1200 prizes of Rs. 12,000 to Rs. 15,000 each and 5,000 cash prizes of L. 2000 or Rs. 2750 each:

Held, that having regard to the correspondence disclosed the case of the accused fell within the mischief of S. 294-A.

Held, also that although ignorance of law would be no excuse, in awarding sentence, the fact that the accused was not cognizant of the fact that the Irish Hospital Sweepstake was an unauthorized lottery, might be taken into consideration. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 332=56 C.L.J. 539=34 Cr.L.J. 518=143 Ind. Cas. 113.

—S. 294-A—Company for raising of funds for charitable purposes—Offer of cash bonuses to donors by drawing lots—Legality of object.

The memorandum of association of a limited company stated that one of the objects of the company was to raise general donation funds to carry out charitable objects. The Articles of Association and the prospectus issued by the company adumbrated scheme to the following effect. Every donor of Rs. 100 to a fund called the Poor Houses Special Donation Fund was given a donation certificate. One lakh of such certificates was to form a series. Out of the interest accruing on the funds so subscribed not less than 75 per cent. was to be utilized every year in granting cash bonuses ranging from Rs. 500 to Rs. 5000 to 200 donation certificate holders, the names of the donors that were to get such bonuses being determined by means of drawings. It was also provided that if a certificate holder died before he got a prize, his heirs will receive Rs. 500 as Death Relief Bonus. On an application to wind up the company on the ground that the company was formed for an illegal purpose:

Held, (i) that the cash bonus scheme was a lottery; (ii) that the fact that the prize money was provided from the interest received from investments and not from the principal did not make any difference; (iii) that the company in keeping an office for the conduct of this lottery and publishing in its articles and prospectuses the scheme of the lottery was acting in contravention of S. 294-A; (iv) that as a very substantial part of the business carried on by the company was consequently illegal there was sufficient ground for ordering the compulsory winding up of the company.

The fact that the company was formed for the purposes of benefitting charities and the lottery was merely annexed to the original business did not make the business of the company a legal one.

—S. 294-A—Lottery, what is.

A scheme by a company which purports to grant interest-bearing loans on personal security to persons chosen by lot falls within S. 294-A, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 129=63 M.L.J. 917=36 L.W. 942=141 Ind. Cas. 177 (2).

—S. 294-A—Lottery—What amounts to.

By an advertisement in a newspaper the accused invited the public to subscribe a large sum of money for an association whose avowed object was to relieve people in debt or distress. There was no provision for return of the capital and though one-sixth of the interest derived therefrom was to be used for the objects of the association, the remainder was to be divisible every three months as cash bonuses to the subscribers, and these bonuses were to be distributed by lot.

Held, that the whole transaction amounted to a lottery within the meaning of S. 294-A. A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 143=10 R. 232=33 Cr.L.J. 696=138 Ind. Cas. 687.

—S. 294-A—Lottery—Meaning.

The giving of prizes out of profits of sale only to the lucky persons only possessing the lucky tickets without every person who has gone in getting something in return for his money, is lottery. 17 Cr.L.J. 143=9 Bur.L.T. 124=33 Ind. Cas. 319.

7. Publication of proposal to pay.

—S. 294-A—Second part—Proposal and sale.

A large number of lottery tickets were found in the shop of the accused. The name of the accused had been entered in the counterfoils, in space provided for the name not of the purchaser of the ticket but of the seller of the ticket to the ultimate purchaser. A printed document headed by the name of the accused in large capitals containing a proposal to purchasers to buy shares each amounting to 1/72nd in lots of twelve tickets of the Irish Free State Hospital Sweepstake, and reciting that the holder of the document was entitled to 1/73rd share of any prize won by any one of the twelve tickets was also found:

Held, that the proposal and sale had been established within the meaning of S. 294-A.

Held also that publication was established by the very fact that the proposal forms had been printed in press. A.I.R. 1941 Sind 91=42 Cr.L.J. 613=194 Ind. Cas. 704.

—S. 294-A.

To publish the words "detailed prize lists will be supplied to all subscribers" is an offence under S. 294-A, I.P.C. 1937 M.W.N. 731.

—S. 294-A—Publication.

Delivery of ticket books of a lottery is sufficient publication. A.I.R. 1926 Sind 213, Dist. 124 Ind. Cas. 347=1930 Cr.C. 97=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 81.

—S. 294-A—'Proposal to pay—Lottery ticket—Statement that prizes if any due will be paid—If proposal to pay.

A lottery is an arrangement for the distribution of prizes by chance among persons purchasing tickets. If in a lottery ticket it is stated that the prize if any due on the number of ticket will be paid, the ticket does contain a proposal inviting person to take part in the lottery, and by acquiring the ticket the purchaser or acquirer accepts the proposal. Distribution of ticket with such a proposal amounts to publishing the proposal.

Kennedy, J. C.—A mere casual and gratuitous delivery of a lottery ticket is not necessarily the publication for a proposal within the meaning of S. 294-A. 95 Ind. Cas. 313=20 S.L.R. 192=27 Cr. L. J. 777=A.I.R. 1926 Sind 213.

—S. 294-A—Publication of terms for prizes on horses winning at Derby races is offence.

The accused issued a circular for the sale of tickets for prizes on horses winning at the Derby races, on starters, and for other special prizes. The circular stated that the "Sweep will be closed on . . . and the draw under the supervision of the patrons stated in the tickets will take place on . . . Prize winners will be notified by telegrams."

Held: that the accused published a proposal to pay a sum for the benefit of any person, on any event or contingency relative or applicable to the drawing of any ticket, lot, number of figure in a lottery and was liable to punishment. It was not necessary that the payment proposed to be made should be made by the person advertising. 87 Ind. Cas. 516=26 Cr.L.J. 980=27 Bom.L.R. 363=A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 243.

—S. 294-A—Publication that lottery tickets were had at a place—If proposal.

The publication that lottery tickets can be had at a particular place is not sufficient to constitute a publication of a proposal to pay any sum on any event or contingency relating or applicable to the drawing of any ticket in any lottery not authorised by Government as provided in the second paragraph of S. 294-A. 83 Ind. Cas. 1006=26 Cr.L.J. 222=26 Bom.L.R. 968=A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 26.

8. Scope.

—S. 294-A—Scope—Keeping lottery office—Publication of proposal—Scope of Civil law.

The Criminal Law by S. 294-A, I.P.C. only makes punishable the keeping of an office for holding a lottery and the publication of proposals for drawing a lottery. The civil law however goes further and prevents obligations arising out of lotteries being enforced in a Court of law, whether the lottery is held in an office to which the public have access or in a private place to which admission is not to be had for the mere asking. 92 Ind. Cas. 968=22 M.L.W. 772=1925 M.W.N. 857=A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 168=49 M.L.J. 791.

—Ss. 294-A, 420—Lottery or swindling concern.

Where it is suspected that a company holds or has held a lottery within the meaning of S. 294-A, Penal Code, or that it is a swindling concern within the meaning of S. 420, all the books of the company may well be relevant for the purpose of determining the nature of the offence, if any committed, and the Police will not be wrong in investigating all the books and seizing them under the provisions of S. 165, Criminal P. C.

Where the books of such a company are seized it is only proper that reasonable facilities are made by the Police to give access to the officers of the company to the books, to enable them to prepare and submit balance sheets and other documents in accordance with the Companies Act. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 581=33 Cr.L.J. 678=33 P.L.R. 824=138 Ind. Cas. 751.

—S. 294-A.

District Magistrate acting under S. 155 (2), Criminal P. C., can order investigation into a case under S. 294-A, Penal Code, even though such offence cannot be tried without complaint by Local Government or by any officer empowered by Government in this behalf. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 581=33 P.L.R. 824=33 Cr.L.J. 678=138 Ind. Cas. 751.

—S. 295.

—Ss. 295, 379, 144, 143 and 425—Hut on agricultural land, turned without knowledge of land-lord into mosque—Pulling down of such hut by persons other than land-lord—Offence committed.

The use of a hut on an agricultural land, without the permission of the land-lord, as a public mosque with the azan or public call to prayers is entirely unwarranted; and if the hut is not a mosque but a particular community were only attempting to convert it into one, it is clearly not "a place of worship" under the law. Where none of the members of the community was in a position validly to make the implied dedication, a mere fact of saying azan does not make it a public mosque. The hut cannot also be regarded as "any object held sacred by any class of persons" within the meaning of S. 295. Nothing of religious reverence, or sacred character, could attach to the hut apart from its attempted conversion into a mosque as this attempt itself is contrary to law; to allow any sacred character to the hut would be to enable the community under the guise of religion to vest the shed as a public mosque in the religious body for whose observance it was to be used, to the detriment of the land-lords, who had only settled the land with the tenant for agricultural purposes. Where the azan or public call to prayers is found to have begun only about a year before, the landlords do not lose by prescription their right to eject the tenant for the attempted perversion or misuse of the land, rendering it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. Though this would not entitle others some of whom are amongst the land-lords of the village, to take the law into their hands yet their destruction of the hut does not constitute an offence under S. 295. The conviction under this section is bad in law.

That the hut standing on this land, though it was destroyed, was not a mosque properly so called does not mean the failure of the charges under Ss. 144 and 143. Where the common object of destroying the mosque makes no reference to S. 295, and the destruction of the hut, even if it was not a mosque, clearly amounts in the circumstances to mischief as defined in S. 425, Penal Code, it follows that the unlawful assembly must be taken to have had the common object of committing mischief in respect of the hut. The conviction under S. 144 or S. 143, as the case may be, is proper.

Where the charges under S. 379 did not refer to the common object of the unlawful assembly, but the charges of theft were intended by the Magistrate to refer to the acts of individual accused apart from their doings as members of the unlawful assembly and there was no finding that any of the accused individually took away any of the materials of the hut, the conviction under S. 379 against the accused cannot be sustained. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 492=42 Cr.L.J. 579=23 P.L.T. 81=194 Ind. Cas. 476.

—S. 295—Ahir wearing sacred thread after due ceremony—Brahmins breaking it away.

In popular estimation Ahir are not regarded as anything higher than Sudras.

If Ahirs are Sudras and therefore not entitled to wear the sacred thread, it cannot be said that wearing the sacred thread is a part of their religion and therefore the damaging or destroying of a thread, worn by them in assertion of a mere claim to higher Rank, by Brahmins who are entitled to wear such thread cannot be an insult to their religion, nor can an Ahir be supposed likely to regard such an act as an insult to his religion. But even supposing for the sake of argument that Ahirs are entitled to wear the sacred thread, the Brahmins by breaking the sacred thread or threads regarded as sacred by the Ahir do not bring themselves within scope of S. 295. It is clear that the accused cannot by any means be supposed to have the intention of insulting the religion of the Ahir. Though it is conceivable that if a Mohammadan or a Christian or an atheist tore off the sacred thread which was being worn by a Hindu entitled to or even claiming to be entitled to wear it and the assailant at the same time indicated disrespect for the thread, such a person might be conceived to know that the person whose thread was so treated would be likely to consider it an insult to his religion. But where persons observing the same religion break the thread of someone whom they regarded as an upstart wearing something which he was not entitled to wear, neither the victim of assault would be likely to consider that act an insult to his religion nor the assailants could be considered to have the knowledge that he was likely so to do. In such a case, the conviction of the Brahmin assailants under S. 295, cannot be sustained. A.I.R. 1940 Oudh. 348=41 Cr.L.J. 550=1940 O.W.N. 509=15 Luck. 696=1940 A.W.R. 230=188 Ind. Cas. 128.

—Ss. 295, 297.

Four accused entered the premises of the complainant and only one of them demolished the wall which he was constructing and took the pindi of the Naika Gossain which was worshiped by the by the complainant and his family, from the niche and threw it into a drain. The accused were charged and convicted under S. 295:

Held, that the complainant and his family members could not constitute a class of persons within the meaning of S. 295, the framing of the charge and conviction under S. 295 was, therefore, erroneous. The accused could, however, be convicted under S. 297 in view of Ss. 236 and 237, Criminal P.C. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 414=21 P.L.T. 121=41 Cr. L. J. 810=189 Ind. Cas. 867.

—S. 295—Sentence — Criminal trespass into Hindu temple — Consecutive sentences for both offences—Improper.

When the accused enter into a Hindu Temple and damage its property, the offence under S. 447 is inseparable from that under S. 295 and it is improper to pass consecutive sentences for each of the offences under the sections, for both really are one and the same offence. 82 Ind. Cas. 37=25 Cr. L. J. 1173=A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 50.

—S. 295—Entry by untouchables—Untouchable entering temple and defiling sacred object.

When custom observed for many centuries ordains that an untouchable whose very touch is in the opinion of devout Hindus pollution should not enter the enclosure surrounding the shrine of any Hindu God and when an untouchable with that knowledge deliberately enters a temple and defiles the idol he commits an offence within the purview of S. 295. 76 Ind. Cas. 299=25 Cr. L. J. 155=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 121.

—S. 295—Essentials—Intention or knowledge to insult.

The accused, when he was rebuilding his house, had no idea that he was likely to do any damage to the walls of the mosque by placing the ends of his rafters in them. He could not have known that such damage was likely to result as would be considered by Mohammadans as an insult to their religion.

Held, that the accused was not guilty under S. 295. 67 Ind. Cas. 586=3 L. L. J. 247.

—S. 295—Killing of dedicated bull — Whether offence.

The killing of a dedicated bull for the sake of the meat is not an offence under S. 295 of the Penal Code. 21 Cr. L. J. 453=56 Ind. Cas. 437 (Pat.).

—S. 295—Defilement—Pollution—Caste.

A Moothan, of the Sudra caste in Malabar, can enter the Nallambalam or outer precincts of a temple, without polluting the temple within S. 295, I.P.C. The word 'defile' in the section cannot be confined to the idea of making dirty but must also be extended to ceremonial pollution. 41 Mad. 980=24 M.L.T. 181=19 Cr. L. J. 960=47 Ind. Cas. 812.

—S. 295—Killing of cow.

The killing of cow even if done with the intention of offending the religious susceptibilities of others is no offence under S. 295, Penal Code. 10 P.R. 1918 Cr.=1 P.W.R. 1918 Cr.=160 P.L.R. 1917=19 Cr. L. J. 314=44 Ind. Cas. 330 (F.B.).

12—F. Y. D.—10.

Where a new edition of a book published before enactment of S. 295-A, is published after its enactment, its author can be convicted under that section when his connection with the publisher is proved. A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 310=1941 O.W.N. 480=42 Cr. L. J. 429=16 Luck. 674=1941 A.W.R. 118=193 Ind. Cas. 516.

—S. 295-A.

Under S. 295-A, the prosecution must prove more than under S. 298; they must show insult for the sake of insulting and with an intention which springs from malice and malice alone. To a charge under this section, therefore, it would be a defence to say: "I had no malicious intention towards a class, but I did intend to wound or shock the feelings of an individual so that attention might, however rudely, be called to the reform which I had in view." What is punishable under S. 295-A is not so much the matter of the discourse, written or spoken, as the manner of it. The Court must therefore look with great care at the words used. If the words used caused persons to feel insulted but were only such as might possibly wound and in fact did so, then there would be no offence under the section; if the words used were bound to be regarded by any reasonable man as grossly offensive and provocative, and were maliciously intended to be regarded as such then an offence would have been committed. It is no defence to a charge under S. 295-A, for anyone merely to say that he was writing a pamphlet in reply to one written by adherent of another religion who has attacked his own religion. If he chooses to write such a pamphlet, he must take care of the language which he employs. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 199=40 Cr. L. J. 640=1939 Rang.L.R. 302=182 Ind. Cas. 96.

—S. 296 — Offence under — Disturbance of religious procession.

A procession can be lawfully engaged on a highway in the performance of religious worship or religious ceremonies and it does not change its character merely because the music has been stopped before a mosque. It cannot therefore be contended that as the music had stopped when the disturbance took place, the processionists were not then lawfully engaged in the performance of religious worship or religious ceremonies within the meaning of S. 296, I.P. Code. I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 657=A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 132=50 Cr. L. J. 329=1948 N.L.J. 340.

—S. 296—Erection of mosque on undertaking by Muhammadans of locality that they would not raise objection to Hindus playing music on highway—Undertaking, if binding on entire community—Playing of music, if per se offence.

A new mosque was allowed to be built on objections having been raised by the Hindus on certain undertakings by the leading and influential Muhammadan residents of the locality. The undertaking was not to raise any "obstruction to music of any kind in Hindu houses or in connection with temple processions going and coming along the highroad":

Held, that the undertaking was binding on the entire Muslim community. Consequently, the playing of music near the mosque would not by itself amount to an offence under S. 296, unless there was something more in the nature of substantial and not merely fanciful disturbance of the worship. A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 496=(1945) 2 M. L. J. 200=58 L. W. 409=1945 M.W.N. 569.

—S. 296.

There is nothing in S. 296, I. P. C., to justify the conclusion that the persons themselves engaged in performing of religious worship or ceremony cannot cause disturbance to another community. A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 199=I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 295=1943 N.L.J. 352=44 Cr. L.J. 782=208 Ind. Cas. 417.

—S. 296.

—S. 296—Tazia procession.

Where some Muhammadans took a tazia procession through a private grove as a result of which a dispute ensued between Hindus and Muhammadans and the accused were convicted of an offence under S. 296, and it appeared that the Muhammadans had not established any right to take the tazia through the grove:

Held, that no offence under S. 296 was committed. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 196=40 O.W.N. 582=34 Cr. L.J. 778=144 Ind. Cas. 540.

—S. 296—Causing disturbance—Spreading false rumour.

The essential ingredient of an offence under S. 296 is the doing of an act which causes a disturbance. The mere spreading of false rumours, although they result in serious consequences, cannot amount to 'causing a disturbance.' 17 A. L. J. 820=20 Cr. L. J. 421=51 Ind. Cas. 197.

—S. 296—Persons carrying temple flags—Obstruction—Whether an offence.

The carrying of flags through public streets in a procession of certain Lodhas to a temple with the sanction of public authorities is the performance of religious ceremony and the persons carrying them constituted an assembly lawfully engaged in religious ceremony. An attack on such a procession is an offence under S. 296. 34 All. 78=8 A.L.J. 1150=12 Cr. L.J. 573=12 Ind. Cas. 837.

—S. 296—Procession in public streets before the mosque—Procession during the notified hours.

No persons have any right to pass a mosque with music so as to disturb religious worship going on therein during the hours notified as the hours of religious worship. Under S. 296, I. P. C., the accused need not have active intention to disturb religious worship. It is sufficient if knowing they were likely to disturb it by their music, they took the risk and did actually cause disturbance. 34 Mad. 92=7 M. L. T. 430=11 Cr.L.J. 400=21 M.L.J. 71=6 Ind. ## —S. 296—Disturbing assembly lawfully engaged in worship—Highway—Religious procession.

Held, that as no assembly can be lawfully engaged within the meaning of S. 296 on a highway, the accused could not be convicted of an offence under that section for having taken possession of decrees from certain boys who were beating them on a public road to summon people for a procession during Muharram, which the accused restored to them the next day. The chief court in quashing conviction of the accused refused to consider whether the action of the accused constituted a technical offence under any other provision of law. 33 P.W.R. 1909 (Cr.)=119 P.L.R. 1909=3 Ind. ## —S. 297—"Trespass"—Interpretation.

The word "trespass" used in S. 297, I.P.Code, is not to be interpreted with any reference to S. 441, I.P.Code. 53 C.W.N. 106=A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 104=50 Cr. L. J. 135.

—S. 297—Ss. 297, 441—Meaning and scope of "trespass."

Section 297 fully deals with offences to which it refers and is self-contained and requires interpretation by no reference to S. 441. The word "trespass" in S. 297, means any violent or injurious act committed in such place and with such knowledge or intent as defined in that section. Section 297 does not refer to "religious feelings," though the kind of feelings, which comes within the section is clearly limited in its nature by the second paragraph to the section by reference to a place of worship, to a place of sepulchre, to feelings of a spiritual nature than a material kind, feeling associated with such sacred places. It does not punish acts which are merely of earthly vanity or pride.

That S. 297 is not limited to feelings of a religious nature is clear by the fact that in S. 298, which follows it, "religious feelings" are expressly referred to, Section 297 does not refer only to "intention." It refers also to trespass which is likely to wound the feelings.

The complainant erected stones in memory over his dead daughter and two children, over their ashes in the cremation ground. The complainant's son-in-law, eleven years after the death of his wife, as a result of a dispute about money matters with the complainant went to the cremation ground and deleted the name of the complainant from all the stones on the ground that they were erected out of money provided by him:

Held, that on the evidence and circumstances of the case the accused's (son-in-law's) trespass was committed with something more than knowledge; it was committed with intent to wound the feelings of the complainant. It was done in a spirit of spite and vindictiveness, and it was by injuring the complainant's feelings that the accused's feelings of spite and vindictiveness had to be satisfied. This was not a case where the feelings which were wounded were merely worldly feelings of vanity and pride. The fact that the stones were erected out of the money provided by the accused did not give him the right to enter the cremation ground and delete the name of the complainant therefrom. A.I.R. 1941 Sind 33=42 Cr. L. J. 454=I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 316=193 Ind. Cas. 616.

—Ss. 297, 295.

Four accused entering complainant's house and one of them demolishing wall being constructed by him and throwing away pindi of Naika Gossain worshipped by complainant and his family into drain—Conviction under S. 295 is erroneous—Accused can be convicted under S. 297 by reason of Ss. 236 and 237, Criminal P.C. A.I.R. 1940 Pat 414=21 P.L.T. 121=41 Cr. L. J. 810=189 Ind. Cas. 867.

—S. 297.

Quaere.—It is very doubtful whether those accused who are guilty of an offence under S. 297, can be convicted under S. 448 as well and awarded a separate sentence on a charge of trespass so framed. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 414=21 P.L.T. 121=41 Cr. L. J. 810=189 Ind. Cas. 867.

—S. 297—Damage done to graves in the land.

The word 'trespass' in S. 297, has not the same meaning, as that attached to the expression 'criminal trespass' in S. 441, and it means 'any violent or injurious act committed in such place and with such knowledge or intention as is defined in the section'.

Although certain persons may have been found by the Civil Court to be the owners of certain land, and have been put khas possession thereof by the Civil Court, that does not entitle them to disturb any graves that may be found existing in that land or to damage any structure that may have been raised over such graves, if by such act or acts the feelings of any person interested in the graves are likely to be wounded. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 459=36 C.W.N. 544=33 Cr. L. J. 517=137 Ind. Cas. 872.

—S. 297—Essentials — Entering mosque for prayer—Uttering abuses — Intention to insult made out but trespass was not—Not liable.

The petitioner had gone to mosque for midday prayer as usual; when the service was over he was asked by some others why he had on former occasions abused the moulvi and the congregation. On his attempting a denial, witness was sent for and an altercation followed, the petitioner then began to abuse all and sundry employing obscene epithets and uttering threats:

Held, that the intention of wounding the feelings of the moulvi and congregation was quite clear but the alleged "trespass" was not and that the conviction under S. 297 was wrong.

Held further, that the mere fact that the petitioner was a trustee does not take this case out of the purview of S. 297, and in the circumstances an offence under S. 504 was committed and that being a cognate offence conviction was altered under that section. 81 Ind. Cas. 41=1 Rang. 690=25 Cr.L.J. 553=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 106.

—S. 297—Not the trespass in S. 441.

Section 441 cannot be read into S. 297 with any intelligible result. The term "trespass" in S. 297 appears to mean any violent or injurious act committed in such place and with such knowledge or intention as is defined in that Section. 81 Ind. Cas. 41=1 Rang. 690=25 Cr. L. J. 553=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 106.

—S. 297 — Evidence and Procedure — Local Inspection—Magistrate's own opinion is not evidence—Practice.

In a case under S. 297, the magistrate went to the alleged burial ground accompanied by pleaders representing both parties and proceeded to have the ground removed at various spots which were pointed out to him.

He unearthed, two small bones which he thought were human collar bones, and also found some matting and some pieces of bamboo. On this inspection he came to the conclusion that the place was a burial ground and convicted the accused:

Held, that this proceeding was entirely irregular. If he had desired to have very sure evidence adduced as to whether this land was a graves-yard it is possible that an investigation of the character which he himself conducted personally as to the results of which he himself in effect gave evidence, might have with due reverence been carried out by properly qualified official persons and their evidence in Court afterwards might have been of great assistance and value to him. Judicial officers cannot and are not legally permitted to find out for themselves the facts of a case they have to decide. 81 Ind. Cas. 602=1 Pat. L.R. (Cr.) 256=25 Cr. L. J. 954=A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 537.

The word trespass in the section must be taken in its original meaning and there is no reason to restrict the meaning of the word which covered any injury or offence done and to couple it with entry upon property. 18 A. 395; 33 A. 773, Foll. Where A was found in a mosque having sexual intercourse with a woman B, both A and B were held guilty under this section. 73 Ind. Cas. 935=45 All. 529=21 A.L.J. 455=4 L.R.A.(Cr.) 79=24 Cr. L. Held: that they had not committed any criminal offence. 65 Ind. Cas. 424=20 A.L.J. 93=23 Cr.L.J. 72=A.I.R. 1922 All. 184.

—S. 297—Offence under — Essentials of — 'Trespass', meaning of.

The essence of an offence under S. 297 is trespass, and before a person can be convicted under that section it must be proved that there was a trespass by him with the intention and in the place mentioned in the section. The term 'trespass' is used in its strict legal sense and means an unjustifiable intrusion upon property in possession of another. 56 Ind. Cas. 235 (Pat.).

—S. 297—Disturbances to persons assembled to perform funeral ceremony.

The accused came to the cremation ground and told the complainant and his relatives not to cremate the body of their daughter and on being asked why, said that they would state this reason to the police. Held, that the mere utterance of the words 'do not cremate the body' unaccompanied by any attempt to prevent the cremation or to interfere if the cremation was persisted in, was not a disturbance within S. 297 of the Penal Code. 2 P.R. (1919) Cr.=44 P.L.R. 1919=4 P.W.R. 1919 Cr.=20 Cr. L. J. 145=49 Ind. Cas. 337.

—S. 297—'Trespass'—Land of accused—Digging up old graves—Presumption.

'Trespass' in S. 297 of the Penal Code, has not the same meaning as in 'criminal trespass' defined in S. 441 and denotes a wrongful Act; and the act of a person who destroyed or disturbed a place of sepulchre with the intention of wounding the feelings of any person or with the knowledge that the feelings of any person are likely to be wounded was wrongful and amounted to a trespass within S. 297 no matter whether the land in which the 'place of sepulchre' was included did or did not belong to such person. 18 A. 395; 33 A. 773; 40 C. 548, Foll. Held Per Le Rossignol, J.—'Trespass in' S. 297 of the Penal Code must be construed in its natural sense, i.e., unauthorised entry upon the property of another. Assuming that the sale of a 'closed graveyard' might be valid, the sale could not in law pass to the vendee any proprietary rights in the graves which existed on the land at the time of sale. 27 P.P.R. 1913 (P.C.), Dist. The accused must be presumed to have known that by the destruction of graves, be they old or new, the feelings of the persons whose relatives were buried in the graves were likely to be wounded. 23 P.R. —S. 297—Burial ground—It must be in use—Trespass—Meaning of.

It is not necessary for the purpose of S. 297 that a burial ground should be in use. Trespass in that section means any violent or injurious act and is not restricted to the same meaning attached to 'criminal trespass' in S. 441. 40 Cal. 548=14 Cr. L. J. 117=17 C.W.N. 534=18 Ind. Cas. 677.

—S. 297 — Digging up graves and exposing bones of dead bodies.

A joint owner who dug up the graves and exposed the bones of the persons buried, in spite of the remonstrances of their relations, is guilty under S. 297. 33 All. 773=8 A.L.J. 927=12 Cr. L. J. 532=12 Ind. Cas. 300.

—S. 297—Trespass on sepulchre—Sepulchre—Meaning of.

It is not necessary to prove that the trespass was committed on a place set apart for funeral rites or as a depository for the remains of the dead. It is sufficient if it is proved that the trespass occurred on any place of sepulchre. The trespass contemplated in S. 297 is such a trespass as is defined by the I.P.C.

A place where only isolated and secret cases of burial have taken place in the course of many years, cannot be called a sepulchre. 10 Cr.L. J. 160=2 Ind. Cas. 825 (Bom.).

—Ss. 298, 299 — Muhammadans slaughtering cow.

Where the Muhammadan accused are charged with slaughtering a cow and there is no finding that insulting words were uttered or insulting gestures were made or that anything was done with the deliberate intention of wounding the religious feelings of the Hindus, the conviction of the accused under S. 298 cannot stand. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 471=44 Cr. L. J. 30=21 Pat. 315=24 P.L.T. 16=203 Ind. Cas. 282.

—S. 298,

It is no defence to proceedings under S. 298, that religious feelings were deliberately shocked or wounded by the defendant in order to draw attention to some matter in need of reform. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 199=40 Cr. L. J. 640=1939 Rang. L. R. 302=182 Ind. Cas. 96.

—Ss. 298, 299—Killing of cow in full view of Hindu houses.

Section 298 is much wider in its scope than S. 295 and includes any action which is known to wound the religious feelings of others.

Motive is not to be confused with intention. If a man knows that a certain consequence will follow from his act it must be presumed in law that he intended that consequence to take place although he may have had some quite different ulterior motive for performing the act.

Held, that the accused must have known that the killing of the cow in the presence of Hindus would lead to wounding of their religious feelings and he must be supposed to have intended the necessary consequences of his acts and is guilty under S. 298. A.I.R. 1937 All. 13=1936 A.L.J. 1197=38 Cr. L. J. 202=1936 A.W.R. 1024=166 Ind. Cas. 373 (1).

—Ss. 298, 426—Wounding religious feelings—Mischief—Pollution of food at a caste dinner.

Throwing a shoe adjacent to where some people were seated for a dinner with the object of polluting the food and making it impossible for them to partake of the dinner is not mischief under S. 426, which deals with a physical injury arising from a physical cause. Nor is it within S. 298. 1901 A.W.N. 212=24 A. 155.

1. Applicability and scope.

—S. 299—Applicability—Injury not likely to cause death.

Where it cannot be said that the injuries were likely to cause death, Section 299 will not apply. The words in S. 299 "or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death" must be read in the light of the language of Section 300. 73 Ind. Cas. 49=9 O.L.J. 490=26 O.C. 18=24 Cr.L.J. 513=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 97.

—Ss. 299 (3), 300 (2) and (4) and 304 (Second part)—Scope and applicability.

Per Pollock, J.—The third clause of S. 299, the fourth clause of S. 300, and the second part of S. 304, I. P. Code, are intended to apply primarily at least, to cases in which there was no intention to cause death or bodily injury, such as reckless driving or shooting, and the second clause of S. 300 is intended to apply, primarily at least, to cases in which the accused knew that the particular person was likely, from some peculiarity of constitution or other special cause to die of an injury that would not ordinarily cause death. Where there was an intention to cause bodily injury and death has ensued, the question will ordinarily be whether the injury which the accused intended to inflict was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death or was merely likely to cause death, and that will depend mainly on the weapon used, the force with which it was used, the number of blows struck, and the part of the body injured. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 931=222 Ind. Cas. 389=47 Cr.L.J. 441=A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 120=1945 N.L.J. 612.

—S. 300, paras 1, 2 and 3—Scope.

Held, that the language of para. 1 of S. 300 was not limited to the case where the victim was a sick man; it was enough if the accused knew that the injury was likely to cause the death. The effect of S. 86, was to bring the offence within the purview of S. 300, para 2.

Held, further that the offence also fell under S. 200, para 3 and hence the accused was guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 420=23 P.L.T. 725=21 Pat. 250=9 B.R. 36=43 Cr.L.J. 883=202 Ind. Cas. 637.

—S. 300, cls. (1) and (3), scope and applicability.

Clause (1) of S. 300, contemplates the intention to cause death. Intention is always a question of fact and when proved, is an almost necessary inference from established facts. As a basic rule, one may say that when the doer of an act knows that his act will result in death, he should be deemed to have intended to cause death. Every man is in law deemed to know and to intend the natural and probable consequences of his act. Clause (1) would, therefore, apply only when either the culprit or culprits knew or must have known that death would be the result of his or their act. For cases that fall within cl. (3), it is not necessary that the culprits should have knowledge of death so long as the intended injuries are sufficient to cause death. The question of the sufficiency of these injuries is a matter of evidence and presumably a medical witness is in the best position to give evidence on the point. The correct principle is that a case falls within cl. (3), when the degree of probability of death is very great and certainly so where death is the inevitable result of the intended injuries, whether the culprits intended death or not or even did not know that death would result. Each case has to be judged in the light of the degree of the probability of death and not in the light of the intelligence or knowledge of the culprit, because to do so would place an almost intolerable and unjustifiable burden on the prosecution. A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 245=I.L.R. (1939) Lah. 77=41 P.L.R. 443=40 Cr.L.J. 712=182 Ind. Cas. 900.

—S. 300 (i), (ii), (iii) and (iv)—Knowledge or intention — Distinction between several subsection.

One broad distinction between S. 300, cl. (iv) and the first three clauses, is that in the latter the important thing is the intention to kill, while the former says nothing about it. 263 P.L.R. 1914=31 P.R. 1914 Cr.=45 P.W.R. 1914 Cr.=15 Cr.L.J. 610=25 Ind. Cas. 522.

—S. 300, para. (2)—Intention to cause such bodily injury, etc., meaning of.

Per Mosely, J. in order of reference. — The expression "intention to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death" merely means an intention to cause a particular injury which injury is, or turns out to be, one likely to cause death. It is not the death itself which is intended, nor the effect of the injury. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 259=42 Cr.L.J. 124=1940 Rang. L.R. 441=191 Ind. Cas. 306 (F.B.).

—S. 300, para. (2) — Applicability.

Illustration (b) to S. 300 appears to indicate that this paragraph was only intended to be invoked when some injury which would not in the ordinary course of nature cause death was known to be likely to cause death by the offender in consequence of the latter being aware of some abnormal condition of the deceased. This appellant could not possibly have known that the wounds he inflicted were likely to cause death. In the absence of any evidence to indicate that a blow on a particular part of a person was intended to be given on a more vital part it must be held that the offender inflicted the blow where he intended. Therefore the second paragraph of Section 300, I. P. C. does not apply. 73 Ind. Cas. 49=9 O.L.J. 490=26 O.C. 18=24 Cr.L.J. 513=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 97.

—S. 300 (3) contains new definition of culpable homicide amounting to murder—Knowledge of effect of injury, if necessary—Meaning of S. 300 (3).

Section 300, sub-s. (3), contains new definition of culpable homicide which is not contained in S. 299 and says that it amounts to murder. This sub section does not mean any more than doing an act with the intention of causing such bodily injury to any person as is or turns out to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Knowledge of the effect of the injury is not required. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 259=1940 Rang. 441=42 Cr.L.J. 124=191 Ind. Cas. 306 (F.B.).

—S. 303, para. (3)—Scope—No intention to cause death—No injury likely to cause death—Death by supervening causes—No offence of murder.

Appellant failed to pay rent and deceased reported that he was of bad character. While the deceased was supervising the cutting of jungle by 4 labourers and his two sons, the appellant appeared, and aimed a lathi at him and, when the deceased caught it, took into his right hand his banha and struck the deceased twice on the leg, and when he fell on the ground, once on the shoulder and then ran away. The deceased was then taken to the Thana and thence to hospital where he died, as the Medical officer reported perhaps due to shock of the wounds or haemorrhage. Held: if there was any intention to cause death and death was caused by a wound or wounds inflicted in pursuance of that intention the case would be one of murder, even though none of the wounds which the accused inflicted before being interrupted were of a character which would, within the knowledge of the accused or in the ordinary course of nature, have proved fatal. No intention to cause death is proved and consequently, the case will not fall within the first paragraph of section 300. Nor again can the blow be said to have been struck with the intention of causing bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Death from haemorrhage perhaps due to having been carried more than 6 miles cannot therefore, be said to have been a normal result of the wound. The case, therefore, does not fall within the third paragraph of section 300. 73 Ind. Cas. 49=9 O.L.J. 490=26 O.C. 18=24 Cr.L.J. 513=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 97.

—S. 300, fourthly—Consideration of, when arises.

Where knowledge on the part of an accused person is established under S. 300, a further question as to whether the accused struck the blow without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death arises. Such question, however, does not arise where one of the three intentions under S. 300 is established. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr.L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—S. 300, cl. (4), when applies.

Clause (4) of S. 300, comes into play only if no other clause applies and where the intention of the assailants as inferred from the result of their act could at least be that of causing such bodily injuries as the assailants would have known to be likely to cause the death of their victim, the invocation of cl. (4) is altogether erroneous. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 593=39 P.L.R. 327=38 Cr.L.J. 1073=171 Ind. Cas. 351.

—S. 300, Para (4), applicability of.

The provision in the fourth part of S. 300, I. P. C., applies to a person who commits an act of the nature referred to and has no intention of causing an injury to any particular individual. Where the accused has deliberately fired shots at the deceased, this provision does not apply. A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 432=41 C.W.N. 1187=38 Cr.L.J. 863=170 Ind. Cas. 29.

—S. 300, para (4)—Scope.

The fourth paragraph of S. 300 can never be invoked in a case where there was intention of causing specific bodily injury to a particular person. Illustration (b) shows that it only applies to a case of dangerous action without an intention to cause specific bodily injury to any person. 73 Ind. Cas. 49=9 O.L.J. 490=26 O.C. 18=24 Cr.L.J. 513=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 97.

2. Attack by several persons.

—Ss. 299, 300, 302 and 325—Assault by several persons on one woman causing injuries leading to death—Some assailants not identified—Offence—Conviction under S. 332—Propriety.

Where the victim of an assault by several persons dies of injuries which were caused by the violence not of one single person but of several persons belabouring the victim, some of whom have not been identified, it is not safe to convict the accused of the offence of murder. The safer course would be to convict the accused of the offence of grievous hurt under S. 325, I. P. Code. 3 A.I.Cr.D. 147=A.I.R. 1949 Ajmer 49=50 Cr.L.J. 1003.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Offence under—Merciless beating—Death by consequent shock and haemorrhage.

If a number of persons armed with formidable weapons administer a prolonged, merciless and indiscriminate beating to a man and he dies by the consequent shock and haemorrhage, the offence committed is murder, because the assailants in such a case must be attributed the intention to cause such injury as is likely to cause death, and they cannot be heard to say that they did not intend what was a likely result of their act and that they did not intend to cause death because either intentionally or by accident no vital parts of the body were hit. 49 P.L.R. 137=A.I.R. 1948 Lah. 58=49 Cr.L.J. 26.

—Ss. 299, 300, 302 and 149—Concerted attack on deceased—Multiple injuries inflicted—Intention is to kill deceased or at least to inflict injuries sufficient to cause death in ordinary course—Death sentence held appropriate except in case of one accused who was young and under influence of other accused.

Two persons were attacked by a number of persons armed with deadly weapons and were done to death. One of the deceased persons had ten injuries two of which were on the head and in view of the fact that they had fractured the skull, the doctor was of opinion that each one of them was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course. The other deceased person had as many as 25 injuries spread on all parts of his body. His right ulna bone and two ribs were fractured. Death was due to shock caused by all the injuries collectively:

Held, that taking into consideration the concerted attack to which the dead men were subjected and the multiple injuries that were inflicted upon them, there could not be any doubt that the intention of their assailants was to kill them or at least to inflict injuries that were sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course;

Held further that as the offence was premeditated and brutal and there were no extenuating circumstances, the sentence of death under S. 302/149 was appropriate in the case of all the accused except one who being the nephew of the principal accused and very young (20 years old) it could be said that he had acted under the influence of the older members of the party particularly his uncle and, therefore, his sentence should be commuted to transportation for life. Unlawful assembly with object to obstruct procession—Stones thrown and other violent acts done—One member of assembly stabbing Sub-Inspector of Police who dying as result—Accused participating in throwing stones—Accused held, guilty under S. 147 only and not under S. 149 read with S. 302—Only one member held, guilty of murder. Eight persons prosecuted for murder—Death of deceased by spear wound—Only one man armed with spear; —Ss. 300, 304, 147, 149—Unlawful assembly—Conviction under S. 304, requirements of.

In the case of an unlawful assembly, conviction under S. 304 must depend upon one of the two alternatives—either that the person convicted has been proved individually to have committed the offence or that the person convicted has been proved to have been a member of an unlawful assembly, that is to say, of an association of persons having a common unlawful object. A.I.R. 1942 All. 225=1942 A.L.J. 255=1942 A.W.R. 109=43 Cr.L.J. 654=201 Ind. Cas. 518.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 34—Murder and robbery—Only one instrument used—Who gave blow not known—Offence.

A woman was found robbed and murdered in a village. The three accused who produced the stolen property belonged to the same village and were acquainted with the deceased. No explanation was offered by them as to the possession of the property but they merely denied its production. The instrument with which the murder was committed was a crowbar;

Held, that the accused were guilty of robbery but the fact that they were not willing to admit that they took part in the robbery which was proved against them ought not to prejudice the question whether they committed murder at the same time.

Held, further, that as there was only one instrument used, it was probable that only one of the assailants gave the actual blow, and as it was not known who was the assailant, the accused could only be convicted if it was found that there was common intention to commit murder within S. 34, Penal Code. The circumstances and the evidence showed that the accused committed this robbery, and that pursuant to their common intention to rob the deceased and avoid detection, they had the further intention of murdering her, and that they carried that intention out. —Ss. 300 and 302.—A body of six persons went to the house of the deceased with the common object of abducting a woman and murdering the deceased. On their arrival they separated into two bodies, one entrusted to abduct and another to murder. The murder was committed by the latter body:

Held, that each gang was guilty of murder under S. 302, as the murder was committed in pursuance of the common object of the unlawful assembly. A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 117=I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 554=42 Cr.L.J. 475=193 Ind. Cas. 666.

—Ss. 300 and 302.—Four persons taking part in commission of murder—No evidence to prove which of the accused committed crime:

Held, that in the circumstances of the case even if there was no evidence to prove as to which of the persons present in the house committed the murder, all the four could be convicted of murder. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 550=22 P.L.T. 1035=7 B.R. 802=42 Cr.L.J. 603=194 Ind. Cas. 622.

—Ss. 300 and 302.—Held, on facts, that there was no proof that the common intention was to cause injury known to be likely to cause death, though the combined effect of the injuries actually caused was likely to cause death. The offenders, however, knew that they were likely to cause not only hurt but grievous hurt and that the common intention of the party was to cause grievous hurt, for not only the common assault but also the individual assault committed by the accused was an extremely severe one. —Ss. 299 and 300—Attack with dangerous weapons by several persons—Instantaneous death—Persons inflicting injury not known—Offence.

If there was a joint attack with dangerous weapons by four or five persons on one man and the latter died almost on the spot as a result of the injuries inflicted on him, at least the offence of culpable homicide must be said to have been made out, and the mere fact that it is not possible to say who inflicted the fatal injury will not be sufficient to support the finding that no offence of murder of culpable homicide had been committed. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 43=1939 M.W.N. 879=50 L.W. 557=41 Cr.L.J. 337=186 Ind. Cas. 525.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Party of accused opening fire on party of deceased in revenge for insult—Accused firing but hitting no one—His companions firing and killing deceased.

A party of the accused consisting of three, opened fire on the party of the deceased in revenge for an insult of which the brother of the deceased was originally guilty. The shots fired by the accused did not hit any one but his two companions fired and hit the deceased:

Held, that S. 34, Penal Code, applied and the accused was guilty of murder. In the circumstances of the case, however, the sentence of death was reduced to one of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 485=42 P.L.R. 614=42 Cr.L.J. 82=191 Ind. Cas. 125.

—Ss. 300, 302, 149 and 34—Unlawful assembly—Joint responsibility.

Where one of the members of an unlawful assembly who is armed with a spear commits an offence under S. 302, when the unlawful assembly was prosecuting its common object which was unlawful, every member of the assembly is equally responsible under the terms of S. 149. It is immaterial whether any member individually intended to commit that offence or not. "Intention" is dealt with in S. 34, and can be considered in those cases only which are governed by it. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 53=41 P.L.R. 802=41 Cr.L.J. 348=186 Ind. Cas. 603.

—S. 302 — Murder with robbery — Common intention — Possession of stolen property by one of accused—Common intention.

Where it is shown that only one person is present at the scene of the theft and it is clear that the crime has been committed, it may well be that the logical conclusion to be drawn from that is that the possessor of the stolen property is the person who committed the crime; but in a case in which there are several persons involved and the question of common intention arises, great care must be taken not to assume that a person merely found in possession of stolen property should have attributed to him, for this reason alone, a common intention respecting the guilt of murder:

Held, after considering the facts and the circumstances of the case that the accused was guilty of robbery. A.I.R. 1939=Rang. 361=41 Cr.L.J. 44=184 Ind. Cas. 545.

—Ss. 300, 302, and 149.—Where a number of persons armed with lethal weapons gather together with the common object of assaulting a person, it clearly indicates that their common object was to cause grievous hurt with the weapons and that the death was the likely result of the beating they intended to administer. In such a case death is the likely consequence for which all the persons are responsible and as causing death in such circumstances is murder, all are guilty of it by virtue of S. 149. —Ss. 300 and 302—Sudden fight ensuing subsequent to exchange of abuse resulting in death—Common intention to commit murder cannot be inferred—Each participant only responsible for his acts.

Where, from the circumstances, it appears that the common intention of a party of accused was merely to abuse the other party for their insulting behaviour and possibly to use fists and accordingly there was an exchange of abuse between the parties and a sudden fight subsequently ensued resulting in death of one of the opposite party, a common intention to commit murder cannot be inferred. The whole affair is one of a sudden fight in which each participant is responsible only for the individual acts which can be proved against him and the accused in such a case cannot be convicted for any offence other than one under S. 323, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 747=40 Cr.L.J. 84=178 Ind. Cas. 605.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Offence committed.

Where two or more persons unite together and strike a series of blows with dangerous weapons on the body of the deceased, that it is impossible to identify any one of the wounds with any one of the assailants and nevertheless, if the deceased dies as a result of the injuries received, each of the assailants is guilty of the offence of murder. Where one assailant commits the offence by yielding to the threats of other, it is no mitigation of the circumstances. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 258=39 Cr.L.J. 554=4 B.R. 568=19 P.L.T. 476=175 Ind. —Ss. 299 and 300—Convictions.

If it is clear from the evidence who had delivered the fatal blow, that accused would be guilty of murder. Where it is not known which of the two accused has actually killed the deceased, but there is no manner of doubt that both of them acted in concert, both are guilty of murder. 1937 M.W.N. 1233.

—Ss. 300, 302 307, 34—Two accused attacking deceased suddenly—Injury by one causing death—Offence of each.

Where in a sudden fight, the two accused stabbed the deceased and the injury of only one of them was responsible for causing death, only that accused was guilty of murder who caused that injury; the other was guilty of attempt to murder for causing such injury which he knew to be likely to cause death. 1937 M.W.N. 725.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 34.

Where two persons charged under S. 302-34 can be held guilty of murder, it must be held that their common intention was the common intention to commit the crime of murder. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 24=38 Cr.L.J. 284=166 Ind. Cas. 701.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

Where a concerted attack is directed against the head of the victim which was smashed, the attack is made with the knowledge that the injury inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the offence is murder; and whether the attack is an attack by an individual or a concerted attack by more than one person, each person will be presumed to know the consequences of his act. It is not necessary that the common action should be the result of a premeditated plan, but the precise intention of the assailants acting in concert is a matter of inference from their conduct. A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 335=39 Cr.L.J. 131=I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 388=172 Ind. Cas. 367.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Concerted attack with bamboos.

Where two ordinary Burmans went to the house of the deceased with bamboo sticks and not das;

Held, that their common intention was not a common intention to commit the offence of murder. But when these two persons went together, each armed with male bamboo, it must have been within the contemplation of one of them that the result of their assault upon the deceased was likely to be his death, and hence, it must be presumed that they had the common intention of causing such injury as was likely to cause the death of the deceased. Consequently, the common intention was to commit the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 24=38 Cr.L.J. 284=166 Ind. Cas. 701.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Death caused during fracas—Person taking subsidiary part—Nature of evidence.

It is necessary in cases where there is a fracas and especially where intention is more particularly drawn to a person who is guilty of the act of stabbing, that the evidence against persons who are taking a subsidiary part should be consistent and clear from the beginning before it can be acted upon by a Court of justice. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 4=38 Cr.L.J. 366=166 Ind. Cas. 994.

—Ss. 300, 302, 24—Common intention—Held, that the accused shared the common intention to murder.

The primary intention of the accused and his confederates, W and P was to abduct T. The accused was armed with a dashe and he knew that his two confederates would also come equally armed to the place of ambush and they would resort to the use of force, if necessary, for the purpose of achieving their object. When they arrived at the place of ambush, he found that his confederates were not only armed with dashe but with guns also, and that one of them, W actually used his gun against K:

Held, that the accused should have then known that his confederates were prepared to go to the length of committing murder, if necessary, to achieve their object and if he did not share their intention to commit murder, if necessary to achieve their object, what he should have done was to abstain from taking further part in the matter. But he did not. Instead he used his dashe freely. And from that moment he must be deemed to have the same intention to commit murder as his two confederates. Scuffle between two parties—Deceased running to help his father—Accused No. 2 stabbing him with spear—Accused No. 1 then chopping his hand—Another member of the accused's party again stabbing him:

Held, that accused No. 1 ought to be convicted of murder although his was not the hand which inflicted the undoubtedly fatal wound. 1936 M.W.N. 644.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

If a party of persons armed with lathis make a concerted attack upon the deceased killing him on the spot after inflicting injuries on the head, they are all guilty of murder and they must have known that their acts were likely to cause death. 1935 M.W.N. 51.

—Ss. 300 and 304.

If the deceased received several injuries by the hand of several persons and it is not possible to locate whose injury caused death, the person inflicting a blow with a heavy dang is guilty under S. 324 only. (1935) 1935 M.W.N. 54.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 149.

Where a number of men make an attack with lathis on certain men and one of the latter is killed, all the men making the attack are guilty under S. 149 and other sections. —Ss. 300, 302 and 149—Large number of men armed with spears rushing and plunging spears—Offence.

If a number of men armed with spears rush at another and plunge their spears into his body, then there is only one inference in law, and indeed in fact, which can be drawn, and that is, that the common intention of the assailant was to kill their victim. All the accused are, therefore, punishable under S. 302 read with S. 149, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1935 All. 362=1935 A.W.R. 53=37 Cr.L.J. 32=159 Ind. Cas. 155 (2).

—Ss. 300 and 302—Common intention—Determination.

A mere common intention to commit murder in certain circumstances might not of itself, be sufficient to justify a finding that the accused and his companions had, at the time of the actual occurrence, the common intention of murdering a person. In order to decide whether or not the accused and his companions had the common intention of murdering him, it is necessary to consider what happened immediately before he was shot. Where several persons armed with lethal weapons, such as lathis and kantas, assault a single person and strike him several times on a vital part of the body, not only the person who actually inflicted the fatal blow, but all are guilty of causing his death, in as much as the death was caused in the prosecution of a common object, and the rioters, even before they moved to action, knew that death was likely to be committed in the prosecution of their common object. —Ss. 300, 302 and 149.

Where the common object of an unlawful assembly was only to be at the members of the opposite party, and during the prosecution of this object, one of them, on the spur of the moment and without premeditation, thrust a spear into the abdomen of a member of the opposite party and killed him:

Held, that it could not be said that the murder was committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly and the other members of the assembly could not be held guilty of murder under S. 302 read with S. 149, inasmuch as they could not be imputed with a knowledge that the murder was likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object. —Ss. 300, 302 and 34—Murder pre-arranged.

Whether the accused is alone and actually fires a fatal shot or whether he is with others and one of them fires the fatal shot is immaterial when the murder is pre-arranged. —Ss. 300, 302, 149—Large number of people attacking and killing deceased—Each individual's part not distinguishable—Offence.

Where a large number of people attack and cause the death of a man and there is no evidence to show what individual action any one particular man took and it is not possible to assume common intention to kill, it should be held that the death was caused by the persons as a whole and those persons should be charged under S. 149 read with S. 302. Per Baguley, J.—If, from the evidence as a whole and all the surrounding circumstances of the case, the Court is of opinion that a legitimate deduction may be made that at the time the robbery occurred the —Ss. 300, 302, 149—Mob murdering certain men—Common object—Inference—Accused not pleading innocent intention—Onus of proof that they did not share common object.

It may well be that a perfectly lawful assembly of citizens may become later a riotous mob and it may be that in the mob there will be a number of innocent people who do not share the common object of the rioters. When a person is found to be amongst a mob of rioters, the law will presume that he shares their common object and intention. If he does not share that common object and intention, the onus is upon him to prove his innocence. What the common object and intention of a mob is, can only be inferred from its actions.

Where a mob has murdered certain men, the only inference which can be drawn is that the common object of the mob was murder. If any of the accused did not share that common object, it is for them to prove that fact. When the defence is not that they were amongst the gathering of villagers with an innocent intention but that they were not there at all, they are bound to rebut the presumption that they shared in the common object of the mob. Held, that as the shooting down of Q was done in furtherance of the common intention, notwithstanding the absence of A from the scene of occurrence, A must be deemed to have been participating in the joint criminal action in the course of which the murder was committed and hence must be held constructively liable under S. 302. ## —Ss. 300, 304, 34, Part II, 325—Conviction in the alternative under the two sections—Identity of author of fatal injuries not known—Conviction.

Where a person was killed as a result of fatal injuries inflicted on his head, but the author of the injuries is not known, then unless there is a suggestion that S. 34, Penal Code applies, each of the accused must be held responsible for his own act and not for that of his co-accused. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 865=34 Cr.L.J. 1210=146 Ind. Cas. 221 (1).

—Ss. 300 and 302—Joint commission of offence—Common intention.

The mere fact that several persons took part in a crime, in the absence of a common intention, is not sufficient to convict them of that crime. Under S. 34, the existence of a common intention being the sole test of joint responsibility, it must be proved what the common intention was and that the common act for which the accused were to be made responsible was acted upon in furtherance of that common intention. The presumption of constructive intention must not be too readily applied or pushed too far. (1933) 142 Ind. Cas. 741=34 Cr.L.J. 404=15 N.L.J. 404.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 149.

Where a gang of persons with the common object of committing a dacoity is arrested and one of the members of the gang, in order to make an escape fires at the pursuers and one of the pursuers does, the other members of the gang cannot be convicted of an offence under S. 302 read with S. 149 although it may appear that the members of the gang carried arms in order to overawe the people of the village. ## —Ss. 300, 302, 34—Accused inciting others to cut the deceased to death—Death of deceased as a result—Offence committed by accused, nature of.

The accused and certain others armed with dah and spears attacked a house and the accused incited the others to set fire to the building and they set fire to the house; and on his inciting them to cut the deceased, they cut a woman to death:

Held, that the accused took an actual part in the assault and that under the provisions of S. 34, he was as much guilty of murder as the actual person who delivered the blow. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 236=11 Rang. 354=35 Cr.L.J. 41=146 Ind. Cas. 392.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304, 323—Joint assault—Fatal injury inflicted by one—Liability of all the assailants for murder—Common intention to kill.

Four coolies of a tea estate persons of very primitive belief and rudimentary intelligence, thinking that another person had by sorcery made one of them dumb, set upon him while he was sitting in a courtyard. One of them finding a knife in the pocket of the victim took it out and stabbed him fatally. All the four dragged him and buried him in a well. The Jury found the person who had used the knife guilty of murder but acquitted the three others of the charge of murder:

Held, that all the accused having taken part in the affray from the beginning with the intention to kill the deceased, all the four were guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 815=33 Cr.L.J. 663=139 Ind. Cas. 81 (F.B.).

—Ss. 300, 302, 304-II, 325—Joint assault—Death caused by single blow—Actual assailant unknown.

The fact that there were two assailants and only one blow was struck and that it is not shown who struck that blow is not sufficient to reduce an offence which otherwise amounts to murder, to one under S. 304-II or S. 325, Penal Code.

[The High Court reduced the sentence to transportation for life on a consideration of all the circumstances of the case including the fact that the origin of the fight was shrouded in obscurity]. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 538=32 P.L.R. 537=32 Cr.L.J. 1083=133 Ind. Cas. 887.

—Ss. 300, 302, 34, 325—Fatal blow by one—Liability of others—Absence of common intention, effect of.

Section 34 deals with the doing of separate acts similar or diverse, by several persons; and if all are done in furtherance of a common intention, each person is liable for the result of them all as if he had done them himself. But if there was no common intention to cause hurt to the deceased and the fatal blow struck by one of the accused was an unpremeditated act springing from the mind alone, then the other accused are not constructive participators in that act even though they may have struck one or more blows. Further, it cannot be held that though they did not participate in the act of murder owing to the absence of a common intention, still they are liable for a lesser offence arising out of the act of the other accused. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 749=12 Lah. 442=32 Cr.L.J. 1219=32 P.L.R. 925=134 Ind. Cas. 793.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

When several persons join in beating another with lathis and inflict such serious injuries on him that he dies shortly after the beating, all are guilty of the offence of murder without distinction. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 536=32 Cr.L.J. 645=32 P.L.R. 414=131 Ind. Cas. 122.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

Per Dalip Singh J.—If a large number of persons go to assault one man with dangs, it may be held that death is likely to ensue; this presumption, however, does not apply with the same force in the case where a large number of people are assaulting a similar large number of people even though some of them are armed with dangs and sticks. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 513=32 Cr.L.J. 888=132 Ind. Cas. 381.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

Per Coldstream, J.—Where two men together repeatedly strike another on his head with lathis with sufficient force to break his skull in several places, their offence must be held to fall under S. 300 (Thirdly), for their intention could not be other than to inflict such injury as is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. —Ss. 299 and 300—Several persons joining with common object—Proof of intention to commit murder—Liability of persons actually present.

Where one of the accused is shown to have been present when the fatal blow was struck and it is further proved that he shared with the others the intention to cause death or injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death he can be justly convicted of murder even though there is no proof that he struck any blow to the person murdered and that the person was killed by the blows struck by the other persons alone. 8 Rang. 603=130 Ind. —Ss. 300, 302 and 109—Conspiring to kill—No evidence who dealt the fatal blow—All guilty of abetment of murder.

It was found that two accused and the approver conspired to commit theft and in pursuance of that conspiracy to kill H in order to enable them to commit theft but there was no direct evidence as to who dealt the fatal blow:

Held, that the accused are guilty of abetment of murder under S. 302 read with S. 109. 11 Pat. L.T. 520=127 Ind. Cas. 566=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 164.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Intent to rob and if need be to kill any one obstructing—One person killed—Liability constructive.

Some persons went to another's house with the object of robbery, but with the intention of killing anyone who would obstruct them in the attainment of their object, and killed one person in the prosecution of such intention.

Held: that their liability was constructive it being impossible to say which of them was directly responsible for the death and punishment of death would not be justified. 120 Ind. Cas. 180=11 L.L.J. 20=31 Cr.L.J. 41=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 292.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Doubt as to who struck the fatal blow—All guilty of murder.

Where it cannot be found who among the assailants struck the blow which proved to be fatal all the assailants can be held guilty of murder: 35 All. 329, Foll. 118 Ind. Cas. 473=1929 Cr.C. 529=30 Cr.L.J. 944=A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 325.

—Ss. 300 and 302—At least two fatal injuries on the head—Could not have been caused by same instrument—Both liable for murder.

Where two assailants, bearing dangerous instruments assaulted the deceased and all the blows were aimed at the head, with the result that two fatal injuries were caused, and these injuries were such as could not be caused with one and the same instrument.

Held: that each of the two assailants was responsible for one of the fatal injuries and therefore, both were guilty under S. 302. 118 Ind. Cas. 50=30 Cr.L.J. 870=A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 125.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Fight between two parties—A member of one party struck with stick one of the other party—The latter struck the other on the head which proved fatal—Others not guilty on account of constructive liability.

Certain persons who were members of party A had the common unlawful object to resist a process-server and agents of the decree-holder who formed another party B and to cause hurt to their persons. Marpit began between the two parties in which, party A was faring badly. Then suddenly, S, a member of party B came on the scene and inflicted a blow with his stick on P, a member of party A, and in return P gave a blow to S causing a wound on his head which proved fatal:

Held, that the members of party A other than P were not guilty for the offence of murder on account of their constructive liability under S. 149; 20 W.R. Cr. 5 (F.B.), Foll.

Held, further that under the circumstances P could not be said to have committed offence under S. 302, but only of culpable homicide punishable under —Ss. 300, 302 and 149—Assailants armed with weapon found in immediate presence of deceased—Conviction under Ss. 302—149 is proper.

Where a small body of Mahomedans numbering between 50 and 100 was attacked without any proved provocation by several hundred Hindus and was pursued to some distance, as a result of which one Mahomedan died almost on the spot, another was fatally wounded and died eight days later and six Mahomedans were injured in less serious manner, and it was found that each of the accused was armed either with a sword, spear or lathi and they were found in the immediate presence of the persons actually killed:

Held, that conviction under S. 302 read with S. 149 would be right. 109 Ind. Cas. 120=26 A.L.J. 139=9 A.I.R. 249=9 L.R.A. Cr. 30=29 Cr.L.J. 472=A.I.R. 1928 All. 280.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 34—Common intention to murder—One did the deed—All guilty as principals.

Where four persons took a woman out with the knowledge and with the purpose that one of their number should murder her, and one of their number did murder her, then that murder is done in furtherance of the common intention of all and all the four men are guilty of the crime as principals under S. 34. 98 Ind. —Ss. 300 and 302—Armed to murder any resisting robbery—Two did the deed—All are liable.

Where four persons armed with deadly weapons fully prepared to commit murder in the event of resistance and two of them actually committed murder before any resistance was offered to them. Held that each of the robbers is equally guilty of the offence of murder. Where five persons assembled at the water-head to take water by force and armed themselves with deadly weapons to strike and vanquish anybody who should stand in their way and prevent them from accomplishing their purpose.

Held, that they constituted an unlawful assembly and became guilty of rioting when they used their deadly weapons in pursuance of their common object, and further that as every one of them knew that these weapons were likely to be used with deadly effect, they were all responsible if any one of them inflicted a fatal injury. 92 Ind. —Ss. 300 and 304.

Where five persons armed with dangerous weapons made an attack upon another and death was due to a single blow inflicted by one of them but who that one was, was not proved:

Held, they could not be convicted under S. 304 read with S. 34 but should be convicted under S. 325 read with S. 100 or rather S. 114, as they had armed themselves with dangerous weapons. 86 Ind. Cas. 337=6 L.L.J. 385=26 Cr.L.J. 753=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 117.

Where only one blow was struck on the head which resulted in the death and there was no evidence to show which of the accused struck the fatal blow:

—Ss. 300 and 304.

Grievous hurt causing death owing to a single blow on the head justifies conviction of all the assailants under S. 325 but not under S. 304, where who gave the blow is unknown. 84 Ind. Cas. 861=26 Cr.L.J. 381=6 L.L.J. 317=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 654.

—Ss. 300 and 302—With lathis—All joined in beating—Who gave the fatal blow—Immaterial—All guilty.

One B an elderly Kachhi was mercilessly beaten by the four accused. There had been litigation between B on the one side and two of the accused, on the other, in which B had been entirely successful. B was taken to the hospital where he died two days afterwards. All the accused had joined in beating B when he was on the ground with lathis and they inflicted such serious injury to him that he died two days afterwards:

Held, that they must have known that at the least they were causing injury which was likely to cause death, and if death resulted they are guilty of murder. In such cases it is immaterial by whose lathi the fatal injury is inflicted. 29 All. 282 is no longer good law. 74 Ind. Cas. 858=45 All. 727=21 A.L.J. 623=4 L.R.A. Where it is not shown that the accused did any act which caused the death of the deceased, he can only be convicted under S. 304 if it is shown that there was an unlawful assembly of five or more persons whose common object was to commit an offence under S. 304 and accused was one of them. 69 Ind. Where the evidence showed that four men armed with deadly weapons pursued the deceased and set upon him and killed him:

—Ss. 300, 302 and 34—Conjoint beating resulting in death—All guilty—When Excep. 4, would apply.

Where the accused all conjointly beat the deceased and caused his death, under S. 84, Penal Code, they are equally guilty of the offence of murder, Exception 4 to S. 300 would have been applicable to the facts of this case but for the facts that the assailants took undue advantage and acted in a cruel and unusual manner in inflicting serious injuries upon an old man of 69 years. 81 Ind. Cas. 35=4 L.L.J. 276=25 Cr.L.J. 347=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 260.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Several persons beating with heavy lathis—Natural consequence of such action presumed—All guilty of murder.

When one man sets about trouncing another with a heavy lathi, and still more when two or more do so, it is more than merely likely that one blow at least will land on the head of the man attacked, however careful his assailants may be to avoid the head, and that he will die of a fractured skull in consequence.

Every sane person of the age of discretion is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own act, and that in deciding what are the natural and probable consequences of an act the only safe rule to apply is to regard every actual consequence as a natural and probable consequence unless and until the contrary is affirmatively shown.

Where A joined B in beating C with heavy stick and in consequence C died of fractured skull:

Held, that A must be presumed to have intended together with B to cause C's death and both were guilty of murder. 64 Ind. Cas. 838=23 Cr.L.J. 54=A.I.R. 1921 Nag. 78.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Attack by several persons.

When in a fight among persons armed with lathis one dies from the injuries received by him, all the others are punishable under S. 304 as it would not be certain whose blow caused the death. 58 Ind. Cas. 942=21 Cr.L.J. 862 (All.).

—Ss. 299 and 300—Attack by several persons—Unpremeditated attack—Two persons—Death—Offence.

Two persons on receiving provocation delivered an unpremeditated attack on the deceased. It was not known who struck the fatal blow. Held, that both were guilty of an offence under S. 325, I.P.C. 2 P.W.R. 1920 Cr. =2 U.P.L.R. (Lah.) 22=21 Cr.L.J. 3=54 Ind. Cas. 51.

In a fight which ensued over the division of property between three persons, one of them was hit by a lathi and died. It did not appear which of the other two had struck the blow which caused his death. Held, that the accused were not acting in concert and none of them could be convicted of murder. 17 A.L.J. 1095.

Per Lindsay, J. C. (dissenting).—When the acts of a combination of persons are blows causing severe bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death each of the accused persons taking part in such combination is guilty of murder.

Per Kannaiyalal, A. J. C.:—Where persons go with a common object, each and every one becomes responsible for the acts of each and every other in execution and furtherance of their common purpose but not for unpremeditated acts beyond the original object and intention.

Per Rafique, A. J. C.:—

Where the cumulative effect of some or all injuries inflicted by several persons is death, all are guilty. —Ss. 299 and 300—Attack by several persons—Intention.

Four persons who attacked a man and caused his death are guilty of an offence under S. 302 if their common intention was to cause death or bodily injury likely to cause death or sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and of an offence under S. 304 if their common intention was to make a violent assault, and they knew that it was likely to cause death. 13 Cr. L. J. 159=13 Ind. Cas. 847 (All.)

—Ss. 299, 300 and 147—Attack by several persons—One member causing death.

Where one member of an unlawful assembly does an act which causes the death of a person and there is no sufficient ground for holding that the act was done in pursuance of the common object, the member who alone caused the death is guilty of an offence under the S. 304. (1911) 1 M. W. N. 130=9 M. L. T. 362=12 Cr. L. J. 124=9 Ind. Cas. 727.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Attack by several accused.

Where there are several persons accused of murder and there is no reliable evidence as to who struck the fatal blow it is not safe to differentiate the guilt of the accused and sentence some of them to the extreme penalty of the law. 9 M.L.T. 103=12 Cr.L.J. 48=9 Ind. Cas. 288.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Attack by several persons—Murder—A person murdered by two—Doubt as to which of the two committed murder.

When it is shown that one of two persons must have committed murder but it is not clear, which of the two, both must be acquitted. 22 C. 638, Foll. 8 P.W.R. 1909 Cr.=10 Cr.L.J. 321=3 Ind. Cas. 622.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Attack by several persons—Murder—Assault by more than one person—Evidence not showing who inflicted blow—Murder.

Where two or three persons attacked two others and inflicted serious injuries on them which caused their death and the evidence did not show which blow was dealt by which individual it is reasonable to infer that the accused persons in making the brutal and fatal assault must have known that it would result in the death of the persons assaulted and that the accused could therefore be convicted of murder. 7 Cr.L.R. 125 (Mad.)

3. Causing death.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Causing death—Meaning of—Murder—Intention to cause the death of a person alive or believed to be alive necessary.

Accused struck his wife on the head with a ploughshare which rendered her senseless. He believed her to be dead and to lay the foundation for a false defence of suicide he proceeded to hang her from a beam by a rope, which resulted in her death by asphyxiation:

Held, that the accused was not guilty of murder. The expression 'causing death' in S. 299 of the Penal Code means putting an end to a human life. A man is not guilty of culpable homicide if his intention was directed to what he supposed to be a lifeless body, 18 C. W. N. 1279, Foll. 42 Mad. 547=37 M.L.J. 17=26 M.L.T. 68=10 L.W. 45=(1919) M.W.N. 340=20 Cr. L. J. 404=51 Ind. Cas. 164.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 325—Causing death, meaning of.

Where the accused assaulted his wife who became unconscious and thinking her to be dead he hung her up to give an appearance of suicide but the medical evidence showed that she died of hanging. Held, that the accused could not be convicted under S. 302, I.P.C., as there was no intention to kill her and as he thought that she was already dead. But he was guilty under S. 325 of the Penal Code. 18 C.W.N. 1279=15 Cr.L.J. 709=26 Ind. Cas. 157.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Causing death, meaning—Murder—Intention to murder some one else—Murder by poison.

The accused prepared sweet containing poison with the intention of giving them to her husband. The husband with some others ate them. One of the guests died in consequence of it. Held, that the accused was guilty of murder, as the intention of causing death does not mean the death of any particular person. 22 M.L.J. 333, Foll. 39 All. 161=15 A.L.J. 13=17 Cr. L. J. 505=36 Ind. Cas. 473.

—Ss. 299 and 300, Illus. (d)—Causing death, meaning of—Intention of the accused.

It is not necessary that the person charged with the offence of murder should intend to cause the death of any particular person. Absence of proof of motive does not affect the man's guilt. (1910) M.W.N. 77=7 M.L.T. 314=11 Cr. L. J. 222=20 M. L. J. 657=6 Ind. Cas. 51.

4. Child in mother's womb—S. 299, Expl. (3).

—S. 299, Expl. 3—Child in mother's womb—Newly born child—Proof of life after having wholly or partially emerged from its mother.

Under the English Law the child must be completely emerged to constitute a human being. But under S. 299, Expl. 3, I.P.C., it must be proved not only that the child breathed and was therefore a living child (for that might have been done while it was entirely in the mother's womb) but that it breathed after it had wholly or partially emerged from its mother's womb. 29 P.R. (Cr.) 1915=17 Cr. L. J. 20=46 P.W.R. 1915 Cr.=32 Ind. Cas. 148.

5. Death avoidable by proper treatment—S. 299, Explanation (2).

—S. 299, Expl. 2—Applicability—Thrust with knife into abdomen—Death ultimately due to gangrene and paralysis of intestines—Offence.

A thrust with a knife into the abdomen viscera deep, causing the intestines of the victim to emerge, is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The fact that death is ultimately due to the supervention of gangrene and paralysis of the intestines and that the medical evidence was to the effect that, if an operation had been performed within an hour of the causing of the injury, the victim's life might have been saved, cannot reduce the offence from murder to culpable homicide, in view of Expl. 2 to S. 299. I.P. Code: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 435=1948 N. L. J. 471=49 Cr.L.J. 647 (2)=A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 19.

—S. 299, Expl. (2)—Stabbing in vital part of body—Offence.

Where an accused has stabbed the deceased on a vital part of the body and the deceased has died as a direct result of that injury and the injury is one which in the ordinary course will cause death, the accused is guilty of murder. The mere fact that the deceased might have been saved if expert medical attention had been afforded at once makes no difference as to the nature of the crime. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 293=50 L.W. 787=1939 M.W.N. 1129=41 Cr. L. J. 491=187 Ind. Cas. 632.

—S. 299, Expl. (2)—Inefficiency of treatment—Effect.

Where an injury is intentionally inflicted the defence that no proper medical treatment was forthcoming does not exonerate the person who caused the injury from guilt of murder if he intended that the injury should be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, or knew that it was likely to cause death to that person. It does not exonerate him from guilt of culpable homicide if death ensues as a natural or likely consequence. Such a person is deemed to have caused the death, and his degree of criminal responsibility must depend on the knowledge or intention to be gathered from the proved facts. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 396=1937 Rang. L.R. 384=38 Cr. L. J. 1097=171 Ind. Cas. 574 (F.B.).

—S. 299, Expl. (2)—Death avoidable by proper treatment—Whether alters nature of crime.

A person may be guilty of murder notwithstanding that death would have been avoided if the injured person had submitted to proper treatment. A person may be guilty of murder when the immediate cause of death is the treatment administered, and the question whether the treatment was proper treatment does not arise, provided that it was administered bona fide by a competent physician or surgeon. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 442=37 Cr. L.J. 1119=14 R. 643=165 Ind. Cas. 245.

—S. 299, Expl. 2—Injuries caused not direct cause of death—Death as a result of gangrene—Offence.

Where the deceased did not actually die from the injuries but died from the gangrene which set in consequence of some dirty substance, such as a bandage on the da with which the injuries were caused, coming into contact with one injury, although the injuries were not the direct cause of death, never the less under Expl. 2 to S. 299 the person who caused the injuries must be held to have caused the death. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 526=38 Cr. L.J. 103=165 Ind. Cas. 911.

—S. 299, Expl. (2)—Deceased dying due to ignorance and unskilful treatment—Offence.

Where the death of the deceased was due to her ignorance and the unskilful treatment which she received in her village, and the injuries on her head were only the remote cause of death.

Held, that the accused was not responsible for causing death and that he was not guilty of culpable homicide. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 418=37 Cr. L.J. 205=159 Ind. Cas. 1032.

—S. 299, Expl. (2).—The idea that the victim of a murderous assault must take such great care of his health and that he does not by any neglect or omission on his part hasten the advent of his death, is not countenanced by any provision of the Penal Code. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 405=35 Cr. L.J. 1113=11 O.W.N. 851=150 Ind. Cas. 819.

—S. 299, Expl. 2—Inefficient treatment—Effect.

The mere fact that the death of the deceased could have been prevented by proper treatment cannot take away a case from the operation of S. 299. A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 279=9 O.W.N. 655=34 Cr. L.J. 99=140 Ind. Cas. 706.

—S. 299, Expl. (2)—Prompt or better treatment—Might have saved.

The mere fact that more prompt or better treatment would have saved the deceased cannot exonerate the accused from liability for the death. 108 Ind. Cas. 164=10 A.I.Cr. R. 39=29 Cr. L.J. 345 (Lab.)

—S. 299, Expl. (2)—Murder or culpable homicide—Fracture—Gangrene—Grievous hurt.

Where in a scuffle the accused struck three lathi blows which fractured the bones and caused gangrene resulting in death but it was found that the accused did not intend to cause death, the accused is not guilty of murder but of manslaughter. 42 All. 302=21 Cr. ### 6 (a). Evidence and proof—Burden of proof.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Murder by fire-arm—Ingredients of offence—Burden of proof—Theory of accidental explosion—Special plea and proof by accused—If necessary—Evidence Act, S. 105.

In a trial under S. 302, I. P. Code, for murder by a fire-arm, the prosecution has to show not only that the firing was intentional or voluntary but also that the firing was prompted by any such intention or knowledge as is mentioned in S. 300, I. P. Code. If neither of these ingredients is proved, the offence committed is not murder whatever else it may be. In such a trial the first question is whether the firing was intentional and on this issue the accused is under no obligation to prove that the firing was not intentional but only accidental, the initial onus of proving the intent being always on the prosecution. If considering every relevant fact the theory of accidental explosion remains as likely as that of intentional firing or even reasonably possible the accused must be acquitted on the ground that the prosecution has failed to prove one of the essential ingredients of the offence of murder. In such a case it is wholly incorrect to say that the burden of proof that the firing was accidental is by reason of S. 105 of the Evidence Act or on some general principle on the accused, and that the accused must take a special plea to that effect and prove it in the same manner as the prosecution is required to prove a fact. It is not the law that if the Crown satisfied the Judge that the deceased died at the prisoner's hands then the prisoner has to show that there are circumstances to be found in the evidence produced by the prosecution or by the prisoner which alleviate the crime so that it is only culpable homicide not amounting to murder or which excuse the homicide altogether by showing that it was a pure accident. Pak. L.R. (1948) Lah. 293= A.I.R. 1949 Lah. 85=50 Cr. L.J. 397.

—Ss. 300 and 304.—The onus ought to be thrown on the accused as S. 105, Evidence Act requires, to show that there were extenuating circumstances which reduced the offence to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 397=22 Pat. 338=45 Cr. L.J. 213=210 Ind. Cas. 210.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Onus of proving mitigating circumstances.

When the facts are clear, the onus is upon the accused to show the circumstances which would bring the offence within the category of those offences where capital sentence should not be imposed. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 113=43 Cr. L.J. 90=8 B.R. 129=21 Pat. 153=196 Ind. Cas. 852.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Burden of proof.

Accused is not bound to prove how the man was murdered. But where in a village of two hundred houses the murder has taken place just after sun rise, the fact that the accused could not produce any evidence to show that they were innocent can be taken into consideration with other evidence against them. A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 193=1941 A.W.R. C. C. 354=17 Luck. 376=1941 O.W.N. 1246=43 Cr. L.J. 243=197 Ind. Cas. 701.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Onus.

The burden lies on the prosecution to establish that the act alleged to constitute murder was really the act of a person other than the deceased. The burden is not cast upon an accused person of proving that no crime has been committed, though it has been established that the accused has special knowledge on the point whether a crime was committed or not. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 1=1939 M.W.N. 883=50 L.W. 452=41 Cr. L.J. 369=186 Ind. Cas. 704.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Intention or knowledge — Duty of prosecution.

In a charge under S. 302, burden is on prosecution to prove intention. Where the intention is not proved, they fail to prove the charge of murder and accused cannot be convicted for murder even in the alternative. If the prosecution can prove knowledge, the proper course is to convict accused for offence under S. 304, Part II and not in the alternative. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 63=31 S.L.R. 480=39 Cr. L.J. 460=174 Ind. Cas. 497 (D.B.).

—Ss. 300, 302, 304—Burden of proving homicide being culpable.

Every death by violence is not culpable homicide. Some at least can be justified. The burden is always on the prosecution to prove by evidence that the homicide was culpable. 1937 M.W.N. 1196.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Burden of proof as to intention or knowledge.

In British India the law does not regard, that every case of homicide is prima facie murder. The burden of proving a certain intent or knowledge—that which in English law is called malice—is thrown on the prosecution by the statutory definition of culpable homicide and murder; and it is not only in cases of murder that this burden of proof is thrown on the prosecution by statute; that burden is imposed in every offence coming within the ambit of the Penal Code. The Maxim actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea a source of fruitful discussion in criminal Courts in England, has no application in India, as the statutory definitions of the offences in the Code in each case expressly contain a proposition as to the state of mind of the accused. A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 274=39 Cr. L.J. 92=172 Ind. Cas. 204.

—Ss. 300 and 302 — Affirmative proof of murder by prosecution beyond reasonable doubt —Necessity of.

In a trial for murder, it is not the bounden duty of the accused to prove how the deceased met with his death. It is for the prosecution to prove affirmatively and beyond all reasonable doubt that accused was responsible for the murder of the deceased. Where the trial Judge has practically rejected the version of the occurrence given by the prosecution witnesses and the Court of Appeal agrees with him, the accused cannot be convicted. A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 7=11 O.W.N. 1219=36 Cr. L.J. 181=152 Ind. Cas. 423.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Burden of proof.

Where eight men, none of whom carried lathies, attacked and beat a man to death by breaking his ribs, it is for the prosecution to prove that the common intention was to break the ribs or that breaking of the ribs was such an act as they knew to be likely to be committed. In the absence of such proof, however, only those of them who were proved to have actually sat on the accused's body and to have brought pressure on his ribs can be convicted under S. 304-149. Others can be convicted only under S. 323-149. 118 Ind. Cas. 369=10 L.R.A.Cr. 100=30 Cr. L.J. 903=12 A.I.Cr.R. 80=1929 Cr.C. 163=A.I.R. 1929 All. 575.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Accused tattooing deceased and allowing snake to bite him and causing death—Burden of proving that accused honestly believed himself able to produce immunity lies on him—If burden is not discharged, offence is only culpable homicide.

Accused who professed to be able by tattooing to render persons tattooed by him immune from the effect of snake-bite, tattooed a number of villagers and then allowed a poisonous snake, which he was himself handling, to bite one of them. The man who was bitten died at once.

Held, that the burden of proving that the accused was justified in believing, and did really believe, that his tattooing gave immunity was on him. If the accused proved that he honestly believed himself to be able to produce immunity, he would be guilty merely of a rash and negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide. But otherwise he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, because he caused death by an act done with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death but had neither the intention nor the knowledge necessary to make his offence murder. 64 Ind. Cas. 843=11 L.B.R. 56=A.I.R. 1921 L. B. 26.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 307—Evidence—Murder—Guilt—Proof of, on prosecution.

The prosecution should prove their story and cannot rely on the weakness of the defence case. Where the accused set up a right of private defence and there was some doubt about its truth, the accused was entitled to the benefit of the doubt and to be acquitted. 16 Cr. L.J. 152=14 P.W.R. 1915 Cr.=131 P.L.R. 1915=27 Ind. Cas. 216.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Insanity—Burden of proof.

Murder—Burden of proof in case of insanity is on accused—Burden not higher than that which rests upon a plaintiff or defendant in civil proceedings. 1936 M.W.N. 1248=44 M.L.W. 694 (P.C.).

6 (b). Evidence and proof—Child witness.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence of child.

The evidence of the child is not admissible as evidence of the truth of what it says but as explaining the conduct of other witnesses; even what it said is admissible in evidence. Where, therefore, the mother of a child is murdered and the cries of the child attract the passers-by, the witnesses can speak not only of the nature of the child's cries, but even as to what the child said so far as it explains their conduct. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 97=39 Cr.L.J. 618=32 S.L.R. 709=175 Ind. Cas. 324.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Murder—Evidence—Testimony of a little girl.

Where the only evidence against the accused who were charged with the murder of a little girl was that of a girl of 10 years old, and the accused were in possession of the jewels of the murdered child and were not able to explain their possession of them, the evidence is sufficient to sustain conviction, 6 M.L.T. 123=11 Cr.L.J. 157=4 Ind. Cas. 1051.

6 (c). Evidence and proof—Circumstantial evidence.

- (i) General
- (ii) Accused seen in company of deceased
- (iii) Blood stains
- (iv) Knowledge where corpse is buried

6 (c) (i). Evidence and proof—Circumstantial evidence — General.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence, rule as to stated—Fact that accused offers no explanation, if can be used against him—Court, if can invent possible explanations.

The rule as to circumstantial evidence is that it must be consistent, and consistent only with the guilt of the accused and if the evidence is consistent with any other rational explanation, then there is an element of doubt of which the accused must be given the benefit. No doubt one of the circumstances, which has to be taken into account is the fact that the accused has offered no explanation, or has offered a particular explanation, but it must be borne in mind that in India the accused cannot go into the witness-box, and is not bound to give any explanation at all. The fact that he does not open his mouth cannot be used against him. It is the clear duty of counsel in defending an accused to point out that the evidence is quite consistent with an explanation which fits in with the accused's innocence and the Judge is bound to ask himself whether there is any rational explanation of the evidence which is consistent with the innocence of the accused, and if there is he is not justified in convicting. A reasonable explanation of the evidence should not be rejected because it is not offered by the accused. The Court is competent to invent all possible explanations and theories which fit in with the evidence and are consistent with the innocence of the accused when the accused's statement does not explain the evidence against him. A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 139=43 Bom.L.R. 144=42 Cr.L.J. 697=I.L.R. (1941) Bom. 315=195 Ind. Cas. 208.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence.

The case against two accused rested on circumstantial evidence which was not such as to leave one no alternative but to hold that they were guilty. There was no evidence to show that both of them killed the deceased or that both had the intention to kill him:

Held, that neither could be found guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1941=Cal. 106=I.L.R. (1940) 2 Cal. 258=72 C.L.J. 533=44 C.W.N. 840=42 Cr.L.J. 385=193 Ind. Cas. 302.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence held to be insufficient—First accused found guilty—Accused No. 2 meeting first accused on evening of day of murder and knowing where certain articles belonging to deceased which she carried with her on the evening of murder were to be found—Facts, if sufficient to warrant conviction of accused No. 2 either under S. 300 or S. 201.

Where an accused is found guilty of the offence of murder, the facts that 2nd accused met the first on the evening of the date of murder and knew the place where certain articles belonging to the deceased which she had carried with her on that fateful evening were to be found, lead to grave suspicion against accused No. 2 but are not sufficient to warrant his conviction either for murder or for intentional concealment of evidence. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 316=52 L.W. 284=1940 M.W.N. 764=I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 1028=42 Cr.L.J. 466=193 Ind. Cas. 814 (D.B.)

—Ss. 299, 300, and 302—Mud in nails of deceased indicating struggle in water during life—Presumption of death by drowning.

Mud in the nails indicates struggle in the water during life and is presumptive evidence in favour of death by drowning. But such a presumption is not absolute and other circumstances may of course negative it. But the presence of mud on the toes and nails, in a country of bare-feet and not invariable cleanliness can scarcely weigh against the fact that no single characteristic of drowning is found. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 238=52 L.W. 420 (2)=1940 M.W.N. 1045=42 Cr.L.J. 654=195 Ind. Cas. 53.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Circumstantial evidence when sufficient.

Where a charge of murder is based purely on circumstantial evidence, that evidence must point conclusively to the guilt of the accused, and must practically exclude the possibility of the murder having been committed by other persons. It must be such as to show that within all human probability the act must have been done by the accused. Circumstances of strong suspicion without more conclusive evidence are not sufficient to justify conviction, even though no explanation of them is forthcoming. (1939) 183 Ind. Cas. 307=1939 O.W.N. 700=40 Cr.L.J. 764=1939 A.W.R. 102=14 Luck. 635.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence.

Where the only thing proved against the accused is that he was aware of the place where the corpse was concealed it is quite insufficient to support a charge of murder. A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 539=69 C.L.J. 344=40 Cr.L.J. 792=183 Ind. Cas. 433.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence.

Where there is only circumstantial evidence against the accused, in order to convict an accused of murder the Court must be satisfied that the circumstantial evidence is of such a nature that it would be inconsistent with his innocence:

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Absence of explanation of suspicious circumstances—Effect.

The mere absence of explanation cannot prove the crime of murder, but the fact that a criminal does not explain very suspicious circumstances against him is certainly circumstantial evidence which may be taken into consideration against him. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 127=17 Lah. 547=38 P.L.R. 1018=38 Cr.L.J. 472=167 Ind. Cas. 861.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302 — Circumstantial evidence—Sufficiency—Question of fact.

In a murder case where an accused has failed to give any explanation of the suspicious circumstances against him, it is better to treat the circumstances as establishing a crime as a point of fact. Evidence of this nature would certainly in England be left to a jury by a Judge. The question in each case is whether circumstantial evidence of this nature satisfies a jury of the guilt of the accused under S. 302. The question is not one of law. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 127=17 Lah. 547=38 P.L.R. 1018=38 Cr.L.J. 472=167 Ind. Cas. 861.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence.

A Police enquiry is always regarded as a harassment, and anxiety to avoid it, is not necessarily an indication of guilt:

Held, after considering all the circumstantial evidence including the post mortem examination of the deceased on which mainly the guilt of the accused rested, that it was not certain that the accused committed the murder. A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 425=2 B.R. 396=37 Cr.L.J. 559=161 Ind. Cas. 939 (2).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Recovery of dead body from house of accused.

Where the only fact which was proved in a case of murder was that the body of the deceased was recovered from the house of the accused buried in the floor of a room inside the house, and it appeared that the accused was away in jail at the time of the recovery of the corpse and he could not be called upon to explain how the corpse came to be buried in the house:

Held, that there was no evidence worth the name to connect the accused with the murder. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 362=11 O.W.N. 581=35 Cr.L.J. 1042=9 Luck. 636=150 Ind. Cas. 205.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302 — Illegitimate child—Possession of opium by mother—Death of child due to opium—Inference.

Where the accused who had contracted illicit relations with a man and was delivered of a child was charged with having put the infant to death and it appeared that she was in possession of opium four days before the child's birth and the death of the child was found to be due to opium:

Held, that the only reasonable inference was that the accused had caused the death of the child by administering opium to it. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 297=33 P.L.R. 223=33 Cr.L.J. 448=137 Ind. Cas. 259.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence.

Where the only evidence against the accused was that they were on the morning in question at or near the place of occurrence and there was no evidence to show that they conspired to kill the deceased or to cause him any injury:

Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to convict them. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 254=33 Cr.L.J. 375=33 P.L.R. 145=137 Ind. Cas. 65.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence.

Held, on the facts, that the evidence disclosed grave suspicion of guilt but that it did not raise that high degree of probability on which with due prudence a conviction for murder should be based. [Conviction under S. 201, I. P. C., substituted for that under S. 302, I.P.C.] A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 529=32 P.L.R. 461=32 Cr.L.J. 1032=133 Ind. Cas. 446.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302 — Murder of child—Accused showing place where jewels were hidden—Conviction for murder—Sufficiency of evidence.

A boy was murdered. The accused took the Police next day to where the jewels of the boy were hidden and at the time of the discovery of the jewels, made a long statement to certain neighbours in the presence of the Sub-Inspector of Police who was also one of the signatories to that statement:

Held, (1) that the statement of the accused was one made to the Police Officer within the purview of S. 162, Criminal P. C., and could not be used except in the special manner provided in that section;

(2) that the statement could not be used in any other manner even at the instance of the defence and even if it materially assisted the defence case;

(3) that the accused could not be convicted of murder on the sole ground that he had discovered the jewels to the Police. A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 779=(1931) M.W.N. 715=34 L.W. 388=33 Cr.L.J. 132=62 M.L.J. 71=135 Ind. Cas. 364.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302 - Circumstantial evidence—Benefit of doubt.

In a criminal case, where a set of circumstantial evidence is capable of two constructions, one in favour of the accused, and one against him, he should be entitled to the benefit of the doubt. In order to convict a person charged with murder, there should be unimpeachable evidence of reliable witnesses bringing home the guilt to the accused beyond reasonable doubt. If the Court finds that the proof adduced at best leads to strong suspicion but falls short of the requisite standard, the Court should give the benefit of the doubt to the accused. A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 689=(1931) M.W.N. 1177=54 M. 931=34 L.W. 128=61 M.L.J. 608=33 Cr.L.J. 51 (2)=134 Ind. Cas. 1143.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence—Circumstantial—Complete and incompatible with innocence—Admitting of no reasonable explanation—Death sentence.

There is no rule of law or practice to prevent a Court from sentencing an accused person to death merely on circumstantial evidence.

The accused person visited the village in which the murdered person lived and was at the shop of the deceased on the night of the murder, and that night both had slept on cots in front of the shop. In the morning the person was found murdered and the accused had disappeared. At the time the accused had come to the village he was wearing shoes and also possessed a tin box of cigarettes. A pair of shoes and a tin box were found at the shop, and the accused, who was discovered when followed along the foot-prints sitting amongst some crops, was bare footed. When the accused was discovered he was in possession of the property of exactly the same description as the stolen property. Blood-stains were also found on the shirt of the accused.

Held, that circumstantial evidence was incompatible with the innocence and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis except that of his guilt and the accused could be sentenced to death. 1929 Cr.C. 414=A.I.R. 1929 Sind 179.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence—Palpably concocted—Improbable—Not sufficient.

Where the whole case is one of extreme suspicion against the accused but in the opinion of the Court the separate pieces of circumstantial evidence relating to their movements and which converge on their guilt bear palpable signs of concoction and do not fit in with the conduct of rational persons it would be most unsafe to accept them and convict the accused. 122 Ind. Cas. 587=31 Cr.L.J. 438=1931 Cr.C. 457=A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 169.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Suspicious circumstances—Alone insufficient.

B and S. were charged under S. 302, Penal Code, for the murder of R, who, according to the village rumour, was in intrigue with G's wife, M, sister to B. S was the brother of G. A tracker followed the tracks with directions from villagers to the Ahata of S and G. Shoes of R were recovered at the instance of B. The tracker found tracks of B and S, leading to the place where the body was later found buried. Dead body of R was found at the instance of the confession made by S:

Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to establish charge under S. 302 but was ample to establish an offence under S. 201, Penal Code. 112 Ind. Cas. 347=9 Lah. 671=29 Cr.L.J. 1019=11 A.I.Cr.R. 284=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 476.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Motive present—Body found in the field of accused.

Where the only evidence against a person accused of murder consists of evidence of motive and his production of the corpse from his field, that evidence will not ordinarily warrant a conviction under S. 302, I. P. C.: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 88 and A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 541, Foll. 107 Ind. Cas. 482=9 A.I.Cr.R. 520=29 P.L.R. 33=29 Cr.L.J. 252.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence—How estimated.

The fundamental rule by which the effect of circumstantial evidence is to be estimated is well established. In order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 88, Foll. 96 Ind. Cas. 849=7 A.I.Cr.R. 68=27 Cr.L.J. 993. (Lah.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence—Inference of guilt—When justified.

Where a case depends entirely on circumstantial evidence, in order to justify the inference of guilt, the incriminating facts found against the prisoners must be incompatible with their innocence and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of their guilt.

The following circumstances, as proved against the accused, were held sufficient to prove that he was responsible for the murder of deceased: (1) the deceased used to live at accused's house until he disappeared, (2) accused made no report about the sudden disappearance of the deceased to the police or to anybody else; (3) within a few days after the disappearance of the deceased his dead body was found in a well about half a mile from the house of the accused; (4) shortly after the recovery of the dead body the accused admitted to a friend of his that he had murdered the deceased; (5) and after this confession the accused produced from two places considerable valuable property worth Rs. 4,000 belonging to and in the possession of the deceased until his death. 89 Ind. —Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence—Accused found near door-way—Shoes and feet stained with blood—Deceased was paying attention to accused's sister—Evidence inadequate.

Where there was no eye-witness of the affair and circumstantial evidence was that the victim was seen lying wounded on a charpoy with accused No. 1 standing near him and accused No. 2 standing in the door-way of the Kotha the scene of murder that accused No. 1 was at that time wearing a chadar and a kurta both of which bore marks of blood and he had blood stains also on his feet and calves that his brother accused No. 2's chadar and feet were stained with blood, and that the deceased has been paying attention to their sister and that this conduct on his part was resented by the brothers.

Held, that the evidence is wholly inadequate to bring the charge home to accused No. 2 and that he be acquitted. 81 Ind. Cas. 173=5 L.L.J. 40=25 Cr.L.J. 685=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 62.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Circumstantial evidence.

Where the only reliable circumstantial evidence against the accused was that he had a motive to commit the crime and that he was seen running near the place of occurrence at or about the time of murder, Held, that the evidence merely created a suspicion and was insufficient for a conviction. 1 Pat. Where the accused had an unnatural intimacy with the deceased who was murdered by sharp weapons

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence of—Presumption—Accused pointing out spots where occurrence took place.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Accused himself showing the spot.

Where in a trial for murder (1) the first report did not name the murderer, (2) the only eye-witness who professed to have seen the murder could not identify the accused before the police, (3) and the only evidence against accused consisted in the production of a blood-stained kurtā from the house where he and his brothers resided and (4) his pointing out a blood stained knife which was concealed in a bush on the way from the deceased's house to his own, this circumstantial evidence is altogether insufficient to maintain a conviction in the absence of any direct evidence connecting the accused with the murder. 22 P.W.R. 1916 Cr.=17 Cr.L.J. 279=34 Ind. Cas. 999.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Murder—Circumstantial evidence, when sufficient.

In a murder case, where the evidence points to the accused alone as the guilty person and there is no reasonable doubt about it, a conviction can be based on it, though there is no direct proof and the prosecution case is inferential only. (1914) M.W.N. 718=16 Cr.L.J. 195=27 Ind. Cas. 755.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Circumstantial evidence.

A conviction for murder cannot be sustained when there is no direct evidence connecting the accused in the commission and where this evidence is purely circumstantial especially when the identification was very unsatisfactory. 40 P.W.R. 1914 Cr.=16 Cr.L.J. 89=221 P.L.R. 1915=26 Ind. Cas. 1001.

Where the sole inmates of a house were a man and his two wives, and the elder wife was habitually ill-treated and half-starved by the husband and was taken to hospital with a serious injury on the head as a result of which she died after three days, and there was no indication whether the injury was accidental or self-inflicted, and the explanation of the husband being unsatisfactory, the presumption was that the injury was caused by the husband. The infliction of such an injury on the head of a woman already reduced by ill-treatment would bring it under S. 304, part 2. 3 P.W.R. 1913 Cr.=14 Cr.L.J. 283=150 P.L.R. 1913=19 Ind. Cas. 715.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Some circumstances favourable.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Murder—Conviction on circumstantial evidence—Requirements.

A conviction for murder on pure circumstantial evidence should be had only if the history of the case taken as a whole points unmistakably to the inference of the commission of the offence by the accused and no other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt could possibly be deduced from the facts before the Court. 16 P.W.R. 1911 Cr.=12 Cr.L.J. 412=11 Ind. Cas. 596.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Murder—Proof of offence—Circumstantial evidence—Conviction of one of two persons when uncertain who fired the fatal shot in the absence of common intention—Penal Code, Ss. 34, 149.

Where the Sessions Judge in a trial on a charge of gunshot murder against N found that N and another person L were seen immediately after the report of the gun at the scene of occurrence each with a gun in his hand but he did not find which of them fired the fatal shot, his finding being that either N or L fired the shot that killed the deceased and there was no finding in the judgment that N and L had a common intention and acted in concert and that the gun was fired in furtherance of their common intention. Held:—That the legal inference from these findings must be that neither N nor L was guilty of the offence of murder. The fact that an accused person was found with a gun in his hand immediately after a gun was fired, and a man was killed on the spot from which the gun was fired, may be strong circumstantial evidence against the accused, but it is an error of law to hold that the burden of proving innocence lies upon the accused under such circumstances. If there are two persons who answer the above description the circumstantial evidence loses its weight very substantially. (1907) 11 C.W.N. 1085=6 Cr.L.J. 304.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Accused seen in company of deceased.

In a murder case the evidence that the accused was in the company of the deceased and the other accused prior to the murder is certainly not sufficient in law to establish the charge of murder against the accused. A. I. R. 1944 Cal. 249=46 Cr. L. J. 131=216 Ind. Cas. 129.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence
—Accused seen following deceased.

The deceased boy was not seen after the morning of 17th October 1942. On the 19th his body was found floating in a well. Except for the evidence that the two accused were seen following the deceased on the morning of 17th October there was nothing to connect the two accused with the murder of boy, except their alleged possession of the ornaments which belonged to the boy and the statements which, according to the prosecution, led to the recovery of those articles. Both in the committing Magistrate's Court and in the Sessions Court the two accused denied all knowledge of the offence and asserted that they had made no confessions at all to the Police;

Held, that in the face of the production of the articles the denials by the accused could not be believed, and the Sessions Judge was, therefore, unquestionably right, in accepting the evidence that the articles were recovered in consequence of the statements made by the accused. Even, however, if the statements themselves were ignored, the evidence that the two accused were seen following the deceased that morning taken with the facts that a few days later the articles which the boy had been wearing were found in the possession of the accused in default of any reasonable explanation, would lead inevitably to the conclusion that the accused are guilty of the murder of the boy. A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 69=55 L.W. 552=1942 M.W.N. 584=(1942) 2 M.L.J. 312=44 Cr.L.J. 299=I.L.R. (1943) Mad. 148=204 Ind. Cas. 545.

—Absence of motive.

The deceased, girl aged six years, and her mother lived at the house of the accused who was the girl's uncle. There was some quarrel between the girl's mother and the wife of the accused as a result of which the mother had been cooking separately. One morning after the mother had left home for her field, the accused took the girl from the house on a false pretext and returned without her. On being questioned he first said that the girl had been run over by a car but later he stated in the presence of the mother and other relatives that he had killed her and put her in a pond. The dead body of the girl was subsequently found in the pond. A number of witnesses spoke to seeing the accused and this little girl on that morning together and, in various places in the vicinity and not far from the pond in which the body was found.

Held, that if the evidence were only that the girl was last in the presence of the accused and in his presence under suspicious circumstances and that her body was found with a stone tied to it in the pond, that alone would raise a hostile presumption against the accused which he would necessarily have to explain, but in the circumstances of the case the guilt of the accused had been proved beyond any shadow of doubt and the fact that the motive for the crime was slight was immaterial. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 120=I.L.R. (1941) Mad. 340=1940 2 M.L.J. 895=1940 M.W.N. 1229=52 L.W. 853=42 Cr.L.J. 770=195 Ind. Cas. 679.

Where an accused is charged with murder of a child for the sake of its ornaments and the sole fact proved against him is that he was seen in the company of the child not far away from where the corpse was found, sometime before the murder must have taken place, and there was nothing unusual in the fact that the little boy was with the accused as that was a common occurrence and where it is not possible to say that the accused and the child were seen together within a very short time of the murder, it is unsafe to infer that the accused must have been concerned in the murder. A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 336=47 L.W. 272=1938 M.W.N. 36=40 Cr. L.J. 596=181 Ind. Cas. 849.

Where the accused was the person last seen with the deceased boy when he was alive and was observed walking with the deceased boy with an axe under his arm and was seen at the actual place where the body was discovered and it appeared that he dug up in the presence of trustworthy witnesses ornaments identified as belonging to the deceased;

Held, that even excluding a confession which the accused made to a large body of witnesses there was ample evidence to convict the accused under S. 302 but the sentence of death should be remitted. A.I.R. 1934 All. 132=35 Cr. L.J. 448=1934 A.L.J. 143=3 A.W.R. 419=147 Ind. Cas. 630.

Where the evidence against the accused is that the deceased was last seen alive in his company and that the accused disappeared immediately after the murder and the accused set up a palpably false defence that he did not know the deceased and was never in her company, these facts and circumstances are sufficient to bring the offence of murder home to the accused. 120 Ind. —Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Accused found with deceased the previous night — Possession of his belongings — No direct evidence — Nature of offence.

Accused were seen in the company of deceased on a previous night. Next morning accused were found to be in possession of clothes and other articles belonging to deceased:

Held, that in absence of direct evidence, circumstances, though raising a strong suspicion against accused are not sufficient to convict them either under S. 302, or under S. 392, but they are guilty either under S. 411 or S. 379. 112 Ind. —Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Accused last seen with deceased — Accused showing place where corpse was buried not sufficient.

The fact that the accused was one of two persons with whom the deceased was last seen alive, and the fact that he pointed out the spot where the dead body was ultimately found, are not sufficient to draw the inference that the accused was one of the actual murderers. No doubt grave suspicion attaches to him in this connexion, but grave suspicion is not sufficient. 103 Ind. Cas. 97=28 Cr. L. J. 641=8 A.I.Cr.R. 254=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 541.

The facts that the deceased, and the accused had been seen together at about 8 o'clock in the evening, that the dead body of the deceased had been discovered the next morning and, that no explanation had been given by accused regarding the death of the deceased, are alone insufficient to fix the guilt on the accused. In the absence of other evidence, circumstantial or direct, tending to show that the accused was concerned in this crime, he is entitled to an acquittal. 67 Ind. Cas. 724=23 Cr. L. J. 452=20 A. L. Where the facts clearly established that the accused was last seen with the child alleged to have been murdered, that he stripped her of most of her ornaments and sold them and that her body was next found in a well but the accused disclaimed all knowledge of the matter though the well was indicated by him, Held, that the facts were sufficient to prove that the accused had committed a foul murder. 16 P.W.R. 1915 Cr.=16 Cr. L. J. 167=27 Ind. Cas. 551.

6 (c) (iii). Evidence and proof—Circumstantial evidence — Blood stains.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence of blood stains.

The blood stains on the hatchet were too disintegrated to determine their origin, the blood stains on the blade were extensive. No explanation was offered of these stains which were proved to be of blood:

Held, that the possibility that the stains were of human blood was not excluded. A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 206=45 Cr.L.J. 660=46 P.L.R. 69=213 Ind. Cas. 355.

—Ss. 299 and 300 — Evidence of blood-stained nails.

The evidence of blood-stained nails is not only of no value but may be extremely dangerous to innocent persons. Giving such evidence as corroborating an approver or as circumstantial evidence connecting an accused person with homicide may lead to the miscarriage of justice. A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 149=40 Cr.L.J. 576=41 P.L.R. 493=I.L.R. (1939) Lah. 206=181 Ind. Cas. 864.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence.

Where the only evidence against an accused charged with murder is the evidence of the recovery of the blood-stained shirt and the blood stained sua and the fact that he concealed himself in the reeds at the time of his arrest, such evidence is inconclusive. Where there is nothing on the record as to the extent of the blood-stains on the shirt, it is impossible to judge whether they were caused in committing a murder or were obtained by the accused in the course of his ordinary pursuits. The mere recovery of a blood stained sua is not sufficient to fix the guilt upon the accused. The mere fact that he produced it does not necessarily mean that it was he who used it. His hiding to avoid arrest is by itself a circumstance which creates no more than a suspicion against him. The accused cannot therefore be convicted of murder upon such evidence. A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 194=41 P.L.R. 16 (2)=40 Cr.L.J. 697=182 Ind. Cas. 694.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Blood-stains on clothes.

Villagers often have blood-stains on their clothes. The existence of a few small blood-stains on a man's shirt or dhoti is not enough to found a conviction on, in itself, though it is important corroborative evidence when the accused is directly implicated by other evidence or circumstances. A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 52=39 Cr.L.J. 105=172 Ind. Cas. 213.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Recovery of blood-stained articles from accused's house.

In a charge for murder, the evidence of the recovery from an accused person's house of a blood-stained chopper and a blood-stained chadar is not enough by itself to justify his conviction. This is circumstantial evidence the value of which is very great when used to corroborate other evidence. It cannot by itself prove the case for the Crown. It is possible to imagine many an occasion where the mere discovery of a blood-stained weapon or blood-stained clothes was due to something other than murder, for instance, concealing a dead body or receiving from the real murderer a blood-stained weapon in order to hide it and so assist the murderer. It is impossible to say that the discovery of a blood-stained article is enough by itself to justify a conviction for murder. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 335=16 Lah. 995=38 P.L.R. 15=37 Cr.L.J. 503 (2)=161 Ind. Cas. 884.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence—Evidence of alibi weak—Conviction.

The Court was satisfied that the accused had some motive for attacking the deceased and there was no evidence to show that any one else had any motive for attacking her. The prosecution evidence was very strong against the accused. The recovery of a blood-stained shirt from the person of the accused and of a blood-stained knife from a room in his house strongly corroborated the rest of the prosecution evidence:

Held, that in view of the strength of the case against the accused, it was impossible to treat seriously his alibi evidence especially when that evidence was given by men belonging to his caste and the person with whom the accused alleged he was at the time in question was not produced. (1936) 164 Ind. Cas. 154 = 1936 O.W.N. 603 = 37 Cr.L.J. 932 (D.B.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Spots of human blood on garments.

Finding of small spots of human blood on the clothes of the inhabitants of the Delta is of very slight probative value as they can always be accounted for otherwise. If a mosquito bites a man through his clothes and it is squashed, as often happens, the victim's clothes may have a patch of blood of any size up to three quarters of an inch in diameter and it may be imagined, that that blood is the blood of the victim which has been sucked into the mosquito's stomach or what corresponds to it, and if that blood is transferred to a garment, from the Imperial Serologist's point of view it is still human blood. Its short stay in the mosquito would not greatly change its normal characteristics. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 468 (470) = 38 Cr.L.J. 49 = 165 Ind. Cas. 758.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence, sufficiency of.

The deceased who was believed to be a 'womanizer' was murdered and there being no eye witnesses suspicion fell on the accused with whose wife the deceased was believed to have illicit intimacy. The accused absconded and was found next in another village by a zaildar to whom he confessed the crime and his clothes were found to be blood-stained. During the course of the investigation, he produced a blood-stained hatchet from a pond and a pair of shoes from another pond and there were impressions of shoes near the bed of the deceased which tallied with those of those shoes. It was found in evidence that the deceased had illicit intimacy with accused's wife amongst other women but the other facts were not proved:

Held, that the evidence was not satisfactory and that the accused was entitled to the benefit of the doubt. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 10 = 35 Cr.L.J. 615 = 148 Ind. Cas. 164.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Blood-stains on clothes of accused—Failure to give explanation.

Although the mere fact that a person has blood on his clothes is not by itself always of much importance yet where he has failed to give any explanation of the blood on his clothes, the circumstance is important, inasmuch as if it had been due to any ordinary circumstances, he would have been able to give such an explanation. The evidence of the clothes will, in such a case, be sufficient corroboration against him. A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 352 = 16 N.L.J. 186 = 35 Cr.L.J. 213 = 146 Ind. Cas. 701.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Discovery of blood-stained weapons through accused—Injury on his person—Insufficient.

The mere facts that the accused pointed out a heap of tury belonging to some unknown zamindar which was accessible to anybody and from which were recovered a hatchet and a dang which turned out to be blood-stained and that the accused had some injuries on his person were held to be not sufficient to prove him guilty of being concerned in the murder. 10 L.L.J. 58 = A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 335.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Proof of murder.

The fact that blood-stained garments are found in a house does not sufficiently prove that any particular member of the family in that house is guilty of murder, recently committed in the neighbourhood. 32 P.W.R. 1916 Cr. = 17 Cr.L.J. 226 = 26 P.R. 1916 Cr. = 153 P.L.R. 1916 = 34 Ind. Cas. 642.

6 (c) (iv). Evidence and proof—Circumstantial evidence—Knowledge where corpse is buried.

—Ss. 299, and 300—Pointing out place where corpse was lying.

The mere fact that the accused conducted the father of the deceased and other persons to the ravine where the corpse was found lying, cannot, alone, while creating a suspicion against the prisoner, bring the guilt home to him. 114 Ind. Cas. 719 = 30 P.L.R. 269 = 30 Cr.L.J. 375 = 1929 Cr.C. 102 = A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 558.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Knowledge where corpse is buried.

The mere fact that an accused person appears to have known where the corpse was buried does not prove that he was the murderer: 18 P.R. 1917, Foll. 89 Ind. Cas. 901 = 26 Cr.L.J. 1429 = A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 138.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Knowledge where body is buried.

Even if it be held satisfactorily proved that accused did give the information which led to the recovery of the dead body, that fact alone would not be sufficient to connect him with the murder, because a person may very well know where the body of a murdered man has been buried without himself having joined in committing the murder. 75 Ind. Cas. 693 = 6 L.L.J. 54 = 25 Cr.L.J. 5 = A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 315.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Pointing out body—No explanation of knowledge—If sufficient.

The mere pointing out of the body of the person murdered would not by itself be sufficient evidence for sustaining a conviction for murder; but if the appellant has never explained how he came by his knowledge of the place where the body lay, it may be sufficient. 68 Ind. Cas. 841 = 4 Lah. L.J. 225 = 23 Cr.L.J. 617 = A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 189.

6 (d). Evidence and proof—Conduct of accused.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Conduct of accused.

Where a person is alleged to have murdered his wife and there is no direct or medical or other circumstantial evidence justifying a conviction much reliance cannot be safely placed on the conduct of the accused. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 1=41 Cr.L.J. 369=1939 M.W.N. 883=50 L.W. 452=186 Ind. Cas. 704.

—Ss. 299 and 300—No counter-story—Evident motive—Subsequent conduct—Proof of having confessed—Sufficient evidence.

In a case of murder there was no counter-story worth believing on behalf of the accused. The motive of the accused in committing the murder was evident. His conduct subsequent to the crime showed that, although he knew the truth he put forth numerous falsehoods. And further there was in evidence the statement of the accused's uncle that the accused confessed his crime to him:

Held, that the evidence was sufficient to prove that the accused was guilty of murder the only proper sentence for which was death. 117 Ind. Cas. 737=6 O.W.N. 309=30 Cr.L.J. 829=1929 Cr.C. 14=A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 272.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Unnatural conduct.

Where the person admittedly knew that his wife was murdered shortly after midnight and yet he made no report to the police station, nor made any attempt to find out who killed his wife, his conduct was unnatural and may lead to the conclusion that he himself was the murderer. 116 Ind. Cas. 193=6 O.W.N. 218=30 Cr.L.J. 567=12 A.I.Cr.R. 420=4 Luck. 679=A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 190.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Evidence of unnatural demeanour of accused.

Where the evidence on which the accused has been convicted consists mainly of statements made by witnesses, suggesting that his demeanour was some what too calm when attention was drawn to the fact that his hut of grass was burning which had been set on fire and in which the deceased was found lying dead and a gun lying between his legs:

Held: that his conviction is not sustainable and must be set aside. 99 Ind. Cas. 324=8 L.L.J. 559=28 Cr.L.J. 116=28 P.L.R. 27=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 51.

6 (e). Evidence and proof—Confession and retracted confession.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Confession—Offence.

The accused made a confession that the deceased expired in his presence after a struggle for about ten minutes and then he secretly disposed the corpse along with the other accused:

Held, that the confession did not amount to an admission of murder and the offence fell under S. 201, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 238=52 L.W. 420 (2)=1940 M.W.N. 1045=42 Cr.L.J. 654=195 Ind. Cas. 53.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Confession—Accused confessing but introducing mitigating circumstances—Conviction for murder.

Where an accused confesses to having caused the death of a woman and admits having robbed her after death but during that confession he introduces into it circumstances with a view to excuse himself from a conviction for murder and it is clear from the medical evidence and the Court is satisfied that the woman lost her life not in the least in the manner described by the accused but that by violence to the neck and pushing of the cloth into her mouth by the accused, the violence amounts to murder and the accused can be convicted murder upon his confession. (1940) 187 Ind. Cas. 481=1940 M.W.N. 169=41 Cr.L.J. 461.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Confession.

In the trial for an offence under S. 302, a confession must be taken into account as a whole. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 673=35 P.L.R. 559=36 Cr.L.J. 247=152 Ind. Cas. 1077.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Confession.

But it is entirely wrong to base the conviction of the accused upon their own version of the occurrence, and picking holes in that version without having any legal evidence adduced by the Crown to support their conviction on a capital charge of murder under S. 302 of the I.P.C. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 427=11 O.W.N. 1117=35 Cr.L.J. 1347=151 Ind. Cas. 559.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence—Confession—Confession to lambardar insufficient to convict—Other facts proving guilt—Conviction.

A who was charged under S. 302 knew where the bodies of the murdered persons were. He also knew that murder had been committed. The jewellery removed by him from the dead body was subsequently produced and identified. Moreover he confessed his guilt to the lambardar of the village:

Held: that it was not safe to rely upon the confession made to the lambardar and therefore he could not be convicted under S. 302. But the evidence was sufficient to convict him under S. 201. 111 Ind. Cas. 449=29 P.L.R. 486=29 Cr.L.J. 865=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 858.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Accused pointed out by dying victim—Confession—Struggle proved.

The pointing by the deceased to the accused as the person inflicting the injury and the confession of the accused that he committed the murder taken along with other facts which prove that there was a struggle between the accused and the deceased is sufficient to convict the accused of murder. 77 Ind. Cas. 993=49 Cal. 600=26 C. W. N. 414=25 Cr. L. J. 529=A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 409.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Discovery of body—Doubtful if before or after confession—Confession unreliable.

Per Kanhaiya Lal, J. C. and Lyle, A. J. C.:—Where there is a reasonable doubt whether the accused gave the information which led to a discovery, it would be unsafe to rely on his confession. If the dead body in a murder case was discovered in consequence of the confession, the corroboration would be material but if the evidence produced about the time when the dead body was discovered is discrepant it is difficult, to say whether the discovery was made before the confession or afterwards. 68 Ind. Cas. 17=9 O.L.J. 190=23 Cr.L.J. 481=A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 202 (F.B.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Retracted confession—Necessity of corroboration for having conviction.

The accused who was 48 years old was charged with the offence of murdering his brother in order to get the deceased's wife who was 45 years old. The case entirely depended upon the confession of the accused to the villagers and the Magistrate which he subsequently retracted. The accused had stated in his confession that he had murdered the deceased, with wahola (a sort of an axe) because he had a liaison with his wife and wanted to marry her and had then cut his body into pieces and thrown the pieces into the river. The accused had pointed out the place where he had killed the deceased and the place where he had cut him into pieces. Some blood was found on the grass and gram crop where the deceased had been killed and some particles of blood and some bones and flesh were discovered where he had been cut into pieces. He then pointed out the place where the wahola and a blood-stained shirt of the deceased had been buried. The Sub-Inspector dug them out and took them into possession:

Held, that as the confession was retracted, the Court must take it with caution and must look for some sort of corroboration before accepting it and convicting the accused upon it. The corroboration lay in the discovery of the blood at the place where the deceased was said to have been killed by the accused in the discovery of pieces of flesh and bones at the spot where, according to the accused, the deceased was cut into pieces and in the digging out of the wahola and the shirt at the instance of the accused which shirt was subsequently found to be stained with human blood. The confession was, therefore, corroborated and the conviction could be based on it.

Held, further that to covet the wife of his brother at the age of 48 when the woman was 45 and to kill her husband in order to get her was a very serious breach of one of the ten Commandments of Moses and for this reason, the sentence of death was very well deserved. A.I.R. 1945 Pesh. 1=46 Cr.L.J. 585=219 Ind. Cas. 317.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Retracted confession with corroboration.

An accused was charged with a murder of a young woman. Within a short time after the murder, the accused confessed to the murder and said that he had taken the jewels from her corpse and concealed them in the cattle-shed. He went to the cattle shed and produced them. The confession was subsequently retracted but it was sufficiently corroborated by other evidence. The Sessions Judge acquitted the accused on the ground of certain discrepancies in the evidence:

Held, that the acquittal of the accused was a clear miscarriage of justice. The evidence proved beyond the possibility of any reasonable doubt that he was guilty of the murder. A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 806=1938 M.W.N. 609=48 L.W. 150=39 Cr.L.J. 1006=178 Ind. Cas. 115.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Retracted confession.

In order to base a conviction under S. 302, a retracted confession must be corroborated in material particulars. 1935 M.W.N. 463.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Retracted confession of accused if sufficient.

In a murder trial, men's lives and liberties cannot be imperilled upon mere probabilities and upon mere suspicions engendered in the mind of the trial Judge. The decision of a Judicial Tribunal must rest upon legal evidence based upon legal testimony. Where the confession of an accused person is retracted and it cannot be used in evidence against his co-accused and there is no eye-witness of the occurrence and though some suspicion may attach against one of the accused, yet there is no legal proof of his guilt, the accused, cannot be convicted on the mere finding of blood-stains on his clothes. Where the trial Judge has allowed his imagination to play upon the facts of the case and he has filled up the gaps in the evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution by making presumptions against the accused, no conviction can be based on mere suspicions. A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 33=36 Cr. L.J. 246=11 O.W.N. 1540=153 Ind. Cas. 52.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Retracted confession of accused.

Where the only evidence against the accused is the retracted confession of the accused himself and the mention of his name in the retracted confessions of his co-accused, conviction is not justifiable. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 404=35 Cr.L.J. 192=146 Ind. Cas. 905=10 O.W.N. 937.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Confession induced by promise of pardon—Subsequently retracted—Should be excluded—Other fact insufficient—Guilt not established.

M was convicted by the Sessions Court under Ss. 302 and 201, I.P.C., upon his own uncorroborated confession. M retracted the confession at the first opportunity alleging that the confession was put into his mouth by the police who tortured him in order to induce him to turn an approver. The prosecution never alleged that M was the only person concerned either in the murder or in the burial, but admitted that after the confession efforts were made to induce him to become an approver. The prosecution evidence did not establish the existence of any motive on the part of M, and there was no independent evidence connecting him with the murder in material particulars except that G, the victim, with other co-accused who were acquitted of the charge of being the accomplices of M was seen in M's company shortly before the murder, that the corpse was found upon M's land and that M took the Magistrate to where the corpse was buried. The police, however, had known of the whereabouts of the corpse some days prior to M's confession:

Held: that in the circumstances, M's confession was probably due to the promise of pardon and, therefore, should be excluded from the evidence against M, and that if the confession was excluded, the rest of the evidence could not establish M's guilt. 104 Ind. Cas. 247=28 Cr.L.J. 807=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 682.

6 (f). Evidence and proof—Dying declaration.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Dying declaration—Necessary corroboration.

In a murder case the only evidence was the oral dying declaration made to the brother of the deceased, and the two written dying declarations, i.e., made to the Sub-Inspector on the very day of the occurrence and made to the Magistrate on the day following the occurrence, in all these dying declarations, the deceased charged the accused as the actual person who fired at her. She added that the son of the accused armed with a gun was with him. In corroboration of the dying declarations, a freshly fired gun was found in the possession of the accused. It had been freshly broken, and smelt of fresh discharge:

Held, that the mere absconding of the son of the accused could not be taken as corroborative evidence of sufficient value so as to convict him of the offence. The evidence, however, was sufficient to convict the accused under S. 302. A.I.R. 1940 Pesh. 49=42 Cr.L.J. 254=192 Ind. Cas. 179.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Dying declaration.

It is unsafe to convict a person on mere dying declaration without sufficient and satisfactory corroboration. 1935 M.W.N. 1089.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Evidence—Dying declaration—Short statement—Answers to leading questions—Other evidence insufficient—Conviction.

Some persons were tried under S. 302 for having murdered one B. The occurrence took place on a moonless night under a thick tree. The so-called eye-witnesses were disbelieved on the point of identification. The only evidence against the accused was the first report and the dying deposition of the deceased. The deceased was not able to make a long statement. The dying declaration was not an unaided effort but consisted of answers to leading questions put by the disbelieved alleged witness. The family of the deceased had deliberately chosen to put the attack back some two hours before it actually occurred:

Held, that under the above circumstances it was impossible to uphold the conviction. 1930 Cr.C. 156=4 Luck. 726=6 O.W.N. 1056=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 60.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Statement to doctor before death—Independent corroboration necessary.

Although the statement made by the deceased to the doctor just before his death is admissible in evidence as dying declaration, still in order to convict the accused of murder there must be independent corroboration of facts and circumstances to prove the offence. 120 Ind. Cas. 474=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 249.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Murder—Dying declaration of deceased.

Where no motive has been shown for the crime and there is no reliable evidence to implicate the accused it is not safe to convict an accused of murder on the dying declarations of the deceased. 5 M.L.T. 217=11 Cr. L. J. 193=4 Ind. Cas. 1127.

6 (g). Evidence and proof—Evidence of Approver.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Approver—Corroborative evidence.

The appellant and two other persons were originally committed to the Court of Sessions and the Committing Magistrate charged all three of them under S. 120-B read with S. 302, I.P.C. He also charged the appellant under S. 302, I. P. C. and the other accused under S. 302-34, I. P. C. When the three accused persons were brought before the Court of Session, the Public Prosecutor withdrew the charges under S. 302, and S. 302-34, with the consent of the Court and an order was recorded acquitting the accused on these charges. The charge on which the trial actually took place was under S.120-B-302 and the trial proceeded with the aid of assessors. The prosecution case mainly rested on the evidence of the approver:

Held, that the corroborative evidence was not of any value with respect to the charge actually framed and could not be used to justify a conviction on that charge. The offence as on facts found was one of pure and simple murder and the charge of conspiracy substituted after withdrawing the main charge was misconceived. The practical effect of this alteration in the charge was that the appellant was deprived of his right to be tried by a jury. In view of the evidence upon the record and the nature and quality of the so-called corroborative evidence and of the character of the approver himself, the case was not a fit one for directing the re-trial of the appellant before a jury upon a substantive charge of murder. A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 857=40 Cr. L. J. 166=179 Ind. Cas. 156.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Approver.

Where there is no sufficient corroboration of the approver's story, the accused cannot be convicted. A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 311.

6 (h). Evidence and proof—First information report.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—First information report by accused—Admissibility.

In a trial for offences under S. 302 or S. 201, a first information by the accused which clearly deeply incriminates him in the crime though intended to exculpate and being in nature of a confessional statement made to the Police, is inadmissible in evidence at the trial either to convict him of murder or of the lesser offence under S. 201. Moreover while accused person can undoubtedly in certain cases be tried for murder and convicted of causing evidence to disappear, there is evidence usually other than the mere statements of the accused to show that they do cause evidence to disappear, though in a trial for an offence under S. 201, the first information can be made the basis of a conviction, but in such a case the accused is not tried for murder and his first information is not a confession. A.I.R. 1939 Sind 130=40 Cr. L. J. 661=182 Ind. Cas. 464.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence—First information—Failure to record—Non-production as witness—Effect.

The failure to record the statement of the first informant and his non-production before the Sessions Judge has the serious consequence of depriving the accused of the right of cross-examination which will make the case of the prosecution suspicious. The recording of the statement of the second informant does not make him the first informant. 71 Ind. Cas. 353=1 Pat. 401=3 P.L.T. 771=1923 P.H.C.C. 26=1 Pat. L.R. Cr. 77=24=Cr. L. —Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Delay in report, effect of.

Delay in the report is not sufficient to make the case doubtful when there are three eye witnesses whose statements are not vitiated by material contradictions or improbabilities, when sufficient motive has been established, and the accused absconded immediately after the occurrence to find refuge in a foreign country for no less than three years. A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 106 (107)=37 Cr. L. J. 619=162 Ind. Cas. 300.

6 (i). Evidence and proof—Medical and other expert opinion.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Strong evidence as against chemical examiner's negative evidence.

Chemical examiner's negative report regarding absence of trace of blood in the earth, leaves and grass taken from the alleged place of occurrence will not displace strong direct evidence of the place of a certain murder. 83 Ind. Cas. 485=28 C.W.N. 561=26 Cr. L.J. 5=A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 625.

—Ss. 299 and 300 (3)—Evidence—Value of medical opinion—Injury likely to cause death.

A Medical Officer's opinion that the injuries inflicted, were not serious, the opinion being based upon a mis-conception of facts is of no weight, when the evidence shows that the injuries inflicted were one inch deep and they pierced, the pleura which in the ordinary course of events is sufficient to cause death.

16 Cr. L.J. 543=29 Ind. Cas. 671. (Mad).

—Ss. 299 and 300—Homicide or death from epilepsy — Scratches on the neck — Medical opinion.

Where amongst other marks noticed on the body of the deceased, there appeared certain scratches on the front part of the neck running downwards:

Held, upon a consideration of medical authorities, that though, in the opinion of the Civil Surgeon's it was probable that the deceased met with his death from throttling, the alternative theory was equally possible, that the scratches were self-inflicted whilst the deceased was labouring under an epileptic or other fit and of which he died. Having regard to this, as also to the nature of the evidence adduced in support of the prosecution the accused who were charged with murder were acquitted. The theory of murder upon which the prosecution proceeded in this case was arrived at by the Sub-Inspector of Police the day following the night of the occurrence. Per Curiam: "It is scarcely necessary to say that a theory should succeed and not precede the collection of evidence; otherwise it is a matter of common knowledge that the evidence may be made to fit in with the theory such as the Police Officer in this case propounded. #### 6 (j). Evidence and proof—Murder by poisoning.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Arsenic poisoning—Nature of proof necessary.

In a charge of murder by arsenic poisoning it is essential for the prosecution to prove: (a) That the person alleged to have been murdered died of arsenic poisoning; (b) That the accused person administered arsenic to the deceased with intent to murder. The deposition of the Civil Surgeon to the effect that from the history and the post mortem appearance of the stomach and intestines, he was of opinion that death was due to an irritant poison of the nature of arsenic, is not sufficient to prove death by arsenic poisoning. The symptoms of arsenic poisoning before death are indistinguishable from the symptoms of some natural diseases, such as cholera and acute dysentery. Both diseases are common in India and both can cause sudden death. It is not possible to be certain by a naked eye post mortem examination of the stomach and intestines that death was due to arsenic poisoning. Post mortem appearances similar to those observed in undoubted cases of arsenic poisoning are also similar to those produced by certain natural diseases and other irritant poisons. It is just possible too that under certain conditions they might be produced by the action of the digestive gastric juices of the stomach upon the tissues after death.

The rule of law that the evidence of one party should not be received as evidence against another party without the latter having an opportunity of testing it by cross-examination applies with great force to a criminal case where death has been the result. This rule of law should be strictly enforced if any weight is sought to be attached to a report on the chemical examination of suspected material. No person, therefore, ought to be put in peril of capital, or any punishment on a written report not given on oath and untested by cross-examination. To accept such a report—whatever it may contain—as proof of death by arsenic poisoning or of anything is an impossible proposition in law. A.I.R. 1933 All. 837=35 Cr. L.J. 280=1934 A. L. J. 173=56 A. 228=146 Ind. Cas. 1089.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Murder by poisoning—Points to be proved.

In a case of murder by poison, the following points have to be proved: Firstly, did the deceased die of the poison in question; secondly, had the accused got the poison in question in his or her possession; and thirdly, had the accused an opportunity to administer the poison in question to the deceased. If these three points are proved a presumption may under certain circumstances be drawn by the Court that the accused did administer poison to the deceased and did cause the death of the deceased. It is not usual that reliable direct evidence is available to prove that the accused did actually administer poison to the deceased. The evidence of motive which is frequently given in these cases is of subsidiary importance, and the mere fact that the accused had a motive to cause the death of the deceased is not a fact which will dispense with the proof of the second and third points that the accused had the poison in his or her possession, and that the accused had an opportunity to administer the poison.

In such cases it is not enough for the chemical examiner to merely state that poison was detected. His report should be full and complete and take the place of evidence which he would give if he were called to Court as a witness.

Distinguishing symptoms of arsenic poisoning considered. A.I.R. 1933 All. 394=34 Cr. L. J. 754=1933 A. L. J. 1617=144 Ind. Cas. 357.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Circumstantial evidence—Dhatara poisoning, presumption.

Where in the trial of a wife for having administered dhatura poison to her husband as a result of which he died, the evidence of the only eye-witness could not be relied on, and although she was suspected of having illicit intimacy with one of the deceased's friends, her conduct subsequent to her husband's illness was entirely compatible with her innocence and incompatible with her guilt, and in view of certain impossibilities in the prosecution story, the possibility of suicide could not be excluded.

Held, that the evidence against the accused was insufficient to connect her definitely with her husband's death.

Held also, that in the case of dhatura poisoning, the contention, that in the absence of proof that the deceased was subject to a fatal dose of the poison, death as a result of that poison cannot be presumed, is without force. A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 303=16 N. L. J. 35=34 Cr. L. J. 398=142 Ind. Cas. 714.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence based on scientific enquiry essential—Arsenic poisoning—Viscera examination—Vomit and night-soil alone insufficient.

In view of the common diseases of this country whose symptoms are almost indistinguishable from that of arsenic poisoning it is very unsafe to convict a person without such evidence as can be obtained from a proper scientific enquiry. The proper enquiry consists in the careful examination of the viscera of the body and an analysis by a competent analyser showing from the amount of arsenic found in the viscera that at least a lethal dose must have been administered. Mere examination of the vomit or night-soil is totally insufficient and it is extremely dangerous to rely upon sum traces of arsenic found in either of these two things. 1930 Cr. C. 757=1930 A. L. J. 1405=A.I.R. 1930 All. 532.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Nature of the poison not known—Confession false.

The Civil Surgeon and the Sub-Assistant Surgeon were unable to say what poison was actually administered and there was no evidence on the record to show what poison had been administered. The appellant's own confession was not true because the deceased did not die of aconite poisoning nor was aconite found in the pill produced by her.

Held, the evidence on the record was quite insufficient to establish the charge. 85 Ind. Cas. 817=26 Cr. L. J. 593=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 325.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Poisoning of mistress—Ropes stained with blood—Cakes containing arsenic—Poisoning not proved.

A person was charged of murdering and causing death by poisoning of a woman who was his mistress. The only evidence against him was that in her room were found two pieces of rope stained with human blood and to which were adhering human hair, also Bajra cakes containing arsenic were found. But there was no evidence to show that she was poisoned. Held: there was no evidence that would justify the conclusion that she was poisoned. The first element justifying conviction was absent. No corpus delicti was established. 66 Ind. Cas. 422=23 Cr. L. J. 278=A. I. R. 1922 All. 30.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Poisoning by members of family—Death shortly after food prepared by wife—No explanation as to cause of death—Corpse hidden—Presumption violent.

A violent presumption that the deceased was poisoned by the members of the family arises, perhaps one of the strongest presumptions known to the law, when a man dies in his own house surrounded by his own family, and poisoned shortly after eating food which must have been prepared for him by his wife, and no explanation is forthcoming from the occupants of the house-hold as to what had happened to him to cause his death, and where, in addition to such violent presumption, the persons accused are proved to have been guilty of persistent lying in an attempt to account for the absence of the deceased, and are also shown to have hidden the corpse to save themselves, the presumption becomes a certainty. 97 Ind. Cas. 44=49 All. 57=27 Cr. L. J. 1068=7 L.R.A. Cr. 156=24 A.L. J. 958=A.I.R. 1926 All. 737.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Accused displeased with mother—Attempt to take away child frustrated—Child poisoned—Medical evidence complete.

The accused who was greatly displeased with the wife of his brother, came to get her child from her. He took away the child without her consent. Later on he was over-persuaded by other men to let the child remain. He then proceeded to give the child some sweets. Directly afterwards the child was taken ill and died. The child's viscera was sent to Chemical Examiner who deposed that an extract from viscera produced tingling sensation when rubbed on the tongue and killed frog on injection. He gave as his opinion that death was due to aconite poisoning. The Civil Surgeon was of opinion from the condition of the mucous membrane of the stomach and the points of haemorrhage that death was due possibly to irritant poisoning. There were other symptoms which pointed to aconite poisoning.

Held: that child died under circumstances which would be compatible with little else than aconite poisoning and that the child was poisoned by the accused was a good conclusion. 119 Ind. Cas. 870=6 O.W.N. 681=30 Cr. L. J. 1118=1929 Cr. C. 604=A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 516.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Murder—Poisoning.

Guilt must be established beyond doubt and that it should not be probable only. When proof that the accused had arsenic or gave anything to eat to the deceased is not given, the conviction for murder is bad. 17 Cr. L. J. 102=32 Ind. Cas. 838 (All.).

6 (k). Evidence and proof—Murder by strangulation.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Ligature strangulation—Presumption.

There is no presumption in law that a ligature strangulation may or must be presumed to be homicidal and not suicidal. Even taking it as a presumption of fact such a presumption cannot be safely made, and a finding that a particular strangulation was homicidal cannot possibly be made to rest on this so-called presumption. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 1=50 L.W. 452=1939 M.W.N. 883=41 Cr.L.J. 369=186 Ind. Cas. 704.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Murder by throttling—Absence of injuries to bones or tissues of neck—Inference.

If the object which is employed to compress the wind-pipe is broad and pliable, there need be no injury to the bony structures of the neck. Pressure by the sole of the foot or by the palm of the hand placed across the neck of an unresisting victim would cause death by asphyxia without necessarily causing injury to the bones or tissues of the neck. The absence of such injury does not therefore indicate that the approver is not telling the truth, when he says that the deceased was throttled. A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 737=1939 M.W.N. 611=(1939) 2 M.L.J. 202=40 Cr.L.J. 913=50 L.W. 920=184 Ind. Cas. 302.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Strangulation or apoplexy.

A theory as to the cause of death should not precede but succeed the collection of evidence which may be made to fit in with the theory. Where there are scratches on the throat such as would be produced by the nails of the hands one should be cautious in coming to a conclusion as to the cause of death, as the effects of apoplexy, etc., might be mistaken for those of manual strangulation. 13 C.W.N. 622=10 Cr.L.J. 548=4 Ind. Cas. 286.

6 (1). Evidence and proof—Possession or production of property of deceased.

—Ss. 300 and 302 (Gwalior Penal Code, S. 292)—Evidence of murder—Property of deceased found in possession of accused—Accused not explaining such possession—Inference.

Evidence to connect the accused with the murder is necessary before they can be convicted of it. Merely on the recovery of stolen property of the deceased found in possession of the accused soon after the murder and in the absence of any evidence that the common intention of the accused was to commit murder in furtherance of the common intention to commit robbery, the Court would not be justified in drawing the inference that the accused are guilty of murder.

Merely because the accused are unable or unwilling to explain the possession of the stolen property and when the possession of the stolen property of which the explanation is not true, is the only circumstance appearing in the evidence against the accused they cannot be convicted of murder unless the Court is satisfied that the possession of the property could not have been transferred from the deceased to the accused except by the former being murdered. 51 Cr.L.J. 1265=4 A.I.Cr.D. 624=A.I.R. 1950 M.B. 76.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Proof of offence—Possession of property belonging to murdered person—Evidence Act, S. 114.

Under S. 114 of the Evidence Act, the Court is entitled, if it appears reasonable in all the circumstances of the case, to draw an inference that an accused person committed a murder or took part in its commission, from the facts that he is found in possession of property, proved to have been in the possession of the murdered person at the time of the murder or is able to point out the place where such property is concealed and admits having concealed it there and that he fails to give any explanation of his possession of the property which can be reasonably accepted. 56 M. 231 and 1930 C. 379 (2), Foll. I.L.R. (1949) Nag. 200=A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 277=50 Cr.L.J. 713=1949 N.L.J. 216.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Production of ornaments of deceased.

The mere fact that the accused produced, shortly after the murder, ornaments which were on the murdered woman is not enough to justify an inference that the accused must have committed the murder. Evidence to connect the accused with the murder must be there. A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 458=45 Bom. L.R. 884=45 Cr.L.J. 221=I.L.R. (1944) Bom. 25=210 Ind. Cas. 362.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Recovery of deceased's property.

The fact that the accused were found in possession of murdered man's watch shortly after the murder affords strong corroboration of his participation in the crime. A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 271=44 P.L.R. 448=44 Cr.L.J. 77=203 Ind. Cas. 488.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Accused's recent possession of property of murdered person.

Where the charge is specific, that the murder was caused by throttling and it is not proved and there is no evidence to show that the deceased was murdered at all, the presumption of guilt cannot be drawn from the recent possession by the accused of jewellery taken from the murdered person. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 12=1939 M.W.N. 873=50 L.W. 435=41 Cr.L.J. 242=185 Ind. Cas. 829.

Accused in possession of articles belonging to the deceased at the time of murder—If no explanation is given inference of participation in murder may be drawn. 1935 M.W.N. 954.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Possession of goods recently stolen—Stolen articles were jewels worn by deceased on the day previous—Presumption.

The possession of stolen goods recently after the loss of them may be indicative not merely of the offence of larceny or of receiving with guilty knowledge but of any other more aggravated crime which has been connected with the theft; this particular fact of presumption forms also a material element of evidence in case of murder.

The presumption is particularly applicable where there is satisfactory proof in case of a murder of a woman that the stolen articles were habitually worn by the deceased and that she was actually seen wearing it on the evening before the murder. 34 C.W.N. 256=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 379.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Property recovered from place pointed out by accused.

The mere recovery of property belonging to the deceased from a place pointed out by a person accused of the murder cannot be regarded as a proof that the accused was a murderer: A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 109, Foll. 96 Ind. Cas. 849=7 A.I.Cr.R. 68=27 Cr. L.J. 993 (Lah.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Production of property stolen from deceased.

Where the only evidence against an accused person is that he produced certain property which is identified as having been stolen from a person proved to have been murdered and there is no admissible evidence against him to connect him more directly with the murder it is unsafe to convict him of the offence of murder. 13 Mad. 426 and 21 M.L.J. 1071, Dist.; (1887) A.W.N. 130, Foll. 89 Ind. Cas. 516=26 Cr.L.J. 1380=23 N.L.R. 62=A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 119.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 411—Evidence—Murder—Stolen property of murdered man found with accused—Evidence.

When the only evidence against an accused person is a bundle of cloth which is identified as having been stolen from a murdered man, and there is no other admissible evidence on record against him, to connect him with murder, he can be convicted only under S. 411, I.P.C. and not under S. 300. 220 P.L.R. 1913=23 P.W.R. 1913 Cr. =14 Cr. —Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Accused in possession of deceased's jewels—Effect.

In a murder case the possession of the deceased's jewels by the accused is not evidence unless it is shown that the deceased had them on his person at the time of the murder and the accused cannot explain his possession. (1913) M.W.N. 145=14 Cr.L.J. 49=18 Ind. Cas. 337.

6 (m). Evidence and proof—Proof of death.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Corpus delicti absent—Evidence of prosecution witnesses as to murder of deceased in their presence—The absence of corpus delicti not of consequence.

The prosecution case was that accused 1 and 2 were on inimical terms with the deceased G and therefore on a night they lay in wait with a number of people on the way when G was returning with P. Ws. 1 and 4 in a jutka driven by P. W. 3. They stabbed him and removed him to a place some distance away and that he died. P. Ws. 1 and 4 who resisted were also beaten. P. Ws. 1, 3 and 4 reported to the Muniagar of the village after the lapse of four hours nearly. On the question whether when the body of the deceased could not be traced the accused could be convicted of murder:

Held, it is not obligatory for proving the death of an individual that his dead body should be recovered. As there is no justification for not accepting the evidence of P. Ws. 1, 3 and 4, the absence of corpus delicti could not be a matter of consequence so as to prevent the accused being found guilty of murder. (1880) I.L.R. 3 All. 383, followed. 63 L.W. 315=51 Cr. L.J. 1068=A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 452=4 A.I. Cr.D. 384=1950 M.W.N. 260=(1950) 1 M.L.J. 428.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Death, proof of—Identification of corpse—Discovery of blood-stained weapons.

In murder cases, it is essential for the prosecution to establish that the person with whose murder the accused is charged, is dead. It is unnecessary that the corpse should be identified, but there must be evidence to bring conviction to the mind of the Court that the alleged victim is dead.

The discovery of blood-stained weapons does not by itself prove that the person at whose instance these articles were discovered, is necessarily connected with the murder of a particular person. The discovery must definitely be shown to be connected with the murder of the person who is alleged to have been murdered. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 805=37 Cr. L.J. 250=38 P.L.R. 138=160 Ind. Cas. 187.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Corpse of murdered person not found—Caution.

The mere fact that the body of the murdered person has not been found is not a ground for refusing to convict an accused person of murder, but when the body of the person said to have been murdered is not forthcoming, the strongest possible evidence as to the fact of the murder should be insisted on before the accused is convicted. A.I.R. 1934 Sind 139=28 S.L.R. 387=36 Cr. L.J. 83=152 Ind. Cas. 376.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Death doubtful—No conviction for murder—Death established, body not found.

When a Court is not convinced that a man is dead it is impossible to convict any one of the murder, but if it is convinced that the man is dead, sentence of death may be upheld though the body has not been found: 93 Ind. Cas. 252=1 Luck. 327=13 O. L.J. 484=3 O.W.N. 204=27 Cr. L.J. 460=A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 234.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Evidence—Duty of prosecution—Actual death must be proved.

Where a person was beaten into unconsciousness by being brutally attacked with lathis and was dragged up to the bank of rivulet leaving traces of blood along the way and was never heard of again, held, that there was a reasonable possibility of the person being alive, and therefore the accused can only be convicted of an attempt to murder. Prosecution must prove the actual death of the alleged murdered person. 81 Ind. Cas. 436=22 A.L.J. 340=5 L.R.A.Cr. 59=25 Cr.L.J. 900=A.I.R. 1924 All. 662.

6 (n). Evidence and proof—Solitary witness.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Ill-feeling between accused and deceased—Solitary evidence of servant, whether sufficient.

On a certain cloudy evening, a zemindar was returning from certain village to his own village, with a servant who had lantern with him. In the course of the journey the zemindar was attacked by certain unknown persons and killed. The servant who was also attacked from behind lost his head and fled dropping the lantern without making any attempt to render any first aid to his master or to discover what had happened to him, as he was more anxious to save his own skin than to do anything else. As there was ill-feeling between the accused and the deceased, they were suspected of the murder and were tried. There was evidence of the servant alone and the jury and the Judge relying upon his evidence and his recognition of the accused convicted the accused;

Held, that it was doubtful whether the servant could recognize the assailants in the circumstances and it was unsafe to convict any one upon the evidence of the servant. The motive assigned to murder was inadequate and the ill-feeling between the accused and the deceased explained how they were implicated on mere suspicion. A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 220=65 C.L.J. 423=39 Cr. L.J. 541 (2)=175 Ind. Cas. 193.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Testimony of solitary witness, if sufficient.

A charge of murder cannot succeed on the unsatisfactory nature of the defence, unless the prosecution has positively proved its case to the Court's reasonable satisfaction. In such a case the evidence of one person is nonetheless sufficient, if that evidence establishes the appellant's guilt beyond any reasonable doubt. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 8=38 Cr. L.J. 299=166 Ind. Cas. 840.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence of solitary witness—Benefit of doubt.

In a murder case where all evidence except the statement of one witness has to be rejected the accused should not be convicted on the solitary statement of this witness but should be given the benefit of doubt. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 778=38 P.L.R. 274=37 Cr. L.J. 1029=164 Ind. Cas. 1056.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence of solitary witness—Conviction.

It is unsafe to base a conviction in a murder case on the evidence of the only witness who is not believed by the Sessions Judge on several points, when no motive for the commission of the offence is made out. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 373=11 O.W.N. 969=35 Cr. L.J. 1265=151 Ind. Cas. 274.

6 (o). Evidence and proof—Statement of accused.

—Ss. 300, 302, 201—Statement by accused to Police, relied on by prosecution to convict them under S. 201, if can be used to prove case of murder—Duty of prosecution.

If the prosecution wishes to rely on the statements made by the accused to the Police to convict them of an offence under S. 201, then they can only do so by showing by other evidence the falsity of their statements. These statements themselves can certainly not be used as substantive evidence in proof of the truth of the prosecution case of murder and conspiracy to murder in whole or in part. They cannot be relied on as both true and false. A.I.R. 1939 Sind 130=40 Cr. L.J. 661=182 Ind. Cas. 464.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Case under Ss. 302 and 201, entirely depending on statement of accused—Part of statement false—Court, if can accept evidence that rest was made by accused.

Where a case under Ss. 302 and 201, depends entirely upon the statement made by the accused and the discoveries made in pursuance of these statements and if the Court treats half of the statement of the accused as false, it cannot accept the evidence that the other half of the alleged statement of the accused was made by him.

Where the statement made by the accused is, "I have murdered the woman and buried the dead body," etc., the words "murdered the woman" are not admissible only because the rest of the sentence makes quite good sense and is sufficient to identify the body and to lead to its discovery. The words "murdered the woman" are not sufficient to identify the woman with one murdered, and this evidence is not sufficient for convicting the accused under S. 302. The accused, however, can be convicted under S. 201. (1938) 177 Ind. Cas. 909=1938 M.W.N. 866=48 L.W. 332=39 Cr. L.J. 977.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Admission of accused the only basis of conviction—His statement should be accepted entire.

When the only account of what happened on the night of murder is given by the accused himself and it is his admission contained in that statement that forms the basis of his conviction, the statement should be accepted in its entirety and if it establishes any mitigating circumstance the accused should be given the benefit of it. 121 Ind. Cas. 178=31 P.L.R. 35=31 Cr. L.J. 226=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 269.

—Ss. 299 and 300 — Admission of guilt to villagers—Subject to scrutiny.

Although the evidence of admission of guilt to villagers is sufficient to justify the conviction, still the evidence that such an admission was made must be closely scrutinized like all other evidence which is used to prove a case of murder. 117 Ind. Cas. 737=6 O.W.N. 309=30 Cr. L.J. 829=1929 Cr. C. 14=A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 272.

6 (p). Evidence and proof—Suicide or murder.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Suicidal or homicidal wound.

Held, that the fact that the body of the deceased was found lying flat with its face downwards, having several throat wounds by razor, only one of them being severe, indicated that the wound was suicidal and not homicidal. A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 652=18 P.L.T. 683=4 B.R. 113=39 Cr.L.J. 66=172 Ind. Cas. 171.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Pointing either to murder or suicide—No conviction.

A person was accused of having murdered his daughter. There was evidence to show that one day he went out along with the daughter and returned alone. The accused had made a statement before the 'Juge d' instruction that his daughter was tired of life and that he assisted her to commit suicide. The accused could lead the police to the place on the river where his daughter was drowned. Although the deceased's hands were tied, there were no signs to show any struggle between her and her father. All other adverse evidence was of interested nature. During the investigation by the 'Juge d' instruction another motive also was disclosed that the daughter, who was a widow, was intriguing with a man which possibly might have been the real motive that led her to death.

Held, that the accused could not be convicted of murder. 121 Ind. Cas. 157=52 Mad. 529=29 M.L.W. 645=1929 M.W.N. 383=2 M.Cr.C. 150=31 Cr.L.J. 223=A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 487=56 M.L.J. 628.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence—Suicide and murder—Double knotted ligature round the neck.

Double knotted ligature round the neck of the deceased was held to be a clear indication of the fact that his death had been caused by strangulation by some person other than himself. 89 Ind. Cas. 516=23 N. L. R. 62=26 Cr. L. J. 1380=A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 119.

6 (q). Evidence and proof—Miscellaneous.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Mere suspicion.

A was charged for the murder of B. Strychnine in sufficient quantity was found in the post mortem in B's stomach. People in their village suspected that A was carrying on an intrigue with B's wife;

Held, that evidence only showed that possibly A had some hand in the poisoning of B but it was only a suspicion and suspicion could not take the place of positive evidence. Case against A was, therefore, not proved. A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 48=47 Cr. L. J. 232=221 Ind. Cas. 638.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Conviction on mere suspicion.

Suspicion, however strong, furnishes no legal grounds for a conviction on a charge of wilful murder. In the absence of eye-witnesses, a person should not be convicted on mere suspicion, however strong it be. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 148=34 Cr. L. J. 498 (2)=8 Luck. 301=143 Ind. Cas. 55=10 O.W.N. 7.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Probabilities and suspicions—Insufficient to found conviction.

Probabilities and suspicions are not sufficient grounds in law upon which to found a conviction of an accused in a criminal trial specially in a murder trial where the maximum punishment is death. 7 O.W.N. 933=128 Ind. Cas. 211=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 460.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence of resolution to kill—Inference.

It is seldom that direct evidence of a resolution to kill is forthcoming. The decision as to resolution more often rests on legitimate inferences from the proved circumstances and the conduct of the accused. A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 42=1944 A.L.J. 466=46 Cr. L. J. 394=11 B.R. 258=217 Ind. Cas. 381=60 M.L.W. 118=1946 M.W.N. 1 (P.C.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence of arrest.

Evidence of arrest should not only mention the date but also the place of arrest. An arrest made soon after the occurrence in the accused's own village may put one complexion, while an arrest made long after in a distant place may have a different significance. A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 483=(1944) 2 M.L.J. 101=57 L.W. 443=1944 M.W.N. 497=46 Cr. L. J. 337=I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 231=217 Ind. Cas. 302.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence of relations of deceased.

Where in a case of murder, it is found that the deceased and his party were on inimical terms with the party of the accused, it is a rule of prudence that the evidence of the relations of the deceased should be taken with caution. A.I.R. 1942 Pesh. 29=43 Cr. L. J. 498=189 Ind. Cas. 878.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Prosecution witnesses, relatives of deceased—Effect.

In a case of murder the fact that the prosecution witnesses are relatives of the murdered man is no valid reason for discarding their evidence. What would be of importance is that the witnesses had enmity with the accused. The interests of the relatives is undoubtedly to see the true criminal prosecuted; they have no interest in accusing any one falsely unless they have enmity. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 233=37 Cr. L. J. 751=38 P.L.R. 695=163 Ind. Cas. 143.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Inimical witness.

It is altogether unsafe in a murder case to place reliance on the evidence of a witness when the Court knows that enmity exists between him and accused. A.I.R. 1940 All. 46=1939 A.L.J. 966=41 Cr. L. J. 258=1939 A.W.R. 768=186 Ind. Cas. 192.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Absence of marks of injury on person of accused.

In the case of fight between two parties, the fact that no marks of injury were found on the person of the accused and the other members of his party, indicates that the accused were the aggressors. A. I. R. 1942 Pesh. 29 (2)=43 Cr. L. J. 498=199 Ind. Cas. 878.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Accused charged with causing death of her new born infant by drowning—Essentials to be proved by prosecution.

Where the charge against the accused is that she intentionally caused the death of her new-born infant by drowning it in the Corporation syphon, the prosecution must not only prove that she was recently delivered of a child but also that the body of the child found in the cesspool was the body of her child. The accused cannot be convicted merely on the evidence that she was seen in an advanced state of pregnancy and that her appearance and the state of the room that she occupied on the date of the alleged offence indicated that she had been delivered of a child, and that the dead body of the child was found in the syphon. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 1=1940 M.W.N. 1105=52 L.W. 710=42 Cr. L. J. 677=195 Ind. Cas. 129.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Test of live birth of child.

The fact that the lungs on suction floated in water is not an infallible test of live birth. A child may breathe while its head is in the vagina, either during a presentation of the head or of the breech. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 294=1939 M.W.N. 1130=50 L.W. 791=41 Cr. L. J. 579=188 Ind. Cas. 332.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Absence of evidence.

Per Young C. J.—Where, there is no evidence upon which the Court can rely, it is not possible to come to a conclusion even that the murder was probably committed by anyone. A. I. R. 1940 Lah. 457=42 P.L.R. 570=42 Cr. L. J. 53=I.L.R. (1941) Lah. 259=190 Ind. Cas. 668.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Implication of innocent party—Effect on other accused.

Where the falsehood is merely an embroidery to a story, that would not be enough to discredit the whole of the witness's evidence. But if the falsehood is on a major point in the case, or if one of the essential circumstances of the story told is clearly unfounded, this is enough to discredit the witness altogether. Hence, the implication of a man in a murder in which he could not possibly have taken part in, in the absence of convincing circumstantial evidence against the other murderers, a reason for acquitting them all. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 457 = I.L.R. (1941) Lah. 259 = 42 P.L.R. 570 = 42 Cr.L.J. 53 = 190 Ind. Cas. 668.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Discrepant evidence—Accused found to have several wounds—Duty of prosecution in explaining such wounds.

It is surely a discrepancy of great gravity when a witness, called to say that a fatal blow was struck and the deceased fell in consequence of it is obliged to admit that on an earlier occasion he told the Police that the deceased fell when he ran into the yokepin of a cart.

When a man charged with murder in the course of a melee is found to have number of wounds, the prosecution ought to be able to do more than merely call a witness to say that the deceased swung a da in all directions, and then ask the Court to infer that that explains the accused's wounds. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 55 = 41 Cr.L.J. 373 = 186 Ind. Cas. 719.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Witness testifying on oath—Inference.

If a witness goes into the witness box and testifies on oath, the jury, unless there is something else to operate on their minds, may draw an inference not as a matter of law, but rather as a matter of fact that he is prima facie likely to be speaking the truth, particularly in capital cases. A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 682 = I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 187 = 43 C.W.N. 133 = 41 Cr.L.J. 59 = 184 Ind. Cas. 614.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Inquest report.

The statements in the inquest reports are not evidence in a case. 177 Ind. Cas. 808 = 1938 M.W.N. 868 = (1938) 2 M.L.J. 618 = 48 L.W. 615 = 39 Cr.L.J. 947.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Inquest report filed—Sub-Inspector not cross-examined—Retrial.

Where inquest reports have been filed, it is incumbent upon the Sub-Inspector who reduced the statements in inquest report to writing, immediately after the discovery of the dead bodies, to explain the difference between them and the evidence given by him. He should be cross-examined with regard to this difference. Where he is not so cross-examined, and since the statements in the inquest reports cannot be used to discredit the evidence of the Sub-Inspector, unless they are put to him under the provision of S. 145, Evidence Act, it is necessary to order a re-trial. (1938) 177 Ind. Cas. 808 = 1938 M.W.N. 868 = (1938) 2 M.L.J. 618 = 48 L.W. 615 = 39 Cr.L.J. 947.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence.

It can never be maintained that where the evidence for the prosecution points affirmatively no further than manslaughter, the law would enlarge the proof and transform the case into one presumptively of murder. A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 242 = 1936 M.W.N. 889 = 1936 A.W.R. 741 = 44 L.W. 253 = 1936 A.L.J. 869 = 37 Cr.L.J. 914 = 40 C.W.N. 1164 = 38 Bom. L.R. 1101 = 163 Ind. Cas. 681 (P.C.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Unreliable evidence—Conviction.

Where the evidence given in the Court is obviously not reliable and the medical evidence shows that there is only one long cut on the deceased's body and it cannot be possibly determined who caused it, a conviction for murder is not sustainable, though a wicked crime has thereby to go unpunished. (1936) 165 Ind. Cas. 889 = 38 Cr.L.J. 89.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302.

Person giving threats of death some months before murder.

Held, that such fact is not sufficient to prove that the person was connected with death. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 400 = 38 P.L.R. 949 = 37 Cr.L.J. 597 = 17 Lah. 518 = 162 Ind. Cas. 511.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Alibi.

Evidence strong against accused — Accused found to have motive — Recovery of blood-stained garments and knife:

Held, that the alibi evidence was not to be treated seriously and that on the evidence he could be convicted under S. 302. (1936) 164 Ind. Cas. 154 = 1936 O.W.N. 603 = 37 Cr.L.J. 932 (D.B.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302.

Held, provided that enough points of similarity and dissimilarity in two fired cartridges are taken the chances of two different bolts making identically the same marks are so remote as to be to all intents and purposes non-existent.

Held, further on facts that the accused was guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 152 = 37 Cr.L.J. 889 = 164 Ind. Cas. 145.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Mode of examining witnesses.

In a capital case it is important that the more important of the witnesses should be examined in such way as would enable the Court to properly appreciate their evidence. The evidence should be led in sufficient detail and with due regard to the sequence of events, the facts which the witnesses saw or the acts which they did and also the reasons which actuated them to do the acts being narrated in an intelligent fashion. It is only by this means that a clear and consistent account of the whole thing may be presented before the Judge and jury. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 184 = 39 C.W.N. 368 = 36 Cr.L.J. 808 = 62 Cal. 572 = 155 Ind. Cas. 687 (F.B.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Witness resiling from previous statement—Value of evidence.

It is quite unsafe, especially in a murder case, to rely upon the evidence of witnesses who have resiled from their previous statements. But this principle does not apply where it is not only the evidence of a witness who has resiled from his statement which proves the case against the accused but there is an eye-witness and other witnesses to prove the case. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 507 = 11 O.W.N. 1269 = 36 Cr.L.J. 86 = 152 Ind. Cas. 331.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302.

Where the deceased was about 80 years old, suffering from rheumatism; the first information report by chaukidar mentioned that the deceased must have fallen on a log of wood and died a natural death; the medical evidence could not definitely say whether the death was due to violence or natural; the prosecution evidence was vague and unreliable; all circumstances pointed to a natural death;

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence required.

A brutal murder committed in daylight in a village is bound to go unpunished where satisfactory evidence is not forthcoming as to who were the guilty parties. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 13=11 O.W.N. 77=35 Cr.L.J. 681(2)=148 Ind. Cas. 259.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Events to be considered.

The events preceding and leading on to the assault on the deceased have to be considered in approaching the evidence led by the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 44=35 Cr.L.J. 855=148 Ind. Cas. 1069.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302 — Duty of prosecution—Available evidence.

Though it is the duty of the prosecution to place before the Court, especially in a case of murder, all the available evidence which is likely to throw any light upon the crime and the withholding of such evidence is likely to be treated by the Court as a flaw in the evidence for the Crown, each case depends upon its own facts and circumstances. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 500=33 Cr.L.J. 497(2)=33 P.L.R. 580=137 Ind.Cas. 691.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Custom of implicating relatives of suspected murderers.

Where in a trial of four brothers for murder although the Magistrate found the evidence of all the professing eye-witnesses to be untrustworthy, he acquitted two of them and passed the sentence of death upon the other two:

Held, that having in view the prevailing custom of maliciously implicating as many of the suspected murderer's close relations as possible without regard to truth, it would be unsafe to confirm the conviction of two of the accused upon evidence which as a whole had failed to convince the trial Court. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 424=33 P.L.R. 475=33 Cr.L.J. 744=139 Ind.Cas. 128.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302 — Time of post mortem examination, importance of.

In a murder case, it is most essential that the time of the post mortem should be recorded, as in many cases, it assists the Court in determining whether the death took place at the time alleged or not. A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 119=8 O.W.N. 107=32 Cr.L.J. 697=6 Luck. 475=131 Ind. Cas. 439.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302 — Defence — Duty of counsel.

In a case of murder, the Advocate for the defence should be very careful in advising the accused person to dispense with his defence witnesses especially if those witnesses were present at the time of the occurrence. A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 163=32 Cr.L.J. 1067=133 Ind. Cas. 488.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302 — Prosecution witnesses untruthful—Residue uncorroborated—Conviction bad.

Where the prosecution witnesses are found to be untruthful as to the greater part of their evidence, it is dangerous to convict the accused on the residue without corroboration; 42 Cal. 784, Foll. 7 O.W.N. 939=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 460.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Lathi blow on the head—Abettor gagged the mouth as desired—No common intention proved—Abettor not liable for murder.

P attacked H with a lathi and hit him on his head. P then asked B to press H's mouth with a cloth. B did as she was asked. In the post mortem H's skull was found to be shattered into 14 pieces. Upon medical examination it was found that death was due to injuries on the head caused by P. The blows were not struck in furtherance of common intention on the part of P and B. There was no evidence that death had been caused by strangulation:

Held, that B was not guilty of murder. 120 Ind. Cas. 268=31 Cr.L.J. 37=1930 Cr. C. 61=A.I.R. 1930 All. 45.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Prosecution evidence uncorroborated in material particulars—Real murderer concealed—Evidence insufficient.

The fact of murder admitted of no doubt. The main evidence for the prosecution and the sole evidence connecting the accused with the murder was that of two brothers whose evidence was uncorroborated in material particulars and unreliable. The villagers were well aware of the identity of the murderers, but whether it was because the real murderers were public favourites or the deceased was unpopular no evidence was forthcoming:

Held, that the accused could not be convicted, 1929 Cr.C. 287=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 527.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302 — Evidence—Unreliable witness.

Conviction for murder on the strength of the statement of a witness who was found to be unreliable, cannot be supported. 100 Ind. Cas. 359=7 A.I.Cr.R. 430=28 Cr.L.J. 279=A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1112.

—S. 300—Evidence.

When the prosecution witnesses are not impartial and the story put forward by them is palpably false and does not explain injuries caused to the accused, the High Court should set aside the convictions of the accused under S. 304(2). 95 Ind. Cas. 597=8 L.L.J. 183=27 P.L.R. 22=27 Cr.L.J. 821.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence—Robbery and murder—Evidence sufficient for robbery—Not sufficient for murder.

In a case of murder the following facts were found: The accused found the deceased playing with three other companions, gave him a melon and took him away on the promise of giving him more. The accused and deceased were afterwards seen together near the canal by one witness and after that deceased was never seen alive again. The medical man who conducted the post-mortem examination was unable to give any opinion as to the cause of death because putrefaction was too far advanced. Melon seeds were found in the deceased's stomach at the post mortem examination. The accused's shoes were found near the canal bridge hidden in some reeds. Deceased when taken away by the accused was wearing 3 ornaments and these were not on his dead body. The appellant subsequently had knowledge of the place in which these ornaments were concealed and himself dug them up during the police investigation.

Held, that assuming these findings to be correct they do not exclude every reasonable hypothesis other than that the deceased's death was caused by the accused. If the accused can be held to have robbed the deceased it does not follow necessarily that he afterwards killed him. 77 Ind. Cas. 433=4 Lah. 373 =6 L.L.J. 59=25 Cr.L.J. 385=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 109.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence—Value of—Evidence of eye witness failing to inform.

When a person sees a murder committed and gives no information thereof, his evidence is little better than that of an accomplice. 76 Ind. Cas. 824=5 L.L.J. 322=25 Cr.L.J. 264=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 391.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Going with a weapon on the day of murder.

The mere fact that the appellant left the house with toka in his hand after the deceased had left it on the night of the murder is not a very material point. Many zamindars carry tokas which are used for their ordinary work as agriculturists and there is nothing significant in the fact that the appellant had a toka in his hand when he left the house. 77 Ind. Cas. 602=25 Cr.L.J. 426=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 539.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Cause of death uncertain—No proof of body being pointed out—Accused seen with deceased the day previous with bulls sold by deceased—Presumption.

When the cause of death was uncertain and it was not proved that the body of the deceased was pointed out by the appellant:

Held, accepting it as proved that the body was discovered on the 9th some three miles from the fair ground, but from this fact and the facts that the appellant was the last person seen with the deceased on the 8th and that he was later on that day in possession of a bullock which the deceased had offered to him for sale do not justify the presumption that the death of the deceased was caused by the appellant in the absence of any evidence of the cause of death. Still less could it be presumed that the death was caused by the appellant with such intention or knowledge as to render him guilty of an offence under Section 302, Indian Penal Code. 75 Ind. Cas. 762=25 Cr.L.J. 58=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 429.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Evidence—Not sufficient—Very young girl charged—Infant's throat cut—Body not found in her house—Motive insufficient—Jewels not effectively concealed—Evidence not sufficient.

A girl, aged 10 or 11 years was convicted of murder of an infant by cutting her throat with a knife and was sentenced to transportation for life by the Sessions Judge. The evidence against her was purely circumstantial;

Held, that the Sessions Judge committed a grave error concerning the most important link in the chain of circumstantial evidence viz., the place where the body was discovered, because as a fact it was not found in the girl's house but in a disused cattle shed to which anybody had access; that no importance to the so-called motive should have been attached as the liking for sweets is almost universal among children; that the evidence of her denial of the whereabouts of the infant loses all importance as the dead body was not found in her house and that the knife and the jewels were so slightly concealed that they could have been found out by any one without her aid; and that under these circumstances conviction of the girl for murder was not sustainable. 5 L.L.J. 78=A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 361.

—Ss. 299 300 and 302—Assessors finding some guilty and others not guilty—Evidence the same against all—Unsatisfactory—Conviction of some.

Where the accused were seven in number and the assessors were of opinion that some of them were not guilty while others were held to be guilty although the evidence against them was merely the same and it appeared that the evidence was most unsatisfactory and that the truth had been kept back. Held, that under those circumstances it was not proper to convict some of the accused under S. 302, I. P. C.

Per Addison, J—In the Punjab persons who are on the point of death do sometimes implicate their enemies without cause. 30 Punj. L.R. 536.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Decomposed body—Identified by clothes, height and age—Confession not recorded but deposed to.

Where the body though decomposed was identified by the help of clothes, height and age of the deceased and the accused made confessions before witnesses and the Tahsildar before whom she was produced for remand and who though had not recorded the confession under S. 164, Cr. P. C. deposed to it, held: that the appellant was guilty of the offence under S. 302, that there was no reason to doubt the testimony of the disinterested witnesses and the unanimous verdict of the assessors. 81 Ind. Cas. 271=25 Cr.L.J. 783=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 40.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Evidence—Corroboration of—Testimony of Investigating Officer.

Observations by Investigating Officer made on the spot require the same sort of corroboration by independent witness that is required in connection with the first inspection of the corpse and the preparation of the inquest report on the same point. 15 A.L.J. 340=18 Cr.L.J. 1028=42 Ind. Cas. 772.

—Ss. 299, 300, 304 and 326—Evidence—Charge—Intention—Essentials

Where the charge to the jury omitted to ask the jury to consider the intention of the accused, the charge is defective. The accused's frame of mind, the nature of weapon, number and nature of wounds, examination of the eye-witnesses, as to duration of the action are considerations in deciding the questions of intention. 8 L.B.R. 125=17 Cr.L.J. 154=33 Ind. Cas. 634.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 201 — Evidence — Causing evidence of murder to disappear—Principal and accessory after fact—Principal if can be convicted under S. 201.

A principal could not be convicted as an accessory after fact. When it is impossible to say definitely, though strongly suspected, that an accused was guilty of murder, mere suspicion does not bar a conviction under S. 201. But if it be accepted as a proved fact that the accused disposed of a dead body and if the acceptance of that fact completes the chain of circumstantial evidence which proves beyond doubt that the accused were actual principals present at the murder and taking part in the murder, they cannot be convicted of the minor offence of causing evidence of the murder to disappear, though by order of a Judge or by a misconception of the position by the Public Prosecutor, the charge of murder is subsequently withdrawn. Per Chapman, J.—It is unsatisfactory that one Court charges the accused as principal and the other as accessory after the fact. 20 C.W.N. 166=17 Cr.L.J. 4=23 C.L.J. 333=32 Ind. —Ss. 299, and 300—Murder—Proof—Practice.

Where one is charged with the murder of another, three facts obviously have to be established—first of all that the person alleged to be murdered is dead; secondly, that he died by the means alleged on the part of the prosecution; and thirdly, that the accused intentionally took that part in causing his death which is attributed to him by the prosecution. —Ss. 299 and 300—Plea of insanity—Melancholic homicidal mania.

Held, on the evidence in the case, that the prisoner was suffering from a fit of melancholic homicidal mania at the time of the act and incapable of knowing the nature of the act. (1905) 10 C.W.N. 725=3 Cr.L.J. 469.

—Ss. 299, 300, 411—Murder—Receiving stolen property—Proof of murder.

The accused Y. being charged with the murder of a boy and with having committed an offence under S. 411, in respect of certain ornaments which the boy was wearing at the time of his death, admitted that the boy was at his house immediately before his death, and declared he had fallen from the roof and his respiration had stopped. He also admitted that he had subsequently thrown the body in a tank where it was afterwards found. It was further proved that the accused had produced the ornaments from a hole near the tank. But there was no evidence to prove that the accused had anything to do with the death of the boy, and the medical evidence was to the effect that the boy might have been either intentionally or accidentally strangled. Held, that there was not sufficient legal evidence that the accused had killed the boy, and the accused could only be found guilty of an offence under S. 411. (1903) 8 C.W.N. 22.

7. Exceptions to S. 300.

- (a) Burden of proof
- (b) Duty of Court
- (c) Facts may fall within more than one Exception.

7 (a). Exceptions to S. 300—Burden of proof.

—S. 300—Person driving spear in abdomen and killing another—Offence—Burden of proof—Exceptions—Presumption.

Where a man intentionally kills another, or intentionally inflicts bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, (by driving spear in his abdomen) his act is murder, unless the accused can bring the case within one of the exceptions specified in S. 300. Under S. 105, Evidence Act, not only is the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within an exception upon the accused persons, but the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. A.I.R. 1914 Pat. 92=22 Pat. 607=10 B.R. 388=45 Cr.L.J. 409=211 Ind. Cas. 532.

—S. 300—Onus.

Where an accused admits that he took part in the killing, the onus is strongly upon him to show that his case comes under one of the exceptions under S. 300. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 157=42 P.L.R. 1=41 Cr.L.J. 576=188 Ind. Cas. 326.

—S. 300.

Plea that act of accused falls within exception to S. 300—Burden of proof is upon accused under Evidence Act, S. 105. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 148=10 O.W.N. 7=8 Luck. 301=34 Cr.L.J. 408 (2)=143 Ind. Cas. 55.

—Ss. 300, 302—Evidence Act, S. 105—Burden of proof.

The burden of proving that the act of an accused charged with murder comes within the purview of any of the exceptions to S. 300, I.P.C., is upon the accused under S. 105, Evidence Act and when he has failed to discharge that burden, he is on his own showing guilty of an offence under S. 202. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 148=10 O.W.N. 7=8 Luck. 301=34 Cr.L.J. 498 (2)=143 Ind. Cas. 55.

—S. 300—Onus.

In a charge for murder, it is for the accused to prove the fact essential for the purpose of bringing his case within any of the exceptions to S. 300, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 142=34 Cr.L.J. 783=144 Ind. Cas. 420.

—Ss. 300—Murder—Plea of case falling under proviso—Onus.

When accused brutally beat a defenceless man against whom they had a grudge, but without an intention to kill, and gave him such a blow which caused his death, they are guilty of murder unless they show that they are protected by one of the provisos to S. 300, I.P.C. 17 A.L.J. 985=20 Cr.L.J. 767=53 Ind. Cas. 495.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Burden of proof—Exceptions.

When the accused gave such a blow with a lathi to the deceased on the head which caused the death of the deceased by fracture of the skull it was for him to show that it was removed from the category of murder by one of the exceptions to the section. 17 A.L.J. 866=20 Cr.L.J. 608=52 Ind. Cas. 224.

7 (b). Exceptions to S. 300—Duty of Court.*—S. 300—Benefit of exceptions.

If upon the evidence it appears that the accused is entitled to the benefit of any one of the exceptions of the Code, neither the ignorance of the accused nor the falsity of his evidence nor any mistake or omission of the lower Courts or advocates should deprive him of the benefit of it. A.I.R. 1941 Sind 117=42 Cr.L.J. 786=195 Ind. Cas. 833.

—S. 300—Duty of Court.

Where the Court finds on the prosecution evidence itself that the accused is entitled to the benefit of one of the exceptions to S. 300, it should give the accused that benefit though he may not have relied on the exception. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 119=37 Cr.L.J. 1035=I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 85=164 Ind. Cas. 928.

—S. 300—Benefit of exception, not pleaded—Court must give if made out.

Where the Court finds on the prosecution evidence itself that the accused is entitled to the benefit of one of the exceptions to S. 300, it should give the accused that benefit though accused may not have relied on the exception; thus where accused by chance caught his wife in the very act of having intercourse with her paramour and killed her on the spot:

Held, that the accused should be convicted under S. 304 and not S. 302, though he did not plead the exception to S. 300. 81 Ind. Cas. 901=25 Cr. L.J. 1077=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 37.

—S. 300—Culpable homicide not proved to amount to murder—Necessity of considering exceptions.

The question as to whether the case is within one of the Exceptions to S. 300 does not arise for determination unless and until the prosecution has established a case of murder. If the prosecution has proved that culpable homicide (under S. 299) has been committed by the accused but has failed to prove that such culpable homicide amounted to murder (under S. 300), it is improper, and indeed useless, to consider whether any of the excluding factors are present. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr. L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

7 (c). Exceptions to S. 300—Facts may fall within more than one Exception.*—Ss. 299 and 300—Overlapping.

The facts of a case may be such that it may fall within more than one exception to S. 300. 106 Ind. Cas. 343=1927 M.W.N. 796=29 Cr. L.J. 7=9 A.I.Cr.R. 263=1 M.Cr.C. 178=A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 136.

8. Grave and sudden provocation—S. 300, Exception (1)

- (a) Duration.
- (b) Proof and onus.
- (c) Test of sufficiency.
- (d) What amounts to.
- (e) What does not amount to.

8 (a). Grave and sudden provocation—S. 300, Exception (1)—Duration.*—S. 300, Excep. 1—Person getting provocation—When can be said to have cooled down and consequently deprived of benefit of exception.

It is not possible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to when a person who has received provocation should be said to have had time to cool down and thus to be deprived of the benefit of Excep. 1 to S. 300, I. P. C.; much depends on the individual characteristics of the accused and that element cannot be ignored in the determination of this matter. Information received from a reliable person and believed to be credible as to the existence of a provoking act, which is being done in the immediate neighbourhood and the existence of which is instantaneously verified, can within the meaning of that exception be said to be provocation given by the person committing that act as much as if the person provoked had seen it in the first place with his own eyes.

Accused No. 1, who was the father of accused No. 2 saw the deceased who had contracted a liaison with his daughter-in-law, entering his house in his absence from a short distance from his house. Thereupon he informed his son who was about 100 paces from the house and both father and son came to the house and seeing the daughter-in-law and the deceased in a compromising position killed them both:

Held, that when the accused No. 1 was at a short distance from his house, he must have been provoked to such a degree as to lose his senses there and then and if he further informed his son of what he had seen and came to his house accompanied by his son, he had no time to cool down so to say and thus return to his normal condition. The whole thing formed a series of one transaction and the provocation continued until such time as the deed was done. The accused No. 1, therefore, was entitled to the benefit of Excep. 1. Similarly, when the son was seen going to meet his wife, he too would have at once lost the power of control and if afterwards he travelled a distance of 100 paces only, it could not be reasonably urged that the act that he then did smacked of deliberation or that he sought the provocation himself. He too, therefore, was entitled to the benefit of Excep. 1 to S. 300. A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 123=45 P.L.R. 162=I.L.R. (1944) Lah. 72=44 Cr. L.J. 595=207 Ind. Cas. 388.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Act need not immediately follow provocation—Provocation may be continuing.

The rule contained in S. 300, Excep. (1) does not contemplate that in order to entitle an accused to earn the mitigation provided for, the act must immediately follow the provocation. The appellant continued to be under the influence of provocation until he had killed the deceased and the case fell clearly within S. 300, Excep. (1), I. P. C. 68 Ind. Cas. 403=23 Cr. L. J. 563=2 L. L. J. 406.

—Ss. 300, Excep. (1) 302, 304—Grave and sudden provocation—Provocation continuing to influence feelings—Murder—Culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

Where the accused found a man entering his house at night at the invitation of his wife with whom that man had criminal intimacy and being enraged, caught hold of him and took him outside the house to some distance and there assaulted him so severely that he subsequently died of the injuries received:

Held, that the circumstances under which the deceased was found in the house of the accused on the night of the crime were sufficient to cause grave and sudden provocation to the accused and his relations and that the provocation was of a nature that would continue to influence the feelings of the accused for a considerable period after the deceased was caught in the house in the company of the wife of the accused. (1901) 5 C.W.N. 708=28 C. 571.

8 (b). Grave and sudden provocation—S. 300, Exception (1)—Proof and onus.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Grave and sudden provocation—Duty to plead and prove.

Grave and sudden provocation to be an effective defence must be expressly pleaded and then supported by cogent evidence. 142 Ind. Cas. 741=15 N.L.J. 129=34 Cr. L. J. 404.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation must be proved, not presumed.

Absence of premeditation is not in every case a sufficient ground for imposing the lesser penalty for murder.

A tendency to assume that because the murdered person was the murderer's wife, he must have received provocation from her and to supply by conjecture the absence of evidence on the point is to be deprecated as being not only illogical but also unjust to the woman. 63 Ind. Cas. 149=22 Cr. L. J. 613=13 M.L.W. 612=A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 303.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation—Proof of—Loss of self-control—Adequate provocation for such loss—Both must be proved.

Before a person can claim the benefit of Exception (1) to Section 300 of the Penal Code, he must prove (i) that he was deprived of the power of self-control, and (ii) that the provocation was so grave and sudden as to reasonably justify such loss of self-control. In other words, it ought to be distinctly shown not only that the act was done under the influence of some feeling which took away from the person doing it all control over his action but that that feeling had an adequate cause. In the absence of such proof, the atrocity of the offence will not be mitigated and the offender will not be able to escape the legal consequences of his act.

A person who flies into a passion without just cause and goes about slaughtering people may be insane but if he is sane he cannot defend his action on the ground of provocation. 63 Ind. Cas. 610=22 Cr. L. J. 674.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Burden of proof.

Burden of proof of grave and sudden provocation is on defence. Burden does not lie on prosecution to prove want of it. I.L.R. (1937) Lah. 726=39 P.L.R. 313.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Burden of proof.

The burden of proving that the provocation was grave lies on the accused. A.I.R. 1936 Sind. 31=37 Cr. L. J. 483=161 Ind. Cas. 414.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation—Burden of proof.

The onus of proving grave and sudden provocation such as would reduce the offence of murder into one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, is on the accused. 93 Ind. Cas. 230=6 Lah. 171=26 P.L.R. 304=27 Cr. L. J. 438=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 399.

8 (c). Grave and sudden provocation—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Test of sufficiency.

—S. 300, Excep. 1—"Grave and sudden provocation."

The test of "grave and sudden provocation" within the meaning of exception 1 to S. 300, I. P. Code, is whether the provocation given was in the circumstances of the case likely to cause a normal reasonable man to lose control of himself to the extent of inflicting the injury or injuries that he did inflict. 4 A.I.Cr.D. 5.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Necessity of proving loss of self-control.

Under S. 300, Excep. 1 of I. P. C. it is not sufficient to establish merely grave and sudden provocation but it must also be shown that the accused was deprived of the power of self-control. 42 P.L.R. 88.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Requisite provocation.

Grave and sudden provocation must be such as will upset not merely a hot tempered or hypersensitive person but a person of ordinary sense and calmness. 41 P.L.R. 758=I.L.R. (1939) Lah. 345.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation, what is.

In deciding whether the provocation was grave and sudden it is not open to an accused person to show that he was a person of particular excitability or of a particular mental instability or of a particularly volatile temperament. The Court should take into account the habits, manners and feelings of the class or community to which the accused belonged and not the peculiar idiosyncracies of the offending individual. And in determining whether the provocation was so grave and sudden as to deprive the offender of the power of self-control the Court will consider whether that provocation would be so grave and sudden as to deprive the ordinary man of the class or community to which the offender belonged of the power of self-control. While it is the offender whom the Court regards when considering the question whether he was deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation it decides whether this was so by the test of the "reasonable man," the ordinary normal man, of the community to which the offender belongs.

Hence, where the accused, a Baluchi, alleged that the deceased, his wife, showed him a booja, that is to say, made a gesture of contempt, and urged that among the Baluchis who are excitable people, a booja, shown to them so enrages them as to deprive them of self-control, he must show that showing a booja is to Baluchis so grave and sudden a provocation as would deprive the ordinary normal Baluchi of the power of self-control. A.I.R. 1939 Sind 182 = I.L.R. (1939) Kar. 199 = 40 Cr. L.J. 778 = 183 Ind. Cas. 389.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Test.

The test to see whether the accused acted under grave and sudden provocation is whether the provocation given was in the circumstances of the case likely to cause a normal reasonable man to lose control of himself to the extent or inflicting the injury or injuries that he did inflict. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 600 = 35 P.L.R. 388 = 36 Cr. L.J. 306 = 153 Ind. Cas. 204.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation—Question of fact—Mental condition when provoked must be considered.

Whether provocation is grave and sudden, such as to deprive the accused of the power of self-control, is a question of fact to be determined upon the peculiar circumstances of each case. In deciding the question the Court must take into account the condition of the mind in which the offender was at the time of provocation: 3 P.R. 1913 Cr., Foll. 108 Ind. Cas. 902 = 10 A.I.Cr.R. 124 = 29 Cr. L.J. 454 (Lah.).

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation—Test of sufficiency—Feelings aroused in a reasonable man.

There must exist such an amount of provocation as would be excited by the circumstances in the mind of a reasonable man, so as to lead the jury to ascribe the act to the influence of that passion. 33 C.W.N. 1023 = 123 Ind. Cas. 649 = A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 199.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation—Must be such as will upset person of ordinary calmness.

The provocation contemplated by S. 300, Excep. 1 must be such as will upset, not merely a hot-tempered or hyper-sensitive person, but one of ordinary sense and calmness. 96 Ind. Cas. 209 = 7 Lah. 488 = 27 Cr. L.J. 897 = 27 P.L.R. 805 = A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 598.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation voluntarily provoked.

In order that a culpable homicide may not amount to murder by virtue of Exception (1) to S. 300, it is necessary that the provocation must be both grave and sudden. Where, however, the provocation is sought or voluntarily provoked, it may be grave but it cannot be sudden. A.I.R. 1945 Sind 42 = I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 444 = 219 Ind. Cas. 419 = 46 Cr. L.J. 614.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Requisite provocation.

One of the provisos to Excep. 1 to S. 300, is that the provocation is not sought. Where the accused knew that his sister was suspected of an intimacy with another person and he left his house after picking up an axe, and going to the house of his sister, broke into it in spite of protests and then proceeded first to murder her lover and then to murder his sister.

Held, that even assuming that the provocation was grave, it could not be said that it was sudden and con-

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation given by offender.

Once the provocation is given by the offender himself he cannot subsequently urge that the opposite party had acted in a provocative manner. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 155 = 37 Cr. L.J. 87 = 159 Ind. Cas. 284.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation not given by victim within hearing or sight of offender.

The grave and sudden provocation within the meaning of Excep. 1 to S. 300 need not come from the victim within the hearing or sight of the offender. The only questions which would arise under Excep. 1 are whether the provocation caused by the victim was grave enough or sudden enough to deprive the offender of self-control. A.I.R. 1932 Sind 168 = 26 S.L.R. 266 = 33 Cr. L.J. 870 = 139 Ind. Cas. 772.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation by act done in obedience to law.

The provocation that will bring a case within Excep. 1 to S. 300 must, according to the proviso, not be provocation given by anything done in obedience to the law or by a public servant in the lawful exercise of his powers. An arrest or attempted arrest by a private person, if not strictly justifiable by law, is thus not outside the provocation mentioned in Excep. 1. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 508 = 14 P.L.T. 464 = 35 Cr. L.J. 725 = 148 Ind. Cas. 574.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation not from victim.

Where S the brother-in-law of the accused went to a pwe under the influence of drink and not only abused the people there in general but challenged them to fight and then the deceased went to S and struck him on the cheek whereupon the accused appeared and caught hold of the deceased and stabbed him on the stomach as a result of which he died:

Held, that the provocation came not from the deceased but from the accused's brother-in-law and proviso (1), to S. 300 did not apply. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 115 = 37 Cr. L.J. 467 = 161 Ind. Cas. 578.

8 (d). Grave and sudden provocation—S. 300, Excep. (1)—What amounts to.

—S. 300, Excep. 1—Grave and sudden provocation—What amounts to.

Where a person in a public place strikes another on the face with a shoe and the latter in the heat of the moment pulls out a knife and stabs the former, and causes his death the case would be covered by the 1st Exception to S. 300, I. P. Code, as there was grave and sudden provocation. 1949 A.W.R. 458 = A.I.R. 1950 A. 91 = 51 Cr. L.J. 385.

—Ss. 300, Excep. (1), 302 and 304—Grave and sudden provocation—Circumstances—Test.

There can never be any direct evidence as to what was the psychological effect upon the mind of a person in certain circumstances. The state of the mind of a person has to be gathered from proved facts. Where the proved facts are that the accused had devoted himself for years to the deceased and her general welfare, and in return for his devotion and service, she did not only unjustly suspect him of infidelity and asked him to get out after starving him for a number of days and finally hurled one of the most intolerable implications upon him, the circumstances are sufficient to deprive a man, in the position of the accused, the power of self-control. 229 Ind. Cas. 102=48 Cr. L. J. 229=1047 A.Cr.C. 59=1947 A.W.R.(C.C.) 39=1947 O.W.N. 85=1947 O.A.(C.C.) 39=A.I.R. 1947 Oudh 148.

—S. 300, Excep. 1—Grave and sudden provocation—Severe blow on the head—Loss of self-control.

A severe blow on the head with a stick very frequently causes loss of self-control and is of such a nature as to deprive the person beaten temporarily of the power of self-control. If such a person in the heat of his passion stabs his assailant who dies later on it would be a clear case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 1946 A.M.L.J. 9.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Foul abuse.

Foul abuse may amount to sudden and grave provocation and when death is caused, under such provocation the offence is one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 42 P.L.R. 45.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 304—Unchastity of wife—Offence.

If a person sees his wife in the arms of another and in the anger of the moment kills either his wife or her paramour, he is not guilty of murder. The provocation would be both grave and sudden and would reduce the crime to culpable homicide and not amounting to murder under S. 304. But a man who thinks over what he has seen for some hours might still act under grave provocation, but such could not be described as sudden.

[Conviction under S. 302 was set aside and the accused was convicted under S. 304 and sentenced to five years rigorous imprisonment.] A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 541=6 B.R. 503=41 Cr. L. J. 472=187 Ind. Cas. 586.

—S. 300, Exception 1, S. 304—Accused killing another man found in his wife's bed in attempt to commit adultery with her — Accused held entitled to benefit of Excep. (1).

Where an accused seeing another in the act of sleeping with former's wife with the intention of committing adultery, kills him instantaneously, he is entitled to the benefit of Excep. 1 to S. 300, the provocation in such a case being extremely grave. He can be convicted only under S. 304, part I.

The essence of Excep. 1 to S. 300 is that the accused is deprived of the power of self-control. Obviously, if a person is deprived of self-control, the mere amount of beating which he gives to the person who deprives him of that control is not a proper criterion to take into account in awarding a sentence. The more self-control is lost—and, therefore, the more Excep. 1 applies to the case—the more likely are numerous injuries to be inflicted.

—S. 300, Excep. (1).

At about 10 o' clock at night the accused saw a man going out of the chaubara where his wife was, at the time. He pursued him but the latter ran away. He enquired from his wife who he was and she, instead of replying to the question, abused him whereupon he picked the chhura which was lying close by, and killed her:

Held, that the accused acted under grave and sudden provocation and his offence was not murder but fell under S. 304, Part I. A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 436=40 Cr.L.J. 868=42 P.L.R. 42=184 Ind. Cas. 186.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Adultery with wife of accused—Excep. 1, if applies.

The accused and the deceased were sleeping one night on the same charpai. The deceased then got up and entered a room and closed the door. Through the hole in the door the accused saw the deceased committing adultery with the accused's wife. The accused waited till the deceased came out, lay down and began dozing and then stabbed him to death with a knife:

Held, that under the circumstances, there was both grave and sudden provocation and excep. 1 to S. 300, applied to the case. A.I.R. 1938 All. 532=1938 A.L.J. 689=1938 A.W.R. 473=39 Cr. L. J. 956 (2)=I.L.R. (1938) All. 789=177 Ind. Cas. 821.

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Adultery by wife — Sentence.

In a case where a husband finds his wife actually committing adultery and kills her or her lover at once, that of course would be grave and sudden provocation, but where the husband has time for deliberation, Excep. 1 to S. 300, I.P.C., cannot apply.

(But held, however, that though the offence technically fell under S. 302, the provocation was great and that the case should be referred to the Local Government to consider the reduction of the sentence substantially. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 692=39 P.L.R. 479=38 Cr.L.J. 1057=171 Ind. Cas. 314.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Adultery by wife.

Wife of the accused repeatedly finding fault with him, though he was devoted to her, did not allow him to live in the same house with her. The husband was obliged to stay at his brother's place. After about some months the accused found his wife eight months advanced in pregnancy. On an enquiry by him whether she cohabited with a certain person, she replied in the affirmative. Immediately, the accused stabbed her:

Held, that it was hardly possible to imagine graver provocation being received. The accused was not guilty of the offence of murder but of culpable homicide merely. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 466=39 Cr. L. J. 137=172 Ind. Cas. 395.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Accused seeing his wife with her paramour but not in act of intercourse—Accused killing wife—Offence—Sentence.

Where the accused found his wife who was six months advanced in pregnancy and her paramour together in his house but not in the act of sexual intercourse and killed her on provocation:

Held, that taking into account the nature and temper of these people of the class of the accused, when their honour, or perhaps the possession of their women was concerned, the case fell within excep. 1 to S. 300, I.P.C.

Held, however, that this was not a case where the provocation was so extreme as to call for a lighter sentence.

[Conviction from one under S. 302 altered to one under S. 304, Part I, and the sentence of transportation for life was reduced to 10 years' rigorous imprisonment] A.I.R. 1937 Sind 212=38 Cr.L.J. 968=31 S.L.R. 460=170 Ind. Cas. 827.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Grave and sudden provocation—Criteria.

On the question of grave and sudden provocation, the Court has to determine what amounts in any particular case to grave and sudden provocation, and although the circumstances have to be viewed carefully so as not to extend provocation beyond the limits which the safety of the public requires; at the same time grave and sudden provocation can be created by words. No words are more grave than a public taunting by a man whom one has suspected before of being the paramour of one's wife and boasts of the fact and expresses his intention to take her to live with him in the house of her sister to whom he is already married. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 472=38 Cr.L.J. 144 (1)=166 Ind. Cas. 192.

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Continuing grave and sudden provocation.

The deceased had for several years been carrying on an intrigue with wife of the accused and had been in the habit of having sexual intercourse with that woman. He had also been in the habit of singing a song tantamount to a declaration of his intrigue with the wife of the accused and of a most provocative nature. The accused was convicted under S. 304 (1), I. P. C. :

Held, that the relations between the accused, the deceased and the accused's wife were such as to constitute a continuing grave provocation and the song he used to sing was of a nature to give sudden and grave provocation every time it was sung by the deceased in the presence of the accused. The mere fact that the accused had managed to control himself on previous occasions when provoked, was no reason for refusing to give him the benefit of Excep. (1) to S. 300, I. P. C. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 78=36 Cr.L.J. 939=156 Ind. Cas. 427.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Offence.

Accused seeing his wife on criminal intimacy with a stranger—Murder—Conviction must be under S. 304 and not under S. 302. 1934 M.W.N. 688.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Grave and sudden provocation—Meeting wife with paramour.

The accused, a Pathan, on returning to his house did not see his wife and he went out and saw her engaged in love making with another man in the fields. He killed the man with an axe and after returning to his wife he cut her throat with a kitchen knife :

Held, on the facts, that the accused had acted under grave and sudden provocation within S. 304 (1), and that the mere fact that when killing his wife he substituted a knife for the axe, which he was carrying, was scarcely sufficient to prove deliberation. A. I. R. 1933 Pesh. 38=34 Cr. L. J. 804=144 Ind. Cas. 160.

—S. 300 Excep. (1)—Sudden quarrel and provocation.

Deceased wife found with paramour—Husband trying to seize paramour struck with knife by paramour who ran away—Wife preventing husband from seizing him—Husband consequently striking wife with knife—Husband held guilty not of murder but under S. 304. 11 L.L.J. 485=1930 Cr. C. 180=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 172.

—S. 300, Exception (1)—Wife having immoral connection—Husband's protest resulting in abuses from her—Husband in agency loses self-control and deals fatal blow—Guilty under S. 304, para. 2 only.

A woman was leading a notoriously immoral life which was the common scandal of the village. She had a young lover who was known to the accused, her husband. On the night previous to the murder she had a mysterious and significant disappearance from the bed side of her husband and subsequent protest by the husband resulted only in vulgar abuse by her. The husband started beating her with a shoe, lost his control, picked up a rough stick which happened to be lying close by and struck a fatal blow to the erring wife which resulted in her death. After murder police had no difficulty in finding him out and producing him before the Court :

Held, that the whole unfortunate affair should be looked at as one prolonged agony on the part of the husband which must have been preying upon his mind and eventually led to the fatal assault, bringing the case within the purview of Exception. 1, S. 300. 119 Ind. Cas. 323=30 P.L.R. 652=80 Cr.L.J. 1044=1929 Cr.C. 637=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 861.

—Ss 300 and 304—Finding wife with paramour—Sudden and grave provocation.

Where S on entering his house found his wife sitting with her paramour on a charpoy and suspected them of having committed sexual intercourse and injured the paramour and killed his wife.

Held, that S committed the act under a grave and sudden provocation and is guilty under S. 304 (1) and not under S. 302. 115 Ind. Cas. 476=10 L.L.J. 508=30 Cr.L.J. 481=12 A.I.Cr.R. 294.

—S. 300 Exception (1)—Husband reproving wife for immoral conduct—Unrepentant wife beaten—In the struggle fingers of the accused bitten—Grave and sudden provocation.

The deceased (the wife of the accused) led an immoral life and on the accused's upbraiding the deceased, his wife, with her misconduct, instead of being repentant said that she would again do such acts upon his head. Thereupon he became enraged and struck her with a stick. She struggled with him and got hold of his fingers and bit them. He then lost control of himself and took out a knife and stabbed her with several injuries which resulted in her death :

Held, that the immediate provocation was sufficient to bring the offence within Exception 1 to S. 300 and to reduce it from murder to culpable homicide.

—S. 300, Exception (1)—Finding wife with lover at midnight—Chased the lover and killed him—Returning home killed wife—Provocation grave and sudden.

Where the accused came unexpectedly at dead of night, as he entertained a suspicion about his wife, and found his wife and her lover, but the lover got away and the accused ran after him as he was entering his house and killed him with a knife which he had with him and immediately after returned to his own house and killed his wife:

Held, there was grave and sudden provocation and hence only culpable homicide not amounting to murder was committed. 85 Ind. Cas. 374=6 L.L.J. 437=26 Cr.L.J. 534=26 P.L.R. 260=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 114.

—S. 300, Exception (1)—Husband inducing her to lead moral life—Insolent defiance—Provocation sufficient.

When a husband was inducing his wife who had gone astray to lead a moral life in future, but she insolently replied that if he so attempted she would leave him:

Held, that such a shameless answer is sufficient to give fresh provocation with a suddenness unexpected by the husband. 84 Ind. Cas. 482=26 Cr.L.J. 3=A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 288.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 304—Husband preventing wife running away—Wife giving foul abuse—Striking three blows with a chopper on hand—Provocation sufficient.

It was found that the wife of a young Hindu was in the habit of running away though she was not ill-treated. When the husband caught her running away and asked her to come back she gave him foul abuse, and thereupon he gave her three blows with a chopper which was accidentally in his hand; held that the circumstances of an Indian household where the wife is expected to obey and respect her husband should also be considered in weighing the nature and amount of the provocation, and that the facts of the case disclosed an offence only under S. 304 and not 302, I.P.C. 74 Ind. Cas. 712=9 O.L.J. 597=24 Cr.L.J. 808=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh. 112.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Finding wife in flagrante delicto—Grave and sudden provocation.

Where a person finds his wife in flagrante delicto with another man he is deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation and if he kills wife acting under that impulse he comes within S. 300, I.P.C., Exception I. 71 Ind. Cas. 993=24 Cr.L.J. 273.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Actual adultery may not have been seen—Finding wife with paramour—Sufficient provocation.

Whether the accused saw his wife or the deceased actually committing adultery or whether he simply found them together in the Kholā there cannot be the least doubt that grave and sudden provocation must have been caused. 8 P.R. 1890 and 8 P.R. 1899 (Cr.) Foll. The rule contained in S. 300, Excep. (1) does not contemplate that in order to entitle an accused to earn the mitigation provided for, the act must immediately follow the provocation. The appellant continued to be under the influence of provocation until he had killed the deceased and the case fell clearly within S. 300, Exception (1). I.P.C. 68 Ind. Cas. 403=23 Cr.L.J. 563=2 L.L.J. 406.

—Ss. 300, Excep. (1), and 304 — Provocation—Culpable homicide—Provocation, grave and sudden—Adultery.

Where a person finding his wife on a cot with a stranger with whom she had previously had intrigues murdered her, there is grave and sudden provocation to bring the case within the exception to S. 300, I.P.C. 2 O.L.J. 463=16 Cr.L.J. 625=30 Ind. Cas. 449.

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Provocation — Effect—Grave and sudden—Husband seeing paramour of his wife leaving his house.

Where an accused returned home unexpectedly and seeing the paramour of his wife coming out of his house remonstrated with his wife, and was annoyed by her reception of his remonstrances, and killed her with a hoe which was lying near him; Held, that the act was covered by the first exception to S. 300. 3 P.R. 1913 Cr.=209 P.L.R. 1913=14 Cr.L.J. 208=19 Ind. —S. 300, Exception (1)—Criterion.

The question of provocation is a psychological question and one cannot apply considerations of social morality to such a question.

Where a man sees a woman in the arms of another and loses control over himself, the circumstances that she was his mistress and not wife does not make any real difference for the purposes of S. 304. A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 25 (1)=1931 M.W.N. 1137=35 L.W. 141=33 Cr.L.J. 273=136 Ind. Cas. 314. (1).

But see A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 457 under Note 8 (c).

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Accused beating his sister for immorality and insolence—Death caused—Offence.

The deceased who was the accused's younger sister had left her husband and was living under his care. She was suspected to be of an immoral character. On the night of the murder at about 3 A. M., she had gone out to meet a stranger in the wāra at the back of the house, for a clandestine purpose. When the appellant asked the deceased why she did not give up her evil ways, she refused to listen to him and gave an insolent reply. The accused then gave her two or three blows with a hatchet and she died on the spot:

Held, that the provocation received by the accused was in the circumstances almost as "grave and sudden" as it would have been had the appellant seen the deceased in the act of sexual intercourse with a stranger and it was further aggravated by the insolent reply given by the deceased and the case fell within the purview of S. 304, Part. 1, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 869=35 Cr.L.J. 74=34 P.L.R. 935=146 Ind. Cas. 357.

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Provocation — Indecent overtures.

If a man comes home and finds a person actually misbehaving with his relation, his blood can hardly be expected to have cooled in the course of 15 or 20 seconds, and it is grave and sudden provocation within Exception 1 to S. 300. 94 Ind. Cas. 140=27 Cr.L. J. 572=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 485.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Laiso with sister of accused—Provocation sudden and grave.

Where the victim was found in the house about midnight and was fully aware of the fact that the accused did not like his visits to his mother's house and it appeared that he had contracted laison with the sister of the accused and was seen by the accused, when he had put his arms round her.

Held, that accused must have lost his power of self-control when he saw a stranger in the house at midnight taking liberties with his sister, that the culprit had received grave and the sudden provocation, and that he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 81 Ind. Cas. 173=5 L.L. J. 40=25 Cr.L. J. 685=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 62.

—Ss. 300 and 302—A bania finding daughter-in-law with a fakir—Provocation sufficient.

Where a Banian in a rage, on finding his daughter-in-law with a fakir, backed her to death, the provocation was sufficient to remove the act from the category of murder, but the punishment must be deterrent. 61 Ind. Cas. 165=22 Cr.L. J. 341=3 U.P.L.R. (All.) 41=L.R. 2 A. (Cr.) 88.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Sudden quarrel—Loss of self-control.

A sudden quarrel arose between the accused and the deceased during which the deceased expressed his intention of attacking and kicking the accused and actually advanced towards him. A sudden fight ensued in which the accused used a clasp knife and inflicted a serious wound in the chest of the deceased which ultimately caused his death.

Held, that the accused suffered sudden and grave provocation, and in the course of struggle, lost his power of self-control and did not inflict the injury with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. In the circumstances, therefore, the proper conviction was one under S. 304 and not under S. 302. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 15=39 Cr.L. J. 300=173 Ind. Cas. 299.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Death caused by single blow in sudden fight.

Where the accused struck the deceased only one blow with a stick and the other injury was due to the deceased's head striking against something hard when he fell and all this was due to a sudden provocation by the deceased using filthy language, the offence is not murder as it cannot be proved that the accused acted with the intention or knowledge described in S. 300, I. P. C. (1938) 40 P.L.R. 159.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Grave and sudden provocation.

The accused having heard the cries of a woman who was being beaten by her husband on the road came to her rescue and rescued her from the husband. Subsequently, the accused and the woman lived together with mutual consent but they were not married. The woman was major. While they were together passing along the roadside one day they met the brother of the woman who seeing her, caught her hand and dragged her away from the accused. The accused fired at the brother who died on the spot and ran away with the woman. He was prosecuted under S. 302, for murder.

Held, that the accused was being forcibly deprived of the company of a woman of mature years who was voluntarily living with him and he saw that woman being subjected to violence. In these circumstances, he acted under grave and sudden provocation and that provocation was sufficient in the ordinary course of human nature to deprive him of his self-control so that his action did not amount to murder by virtue of Excep. 1 to S. 300. Accused, however, must be accredited with the intention of causing the deceased's death and hence, since he carried his intention into execution, he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder punishable under the first part of S. 304, I. P. C. A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 86=39 Cr.L. J. 339=173 Ind. Cas. 698.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Grave and sudden provocation proved.

Accused had been gravely and suddenly provoked when ploughing his field and had been forced into a fight; he had then retired and been followed; he had not had time to recover from the effects of the provocation, when again being taunted, he killed another person.

Held, that in these circumstances Excep. (1) to S. 300 should be applied, thus reducing the offence to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 33=38 Cr.L. J. 568=168 Ind. Cas. 394.

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Provocation, what amounts to.

Where it appeared that the deceased was a noted bad character in the village and behaved in an outrageous manner by striking the accused with a stick and by striking him with a stick, the deceased gave grave and sudden provocation to the accused such as would suffice to make any person of ordinary temper lose his self control and in that moment accused used the weapon which he had at hand in retaliation on the deceased and stabbed him.

Held, that under the circumstances the accused was entitled to the benefit of Excep. 1 to S. 300 and hence was not guilty of the offence of murder. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 49=37 Cr.L. J. 411=161 Ind. Cas. 5.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Grave and sudden provocation—Deceased striking accused's child for no cause—Accused losing self-control and striking with da—Death as a result of gangrene offence.

The deceased who was accused's brother-in-law struck his child aged only one year merely because it resented its toy being taken away. On this the accused lost self-control and struck the deceased with a da. The deceased died as the result of gangrene setting in one of the wounds caused.

Held, that the act of the deceased was such as would rouse much resentment in the mind of any father as to amount to grave and sudden provocation and the offence was that of culpable homicide not amounting to murder punishable under the first clause of S. 304. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 526=38 Cr.L.J. 103=165 Ind. Cas. 911.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—What amounts to.

Where the deceased who had no particular right to interfere between the accused and his wife, interfered while the accused was taking away his wife by hand without handling her roughly, and threatened to attack the accused, and in all probability, hit him with a cane;

Held, that such interference amounted to grave and sudden provocation and the accused's action in dealing with the deceased was covered by Excep. I and IV to S. 300, especially when the parties were to some extent drunk. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 216=37 Cr.L.J. 569=162 Ind. Cas. 277.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Grave and sudden provocation, what amounts to.

What amounts to grave and sudden provocation may vary according to the circumstances of each case and according to the general standard of self-control amongst the people of the class involved.

The accused had been treated with the gravest contumely by the deceased and it appeared that the assault would never have taken place had not the deceased who was drunk, suddenly without any cause whatsoever burst out in filthy abuse and insulting accusation;

Held, that to receive such a grievous insult all in a moment at the mouth of a drunken man whose previous offence had been condoned would amount to very grave provocation even to a man of the most philosophic temperament, especially where the accused is an ordinary youthful rustic in whom unusual powers of self-control could not be expected. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 40=37 Cr.L.J. 410=160 Ind. Cas. 1077.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Accused acting without premeditation and on grave and sudden provocation—Accused beating complainant's party—Actual person causing fatal injury not known—Death—Offence.

Where without premeditation but on grave and sudden provocation, the accused, more than five in number, attacked the complainant's party and beat them and as a result of the injuries received, one of the latter died, and while it was not known who of the accused party caused the fatal injuries, it was found that though they were not acting in self defence, they did not take undue advantage or act in a cruel or unusual manner;

Held, that all the accused were responsible for the injuries inflicted but the offence committed was not murder but culpable homicide not amounting to murder and were punishable under Ss. 304-149. A.I.R. 1935 All. 717=1935 A.L.J. 385=36 Cr.L.J. 773=1935 A.W.R. 210=155 Ind. Cas. 560.

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Provocation, what amounts to.

The accused and his father who were ploughing a field since morning stopped ploughing and while they were resting, the father noticed that the bullocks were straying towards the neighbouring fields and called and asked the accused, his son, to prevent them from damaging the neighbouring field. The son refused, whereupon the father threw a clod of earth at the son who thereupon lost his temper and assaulted the father with a stick. In consequence of this the father died. It appeared that the father knew full well that the accused's intelligence was not of a normal kind;

Held, that in the circumstances the provocation was grave and sudden so as to bring Excep. 1 to S. 300, I. P. C., into play and that conviction under S. 304 was proper. A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 506=2 B.R. 157=37 Cr.L.J. 221=160 Ind. Cas. 18.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Deceased catching hold of accused's tuft.

In an altercation the deceased returned the abuse and caught hold of accused's tuft of hair, and gave him a blow with his fist on the back. The deceased and accused then closed with each other and accused caught hold of deceased's tuft also and stabbed the deceased to death by a knife;

Held, that the offence came under S. 300, Excep. 1 as there was grave and sudden provocation. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 722=40 L.W. 777=67 M.L.J. 674=1934 M.W.N. 1358=36 Cr.L.J. 790=155 Ind. Cas. 408.

Where the husband and wife were not on very good terms and on one occasion, the husband asked for pan and the wife refused pan and threw dirty rice water in his face whereupon the husband beat her with stone and killed her;

Held, that the refusal of his wife to give him pan was liable to make him angry but the throwing of dirty water in the face was an act which would cause a husband to lose control of himself and would be a grave and sudden provocation and therefore the offence was not one of murder but of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 117 Ind. Cas. 164=30 Cr.L.J. 720=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 201.

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Provocation—Abuse—Sudden and Grave.

Accused, who was abused by the deceased, abused the deceased in return and defied the deceased and told him to come on. The deceased caught hold of the accused by the tuft and gave him two blows with his fist. There was a struggle and the deceased held accused firm by the tuft and went on beating him. The accused then gave the deceased a blow on the left side with a "baku" (a dagger) which he had in his hand. The blow proved fatal;

Held: That the first exception to S. 300, I. P. C., applied and that the offence was culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

Jackson, J.—The offence was one of murder. 106 Ind. Cas. 343=1927 M.W.N. 796=29 Cr.L.J. 7=9 A.I.Cr.R. 263=1 M.Cr.C. 178=A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 136.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Girl married to accused taken away on the day of ceremony—Accused abused—Hurt with pen-knife—1st exception applies.

The accused had been married to a girl and the ceremony of tabdil parchat was to take place on the day of the occurrence. On that day accused found the deceased taking the girl away from the village where the ceremony was to take place and when he remonstrated with her she told him that the girl would not be married to him that day and abused him. The accused thereupon attacked both the girl and the deceased with pen-knife and inflicted one injury on each in the abdomen. The girl however survived. Held, that the accused acted without premeditation, used only a pen-knife and gave each woman only one injury and therefore there is a very strong presumption that he neither intended to cause death nor such bodily injury as he knew to be likely to cause death and the provocation given to him by the deceased was sufficiently grave and sudden to bring him within the first exception in Section 300. Held further that when the accused wounded the woman in the abdomen with pen-knife he certainly intended to cause them grievous hurt. 73 Ind. Cas. 695=24 Cr.L.J. 663=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 234.

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Sudden provocation — Offence is one under S. 304.

On the night of the crime in question the accused, together with Vir Bhan, his first cousin, Mt. Tulsi Bai, the wife of Vir Bhan, Lachman Das, son of Vir Bhan and the murdered man, were sleeping together on separate charpoys in a Court-yard. The accused woke up in the course of the night to see Mt. Tulsi Bai and Jassu Ram lying together on the same charpay. He thereupon reproached Jassu Ram for his conduct who retorted with an indecent gesture. The accused enraged at what he had witnessed, and inflamed at the insult, struck Jassu Ram a blow on the neck with a hatchet which was lying near hand and killed him. Mt. Tulasi Bai suggested to the accused to put the blame on some unknown person. The accused, however, instead of falling in with this suggestion decided to admit the crime, and he made his statement before the Committing Magistrate within two days of the murder and before he was legally represented:

Held, that the theory of premeditation cannot be accepted.

Held, further that the murder was the result of sudden and grave provocation. A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 312.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation, effect of.

A, came to B, in a challenging manner when they had a fight in which A beat B, as well as B's father. B, then gave a blow to A when A died. Held, that B, was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder as there was a grave provocation enough to deprive the accused of self-control. (1911) 1 M.W.N. 275=9 M.L.T. 480=12 Cr.L.J. 235=10 Ind. Cas. 262.

8 (e). Grave and sudden provocation—S. 300, Exception (1)—What does not amount to.

—S. 300, Excep. 1—Grave and sudden provocation—What does not amount to.

Whether or not there is grave and sudden provocation in a particular case is essentially a question of fact and no universal rule can be laid down. The test is whether the accused was subjected to such provocation as to cause a reasonable man to do what he did, and whether the provocation was such that it influenced him to do the act which he did. Mere verbal provocation, however, even if it be by threats or gestures or by the use of abusive and insulting language, cannot induce a reasonable man to commit an act of violence; and mere threat which may induce a desire for revenge cannot constitute provocation within the meaning of Exception 1 to S. 300, I.P. Code. I.L.R. (1950) Cut. 293=16 Cut. L.T. 102=A.I.R. 1950 Orissa 261.

—S. 300, Excep. 1—Grave provocation—Abusive or vulgar language.

The use of mere abusive or vulgar language cannot be regarded as a grave provocation. 225 Ind. Cas. 567=47 Cr.L.J. 747=48 P.L.R. 26=A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 278.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Vulgar abuse—Nature of provocation.

Mere vulgar abuse is not such a grave and sudden provocation as is contemplated by Excep. 1 to S. 300. But provocation though not grave and sudden may be a sufficient reason for not imposing the capital sentence.

Vulgar abuse may amount to provocation even though the party abused is a mere kamin. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 369=33 Cr.L.J. 338=33 P.L.R. 382=136 Ind. Cas. 715.

—S. 300, Excep. (1) — Provocation — Abuse — Accused called 'pig' — Accustomed to abusive language—Provocation not grave but sudden.

R a Bharai by caste and an agriculturist by occupation was accused of murdering his wife in a quarrel by means of an axe. He pleaded grave and sudden provocation and in support of the plea produced a witness who had heard the deceased calling the accused "a pig, son of pig":

Held, that such abuse could not constitute grave provocation specially in the case of a low caste man of the class of the accused accustomed to the use of abusive language. But the accused could be said to have acted without premeditation under some provocation which though not grave was sudden and deserved lesser sentence than sentence of death. A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 344.

—S. 300, Excep. (1).

Even when there is no evidence as to previous existence of any serious enmity and the affair arose out of a petty quarrel of the moment, this is hardly an extenuating circumstance in favour of accused using a weapon like a chhavi on so slight a provocation which shows a callous disregard of human life for which he must suffer the consequences. 85 Ind. Cas. 822=26 Cr.L.J. 598=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 326.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation must be grave and sudden to reduce the offence of murder to that of culpable homicide.

In order to remove a culpable homicide from the category of murder, the provocation must not only be grave but also sudden, and must have by its gravity and suddenness deprived the accused of the power of self-control. Where a provocation ripens into resentment and malice, and the person aggrieved deliberately determines to take the lives of the persons who offended him, breaks into their houses in the night time, surprises them in their sleep and attacks them with a deadly weapon with intent to kill them and does cause the death of two of them and inflicts grievous injuries to the third, he is clearly guilty of murder and of an attempt to murder. 83 Ind. Cas. 712=26 Cr.L.J. 152=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 493.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation — Grave and sudden provocation.

Mere abusing a man's relatives can never cause sudden and grave provocation so as to cause injuries with a knife. 58 Ind. Cas. 158=21 Cr.L.J. 734 (All.).

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation sufficient to mitigate offence.

A who had filed a criminal complaint against B had got into a lorry at the motor-stand to proceed to the Court. B also came to the motor-stand and got into another lorry. On seeing A in the other lorry B got out of his lorry and entered the other occupied by A probably to give A a bit of his mind. An altercation probably ensued in the course of which B took out his kirpan and stabbed A as a result of which he died. None of the eye-witnesses was able to explain how the attack by B on A started;

Held, that the offence came within S. 302 and that the mere sight of an enemy travelling in another lorry was not grave and sudden provocation sufficient to reduce the offence of culpable homicide from S. 302 to S. 304, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 301=44 P.L.R. 457=44 Cr.L.J. 117=203 Ind. Cas. 605.

—S. 300, Excep. 1—Sudden and grave provocation, what is—Held that act of deceased did not fall under Excep. 1 to S. 300.

The question of what is grave and sudden provocation is a question of fact and one must consider the fact of each case and apply the provisions of S. 300 to these facts. The facts in one case are not always of assistance in another case.

After the accused refused to accompany the deceased and the four others, all of whom were unarmed, to the panchayat, he dragged him by his hand and pulled him away from the steps of his house where he was then seated. The accused thereupon took out his knife and inflicted the injuries upon the deceased which shortly afterwards proved to be fatal.

Held, per Gentle, J., and Patanjali Sastri, J. contra—That although pulling by the hand was exercising some force and was done in order to make the accused go to some place against his will and may be provocative yet, as it was done by an unarmed man the act did not fall within first exception to S. 300. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 251=1940 M.W.N. 811=42 Cr.L.J. 668=195 Ind. Cas. 64.

—S. 300, Excep. 1—Accused attacking deceased and two others—Deceased while doing his utmost to prevent accused from continuing attacks stabbed by accused to death—Some violence used by deceased in attempting to take knife from accused—Such act of violence held did not amount to sudden and grave provocation within Excep. 1 to S. 300—Sentence of death held proper.

The deceased having seen the attacks made by the accused on two others and sustained an earlier attack upon himself, did his utmost to prevent the accused from continuing the attacks upon himself or upon any other persons, but was stabbed by the accused and died as a result. The deceased in trying to take the knife from the accused threw or flung the accused against a wall and thus had no doubt used some violence;

Held, that the offence committed was murder, that any violence used by the deceased in wrestling with the accused and throwing him against the wall could not amount to sudden and grave provocation within the exception to S. 300, I.P.C., so as to reduce the offence committed, from murder to culpable homicide. The sentence of death was proper in the circumstances. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 251=1940 M.W.N. 811=42 Cr.L.J. 668=195 Ind. Cas. 64.

—Ss. 300, and 304—Slapping on back.

Merely being slapped on the back by a person may be a sudden provocation but is not a grave provocation sufficient to deprive the person slapped, of his power of self-control especially when the person slapping has no weapon in his hand while slapping. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr.L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Requisite provocation—Absence of provocation—Sentence.

The accused and the deceased belonged to two different religious sects. The deceased exhibited a poster containing some matter against the leader of the accused's sect. The accused who had the knowledge of this poster attacked the deceased two days later and stabbed him in the chest which resulted in his death;

Held, that there was no sudden and grave provocation as accused had knowledge of the poster two days before and that he was guilty of murder. There was premeditation to commit murder, and in the circumstances, the sentence of death was proper. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 355=40 P.L.R. 119=39 Cr.L.J. 695=176 Ind. Cas. 89.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Accused not betrothed to girl but having intrigue with her—Sanction by custom—Accused seeing her in act of sexual intercourse with deceased—Accused killing deceased—Offence.

The mere fact that a person's desires are thwarted does not in law justify his killing the person who is thwarting him. The provocation which is mentioned in Excep. 1 to S. 300, is something which is recognized as provocation in law and not merely something which arouses the uncontrollable anger of a particular individual. A man in love with a woman who has repulsed his suit might be so angry as to lose control of himself at the sight of her engaged in sexual intercourse with another but, if he killed one or both of them, he could certainly not plead grave provocation in mitigation of his offence. In the case of a wife the position is entirely different. The law recognizes that a husband is entitled to expect fidelity from her. It is even possible that the provocation might be held to be grave in the case of a man who finds in the arms of another lover a mistress whom he maintains and from whom therefore, he might reasonably expect faithfulness. But this is not so even in the case of a girl betrothed to the assailant much less in case of a person who was not even betrothed to the girl but having between them only an intrigue sanctioned by the custom of the community in which they lived but in no way entailing the obligation of marriage unless and until the girl would become pregnant by the man,

Where, therefore, such a person kills another who is discovered in the act of sexual intercourse with the girl, the offence is murder. A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 443=18 Pat. 101=20 P.L.T. 802=5 B.R. 955=40 Cr.L.J. 786=183 Ind. Cas. 499.

—S. 300, Exception 1—Misconduct of mistress.

The accused and the deceased were both carrying on an intrigue with a certain widow. On the night in question, the deceased visited her, and shortly afterwards the accused arrived. While he was still outside her room the deceased went out of the room. The two men had some words, and then started struggling with each other. In the end the accused dealt the deceased two blows on the head with his lathi and the deceased expired while he was being carried to the hospital. There was a fracture of the skull, death being ascribed to shock and intra-cranial haemorrhage resulting from fracture. The accused was sentenced under S. 302:

Held, that although the accused was doubtless provoked by finding his rival at his mistress's house, that provocation could not be described as grave and sudden so as to entitle him to the benefit of Exception 1 to S. 300 and that it must be held that the accused in the present case must have known that by striking the deceased three times on the head with a lathi he was at least likely to cause his death. A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 457=38 Cr.L.J. 938=1937 O.W.N. 917=170 Ind. Cas. 341.

But see A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 25 (1) under Note 8 (d).

—S. 300, Excep. 1—Husband witnessing adultery of wife—Man-slaughter—Rule restricted to man and wife.

If a husband discovers his wife in the act of adultery and thereupon kills her he is guilty of man-slaughter only and not of murder. But that rule has no application where the relationship between the parties is not that of husband and wife. 124 Ind. Cas. 818=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 199.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation not grave and sudden—Offence.

Where the provocation was not in the nature of immediate and grave provocation, but was the culmination of a long period of swaggering and insult which finally made the accused lose his temper, the offence is murder and does not fall within the exception which may reduce the offence to one of culpable homicide. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 4=38 Cr.L.J. 366=166 Ind. Cas. 994.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Drunkenness—Effect of.

Held, that among persons of class of the accused a slight beating of a wife, such as the deceased gave to his wife is an ordinary event which would not be likely to rouse severe resentment, but no doubt the accused did resent seeing his aunt being beaten by the deceased and in his drunken condition his passions were probably easily aroused and he resented this occurrence more than he would have done if he had been sober. Although the provocation was not of a kind such as to reduce the offence of the appellant to culpable homicide not amounting to murder, yet there was provocation which ought to be taken into account in deciding whether sentence of death should be passed, and in assessing this provocation, the Court was entitled to take into account the drunken condition of the accused at the time and the effect of this drunkenness upon his sensibilities. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 325=37 Cr.L.J. 902=164 Ind. Cas. 206.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation grave but not sudden.

The accused of 18 years administering rebuke to the deceased on seeing him lying with his brother's wife—Accused slapped by the deceased leaving the house and when returning home after some time meeting the deceased—Deceased beating accused with a stick, whereupon accused stabbing the deceased with the knife—Held, that the provocation was grave but not sudden so as to attract Excep. 1 to S. 300. 1935 M.W.N. 1198.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Grave and sudden provocation, what amounts to.

Mere invitation to the accused to accompany the deceased to the fields does not necessarily mean that the deceased meant to invite him for unnatural intercourse and if the accused deduced from it a suggestion to that effect, and used his dagger on the deceased with fatal results, it cannot be said that he had received grave and sudden provocation in the matter, as such, his case is not covered by Excep. 1 of S. 300, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 59=35 Cr.L.J. 914=156 Ind. Cas. 6.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Accused knowing of his sister's going to deceased for illicit connection—Accused going to the spot with the intention of killing—Provocation, not sudden.

The accused knew that his sister had gone to see the deceased with whom she had illicit connection and deliberately went there to kill the deceased if he found him with his sister:

Held, that the provocation was no doubt grave but not sudden. The accused expected to find at the spot before he left his house what he afterwards found there. There was, therefore, no suddenness about the discovery of his sister in the company of deceased and the accused cannot be said to have been deprived of the power of self-control. On the other hand, he sought the provocation by deliberately going to the scene of the meeting. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 103=35 Cr. L.J. 1378=151 Ind. Cas. 751.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Deceased carrying on intrigue with girl—Accused lying in wait and killing—Offence.

Where the accused were lying in wait armed with spears, expecting the deceased to come that side to prosecute his intrigue with the girl who was betrothed to one of them, and intended to murder him, if he did come, it could not be said that the provocation was sudden or that it deprived the accused of their power of self-control and thus impelled them to commit the offence. The accused were guilty under S. 302, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 239=35 Cr.L.J. 1476=151 Ind. Cas. 1012.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Mother of accused running away with her paramour—Paramour killed—Provocation not 'grave and sudden.'

Where the accused's mother eloped with her paramour on several occasions and had prior to the incident under trial, run away with her daughter aged 16 or 17 years, and the paramour on being suspected to be at the bottom of the whole affair, was murdered by the accused:

Held, that although the accused must have been having pangs of shame and humiliation for many years owing to the disgraceful behaviour of his mother and the wickedness of the deceased, and his passions must have been roused to a white heat when his sister had also been taken away by the mother, yet, having regard to the provisions of Excep. 1 to S. 300, the provocation to the accused could not be said to have been 'grave and sudden'. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 438=33 P.L.R. 511=34 Cr.L.J. 94=141 Ind. Cas. 40.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Suspicion—No extenuation of wife-murder.

Mere suspicion of a wife's conduct is no extenuation of deliberate wife-murder and so in spite of such suspicion death is the only proper sentence. 116 Ind. Cas. 142=1929 M.W.N. 269=30 M.L.W. 229=2 M.Cr.C. 157=30 Cr. L. J. 630=13 A.I.Cr.R. 65=A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 495.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Wife refusing to give up paramour—Quarrel ensued—Accused lost temper and killed wife—Not grave and sudden provocation.

Where the husband asked the wife to sever her connexion with her paramour but she declined to give up her lover, thereupon there was a quarrel between the husband and the wife in the course of which he lost his temper and killed his wife;

Held, that the accused did not receive any grave and sudden provocation, which would bring his case within the ambit of Excep. 1 to S. 300, but that the wife's persistent immorality coupled with her refusal to sever her connexion with the lover provoked the husband and prompted the assault which resulted in her death and that the extreme penalty of the law should not be exacted. 108 Ind. Cas. 166=29 Cr.L.J. 347=10 A.I. Cr.R. 36=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 544.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation — Domestic difference.

Where the accused caused death of his wife, being annoyed with her because she opposed him in some domestic matter and there was no grave and sudden provocation.

Held: that the offence committed was murder. 100 Ind. Cas. 226=7 A.I.Cr.R. 371=28 Cr.L.J. 258=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 729.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Finding wife with lover—Grave but not such as to deprive self-control.

Accused's wife left the house after giving her husband his midday meal. She went to a grove and there she met her lover. The accused finished his meal, took up a banka and went in search of his wife. He found her sitting with the lover and killed her with the banka;

Held, that the provocation was grave but not so grave and sudden as to deprive the accused of his self control, and that Excep. 1 of S. 300 does not apply. 91 Ind. Cas. 241=27 Cr.L.J. 65=A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 272.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Accused finding wife reproaching co-wife about the immoral conduct of her daughter—Killed in quick succession his two wives and daughter—Provocation not sufficient.

On the morning of the day in question the appellant returned to his house from his field and found his one wife reproaching his second wife that her daughter was a loose woman and had contracted an intimacy with a Mochi. On hearing this conversation between the two women the prisoner who was holding an axe in his hand attacked and killed in quick succession his two wives and daughter;

Held, that the facts did not constitute any grave and sudden provocation such as is contemplated by law, and therefore the appellant had been rightly convicted of murder. 81 Ind. Cas. 826=5 Lah. 67=25 Cr.L.J. 1050=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 450.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation—Petty quarrel—Loss of temper.

Where, as a result of a petty quarrel the accused lost his temper and struck his grandfather on the head with a lathi causing extensive fracture of the skull of which the man died within a few hours;

Held, that the offence of murder was committed. 90 Ind. Cas. 159=26 Cr.L.J. 1503=A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 27.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Attack with fork on provocation—Going and fetching a Chhavi to strike again—Not sudden.

Where it appears from the evidence on some of the witnesses for the prosecution that the accused got enraged when the deceased abused him and that after attacking the victim with a fork, the accused went and fetched a Chhavi in order to strike the deceased again;

Held, it is not possible to hold that the provocation that he received can be regarded as sudden within the meaning of the first exception to Section 300, Indian Penal Code, and that the abuse uttered by the deceased does not amount to grave provocation so as to reduce the offence to one of culpable homicide. 76 Ind. Cas. 970=25 Cr.L.J. 298=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 408.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Over diverting course of channel—Not grave and sudden provocation.

Where the deceased remonstrated with the accused's father for diverting the course of the old water channel which led to a quarrel, and then the accused came to support his father and assaulted the deceased;

Held, there was no grave and sudden provocation. 6 L.L.J. 424=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 742.

—Ss. 300, 302—Accusation repeated on challenge—Not sufficient provocation.

The provocation caused by the repetition by the deceased of an accusation which the accused knew she had already made and which she again made on a challenge by him to do so, cannot be called sudden provocation. 73 Ind. Cas. 266=24 Cr.L.J. 570=8 N.L.J. 56=A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 251.

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Wife—Woman of loose character—Long known to husband—Access often denied to him—Act not done under provocation.

Where the accused killed his wife who had long been known to him to be a woman of loose character and who had again and again denied access to him, the act cannot be said to have been done under grave and sudden provocation. The Court, however, reduced the sentence of death to one of transportation for life. 65 Ind. Cas. 572=23 Cr.L.J. 140=4 U.P.L.R. (Lah.) 49=1 P.W.R. 1922 (Cr.).

—S. 300, Excep. (1)—Provocation — Suspicion and unchastity—Grave provocation.

Merely suspicion of unchastity of the sister does not amount to grave provocation. 15 Cr.L.J. 501=7 S.L.R. 118=24 Ind. Cas. 589.

9. Intention.

- (a) Ascertainment of
- (b) Distinction between intention and knowledge
- (c) Drunkenness
- (d) Poisoning
- (e) Proof and onus
- (f) Requisite intention
- (g) Sufficient
- (h) Not sufficient.

9 (a). Intention—Ascertainment of.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Ascertainment of intention to cause death.

To beat a person after he has fallen down does not necessarily prove the intention of causing his death. Certain factors will have to be considered, such as for instance the number of blows, the nature of blows and the parts of the body on which these blows have been inflicted. It may also be of importance to know what the condition of the injured person was when he fell down. If there could be no doubt about the serious condition, for instance, if blood was flowing from his head or body and he was apparently unconscious, the striking of further blows even on his body, though such blows might not ordinarily be dangerous, would indicate an intention on the part of the assailants to cause him more injury than would be caused by an ordinary beating. 1944 O.W.N. 342=1944 A.W.R.C.C. 225.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Ascertainment of intention.

The law looks as regards intention to the natural results of a man's act and not to the condition of his mind. From a legal point of view a person intends whatever he gives others reasonable grounds for supposing that he does intend. ('32) 9 O.W.N. 350=137 Ind. Cas. 817=33 Cr.L.J. 537.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Inference from acts.

There is no reason why in a murder case as in other cases, a man's intention should not be inferred from his acts. A.I.R. 1941 Sind 117=42 Cr. L. J. 786=195 Ind. Cas. 833.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Inference from injuries.

Knowledge of the effects of a blow or intention to cause those effects can be presumed from the nature of the injuries actually inflicted when those injuries are to a vital part of the body, such as the head, heart liver or abdomen. The reason is simply that a vital part of the body is a part, serious injury to which is known to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The same reasoning may apply to cases where the blow is so severe that a limb is severed. But knowledge cannot always be so presumed. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 259=1940 Rang. L.R. 441=42 Cr.L.J. 124=191 Ind. Cas. 306 (F.B.).

—Ss. 299 and 300—Question of fact.

Questions of knowledge, intention, and the like are always essentially questions of fact falling to be decided solely upon the particular facts and circumstances of each individual case. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr.L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Question of fact.

A question of intention is a question of fact. A state of a man's mind is as much a question of fact as the state of his digestion. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 63=31 S.L.R. 480=39 Cr.L.J. 460=174 Ind. Cas. 497.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Inference.

A person is considered to intend the probable consequence of act, and a person who hits another on the head with such force as to cause a complicated fracture, must be considered to have intended to cause such bodily injury as would, in the ordinary course of nature, cause death. A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 792=46 L.W. 486=1937-2 M.L.J. 490=1937 M.W.N. 1124=39 Cr.L.J. 139=172 Ind. Cas. 382.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Determination of intention.

The intention of the man who kills another is a matter of fact which has got to be determined in order to decide whether the offence is murder or merely culpable homicide. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 421=37 Cr.L.J. 1050=14 R. 716=164 Ind. Cas. 884 (F.B.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Intention—Inference of.

When an unarmed person is assaulted by two persons armed with formidable weapons and death is caused, the inference in the absence of anything to rebut it, is that the intention must be to commit murder. ('36) 38 P.L.R. 265.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Inference.

The ordinary rule in criminal cases is, and must be, that intention is to be inferred from a person's acts. A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 156=36 Bom.L.R. 210=35 Cr.L.J. 829=148 Ind. Cas. 1004.

—S. 300—Intention—Striking on head with sharp edge of axe.

A person who strikes another on the head with the sharp edge of an axe with sufficient force to break it, must be held to have acted with the intention described in S. 300, secondly and thirdly, and if the victim succumbs to the injury, the offence committed is that of murder. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 5=32 P.L.R. 810=33 Cr.L.J. 184=135 Ind. Cas. 670.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Intention—Presumption of.

The accused must be assumed to have intended the natural consequences of their act and the burden lies heavily on them to prove that they had some other intention. A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 491=11 Lah. 460=126 Ind. Cas. 573=31 P.L.R. 797.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Intention—Nature of the act.

S. 300, I.P.C., says nothing about deliberation or previous preparation. It speaks only of intention and knowledge. If the act by which death is caused is done with the intention of causing death, the offence is murder unless it falls within the exceptions. The intention must be gathered from the nature of the physical act committed; that is to say, that whoever strikes a fatal blow must be taken to have intended the injury which he actually inflicted. 91 Ind. Cas. 238=27 Cr.L.J. 62=2 O.W.N. 862=A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 148.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Murderer's intention and wish.

A person who inflicts injury on another which ends fatally and which the former knew was likely to cause death, is guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder though he had no wish or motive to cause death. In such a case the law will presume an intention to cause death and the burden is on the accused to show that he had no such intention. (1913) M.W.N. 556=14 Cr.L.J. 115=18 Ind. Cas. 675.

9 (b). Intention—Distinction between intention and knowledge.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Distinction between intention and knowledge.

'Intention' is one thing and 'knowledge' a different thing. In order to possess and to form an intention there must be a capacity for reason. And when by some extraneous force the capacity for reason has been ousted, the capacity to form an intention must have been unseated too. But knowledge stands upon a different footing. Some degree of knowledge must be attributed to every sane person. Obviously, the degree of knowledge which any particular person can be assumed to possess must vary. A.I.R. 1940 All. 486=1940 A.L.J. 563=42 Cr.L.J. 146=1940 A.W.R. 488=I.L.R. (1940) All. 647=191 Ind. Cas. 328.

9 (c). Intention—Drunkenness.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 304—Drunkenness, effect of.

The accused and his companion C were drunk. C accosted and pulled at the sari of H's concubine who had a child in her arms and was awaiting H a little distance from the liquor shop, where H and his companions F and S had gone to drink after the accused and C had left it. H's concubine cried out. Thereupon the accused stabbed her with a knife inflicting injuries both on her and the child. Hearing the outcry F, S. and H came out to protest whereupon the accused stabbed in quick succession, first H, then F and then S. H had a stab wound for inches deep vertically downward from the right clavicle entering and puncturing the right lung. This wound was the cause of death and the medical opinion was that such wound was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

Held, that each one of the injuries was inflicted with the intention of causing bodily injury, be the assailant drunk or sober. Had the accused been sober the nature of the injury, a penetrating wound directed at the chest and in the direction of the lungs and heart might well have led to the inference that the intention of the accused was to cause death itself, and that would have led to the conclusion that the act amounted to murder within para. 1 of S. 300; but in the case of a drunken man it was doubtful whether in a deliberate intent of causing death was formulated in his mind. Consequently, the accused was entitled to the benefit of doubt so far as S. 300, para. 1 was concerned. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 420=43 Cr.L.J. 883=21 Pat. 250=23 P.L.T. 725=9 B.R. 36=202 Ind. Cas. 637.

—Ss. 300 and 302.—The drink taken by the accused had apparently induced a spirit of bravado in him and made him violent. He was drawing lines on the ground and challenging people to cross them on pain of being attacked with a kirpan. He did actually attack the deceased when he crossed the lines and inflicted seven injuries with his kirpan out of which three were on the head or on face. Four of the injuries were grievous.

Held, that any sober person who inflicted such injuries must be presumed to have the intention to cause death or such bodily injuries as would result in death in the ordinary course of nature. The same intention would, therefore, have to be attributed to the accused unless he could prove that he was incapable of forming the requisite intention.

Held, also that this conduct of the accused might look foolish, but it did not show that he was incapable of forming the criminal intention necessary for the offence of murder, viz., the intention of causing death or such bodily injury as was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The fact that the accused was shouting that he would kill or die showed that the accused fully understood the nature and consequence of his act. Therefore, the accused was guilty of murder under S. 302, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 454=I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 39=43=Cr.L.J. 332=43 P.L.R. 698=198 Ind. Cas. 252.

Insanity, whether produced by drunkenness or otherwise, is a defence to the crime charged, but the evidence of drunkenness which renders the accused incapable of forming the specific intent essential to constitute the crime should be taken into consideration with the other facts proved in order to determine whether or not he had this intent. Evidence of drunkenness falling short of a proved incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime and merely establishing that his mind was affected by drink so that he more readily gave way to some violent passion, does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his acts.

Held, on facts, that there was no doubt that the accused was not so drunk as to be bereft of his powers of reason or of forming an intent. His actions although anti social were logical, and that two rupees worth of country liquor, which was not illicitly distilled liquor but Government liquor divided among five persons would not be sufficient to induce intoxication which would deprive the accused of all powers of ratiocination. Consequently, he could not escape the imputation of having intended the natural consequences of his acts. A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 386=39 Cr.L.J. 72=I.L.R. (1938) Nag. 305=172 Ind. Cas. 167.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Accused challenging deceased to fight—First blow struck by deceased—Both drunk—Fatal injuries inflicted by accused—Offence.

Where the accused challenged the deceased to fight with him and on the latter's refusal asked the deceased to assault him whereupon he gave accused a blow and immediately, the accused drew his knife and inflicted wounds which had a fatal result:

Held, that the fact that so many fatal injuries were inflicted tells strongly in favour of an intention to cause death and the accused was guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 10=35 Cr.L.J. 1065=149 Ind. Cas. 1176.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Drunken brawl—Accused assaulted retaliated with stab at the throat—Ran about, saying he had killed deceased—Knowledge and intention.

In the course of drunken brawl accused was struck by the deceased and knocked down, whereupon the accused struck the deceased with a knife in the throat, which resulted in killing the deceased. After committing the crime the accused ran about saying that he had killed the deceased, and was going to be hanged. Of the two, the deceased was the bigger man.

Held, that the accused had knowledge and intention which would make him liable under S. 302 and was guilty of murder, but the case was one in which extreme penalty was not called for. 121 Ind. Cas. 452=8 Pat. 911=31 Cr.L.J. 243=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 168.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Intention—Drunkenness—Not amounting to incapacity to intend—No particular individual intended—Firing at general mass of people—Cl. 4 applies.

Evidence of drunkenness falling short of a proved incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime and merely establishing that his mind was affected by drink so that he more readily gave way to some violent passion, does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his act. And even if he did not intend to fire at any particular individual at the time but merely fired at the general mass of villagers and killed some of them his act would still come within the category of murder as defined in Cl. 4, S. 300 of the Penal Code. 116 Ind. Cas. 707=30 P.L.R. 357=30 Cr.L.J. 662=1929 Cr. C. 188=13 A.I.R. Cr. 75=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 637.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Intoxication and Intention.

Where a person who was drunk struck another on the head with a wooden billet which dazed him and immediately struck a third person who died at once thereby, the accused must be deemed to have intended to cause an injury which he knew would be likely to cause death but it is not one to impute to him an intention of causing injury which in the ordinary course of nature would cause death. Per Twomey, J.—Intention in culpable homicide is a presumption of law. A person is taken to have intended the natural consequences of his act though he is drunk. 4 Bur. L. T. 253=12 Cr.L.J. 524=12 Ind. Cas. 292.

9 (d). Intention—Poisoning.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Administering fatal dose of dhatura.

Dhatura is a common poison, frequently used to cause death, and the effects of dhatura, plants of which are often to be found in villages, are well-known to the villagers. It may be that dhatura is sometimes administered in fairly large doses with the intention of stupefying the victim, but there is no doubt that if a person consciously administers dhatura and administers a fatal dose, that person is guilty of murder for the intention to cause bodily injury is clear, and knowledge of the results of the poison can safely be imputed. A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 318=39 Cr.L.J. 405=I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 125=174 Ind. Cas. 886.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Woman administering fatal dose of dhatura to husband to get rid of him—Presumption.

If one deliberately administers a common poison, the effects of which are well-known, it is no defence to say that one failed to grade the exact dose correctly so as to cause some injury short of death. The question whether a person knows what he is administering and knows what its effects will be, is of course a question of fact in the particular case. Where it is proved that one person had administered poison to another causing his death by mixing it with his food, the question is whether his explanation raises a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 318=39 Cr.L.J. 405=I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 125=174 Ind. Cas. 386.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Intention to stupefy by Dhatura—Intention to cause death—Knowledge of likelihood.

Where the intention of the accused was certainly primarily only to stupefy his victims by Dhatura and to come back when the poison had begun to take effect and rob them, and the poisoning was fatal:

Held, that there is no ground for holding that he intended to bring about their death, but he must have had knowledge that he was likely to cause death and the conviction under S. 302, was correct. 98 Ind. Cas. 712=7 L.R.A.Cr. 188=27 Cr.L.J. 1400=A.I.R. 1927 All. 104.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Intention—Necessity of—Love potion—Causing death—Intention to cause death absent—Administered at the instance of paramour inimical to husband—Liability.

Where the intention to cause death cannot be clearly found without any other possible explanation of the act of the person giving poison a conviction for murder cannot stand. Unless it is shown clearly and without possible doubt that the intention was to cause death where a substance is administered as a love potion, the accused cannot be convicted of murder. The mere administering of a love potion or drug which a person thinks might be beneficial is not in itself an offence but when it is supposed to have effect upon persons with whom the paramour of the accused had enmity, and when she administers it without due care and caution or any enquiry as to what it really is her act falls within S. 304-A. 77 Ind. Cas. 801=1924 P.H.C.C. 13=25 Cr.L.J. 449=A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 635.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Murder—Dhatura poison—Intention.

In a case of murder by Dhatura poison it is to be determined with what object it is administered. Its use may be merely in order to facilitate the commission of robbery. It does not per se and necessarily import contemplation of the victim's death as a means towards or as incidental to the main end of that offence. The point has to be decided with regard to the circumstances of each particular case and the best indication of the intention of the offender can be gathered from the amount of Dhatura which he administers; if a very large quantity of Dhatura is administered, the offender shall be presumed to intend to cause death of the victim for the successful termination of his crime. 3 P.W.R. 1920 Cr.=4 P.L.R. 1920=21 Cr.L.J. 319=2 U.P.L.R. (Lah.) 21=55 Ind. Cas. 479.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Intention—Murder by poison.

On a charge of murder by poison, it was proved that the poison was administered by the accused as a drug which would bring the deceased under her control and that she did not know it was poison. The circumstances were not inconsistent with the innocence of the accused who must be acquitted. 18 C.L.J. 590=14 Cr.L.J. 586=21 Ind. Cas. 378.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Intention—Poisoning.

Daughter gave birth to a child and her mother only attended her. The infant while in their custody, died of sulphate of copper poisoning soon after its birth. Both of them must be presumed to have administered the poison and they are guilty of murder even in the absence of clear motive for committing the crime. The fact of their taking no step towards saving the infant's life is evidence of intention and negatives the defence of accidental poisoning. Such a circumstance is sufficient to corroborate their confession of guilt retracted by them at the time of trial. 43 P.W.R. 1910 Cr.=11 Cr.L.J. 717=17 P.L.R. 1911=8 Ind. Cas. 815.

9 (e). Intention—Proof and onus.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Intention to commit offence must be proved and cannot be assumed.

Whether an accused person intended to commit the murder is a matter which has to be proved in the case and cannot be assumed. The inference of intention or otherwise has to be drawn after consideration of the circumstances which preceded, attended and followed the crime. A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 321=I.L.R. 1946 Nag. 946=1946 N.L.J. 656=226 Ind. Cas. 377=47 Cr.L.J. 918.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Onus—Criterion.

In murder cases as in other cases, a man's intentions are to be judged by his acts in relation to the surrounding circumstances, but the provisions of the law of culpable homicide in India are merciful. The burden of proof in these cases as in other cases is on the prosecution and the distinction between knowledge and intention in S. 299 and again S. 304 allows the Judge when he thinks the prosecution have proved not intention but only knowledge to convict of the lesser offence. The intention of the accused should be judged at the time of striking the blow, which is the material time, but not at the time they left the house which is not the material time. A.I.R. 1939=Sind 57=32 S.L.R. 18=40 Cr.L.J. 375 (2)=180 Ind. Cas. 418.

9 (f). Intention—Requisite intention.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Murder—Intention requisite.

In order to constitute an offence of murder not only must bodily injury be intended to be inflicted, but it must be intended that such bodily injury should be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 319=43 Cr.L.J. 266=197 Ind. Cas. 786.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Requisite intention.

An injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death is not by itself sufficient to support a conviction of murder unless the accused intended that the injury should be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr.L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

9 (g). Intention—Sufficient.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Intention or knowledge of offender—Number of injuries—If material consideration.

The most relevant point in a case in which a person is charged with an offence punishable under S. 302 of the Penal Code is whether or not he had any such intention or knowledge as is mentioned in S. 300, and though the number of injuries is one of the circumstances which the Court may take into account for coming to a finding about the intention or knowledge of the offender, it is not the only circumstance that is to be considered. The mere fact that only one blow, fatal by itself, is given, cannot take the case out of the provisions of S. 300, if the requisite ingredients of that section are proved. Pak. L.R. (1950) Lah. 349=51 Cr.L.J. 1368=A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 169.

—Ss. 299 and 300 (1)—Intention—Hitting another with axe on head, neck and back.

A man is presumed to know the natural result of his act when a man hits another person with an axe on his head, neck and back, he will be presumed to have intended to cause his death. The act would amount to murder when the person so hit dies and the case would fall under Cl. (1) of S. 300. I. P. Code. A.I.R. 1950 Ajmer 75.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Intention to cause injury resulting in natural course in death—Inference from facts.

When a single blow is struck by a person on the head of another in the heat of a quarrel, without giving any thought to the result, it might be possible to argue that there was neither intention to kill nor knowledge that death was likely to result in the mind of the striker. But in a case where two young men pursue a much older man for a considerable distance and then getting in front of him they each give him one blow on his head with sufficient force to crack his skull extensively, an intention to do something serious is clearly evinced by such conduct, and even though it is possible there was no intention to kill him outright, there is no escape from the conclusion, having regard to the repeated blows, that there was an intention to break the head and the result of such injury in the natural course is death. In such circumstances the offence falls under S. 302, I. P. Code. 49 P.L.R. 305=A.I.R. 1948 Lah. 74=49 Cr.L.J. 106.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Intention to kill present—Series of acts—One transaction.

If the intention is to kill and the killing results, the accused succeed in doing that which they intended to do and if the acts follow closely upon one another and are intimately connected with one another, then the offence of murder has been committed. The series of acts would be one transaction. The mere fact that the earlier assault on the deceased did not result in her death but that she was killed by the passing train, on the railway lines, where on her unconscious body was kept thinking her to be dead, would make no difference. A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 470=24 Pat. 131.

—Ss. 299, 300, 302.

Where the other injuries on the deceased clearly show the determination of the accused to cause the death of the deceased, the fact that the spleen which had ruptured by the blows given by the accused, was enlarged, makes no difference. The accused can be convicted under S. 302. A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 193=1941 O.W.N. 1246=43 Cr. L. J. 243=17 Luck. 376=1941 A.W.R. 354=197 Ind. Cas. 701.

—Ss. 300, 302, 34—Intention to cause death—Series of acts of violence—Mere fact that Court cannot determine at what precise point deceased expired, if material.

Where the intention to cause death has been present, it will make little or no difference that the Court cannot determine at what precise point in the course of a series of acts of violence the victim of the crime expired. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 550=22 P.L.T. 1035=7 B.R. 802=42 Cr. L. J. 603=194 Ind. Cas. 622.

—Ss. 299, 300, 302—Inference.

Where a man inflicts a wound in a vital spot such as on the head causing the substance of the brain to protrude from the head and death ensues, it is no defence to a charge of murder for the accused to say that he did not intend the injury to be fatal. A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 319=43 Cr. L. J. 266=197 Ind. Cas. 786.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Accused assaulting deceased with intention of causing his death and after rendering him unconscious placing him on railway line where death is caused by running train—No evidence that accused carried deceased to railway line under belief that he was dead.

Where an accused has assaulted the deceased with the intention of causing his death and after rendering him unconscious by lathi blows has placed him on railway line where death is actually caused by being run over by a train and there is no evidence that when the accused carried the deceased to the railway line, he was under the belief that the victim was dead, the offence committed by the accused is murder, for the acts so closely following upon and so intimately connected with each other cannot be separated, assigned the one to one intention and the other to another, but must both be ascribed to the original intention which prompted the commission of those acts and without which neither would have been done. A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 625=18 Pat. 485=6 B. R. 316=41 Cr. L. J. 276=186 Ind. Cas. 256.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Killing with beating on all parts of body.

Where men armed with weapons like spears, refrain from using the sharp end but beat to pulp the victim with the lathi end, they can be found guilty of murder. Where people kill a man by beating him on all parts of the body with weapons like lathis, the inevitable inference is that they intend to kill or know that such a beating is likely to cause death. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 632=I.L.R. (1937) Lah. 231=38 Cr. L. J. 1077=171 Ind. Cas. 353.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Injuries fracturing skull—Presumption as to intention.

Injuries on the head which have fractured the skull are sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and the person or persons who inflicted them must be presumed to have had the intention of causing injuries so sufficient. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 46=37 Cr. L. J. 290=160 Ind. Cas. 459.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Blows on head in quick succession—Inference.

A man who delivers two blows in quick succession on or in the neighbourhood of the head with a heavy weapon such as a rice pounder must be regarded, in the absence of any extenuating circumstance, to intend to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 427=37 Cr. L. J. 181=159 Ind. Cas. 902.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Blows inflicted on abdomen with heavy sharp-cutting weapon—Death—Offence.

Where three or four blows are inflicted on the abdomen with a heavy sharp-cutting weapon like a gandasa or chopper, it is sufficient to make manifest the intention of the assailant that he intended to cause such bodily injury as he knew was likely to cause the death of the victim and the offence is murder and not culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 405=35 Cr. L. J. 1113=11 O.W.N. 851=150 Ind. Cas. 819.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Accused striking deceased—Deceased chased and struck with second weapon on breaking of first weapon—Intention.

Where the accused struck the deceased with such determination that when the stick broke, he armed himself with another weapon and chased the deceased into another man's compound and assaulted him further with the second weapon, with the result that death ensued:

Held, that the accused's action in so following up the injured man and repeatedly striking him with these weapons showed that, apart from any intention which the second assailant may have shared with him he himself had the intention of causing the death of the deceased, or at least of causing injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and that the offence committed by the accused was the offence of murder. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 278=34 Cr. L. J. 1245=146 Ind. Cas. 216.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304—Accused firing shot gun with fatal effect—Offence.

Where it is proved that the accused fired a shot gun at such a close range that it could not have had other than a fatal effect and it is indicative of the intention of the accused that after firing at one person he re-loaded the gun and fired another shot at another person, there is a clear indication of his intention to commit murder and the offence falls under S. 302, and not under S. 304. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 147=34 Cr. L. J. 1071=145 Ind. Cas. 771.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Intention—Presumption.

Where a man strikes another on the head with a sharp instrument with such force as to penetrate to the brain, the only possible intention that can be inferred is an intention to cause an injury which the accused knew would be likely, [and indeed bound to cause death. A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 156=36 Bom. L. R. 210=35 Cr. L. J. 829=148 Ind. Cas. 1004.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Intention—Presumption of.

Where the action, which ultimately results in the death of a person, is continuous and it is impossible to resolve the different incidents into wholly separate actions, inspired by different motives and committed for different reasons the person, who did that act, must be deemed as having done it with the intention of causing death and as having succeeded in carrying out his object and must therefore be held to be guilty of murder. 1931 Cr. C. 91=A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 27.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Intention—Presumption of—Previous grudge—Stabbing at vital part—Intention to cause fatal injury presumed.

It must be assumed that a person who goes armed with a stabbing weapon to assault another person against whom he has a previous grudge and actually strikes that person at a vital part of his body and causes his death, intends to cause such bodily injury as is imminently dangerous to life and such person must be held guilty of murder. 129 Ind. Cas. 289=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 534.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Intention—Evidence—Accused provoked by resolve of deceased to report his offence to police—Sudden and heavy blow with chopper—Intention established.

K seized the accused in the act of stealing; but the accused escaped from him. K convened a panchayat consisting of several members of whom J was one. The accused admitted his offence and asked for pardon as it was a trivial offence. J, however, insisted that the matter must be reported to the police. On hearing this the accused suddenly struck J a heavy blow with a chopper which he had carried with him. J died of the heavy blow;

Held: that the accused either intended to cause J's death, or that he intended causing bodily injury to J and the bodily injury which he intended to be inflicted was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 120 Ind. Cas. 274=1930 Cr. C. 28=31 Cr. L. J. 79=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 60.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Previous enmity—Assault lying in wait—Lathi blows—Serious injuries—Intention to cause death presumed.

Where four persons deliberately lay in wait for the deceased intending to beat him with lathis on account of enmity in regard to a grove; there was evidence of eye-witnesses, one of whom accompanied deceased and others who were close to the scene of occurrence, who stated that they had witnessed the assault and that all the four accused beat the deceased with lathis. The first report, made without delay, named the four as assailants. In the dying declaration the deceased named all the four as his assailants. The medical evidence showed that the death was due to injuries to the lung caused by the fracture of six ribs, and haemorrhage of the brain produced by contused wound on the head, and that there were numerous other injuries;

Held, that the intention of the accused must have been to cause death or such injuries as would in the ordinary course of nature cause death. 118 Ind. Cas. 190=10 L.R.A.Cr. 138=1929 Cr. C. 291=30 Cr. L. J. 899=12 A.I.Cr.R. 339=A.I.R. 1929 All. 707.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Armed robbery—Intending use of guns in case of obstruction—Intention to kill presumed.

Where certain persons, armed with guns, go to commit robbery and it was their intention to use the guns in case obstruction was offered to them, it would be legitimate to presume that they had the intention to kill anybody who would stand in the way of the attainment of their object. 120 Ind. Cas. 180=11 L. L. J. 20=31 Cr. L. J. 41=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 292.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Lathi blow on the head—Intention presumed.

A blow on the head with a lathi is certainly likely to cause death and the person who inflicts lathi blow on the head of another person must be presumed to have the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. But it does not necessarily follow that a lathi blow on the head is always sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 106 Ind. Cas. 433=7 Pat. 638=29 Cr. L. J. 17=9 A. I. Cr. R. 330=9 P. L. T. 286=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 169.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Stabbing in the abdomen—Force enough to pierce—Intention presumed.

If a person stabs another in the abdomen with sufficient force to penetrate the abdominal walls and the internal viscera, he must undoubtedly be held, whatever his station in life, to have intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The offence would then fall under the third clause of S. 300: A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 93, Foll. 108 Ind. Cas. 268=10 A.I.Cr.R. 37=29 Cr. L. J. 369 (Lah.).

—Ss. 299 and 300—Violent blow with dang on vulnerable part—Intention presumed.

A person delivering a violent blow with a lethal weapon like a dang on a vulnerable part of the body such as the head must be deemed to have intended to cause such bodily injury as he knew was likely to cause death of the person to whom the injury was caused. 105 Ind. —Ss. 299 and 300—Intention—Violent blows on head causing fracture—Proving absence of intention on the accused.

A person who struck another on the head such violent blows as to cause the fracture of temporal and parietal bones and consequent death, must ordinarily accept the onus of proving that his intention was not to cause such bodily injury as would in all probability cause death or that he did not know that the injury inflicted by him would in all probability cause death. 99 Ind. —Ss. 300 and 302—Accused ran off after causing injuries—Blood stains on his clothes—Blows perforated heart and divided intestines—Intention to cause fatal injuries.

Where, in continuation of an altercation which had taken place between the accused's mother and the deceased's wife the two men were struggling in front of their houses when the accused suddenly struck the deceased with a weapon who collapsed and died at once whilst the accused ran off to his house where he was shortly afterwards arrested with blood-stains on his clothes, and the medical evidence showed that the person of the deceased bore two wounds of a penetrating nature one of which completely perforated the heart; the other penetrating the abdomen on the left side had divided the intestines and death was due to shock and haemorrhage and the accused himself bore no mark of injury upon his person:

Held, that intention of the accused was, if not to cause death, at least to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. 92 Ind. Cas. 222=7 L.L.J. 582=27 Cr. L. J. 238=26 P. L. R. 829=A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 143.

Held, that her intention was to cause death and she was therefore guilty of murder. 89 Ind. Cas. 461=26 P.L.R. 550=26 Cr.L.J. 1373=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 144.

A man who cuts another, even on the leg with ferocity and with such a weapon as to cause such an injury as causes death within a few hours must be presumed to intend to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and if death results, is guilty of murder unless the case is shown to fall within the exceptions provided in the Code. 76 Ind. Where accused gave one blow with a club but when committing the act did know that it was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death, and he did commit that act without any excuse:

Held, he committed murder but as there was no intention to kill the deceased, the accused should be given the lesser punishment of transportation for life. 74 Ind. Cas. 257=21 A.L. J. 316=4 L.R.A.Cr. 89=24 Cr.L.J. 753=A.I.R. 1923 All. 355.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Quarrel over the enticement of sister of deceased—Blow with spear—Intention to cause death.

Accused had enticed away the sister of the deceased. The deceased and the accused with his brother who were armed with a spear met at first before the house of the deceased near a mosque where abuse was exchanged and demand was made by the deceased to the accused to return his sister. At the persuasion of a relation the accused retreated being followed by the deceased and between the two Mohallas where each lived at a spot at a considerable distance from the houses of each the accused struck a blow with the spear to the deceased who in no time succumbed to the fatal wound. Held: the accused did cause the death of the deceased intentionally and he is not entitled to the benefits of any exception to section 300, I.P.C., but under the circumstances it was not necessary to impose the capital sentence. A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 195.

—Ss. 299, 300 (1) (2), 302—Murder—Intention to cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.

Held, that an attack of a violent and determined character which caused 16 wounds on the deceased's body and ruptured a healthy spleen carried with it the inference that the accused had either intended to cause death or attacked the deceased in such a brutal manner, regardless of the consequence, well knowing they would be likely to cause death. —Ss. 300 and 302—Motive inadequate—Minor injuries—Neither intention nor knowledge.

Where on a charge of murder the evidence of the motive was inadequate and the majority of the injuries inflicted were slight:

Held, that the safer inference to draw in such a case is that the assailants of the deceased neither intended to cause death nor knew that they were likely to cause death. 93 Ind. Cas. 1043=27 Cr.L.J. 547=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 419.

—Ss. 300 and 302—No vital part struck—No intention to kill or cause fatal injury.

Where so far as the external marks of violence afford an indication, assailants had desisted from striking on any vital part of the body, and the only serious injuries above the waist were those inflicted on the two cheeks. The medical witness, however, found the soft tissues of the head and the lining of the brain congested but he did not disclose the exact cause of this congestion.

Held, having regard to the nature of the injuries and in view of the fact that the assailants scrupulously avoided the vital parts of the body they did not intend either to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as they knew was likely to cause death. Nor does the case come within the purview of clauses "thirdly" and "fourthly" of Section 300. 6 L.L.J. 533=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 319.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Intention—No evidence of.

Where there is no evidence that the accused intended to cause the death of the deceased, or that he intended to cause such injuries as were likely to result in death or that he intended to cause such injuries as would in the ordinary course of nature cause death, the only legal conviction which could be had would be under S. 304, Part II, of the Indian Penal Code. 102 Ind. Intention is a question of fact which must be decided on the circumstances of each particular case. 19 Cr.L.J. 375=3 U.B.R. (1917) 54=44 Ind. Cas. 679.

10. Interpretation—Clauses of and Illustrations to S. 300.

—S. 300—Interpretation—Clauses—Exhaustive in themselves.

exhaustive in themselves, for the purposes of the Code, of the offence of culpable homicide. 106 Ind. Cas. 213=3 Luck. 244=1 L.C. 579=28 Cr.L.J. 1029=9 A. I. Cr. R. 217=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 15.

—S. 300—Clauses and Illustrations—Interpretation.

Per Wazir Hasan, J.—In interpreting several clauses or explanations in S. 300, aid must be taken from the illustrations enacted in the section. Though there are not express words to show that a particular illustration in a section applies to any particular clause of the same section yet if the clauses and illustrations of S. 300 are read as a whole, it can at once be inferred that a particular illustration applies to no other but a particular clause. 106 Ind. 11. Killing under officer's order.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Soldier killing another under illegal orders of superior.

Even when a soldier obeys the orders of a superior officer, if the order is obviously improper or illegal, the soldier is not excused even though he may be put in the awkward predicament of choosing whether he will risk being shot by order of a Court Martial for not obeying the order, or being hanged by the Criminal Court for murder of obeying it. Obedience to an illegal order can only be used in mitigation of punishment. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 210=41 Cr.L.J. 639=I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 521=188 Ind. Cas. 440.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Killing under Officer's orders—Shooting under illegal orders of superior officer no excuse—Officer and Subordinate equally guilty.

A Police party with six prisoners went to a village and demanded water and food and when they did not receive the attention to which they thought themselves entitled, the head constable lost his temper and struck one of the villagers. Other villagers also joined them; the Head constable asked one constable to fire. He hesitated but later on fired at a man S who died of the shot;

Held, that they were both equally guilty. The command of the Head constable cannot of itself justify the subordinate in firing, if the command was illegal, for he and the Head constable had the same opportunity of observing what the danger was, and judging what action the necessities of the case required. The order, the second accused obeyed, was manifestly illegal, and the second accused must suffer the consequences of his illegal act. 21 Mad. 249, Foll.

Held: however, that there should be a difference in the sentences awarded to the head constable and the constable. 83 Ind. Cas. 702=17 S. L. R. 182=26 Cr.L.J. 142=A.I.R. 1924 Sind 33.

12. Knowledge.

—Ss. 299 and 300.

The knowledge referred to in Ss. 299 and 300 is personal knowledge of the person who struck the blow and it cannot be shared by his co-assailants. A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 207=1939 O.W.N. 576=40 Cr.L.J. 722=14 Luck. 660=182 Ind. Cas. 345.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Knowledge, whether sufficient to establish murder.

An intention to cause death is a part both of S. 299 and also of S. 300. But intention is not a necessary ingredient of murder. If the act is done with the knowledge that death is likely to be caused thereby, it is culpable homicide; and if it is done with the further knowledge that the act was so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability cause either death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, then that culpable homicide is murder. Thus knowledge is sufficient to establish murder without any intention, whatever, being proved. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr.L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Offence of murder or culpable homicide, when constituted.

It is not only an intention to kill that constitutes an offence of murder or of culpable homicide. If a person does an act with the knowledge that his act is likely to cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, he can be guilty of culpable homicide or even of murder in that case also. A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 88=1938 O.W.N. 184=39 Cr.L.J. 330=173 Ind. Cas. 339.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Hitting on head with iron rod.

If one man hits another on the head with a heavy iron rod, even if it is only a comparatively gentle tap, he must be held to know that death would be a natural and probable result of his action, if that tap does in fact cause the death of the person injured. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 401=39 Cr.L.J. 79=172 Ind. Cas. 134.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Presumption.

Men who go to attack their opponents with spears and vaholas must be held to have, if not the definite intention of killing, at least the knowledge that they are likely to inflict such injuries as will result in death. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 296=35 Cr.L.J. 626 (2)=148 Ind. Cas. 36.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Bomb throwing—Knowledge of causing death or injury likely to cause death presumed—No intention to kill any body in particular—No excuse.

From the definition of murder in Cl. (4), S. 300, it follows that if a person does an act of the nature described in the clause, he is guilty of an attempt to murder.

Any person of average intelligence knows that the explosion of a bomb in a crowded room, however carefully it may be thrown, is an imminently dangerous act such as he must be deemed to know would in all probability cause death or at least such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. Accused, described by their counsel as persons of exceptional intelligence must, therefore, be presumed to know that their act was dangerous and likely to cause death. The fact that accused had no deliberate intention of killing any particular individual does not take their case outside Cl. (4), S. 300, when they had no excuse for running the risk. It is no excuse to say that they were sincerely and passionately actuated by the desire to alter the present order of things. The defence of an anarchist is no defence to the charge. 121 Ind. Cas. 726=31 Cr.L.J. 290=31 P.L.R. 73=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 266.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Striking with knife in the throat—Knowledge presumed.

A man who strikes another man with a knife in the throat must know that the blow is as imminently dangerous that it must all probability cause death and injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 121 Ind. Cas. 452=8 Pat. 911=31 Cr.L.J. 243=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 168.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Assault with dangs—Thighs much bruised and legs fractured—Minor injuries on the trunk and no injury on the head—Injuries likely to cause death—Knowledge presumed.

Five persons armed with dangs assaulted the deceased and beat to such an extent that one of his thighs became a mass of bruises, fractured both his legs below the knee and also gave him various other minor injuries on the legs and on the trunk which caused death. But no injury was caused to the head and the injuries on the trunk also were minor:

Held, that the offence would not come under any of the clauses of S. 300 but would come under third part of S. 299 as the assaulting persons must be credited with a knowledge that the beating that they did actually give to the deceased was likely to cause death. 113 Ind. Cas. 333=10 Lah. 477=30 P.L.R. 674=30 Cr.L.J. 141=12 A.I.Cr.R. 87=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 157.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Knowledge—Presumption as to natural consequences—Presumption as to knowledge.

No doubt a man is presumed to intend the natural and inevitable consequences of his own act, but the presumption of intention must depend upon the facts of each particular case, and 'knowledge' as used in Cl. (2), S. 300, I.P.C. is a word which imports a certainty and not merely a probability. 106 Ind. Cas. 433=7 Pat. 638=29 Cr.L.J. 17=9 A.I.Cr.R. 330=9 P.L.T. 286=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 169.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Avoiding vital parts—Prolonged and deliberate thrashing—No intention to cause death—Knowledge that ordinarily death must result present.

If a man is killed as a result of innumerable blows none of which itself is sufficient to cause death and if the assailants have deliberately avoided striking any vital parts, under some circumstances the inference may be drawn that by avoiding dealing blows upon vital parts of the body they showed that they did not intend to cause death but rather, carefully avoided causing death. But on the other hand, if the circumstances show that prolonged thrashing has been deliberately administered with the knowledge of the assailants that such a thrashing must in the ordinary course of nature result in death, the assailants are guilty of murder. They may avoid striking vital part deliberately so as to put themselves in a position if the assault is brought home to them, to plead that they never intended to do more than administer a thrashing. 103 Ind. Cas. 843=8 A.I.Cr.R. 562=28 Cr.L.J. 763=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 654.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Administering dhatura poison to facilitate robbery—Knowledge presumed.

Where the accused administered Dhatura poison to five men in order to facilitate the commission of robbery and in consequence thereof three men died.

Held: the accused must be presumed to have knowledge that their act was so dangerous that it was likely to cause death and the offence would fall under S. 300; 30 All. 568, Diss.; A.I.R. 1924 Patna 635, Dist. 20 All. 143; 31 All. 148 and 40 All. 360, Foll.

Per Madgavkar, J.—The question of knowledge is a question of fact in the circumstances of each case. It is impossible for the Courts to lay down a rule of law to deprive the jury, for instance, in each case, of their right to pronounce on the question of the presence or absence of fatal knowledge or intention. 97 Ind. —Ss. 299 and 300—Knowledge that act is likely to cause death.

Knowledge that the act is likely to cause death is insufficient for conviction under Clause 4 of S. 300 but is sufficient for conviction under 2nd part of S. 304. 2 Bur. L.J. 99=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 33.

—Ss. 299 and 300 — Accused grappled from behind—Striking with pocket knife—No intention—But knowledge presumed.

Where the deceased in the course of a certain fight grappled with the accused from behind and the accused thereupon struck him with his pocket knife without any deliberate aim.

Held: that the accused did not intend to cause death or to inflict such injury as was likely to cause death but as he must have known that a blow with a weapon of that kind was likely to cause death, the offence committed was one under Cl. (2) of S. 304. 99 Ind. Cas. 119=8 L.L.J. 51=27 P.L.R. 6=28 Cr.L.J. 87.

—Ss. 299 and 300 — Quarrel over a pumpkin—Provoked by abuse — Striking with a lump of limestone weighing 3 lbs.—No intention—Knowledge presumed.

There was no enmity between accused and deceased. The accused's wife and the deceased who were the wives of two brothers were quarrelling about sharing a pumpkin. The accused coming along broke the pumpkin into two against the wishes of the deceased wherefore she abused him. He thereupon struck her with a lump of limestone weighing 3 pounds. This resulted in the injury.

Held: Accused acted from impulse of moment and had no intention either to kill her or to fracture her skull; but that as the lump of limestone weighed 3 pounds it must be taken that he knew that there was a probability of fatal injury being inflicted. 81 Ind. —Ss. 299 and 300—Knowledge—Not presumed—Victim already suffering—Injury accelerating death—Knowledge cannot be presumed.

If a person was suffering from an injury which would render injuries, which would not have a fatal effect to an ordinary man, fatal to that person, it does not necessarily follow that the person inflicting the fatal injuries knew it to be likely that death would be caused thereby. 66 Ind. Cas. 1000=34 C.L.J. 515=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 64.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Allowing snake to bite to prove efficacy of tattoo—Belief in efficacy—Onus on accused—If proved guilty of rash and negligent act—If not, culpable homicide, though no intention or knowledge present.

Accused who professed to be able by tattooing to render persons tattooed by him immune from the effect of snake-bite, tattooed a number of villagers and then allowed a poisonous snake, which he was himself handling, to bite one of them. The man who was bitten died at once:

Held, that the burden of proving that the accused was justified in believing, and did really believe, that his tattooing gave immunity was on him. If the accused proved that he honestly believed himself to be able to produce immunity, he would be guilty merely of a rash and negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide. But otherwise he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder because he caused death by an act done with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death but had neither the intention nor the knowledge necessary to make his offence murder. 64 Ind. Cas. 843=11 L.B.R. 56=A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 26.

—Ss. 299, Exp. (1) and 300 (2)—Knowledge or intention—Injury accelerating death—Knowledge of disorder—Offence.

Expl. (1) to S. 299, I. P. C., assumes that the bodily injury was inflicted with the intention of causing death or the knowledge that it would be likely to cause death. It was intended to repeat the English rule that an injury which accelerates the death of a dying man is deemed to be the cause of it. Where death has been caused it is no defence that the deceased was suffering from a complaint which would have caused his death in any event. S. 300 (2) of the Code makes it clear that offender is not responsible for death in such a case unless he knew that the condition of the deceased was such that his act was likely to cause death. 11 S.L.R. 81=19 C.L.J. 322=44 Ind. Cas. 338 (F.B.).

—Ss. 299 and 304—Knowledge or intention.

A person striking another on a vital part with a cutting instrument should be presumed to have intention of causing bodily injury amounting to death but the striker need not be found guilty of murder because his act may fall under one of the exceptions to S. 300, I. P. C. The parts of Ss. 299, 300 and 304 dealing with knowledge do not apply where bodily injury has resulted in death. The question of what knowledge must be attributed to the accused comes in only as a means of arriving at his intention and not for deciding whether a case falls within last part of S. 304. 7 Bur. In order to be guilty of the offence of murder it is sufficient if the accused commits an act which even if not committed with intention of causing death or bodily injury likely to the knowledge of the accused or in the ordinary course sufficient to cause death was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death. 32 P.L.R. 1911=12 Cr.L.J. 125=9 Ind. Case of murder depending entirely on circumstantial evidence—Motive should be found out;

Held, on facts that where the case entirely depended on circumstantial evidence, the failure of the Judge to give a definite finding on the point of the motive can be explained only on the ground that he had failed to discover, from the evidence on record, any motive whatsoever, on the part of the accused to have committed the alleged diabolical murder. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 88=37 Cr.L.J. 821=163 Ind. Cas. 319.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Motive—Duty of Court.

In criminal cases it is not proper to consider first whether the evidence establishes a motive for the crime, the proper course to adopt is to examine the evidence as to the commission of the crime. The motive may never be discovered and the suggestion of a motive, possibly wrong motive, may well lead the Court astray. A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 119=8 O.W.N. 107=32 Cr.L.J. 697=6 Luck. 475=131 Ind. Cas. 439.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Motive—Proof of motive—Immaterial.

Where no sufficient motive for the assault on the deceased is shown the mere fact that the prosecution does not establish any additional motive for the assault cannot be taken as a fatal defect in the prosecution case. The accused may be the only surviving person knowing the cause of enmity with the deceased and the failure of the prosecution to elicit it is not a sufficient reason to disbelieve the eye-witnesses. 126 Ind. Cas. 572=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 490.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Absence of—Powerful influence or homicidal tendency—Not inferred.

The circumstances of an act of murder being apparently motiveless is not a ground from which the existence of a powerful and irresistible influence or homicidal tendency can be safely inferred. 112 Ind. Cas. 222=29 Cr.L.J. 1006.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Failure to prove motive—Immaterial—But relevant to prove intention.

Per Cuming, J.—When in a case of murder facts are clear, it is immaterial that no motive has been proved. The motive which induces a man to do any particular act is known to him and to him alone. At the highest the prosecution can only suggest what is or may be the motive for any particular act. It may be known only to the accused or possibly to the deceased and it is quite impossible to prove.

Per Mukerji, J.—Motive though not a sine qua non for bringing the offence of murder home to the accused is relevant and important on the question of intention. 109 Ind. Cas. 482=47 C.L.J. 240=32 C.W.N. 345=29 Cr.L.J. 546=10 A.I.Cr.R. 259=A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 430.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Motive irrelevant.

Adequacy or inadequacy of motive is irrelevant when the offence alleged is murder. 100 Ind. Cas. 226=7 A.I.Cr.R. 371=28 Cr.L.J. 258=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 729.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Motive—By itself insufficient to convict.

In this country and among Jats, murders are actually committed from motives of pride to avenge what appear to be comparatively harmless insults; but where the evidence of the alleged eye-witnesses cannot be relied on, the presence of motive only will not be sufficient for a conviction under S. 300. 92 Ind. Cas. 417=7 L.L.J. 442=26 P.L.R. 791=27 Cr.L.J. 241.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Motive—Unnecessary to prove—Failure to prove cannot outweigh positive evidence.

It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove the motive for the crime. It is enough if it is established that the crime was committed. When however the prosecution put forward a substantive case as to the motive for the crime, the evidence regarding the motive has got to be considered in order to judge of the probabilities. Failure to prove motive however cannot outweigh the positive evidence to the crime. 86 Ind. Cas. 453=41 C.L.J. 35=26 Cr.L.J. 805=A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 525.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Deceased failed to negotiate divorce proceedings—Gave evidence against accused—Motive sufficient.

Where the accused had engaged the deceased to carry on negotiations for the divorce of a woman whom accused had abducted, from her husband but the deceased had failed to settle the matter to the satisfaction of the accused, and the deceased gave evidence against accused in an enquiry under S. 202, Criminal Procedure Code. Held, there was sufficient motive for the crime. 81 Ind. Cas. 64=25 Cr.L.J. 576=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 619.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Proof of motive—Co-accused.

Though the motive for murder for one of the co-accused is proved satisfactorily while for others there is no satisfactory evidence, the High Court can uphold conviction without assigning motive. 17 Cr.L.J. 386=35 Ind. Cas. 818 (Cal.)

14. Murder and culpable homicide.

- (a) Distinction between
- (b) Culpable homicide, when amounts to murder
- (c) Culpable homicide, when does not amount to murder.

14 (a). Murder and culpable homicide—Distinction between.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 304—Murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, distinction—Injury to vital part not necessary for murder—Death need not be an 'almost certain result' to make injury one 'sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death'—Person mercilessly beaten to death—Offence is murder.

In order to constitute murder under S. 300 it is not necessary that the injury inflicted must be one of which death will be an "almost certain result." Where a person knowingly causes injuries which are more likely than not in the ordinary way to cause death, his offence falls under cl. 2 or cl. 3 of S. 300 and amounts to murder. The infliction of injury on a vital part of the body is not essential to make the offence a murder.

Where a person is mercilessly beaten with heavy sticks and dies as a result of the injuries received, the offence is one of murder.

(Per Pollock, J.)—Clause (3) of S. 299, Penal Code and Cl. (4) of S. 300 and second part of S. 304, are intended to apply, primarily at least, to cases in which there was no intention to cause death or bodily injury such as reckless driving or shooting, and Cl. (2) of S. 300 is intended to apply, primarily at least, to cases in which the accused knew that the particular person was likely from some peculiarity of constitution or other special cause, to die of an injury that would not ordinarily cause death. Where there was an intention to cause bodily injury and death has ensued, the question will ordinarily be whether the injury which the accused intended to inflict was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death or was merely likely to cause death, and that will depend mainly on the weapon used, the force with which it was used, the number of blows struck, and the part of the body injured. A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 120=I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 991=222 Ind. Cas. 389.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Culpable homicide and murder—Scheme of Code stated.

The scheme of the Code is first to define culpable homicide in S. 299, then to lay down in S. 300 that one of the three definitions of culpable homicide given in S. 299 [299 (a)] and other fresh definitions of culpable homicide amount to murder if the exceptions given do not apply, then to give the punishment for murder [S. 302] and finally to give the punishment for the residuary cases of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, irrespective of whether they do not so amount by reason of the exceptions of S. 300 applying or whether they are offences of culpable homicide pure and simple which do not so amount because they are not hit by S. 300. Cases where death is intended can only be merely culpable homicide by reason of the exceptions to S. 300 applying. (In this one instance S. 304 (1) refers back to S. 300.). They are mentioned in the first part of S. 307 pari passu with cases falling under S. 299 (b), merely because the same maximum punishment was thought suitable in both cases. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 259=1940 Rang. L.R. 441=42 Cr.L.J. 124=191 Ind. Cas. 306 (F.B.).

—Ss. 299 and 300—Murder or culpable homicide—Test.

According to the scheme of the I.P.C. 'murder' is merely a particular form of culpable homicide, and one has to look first to see in every murder case whether there was culpable homicide at all. If culpable homicide is present then the next thing to consider is whether it is of that type which under S. 300, I.P.C., is designated 'murder' or whether it falls within that residue of cases which are covered by S. 304 and are designated 'culpable homicide not amounting to murder.' A.I.R. 1940 All. 486=1940 A.L.J. 563=42 Cr.L.J. 146=I.L.R. (1940) All. 647=1940 A.W.R. 488=191 Ind. Cas. 328.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Act done with knowledge of consequences is not murder—Act, when becomes murder.

It is not murder merely to cause death by doing an act with the knowledge that it is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death. In order that an act done with such knowledge should constitute murder it is necessary that it should be committed without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing the death or bodily injury. An act done with the knowledge of its consequences is not prima facie murder. It becomes murder only if it can be positively affirmed that there was no excuse. The requirements of the section are not satisfied by the act of homicide being one of extreme recklessness. It must in addition be wholly inexcusable. A.I.R. 1940 All. 486=1940 A.L.J. 563=42 Cr.L.J. 146=I.L.R. (1940) All. 647=1940 A.W.R. 488=191 Ind. Cas. 328.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Culpable homicide under S. 299 with intention of causing bodily injury likely to cause death, can exist independently of S. 300.

Per Full Bench (Mackney, J. in order of reference contra.)—Before deciding that a case of culpable homicide amounts to a prima facie case of murder, there must be proof of intention sufficient to bring it under S. 300. Culpable homicide under S. 299 with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death can exist consistently with the other sections of the Code dealing with the causing of death and bodily injury, even in the case where none of the exceptions set out in S. 300 apply. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 259=1940 Rang. L.R. 441=42 Cr. L.J. 124=191 Ind. Cas. 306 (F.B.)

—Ss. 299, 300, 304—Essentials of culpable homicide and murder—Degrees of culpable homicide.

Section 304 divides the offence of culpable homicide into two degrees of guilt, the graver of which depends on the intention proved or to be inferred from all the circumstances and the less serious of which does not depend on intention at all. But though the absence or presence of intention is the criterion to be adopted in deciding on which side of the line an offence under S. 304 falls, that is, whether on the graver or on the less serious side, there are cases in which there is an intention which makes the offence, the graver offence of culpable homicide but which would yet fall short of the intention requisite to satisfy S. 300. Where no higher intention can be imputed than to inflict an injury which is in fact likely to cause death, there is the graver degree of guilt in culpable homicide, but there are no elements which bring the case under S. 300. Section 300 would only apply if it were possible to go a step further and say that the offender intended the injury to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, or knew that in the special circumstances of the case, not death merely, but the death of the particular person to whom the harm was caused likely. If he knew that, he had knowledge from which the intention to cause that person's death could be inferred, confusion is reached if S. 300 is looked to when deciding under which part of S. 304 the offence of culpable homicide falls. The section to be regarded in this connection is S. 299 which alone defines the separate offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 259=1940 Rang. L.R. 441=42 Cr. L.J. 124=191 Ind. Cas. 306. (F.B.)

—Ss. 299 and 300—Question of murder, when arises.

The basis of murder under S. 300 is culpable homicide as defined in S. 299. Therefore, it is necessary in every case in which one person by his act has caused the death of another to enquire whether culpable homicide has or has not been committed by the accused, for unless it has been, no question of murder can arise. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr.L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Criterion.

Per Davis, J.C.—Generally speaking, the proposition that murder is killing with the intention of killing or inflicting a fatal injury will cover broadly cls. 1, 2 and 3 of S. 300. Cases under cl. 4 of S. 300, I.P.C., are so rare that Judges can in each case well refer to the words of that clause and Illus. (d) as a sufficient guide.

While deciding whether a particular offence is culpable homicide amounting to murder or not amounting to murder, Sessions Judges should not allow themselves to be confused by over-much analysis, but to turn to the words of the law themselves. They should look at S. 300. If the killing comes within any one of the four clauses, it is, exceptions apart, murder. If on referring to S. 300, the Judge is of the opinion that the killing does not come within one of the four clauses he can then refer to S. 299. If the killing comes within the second part of S. 299, that which relates to the intention of causing a bodily injury likely to cause death, it comes under S. 304, Part I, and if there is no intention but only knowledge, that is to say, if there is no intention to cause death or a bodily injury likely to cause death, but only knowledge that death is likely to be caused, the offence is under S. 304, Part 2. Cases under the exceptions to S. 300 will fall under S. 304, Part I.

In murder cases, as in other cases, a man's intentions are to be judged by his acts in relation to the surrounding circumstances, but the provisions of the law of culpable homicide in India are merciful. The burden of proof in these cases, as in other cases, lies on the prosecution, and the distinction between "knowledge" and "intention" made in S. 299 and again in S. 304, in Parts I and II, allows the Judge, when he thinks the prosecution have proved not intention but only knowledge to convict of the lesser offence. The intention of the accused should be judged at the time of striking the blow, which is the material time, but not at the time they left the house, which is not the material time.

Per Lobo, J.—If Judges would lay more emphasis on the wording of the sections themselves and less on judicial pronouncements, which are almost invariably coloured by the facts of the particular case, there would be no room for confusion. If death is caused by an act done with the intention of causing death or done with the intention of causing a fatal injury, the offence is murder and is covered by cl. 1 or cl. (3) of S. 300. Clause (2) of S. 300, is clearly intended to cover what may conveniently be classified as "spleen cases" such as are referred to in Illus. (b) to S. 300. A case under cl. (4) of S. 300 is very unusual and Illus. (d), is a sufficient indication to what class of cases it is intended to apply. Ordinarily, therefore, the exceptions to S. 300 apart, the test to be applied in any particular case of culpable homicide is whether the intention specified in cl. (1) or cl. (3) of S. 300, is established on the evidence and circumstances. If it is, the offence is murder, if it is not, the offence is culpable homicide. If the offence is culpable homicide and the offender's intention was to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death (secondly of definition in S. 299,) the offence is punishable under Part I of S. 304. If the offender had not such intention but had knowledge that his act was likely to cause death, (thirdly of definition in S. 299,) the offence is punishable under Part II of S. 304.

Held, on facts that the offence was clearly one of culpable homicide amounting to murder and fell under S. 300 "Thirdly". A.I.R. 1939 Sind 57=32 S.L.R. 18=40 Cr. L.J. 375 (2)=180 Ind. Cas. 418.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Criteria.

Cases of homicide cannot be decided by adherence to mechanical rules; the decision in each case must depend upon the knowledge and intention with which the injuries were inflicted, and the knowledge and the intention of the culprit must be judged with reference to the particular circumstances of each case, and in arriving at a decision on this crucial point reported cases can be of very little assistance. To establish the offence of murder, it is not sufficient that the injury inflicted was in fact sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death: it must further be proved that the assailant intended to cause an injury of this kind. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 156=39 Cr. L. J. 561=175 Ind. Cas. 345.

—Ss. 299 and 300 — Distinction — Effect of drunkenness.

To constitute the offence of murder, there must be the intention to kill or to inflict such bodily injury as is known to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. It is sufficient to constitute the offence of culpable homicide if the offender causes death by doing an act with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death. Section 86, I.P.C. does not say that the offender shall be liable to be dealt with as if he had the same intent as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated, but only as if he had the same knowledge. Intoxication should be taken into consideration in cases where intention on the part of the accused is necessary to constitute the offence charged and the intention which would be ascribed to a sober man in connection with that act must not necessarily be ascribed to an intoxicated man who does the same act. If the accused was so drunk as to be unable to form the intent to kill the offence would be one of man-slaughter only, i. e., culpable homicide only. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 219=39 Cr. L. J. 689=176 Ind. Cas. 103.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Accused killing while drunk —Offence.

Although in appropriate cases drinking may negative intention, it does not negative knowledge and S. 299, I.P.C. speaks of intention, or knowledge in the alternative. Therefore, where a person who is drunk kills another he is still guilty of murder. 1937 M.W.N. 1329.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Culpable homicide, when committed.

In order that a person should be guilty of culpable homicide it is indispensable that the death of deceased should be connected with the act of violence or other primary cause, not merely by a chain of causes and effect, but by such direct influence as is calculated to produce the effect without the intervention of any considerable change of circumstances. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 418=37 Cr. L. J. 205=159 Ind. Cas. 1032.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Criteria.

In every case where the death results in consequence of blows given on the head with a blunt weapon such as a stick, the intention of the assailant must be judged by the circumstances under which the blows were delivered, the weapon used, the force with which the blows were inflicted, and the extent of the injuries caused. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 110=35 Cr. L. J. 1112=150 Ind. Cas. 599.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Distinction.

The provisions relating to murder and culpable homicide are probably the most complicated in the I.P.C. and are so technical as frequently to lead to confusion. Not only does the Code draw a distinction between intention and knowledge but fine distinctions are drawn between the degrees of intention to inflict bodily injury. A.I.R. 1934 Sind 145=28 S.L.R. 353=36 Cr. L. J. 22=152 Ind. Cas. 271.

—Ss. 299, 300, 301 and 304—Distinction.

Roughly, the distinction between S. 302 and S. 304 is this. Where the intention to kill is present, the act amounts to murder; where such an intention is absent the act amounts to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. To determine what the intention of the offender is, each case must be decided on its own merits. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 338=35 Cr. L. J. 43=146 Ind. Cas. 315.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Distinction — Injuries inflicted on old man with intention of causing death—Knowledge of sufficiency of injury to cause death—Offence.

Whether an offence is culpable homicide or murder depends upon the degree of risk to human life. If death is likely result it is culpable homicide. If it is the most probable result, it is murder.

Injuries were inflicted on an old man of 50 years of age and it appeared that the act was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knew to be likely to cause his death or that the act was done with the intention of causing bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

Held, that the offence was of murder falling within cl. (2) and (3) of S. 300 and punishable under S. 302.

Murder and culpable homicide distinguished. A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 186=9 O.W.N. 285=33 Cr. L. J. 561=7 Luck. 634=138 Ind. Cas. 123.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Culpable homicide or murder—Distinction between.

The elements which constitute the offence of culpable homicide are expressed and explained in terms of four explanations enacted in S. 300. If an act which an accused person is said to have committed does not fall within any of those explanations, and does not fall within any of the exceptions, the act is murder, but if it does fall under one or other of those explanations and also falls within any of the exceptions enacted in S. 300, the act is one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 106 Ind. Cas. 213=3 Luck. 244=1 L.C. 579=28 Cr. L. J. 1029=9 A.I.Cr.R. 217=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 15.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Culpable homicide or murder—Essential requisites of.

Where there was a struggle between two girls for the possession of some gram, and one of them hit the other with a stick, whereupon the uncle of the latter came running with a lathi in his hand struck the other girl on her head, and after she had fallen down, also struck her on the thigh:

Held, that the accused can be convicted only of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and not of murder.

Per Kulwant Sahay, J.—The essence of crime of murder under Cl. (2), S. 300, I.P.C., is that there must be the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows is likely to cause death, and in order to convict a person of the offence of murder under Cl. (2) of the section, it has to be found that he had the intention of causing the injury, and also that he had the knowledge that such injury which he intended to inflict was likely to cause death.

A blow on the head with a lathi is certainly likely to cause death and the person who inflicts lathi blow on the head of the another person must be presumed to have the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. But it does not necessarily follow that a lathi blow on the head is always sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

If a person causes death by doing an act with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, his offence comes under S. 299, and it is only if the intention was to cause bodily injury, which injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, that the offence would come under S. 300, Cl. (3).

The difference between culpable homicide and murder is merely a question of different degrees of probability that death would ensue. 106 Ind. Cas. 433=7 Pat. 638=29 Cr. L.J. 17=9 A.I.Cr.R. 330=9 P.L.T. 286=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 169.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Culpable homicide or murder—Point for consideration.

Culpable homicide is not murder unless the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention stated, in one or more of the four clauses to be interpreted in the light of the four illustrations appended to it one for each cause. If the question is whether the injuries caused in a case were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the Courts have to take into consideration the nature of the weapon used and the injuries caused. If it was so light that even if used with sufficient violence, no lethal blow could be inflicted with it, it would follow that it was used to give a thrashing and not to inflict fatal or dangerous injuries. Where the number of blows given were not less than 50, but no blow was inflicted on any vital part with sufficient violence to cause serious damage such as fracture of the skull.

Held, it cannot be said that the injuries which the appellant intended to inflict were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. All that can be inferred from his act of prolonged beating is that he knew that the injuries that he was inflicting might cause death. 75 Ind.Cas. 689=25 Cr.L.J. 1=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 317.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 304—Murder of culpable homicide—Intention to cause injury, sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death—Intention to cause injury likely to cause death—Distinction.

The distinction between the intention to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and the intention to cause injury likely to cause death, depends upon the degree of probability of death resulting from the Act committed. Apart from cases falling within the second clause of S. 300 of the Penal Code, if from the intentional act of injury committed, the probability of death is high, the finding should be that the accused intended to cause death or injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the conviction should be of murder unless one of the exceptions applies; if there was probability in a less degree of death ensuing from the act committed, the finding should be that the accused intended to cause injury likely to cause death and the conviction should be of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 5 L.B.R. 80=10 Cr.L.J. 359=3 Ind. —S. 300—Murder or culpable homicide.

An act amounts to culpable homicide if the provocation be grave and sudden. It is murder when the element of suddenness is wanting in the provocation. 18 A.L.J. 851=21 Cr.L.J. 607=57 Ind. Cas. 175.

Where as a result of a previous enmity between the accused and the deceased the former deliberately armed themselves with lathis and arranged to waylay the deceased and did actually waylay him and beat him severely with the lathis all over the body including the head and the deceased died within a few hours thereafter:

Held, in the circumstances, the only inference to be drawn was that the accused intended to cause such injuries as they knew were likely to cause death and that hence the case was covered by S. 300 (2), Penal Code and they should be convicted under S. 302. S. 304 could have no application to such a case. 1950 A.L.J. 75.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Sudden exchange of abuse—Rice-pounder—Skull fractured with rice-pounder—Offence.

There was no fight between the accused and the deceased. There was only an exchange of abuse and accused picked up a rice-pounder and hit the deceased with such force as to cause an extensive fracture of the skull.

Held, that even if there was no intention to kill, there could be no doubt that he intended to inflict the injury which he actually inflicted; and he must have known that such an injury is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The deceased man in spite of his physique which was exceptionally robust, died as a direct result of the injuries inflicted upon him by the accused who intended his death. The result was not as immediate as he intended and not perhaps quite in the manner that he intended. But in the processes of nature, in spite of medical attention, one of the well-known perils from a wound supervened, namely blood poisoning, and the deceased died;

Held, that in order to decide whether the offence is murder or a lesser one, the test is whether the cause of death is to be directly associated with the act and in this case the chain of causation was direct in view of the injuries inflicted, even had the intention to cause death not been clear. The accused must be presumed to have known that the injuries were such as were likely to cause death. The accused should, therefore, be convicted of murder. A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 157=1943 M.W.N. 797=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 660=I.L.R. (1944) Mad. 437=45 Cr. L.J. 513=212 Ind. Cas. 12.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Two persons attacked a woman with the intention of causing death. After the intention was apparently carried into effect but in fact was not, the body of the woman was thrown in a well. The injuries on the body of the woman were sufficient to cause death.

Held, that there was at the beginning an intention to cause death. Even if at the time when the woman was thrown into the well she was alive, and even if the accused then thought her dead, he would be guilty of murder. A.I.R.=1943 Mad. 571=1943 M.W.N. 342=56 L.W. 340=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 13=44 Cr. L.J. 790=208 Ind. Cas. 487.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

Where the accused attacked an unarmed person and caused his death, case is prima facie under S. 302, I.P.C. and charge should be framed under that section. A.I.R. 1943 All. 271=1943 A.W.R. 117=1943 A.L.J. 267=44 Cr. L.J. 624=207 Ind. Cas. 158.

—S. 300.—If two persons set upon an unarmed man and beat him with sticks so severely that he dies within a few minutes, there is no doubt that the offence is one either under the first or second clause of S. 300. The circumstance that the sela was not used from its sharp edge does not alter the nature of the offence committed. (1943) 45 P.L.R. 121.

—S. 300—Death by merciless beating.

If a person knowingly causes injuries which are more likely to cause death than not in the ordinary way his offence falls under either cl. (2) or cl. (3) of S. 300. When a person dies as a result of what is usually called a "merciless beating" the offence is one of murder. A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 255=43 Cr. L.J. 812=I.L.R. (1942) Lah. 145=202 Ind. Cas. 315.

—S. 300—Sudden and unpremeditated attack.

The fact that the accused found the deceased in a compromising position with his wife, is not sufficient to take the offence outside the category of murder where he had made a murderous attack on him seeing it. It only shows that the affair was a sudden and unpremeditated one, calling for transportation for life and not death. A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 37=43 P.L.R. 672=43 Cr. L.J. 370=I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 77=198 Ind. Cas. 441.

—S. 300—Death not necessary consequence of blow—Person giving it, when can be guilty of murder—Heavy blow on head fracturing skull and proving fatal—Offence.

A person can be guilty of murder even though death is not a necessary consequence of the blow given. A person commits the offence of murder if the act he does is done with the intention of causing bodily injury to a person and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Where the blow given to the deceased was so heavy as to cause such a severe injury resulting in extensive fracture of the skull and death, the accused must be presumed to have intended the probable consequence of such a blow. The injury so caused being sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death the accused commits the offence of murder and should be convicted accordingly. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 227=(1941) 2 M.L.J. 999=1941 M.W.N. 1025=43 Cr. L.J. 521=199 Ind. Cas. 133.

—S. 300—Accused striking with heavy stick fracturing temporal bone—Offence.

Where the accused being in bad temper and irritated by the interference of the deceased, an old woman of 55 years, picked up a heavy stick and gave her such a blow on the head so as to break her temporal bone into several pieces resulting in her instantaneous death:

Held, that the offence fell within the purview of S. 300 (3) and not S. 304, Second Part. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 213=1941 M.W.N. 1028=43 Cr. L.J. 516=199 Ind. Cas. 139.

—Ss. 300 and 302.—Where the injury with a hatchet was a deliberate blow on the chest, struck with violence causing a mortal injury the offence committed is murder. A.I.R. 1942 Sind 11=I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 525=43 Cr. L.J. 308=198 Ind. Cas. 110.

—Ss. 300 and 302.—The accused having already attacked four persons, was running in the street armed with a knife and the deceased attempted to take it from him or to stop him. Thereupon, the accused stabbed him in a vital part of his body in such a way that he died immediately:

Held, that only offence which could be committed under these circumstances was that of murder under S. 302 and the proper sentence was that of death. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 251=1940 M.W.N. 811=42 Cr. L.J. 668=195 Ind. Cas. 64.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Victim's leg severed close below knee—Man dying from loss of blood—Offence committed.

Everybody knows that if a man's leg is severed close below the knee the man must die from loss of blood in a very short time, unless some skilful person appears, who can stop the arterial bleedings. It is not possible for a person who inflicts an injury like this to say that he did not intend to cut the arteries or to cause the man to bleed to death. The case is very different from the frequent case of stabbing with a knife or dagger. If a man armed with a knife or dagger stabs another in the arm or in the leg it can generally be urged on his behalf that he was not trying to kill, and that he was trying to inflict such bodily injury as sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. An ordinary person is not presumed to know the precise location of the arteries in the human lives. If, therefore, a stab with a knife or dagger aimed at an arm or a leg, severs an artery and the injured man dies as a result it may be quite reasonable to argue that the offence is not one of culpable homicide and that the assailant can only be presumed to have intended to cause hurt, or grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon. The case is quite different when a weapon like a sword is used in order to chop off or to hack at a limb. The person who uses the sword or aruval chopping at an arm or a leg, and by so doing sever the arteries of the arm or the leg, must know that he is inflicting an injury which in the ordinary course of nature is sufficient to cause death. The offence is clearly one of murder. A.I.R. (1940) Mad. 745=1940 M.W.N. 479=1940-2 M.L.J. 92=52 L.W. 224=41 Cr. L.J. 900=190 Ind. Cas. 360.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Blow with axe in the region of abdomen and spine—Offence.

Held, on facts that though the blow might have been struck in a quarrel, yet the circumstances were such that the accused could not possibly pray in aid any of the exceptions to S. 300. The blows were extremely vicious and savage ones, and the person who struck them must have either intended to cause death or cause such bodily injury as would in the ordinary course of nature result in death. Even the most illiterate and ignorant person would realise that a savage blow with an axe in the region of the abdomen and spine was bound to cause death or injury which would result in death. The accused, therefore, was guilty of the offence of murder. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 605=41 Cr. L.J. 587=6 B.R. 693=188 Ind. Cas. 429.

—S. 300—Merciless beating resulting in death.

Nine accused armed with dangs and hatchets who were lying in wait for the deceased knocked down the deceased as he passed that way and attacked him while lying prostrate, and began to shower blows but they assiduously avoided hitting him on the head or in the region of the chest. As many as 34 wounds, one of which was a multiple contusion, were inflicted. The bones of both legs and arms were broken at several places. The victim died shortly afterwards. The doctor's evidence showed that there were only ten per cent. chances of saving the life of the deceased had he been brought to the hospital within half an hour from the receipt of the injuries.

Held, that all persons who deliberately joined a concerted beating of this character would be covered by cl. (1) of S. 300. Even assuming that cl. (1) did not cover the case, cl. 3 did. Even if it be held that none of the accused intended death, or knew that death would follow the beating, they did intend a beating the almost inevitable result of which was death. All the accused who took part in the beating were, therefore, guilty of murder and the mere fact that they avoided injuring the vital parts of the victim's body did not save them from conviction of murder. A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 245=I.L.R. (1939) Lah. 77=41 P.L.R. 443=40 Cr. L.J. 712=182 Ind. Cas. 900.

—S. 300—Death caused by single lathi blow—Other injuries not indicating determination to beat deceased to death—Offence.

In a case where death has been caused by a single blow with a lathi, and the other injuries found on the body of the deceased do not indicate a determination to beat the deceased to death, such as is indicated in many cases, it is not possible to hold that death was caused by doing an act with the intention of causing death or with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, but it may be held that death was caused by the doing of an act with the knowledge that by such act the person who did it was likely to cause death (vide S. 299). In such a case, the act of the striker can similarly only be brought within the provisions of clause fourthly in S. 304, which clause is based not upon intention but upon knowledge. A.I.R.

1939 Oudh 49=1939 O.W.N. 7=40 Cr.L.J. 187=1939 A.W.R. 27=14 Luck. 1378=179 Ind. Cas. 338

—S. 300—Striking on head with great force—Offence.

The accused during an altercation between him and the deceased deliberately went outside and fetched a yoke-pin and returned after more than five minutes had elapsed and struck the deceased on the head with it with great force, causing injury resulting in the death of the deceased shortly afterwards:

Held, that the accused must be taken to have known that his act was imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death, or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, and was guilty of murder as he had no excuse for incurring such a bodily injury. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr. L. J 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—S. 300—Death caused by cumulative effect of multiple injuries.

The deceased had received no less than 28 injuries. Of these 12 were punctured wounds on the legs and arms; both the legs and the arms had been fractured at several places; the right ulna bone had been dislocated and one of the incisor teeth in the upper jaw was missing. There were also two contused wounds skin-deep on the head, and contusions on other parts of the body. Although none of these injuries individually might have been sufficient to cause death, yet the death was due to the cumulative effect of the multiple injuries:

Held, that the accused had assaulted the victim with the intention of causing such bodily injuries as were sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death. Their case, therefore, clearly fell within clause thirdly of S. 300, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 834=40 Cr.L.J. 314=180 Ind. Cas. 62.

—S. 300—Injuries inflicted several and very serious—Offence.

Where the injuries inflicted by the accused on the deceased were several in number and of a very serious nature and one of them cut the neck and severed the fourth cervical vertebra and another wound cut the skull and exposed a part of the surface of the brain, etc:

Held, that there was intention to kill and the offence committed was murder. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 331=40 Cr.L.J. 49=178 Ind. Cas. 298.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

The accused who was a boy of 18 years, on his wedding day, being excited by some incident and being inflamed to some extent by drink, struck a heavy blow on the top of the head of the deceased who was already lying prostrate owing to the assault on him by other person, which caused his death. The stick was a heavy one but there was no evidence that it was specially picked out from other sticks. The medical evidence was that the blow was necessarily fatal:

Held, although the case was somewhere near the border line between culpable homicide and murder, yet it was not for the Court to invent a defence which would bring the accused within the ambit of culpable homicide merely. The size of the stick by itself was not necessarily a fair indication of the accused's intention, but the injury was inflicted upon a person who was already lying prostrate which was necessarily fatal, and as such, the offence was one of murder. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 62=39 Cr. L. J. 403=174 Ind. Cas. 442.

—S. 300—Death caused by single blow.

Where the deceased intervenes during the struggle between the accused and another person, and is fatally struck by the accused on the head with a blow of a rice-pounder, so heavy as to require ordinarily the use of both the hands for its use, the accused can be convicted of murder, even if the death results from a single blow. A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 634=1937 M.W.N. 456=45 L.W. 698=(1937) 1 M.L.J. 743=I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 684=38 Cr. L. J. 1109=171 Ind. Cas. 694.

—S. 300 — Blow causing fracture of skull—Offence.

Where the deceased fell immediately on receiving the first blow from the accused which was inflicted with sufficient force to produce a fissured fracture of the skull and a clot of blood was found present in the brain underneath the skull, the offence committed is one of murder. 1937 M.W.N. 1129.

—S. 300—Killing with sword—Offence.

Where an accused cut the deceased with a sword several times and then spread hay around her when she was unconscious and set fire to it he is guilty of murder. 1937 M.W.N. 93.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

Where the wife of the accused was living with the deceased for some time and the accused himself sought out the deceased and stabbed him when he was unarmed, the offence committed is one of murder. 1937 M.W.N. 94.

—S. 300—Accused wilfully and without justification inflicting wound resulting in death.

Where a person wilfully and without justifiable excuse inflicts a wound which is ultimately the cause of death of another person, he shall be deemed to have caused the death of that other person. Though in fact an injury may be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, it is not murder unless it was intended that the injury should be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Where there was such an intention, it is murder. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 396=1937 Rang. L.R. 384=38 Cr. L. J. 1097=171 Ind. Cas. 574 (F.B.).

—Ss. 300 and 302.

If a person intending to cause an injury to another person strikes him on the head with a heavy wooden bar with the knowledge that it is likely to cause death it cannot be held that he did not intend to cause the injury that he knew he was likely to cause. There is no alternative but to convict the accused of murder punishable under S. 302, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 540=39 Cr. L. J. 255=173 Ind. Cas. 92.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Death caused by intervening disease—Offence.

When the disease which actually causes death is meningitis, peritonitis, tetanus, pneumonia, etc. etc., and it is natural and probable result of the injury which the person inflicting the injury has caused, the person who inflicts the injury must be held responsible for the disease arising from the injury. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 429=39 Cr.L.J. 217=172 Ind. Cas. 926.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 34—Responsibility.

Where each assailant mercilessly belaboured a prostrate victim, dealing more than one blow on the head resulting in fractures of the skull and breaking of ribs with laceration of a lung and a kidney, it is murder and not culpable homicide not amounting to murder on the part of the assailants, although it cannot be ascertained which of them was actually responsible for the particular fatal blows, and the conviction for murder under S. 302 read with S. 34, Penal Code, is correct. A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 335=39 Cr.L.J. 131=I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 388=172 Ind. Cas. 367.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

When death is caused by a stab inflicted with great force, offence committed is one of murder and not culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 1936 M.W.N. 525.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Depth of wound not less than five inches—Blow delivered with great force—Presumption.

Where the total depth of the injury from the point of entry into the body was not less than five inches, and it is obvious that the blow with which the wound was inflicted must have been delivered with great force and the injury was necessarily fatal, the presumption arises that the person who inflicted it intended to cause death, and, therefore, prima facie that that person is guilty of the offence of murder. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 474=38 Cr.L.J. 183=166 Ind. Cas. 419.

—S. 300—Blow with da on forehead—Intention—Offence.

It is idle to say that a blow with a da on the forehead could have been delivered without the accused's knowing that it was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The offence in such a case is murder. A. I. R. 1936 Rang. 477=38 Cr.L. J. 52=165 Ind. Cas. 762.

—S. 300—Death caused by knife.

Where the knife was used on the abdomen with force enough to cut the intestines and peritonitis set in:

Held, that the accused committed murder with the meaning of Cl. 4, S. 300. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 155=37 Cr.L. J. 87=159 Ind. Cas. 284.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304—Accused strongly suspecting fidelity of his wife—Summoning of paramour—Accused acting with deliberation—Confession of wife in paramour's presence—Accused stabbing paramour to death—Offence.

The accused strongly suspected that his wife had gone wrong with the deceased. Acting with considerable deliberation the accused sent for the deceased and when he arrived he asked his wife as to whether she was amusing herself with the deceased, and she confessed her misconduct with the deceased. Then he asked the deceased if it were true and without waiting for a reply, drew a knife from his waist and stabbed him in his chest which proved fatal:

Held, that the accused was guilty of murder and not of culpable homicide not amounting to murder; that it was not the matter of any sudden confession on the wife's part that surprised him and took him off his balance but only a confirmation of that which he had already suspected, if he had not really believed it.

Held further, that in view of the fact that the accused was a man who was wounded in his tenderest part, that he had been brooding over this matter and that at the moment of the crime what he was already feeling was intensified by the way his wife replied to him and the nature of her replies, the sentence might be reduced to one of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 176=1933 M.W.N. 543=39 L.W. 190=66 M.L.J. 213=35 Cr.L.J. 694=148 Ind. Cas. 590.

—S. 300—Culpable homicide, when amounts to murder.

Per Nanavutty, J.—Culpable homicide is murder not merely if the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing death but also in those cases, where the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knew to be likely to cause the death of the person to whom the harm was caused, and also if the act was done with the intention of causing bodily injury to any person and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 405=35 Cr.L.J. 1113=11 O.W.N. 851=150 Ind. Cas. 819.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Injury with axe causing fracture of skull.

Where the wound on the head of the deceased is inflicted with an axe on the right side of the top of the head and there is a clean-cut fracture of the skull along the whole length of the wound nearly 2 inches and penetrating to the depth of about 2 inches right into the brain, the accused is guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 603=1 B.R. 85=36 Cr.L.J. 184 (2)=152 Ind. Cas. 636.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

Criminals who assault and kill officers of the law who interfere with them in the commission of a felony are guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 603=36 Cr.L.J. 184 (2)=1 B.R. 85=152 Ind. Cas. 636.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Accused strangling deceased and placing her on railway line—Decapitation by train—Nature of offence—Murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

It cannot be laid down as an invariable rule that if persons intend to cause the death of another or others and do an act in furtherance of that intention, which act does not in fact cause the death of that person or the other persons, and, in the belief that the act has caused death, those persons do another act, for example, for the purpose of hiding the traces of their crime, and such act results in death, the offenders cannot be convicted of murder but of some lesser offence. If the acts follow closely upon one another and are intimately connected with one another, then the offence will amount to murder so also when the facts suggest that the accused acted with a reckless indifference and ignorance as to whether the body he handled was alive or dead.

Where it appeared that the two accused deliberately intended to kill the wife of one of them, that they decoyed her to a certain place and after an attempt to strangle her, dragged her immediately either in an unconscious or semi-conscious condition on to the railway line and placed her in front of the train and she was decapitated by the train:

Held, that the accused were clearly guilty of murder. The two acts were intimately connected with each other and the latter act followed immediately upon the former, that both the acts of the appellants must be treated as being only one transaction, the transaction being to kill the deceased. A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 798=1933 M.W.N. 745=38 L.W. 522=34 Cr.L.J. 1109=65 M.L.J. 597=57 Mad. 158=145 Ind. Cas. 953.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

Where a person was killed by a stab wound between the 9th and 10th ribs which punctured the liver and diaphragm:

Held, that in view of the nature of the wound, there was no doubt that in the absence of extenuating circumstances the man who inflicted the wound was guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 423=35 Cr.L.J. 434=147 Ind. Cas. 440.

—S. 300—Death with lathi blow on head.

Where the accused struck lathi blows on the head of the deceased and practically killed him on the spot:

Held, that the accused were guilty of murder and that the fact that the deceased zamindar was harsh in his treatment towards the accused tenants would not affect the nature of the crime. (1932) 137 Ind. Cas. 817=33 Cr.L.J. 537=9 O.W.N. 350.

Attack on an old man of 70 causing many injuries resulting in death is a murder. 1931 M.W.N. 132.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Premeditated assault—Offence.

The rule that where a single blow is inflicted and it is not shown that it was the intention of the accused to cause death the offence committed by him if his blow results in the death of his victim would be culpable homicide not amounting to murder or an offence under S. 325, does not apply to cases where the assault was premeditated and not committed on a sudden quarrel. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 308=33 P.L.R. 279=33 Cr.L.J. 580=138 Ind. Cas. 410.

—S. 300—Thrashing with oxgoad—Lathi blow on the head—More blows after felling down—Sufficient for murder.

A zamindar ordered A, a tenant, to proceed and plough gratuitously a field belonging to him and his brother. A demurred saying that he had his own work to attend to and that he could not come that day, but he promised to come and work for the two brothers on the following day. The services of A were to be taken gratuitously though the zamindar was not entitled in any way to exact those services. When A refused to come, the zamindar seized A and commenced thrashing him with an oxgoad, which he had in his hand. He struck A with lathi a blow over the head which felled him to the ground. After he had struck him this blow on the head the zamindar hit him again more than one blow which caused the death of A.

Held, that the zamindar had been rightly convicted of murder. 113 Ind. Cas. 481=5 O.W.N. 391=12 A.I.Cr.R. 2=30 Cr.L.J. 173=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 282.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 304.

The accused made friends with three young men Tika, Gopal and Raghbar, who were returning to service and got into conversation with them; and in the evening they proposed to cook dal and roti for them and did so. Shortly after partaking of this food all three became more or less insensible. Tika died eventually. Gopal and Raghbar were taken to hospital and ultimately recovered after treatment. The cause of Tika's death was dhatara poisoning. The property which these persons had, had been removed by the accused which was subsequently recovered from their possession:

Held, the accused were guilty under Section 302 and not Section 304. 75 Ind. Cas. 361=45 All. 557=24 Cr.L.J. 937=A.I.R. 1923 All. 608.

Once it is established that a woman with a motive to get rid of her husband in order to facilitate her intrigue with her paramour has administered in his food a fatal dose of dhatara, the conclusion to be drawn is that she has committed murder unless her explanation is such as to create some doubt in the mind of the Court. —Ss. 300 and 302—Causing death by arsenic poisoning—Offence.

Although very strict proof is necessary before it can be found as a fact that a person has died of arsenical poisoning and without a quantitative analysis, it is difficult to prove positively that death has been due to arsenic, yet where having regard to the medical evidence, the result of the post mortem examination, and the nature of the chemical examiner's report, there is no room for reasonable doubt that the deceased did in fact die from arsenic poisoning by drinking milk into which the arsenic had been put by the accused and which the accused gave him to drink, a conviction under S. 302, is proper. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 382=10 O.W.N. 771=35 Cr.L.J. 189 (2)=146 Ind. Cas. 817.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Murder or culpable homicide—Wife mixing arsenic in milk—Husband dies—Offence is murder.

Where S who was on bad terms with her husband administered arsenic poison to him in milk by way of medicine and the husband died, and was convicted by the Court of Sessions under S. 304 of Penal Code and an appeal was made on behalf of Government:

Held, that S was guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder and should have been convicted under S. 302, Penal Code. 40 All. 360, Foll. 7 O.W.N. 980=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 502.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Unprovoked and surprised assault—One blow fractured the skull—Offence is murder.

Where the accused committed an unprovoked and cowardly assault upon the deceased rushing out at him by surprise and striking him one blow and one blow alone upon the head with a lathi and the blow fractured the skull of the deceased from temple to temple, the offence is murder: A.I.R. 1923 All. 592 Foll. 95 Ind. —S. 300—Provocation grave but not sudden—Offence.

A person who kills another under provocation which is grave but not sudden is not entitled to claim the benefit of Excep. 1 to S. 300. (1931) 134 Ind. Cas. 596 (2)=32 Cr.L.J. 1244=8 O.W.N. 528.

14 (c). Murder and culpable homicide—Culpable homicide, when does not amount to murder.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 304, Part 2—Accused striking deceased on head single blow with piece of wood and rendering her unconscious—Accused wrongly believing victim dead and placing body on pyre and setting fire to same—Death caused—Offence—Plea of mistake of fact—If available.

In the course of a heated quarrel, the accused struck the deceased, a woman, on the head, a single blow with a piece of fire-wood. The deceased fell down bleeding from her nose, and did not regain consciousness though the accused sprinkled water on her face and wiped the blood with a piece of cloth and tried to restore her to her senses. Wrongly surmising her to be dead the accused, with the object of screening himself from the consequences of the crime, placed the deceased on a wooden pyre, made by him, poured ghee and set fire to it. The medical evidence showed that death was caused not by the blow but by the burns which were of the third degree.

Held: (1) that the accused had no intention to cause the death of the deceased, and was therefore not liable to be convicted on the charge of murder under S. 302, I. P. Code;

(2) that the accused could not be allowed to plead mistake of fact as in burning the deceased the accused was not performing a prima facie innocent act, but perpetrating a wrongful act, if not a crime, viz., deliberately causing disappearance of his previous crime;

(3) that on the principle that when an act is done with gross negligence the law imputes to the offender the necessary knowledge, or mens rea, the accused must be held to have known that his act was likely to cause the death of the victim, and it therefore followed that he was guilty of an offence under S. 304, Part. 2, I.P. Code, and liable to conviction thereunder. 27 Pat 67=29 P.L.T. 277=A.I.R. 1949 Orissa 48=50 Cr. L. J. 1013.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 304—Exchange of abusive language—Attack with knife on unarmed deceased—No previous enmity—S. 302, if applies.

A was charged with murder of B. A and B exchanged abusive language of ordinary type. A thrust a knife of ordinary size, which was lying by his side and which was used by him in ordinary course of business, in the abdomen of B who was empty handed, resulting in B's death. There was no previous enmity between A and B.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 304 — Death caused by strangulation.

When a man kneels on the body of another and presses his throat with great violence he knows he is likely to cause death and if death results of strangulation, the knowledge merges into intention and he is guilty of murder under S. 300 firstly, unless he can obtain the benefit of any of the exceptions to S. 300. But when during the act of strangulation the victim dies suddenly due to rupture of the enlarged spleen and the enlargement of the spleen was not known to the accused, the accused's knowledge stops short of intention and the case comes under S. 304, part 2. A.I.R. 1943 All. 344=1943 A.L.J. 456=45 Cr. L. J. 97=1943 A.W.R. 215=I.L.R. (1943) All. 853=209 Ind. Cas. 205.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Ill-treated wife endeavouring to escape from husband jumping into well—Offence.

Where an ill-treated wife who was in dread of her husband, in endeavouring to escape from her husband gets into a panic on seeing him behind her and jumps into an open well with her baby in her arms, the offence committed is culpable homicide not amounting to murder. —Ss. 299 and 300—Effect of Exception 4 to S. 300.

Where Exception 4 to S. 300 is brought into play, the effect is to reduce what would otherwise be murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr.L. J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—Ss. 299 and 300.

Where in a case it has not been shown that any constitutional or other peculiarity existed in the case of the deceased which would have made it likely that injuries which ordinarily would not cause death, would be fatal in his case nor has it been shown that his assailants were aware of it, the case does not fall under Cl. 2 of S. 300. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 834=40 Cr. L. J. 314=180 Ind. Cas. 62.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304—Accused injuring deceased's leg above ankle with dah—Bones and arteries cut—Offence.

Held, that where the intention of the accused was to cut the deceased on the leg, and the cut inflicted was quite low down near the ankle, a man who directed a blow in this direction as a general result would be a man who did not intend to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, because most cuts on the leg are not injuries sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Though the blow was delivered with great force, and cut the bone and arteries, and even residents in the jungle must be held to know that a violent blow of this nature with a formidable weapon was likely to cause death wherever the blow may fall, no intention higher than this could be imputed against the accused. His conviction, therefore, under S. 302, I. P. C., must be altered to one under S. 304 Part. I. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 17=1937 Rang. L.R. 393=39 Cr. L. J. 244=173 Ind. Cas. 87.

—Ss. 300, 302, and 304—Death caused by one blow of hatchet.

Only one blow with a hatchet was struck suddenly in circumstances which were in doubt. There was probably no intention in the mind of the accused either to kill or to cause a fatal injury:

Held, that the act was sudden; and it was proper under the circumstances to impute to him 'knowledge' rather than 'intention'. The offence, therefore, would fall more probably under S. 304, Part II, I. P. C., than under S. 302 or S. 304, Part I. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 63=31 S.L.R. 480=39 Cr. L. J. 460=174 Ind. Cas. 497.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Injury not ordinarily fatal—Offence.

Where an injury caused to the deceased was one which does not ordinarily result in death e.g., in the thigh the accused cannot be held guilty of murder. 1937 M.W.N. 333.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Death not probable result of action—Offence.

When the death of the deceased was not the most probable but only likely result of the action of the accused he is only guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 1936 A.L.J. 73.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304—Accused giving only one blow on non-vital part of body—Offence.

Where the accused gives only one blow and that on a non-vital part of the body, the accused cannot be attributed the intention to cause either death or a wound sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and where death has ensued as a result of such blow, the conviction under S. 302, Penal Code, should be altered to one under S. 304, first part. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 112=37 Cr. L. J. 473=161 Ind. Cas. 515.

—Ss. 299 and 300 — Culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Distinction.

An offence may amount to culpable homicide but not murder even though none of the exceptions in S. 300 are applicable to the case. The clauses of S. 300, imply a direct mental intention and a special degree of criminality.

Held, on facts, that although the accused, when he strangled the deceased, might be imputed the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, it could not be said that he acted with the intention of causing such bodily injury as he knew to be likely to cause death, or as is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and that there was no intention to cause death and that the bodily injury was not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 239=10 Luck. 664=1935 O.W.N. 140=154 Ind. Cas. 93.

—Ss. 299 and 300 — Culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

Section 299 clearly defines "the offence of culpable homicide." Culpable homicide may not amount to murder: (a) where though the evidence is sufficient to constitute murder, one or more of the exceptions to S. 300, apply, or (b) where the degree of mens rea specified under S. 299, is present but not the special degrees referred to by S. 300. —Ss. 300, 302, 304—Striking with formidable lathi and fracturing skull — Persons giving only one blow each—Offence.

When a man strikes another on the head with a formidable lathi and fractures the skull, it may safely be assumed that he intended to cause such an injury as would be likely to cause death and he should be dealt with under S. 302. Other persons who give only one blow each should be convicted only under S. 304, Part II. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 930=35 Cr.L.J. 101=146 Ind. Cas. 496.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304, Part II—Intention of accused not to commit murder—Sentence.

Where the circumstances and evidence showed that all that the accused intended and all that he had knowledge of at the time was to strike a dang blow on the deceased who refused to pay him:

Held, that the offence fell under S. 304, Part II and a sentence of transportation for life was excessive. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 372=33 Cr.L.J. 445=33 P.L.R. 474=137 Ind. Cas. 235.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304—Strangling with turban on sudden provocation—Offence.

The deceased was grazing his sheep. The accused came along with a dog. The deceased hit the dog of the accused with a stick for having molested his sheep whereupon the accused seized hold of him in a sudden temper, took the turban of the deceased from his head and strangled him to death. There had been no enmity between the two and it was a sudden and unpremeditated attack:

Held, that the accused was guilty of the offence of culpable homicide punishable under S. 304, Part II and not of murder punishable under S. 302, inasmuch as the injury which the accused intended to inflict was not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, but the act of the accused was done with the knowledge that he was likely to cause death. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 189=32 Cr.L.J. 1205=134 Ind. Cas. 583.

—Ss. 300 and 302 — Death caused by random blow.

Where death is due to a random blow inflicted in the heat of a fight the offence committed is culpable homicide and not murder. 1931 M.W.N. 1320.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Numerous injuries—Each nothing more than simple hurt—Culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

Where the deceased was given an unmerciful beating, but although the injuries inflicted upon him were so numerous, no bones were broken and not a single one of the injuries individually amounted to more than simple hurt.

Held, that if it had been the accused's intention to kill him or to cause him such injury as they knew to be likely to cause his death or such as was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause his death, they would have inflicted wounds of much more serious nature. Therefore, the offence committed by them is not murder, but culpable homicide not amounting to murder as they must be deemed to have known that by giving the accused such a beating as they did they were likely to cause his death. 91 Ind. Cas. 61=7 L.L.J. 524=26 P.L.R. 702=27 Cr.L.J. 29=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 621.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Injury likely to cause death—No intention—Not murder.

The Sessions Judge held that a stab with a downward direction in the lower part of the body given with sufficient force to penetrate the abdominal cavity is known even by an ignorant Coringhee cooly to be an injury likely to cause death.

Held, that it is not a sufficient finding to constitute the offence culpable homicide amounting to murder. There must always be a finding in such cases that the act which caused death was done with the intention of causing death, or with the intention of causing bodily injury sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death. An injury that is merely likely to cause death does not of necessity amount to murder. 75 Ind. Cas. 295=1 Rang. 285=2 Bur. L. J. 94=24 Cr.L.J. 919=A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 174.

—Ss. 299 and 300 (3)—Death caused by a single blow — Culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

Owing to a quarrel between the deceased and the accused, the latter struck one blow with an iron shod stick on the head of the deceased which caused his death. He was convicted of murder. Held, that the blow struck by the accused may have exceeded in violence, the injury he had in view at the moment of striking therefore the conviction should be altered from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 41 Bom. 27=18 Bom.L.R. 793=17 Cr.L.J. 530=36 Ind. Cas. 578.

—Ss. 299, 300, 302 and 304—Murder or culpable homicide—Stabbing with intention of causing injury—Likely to cause death resulting in death.

Where the accused stabbed a person with the intention of causing such injury as was likely to cause death and death followed. Held, that he should be convicted under S. 304 and not under S. 302, I. P. C. 17 Cr.L.J. 544=36 Ind. Cas. 592 (L.B.).

—Ss. 299, 300 and 304 — Murder or culpable homicide—Distinction.

Culpable homicide may not amount to murder, (1) where notwithstanding that the mental state is sufficient to constitute murder, still one of the exceptions to —Ss. 299, 300 (3) and 304—Injuries not sufficient to cause death—Offence.

Where the injuries inflicted were found not sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature but quite likely to have produced death, Held, the offence did not amount to murder but only to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 8 S.L.R. 337=16 Cr.L.J. 472=29 Ind. Cas. 104.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Murder or culpable homicide—Strangulation—Sentence.

The accused and the deceased quarrelled over the stealing by the deceased of some crops and proceeded to fight and in the fight the accused got the deceased down and strangled him to death with his hands. Held that the accused was guilty of an offence under S. 304, Penal Code, and that the sentence of four years rigorous imprisonment was quite sufficient to meet the ends of justice in the case. 68 P.L.R. 1912=6 P.W.R. 1912 Cr.=13 Cr.L.J. 478=15 Ind. Where a person is seriously injured by the accused and as a result of the injuries a gangrene sets in and becomes the immediate cause of death of the victim, the accused is guilty of an offence under S. 302, (Held, however, that the question whether the accused were guilty under S. 302 or not, was more or less academic as, even if the accused were found to be guilty of offence punishable under S. 326, only they would deserve nothing less than transportation for life, considering the number and nature of injuries inflicted by them on their victim). A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 31=39 Cr.L.J. 265=173 Ind. Cas. 30.

—S. 300—Absence of injury on head—Offence.

It is wholly unnecessary to injure the head of a person in order to kill him. One of the methods of a killing in this country with a sharp weapon is to attack the stomach. And an accused inflicting no less than 44 injuries on the body of the deceased can be convicted of murder, even though there is no injury on the head. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 692=39 P.L.R. 479=38 Cr.L.J. 1057=171 Ind. Cas. 314.

—Ss. 300 and 326.

The common intention referred to in S. 34, is an intention to commit the crime actually committed. Consequently, where the crime committed is held to be murder, it is wrong to convict the accused under S. 326, Penal Code read with S. 34 of the Code. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 299=36 Cr.L.J. 1380=158 Ind. Cas. 441.

—Ss. 300 and 325—Single blow with axe—Slight injury—Blows caused by others resulting in death—Offence.

During the course of an altercation between two parties, the deceased, who was aged 17, was hit on the thigh with an axe by the first accused. The deceased sustained a trivial wound but fell down. Thereupon, the two other accused persons set on him with their dangs striking him several blows on the head and fracturing his skull. He died the next afternoon:

Held, that the first accused who had dealt the trivial blow was guilty only under S. 325, but the others were guilty of murder. 134 Ind. Cas. 205=32 P.L.R. 401=32 Cr.L.J. 1127.

—Ss. 300 and 325—Continuous act of striking on head, throwing in pool and removal of dead body—Offence.

The accused struck the deceased two or three times on the head and when the latter fell down unconscious, threw him face downwards into a pool containing a few inches of water, removed the contents of his pockets and covered the body with the branches of a tree. Later on the accused carried the body of the deceased in a dhoti and threw it into a canal. The Sessions Judge holding that the offence of murder had not been made out, convicted the accused under Ss. 325 and 379, Penal Code. On appeal:

Held, that the action being continuous and it being impossible to resolve the two incidents into two wholly separate actions, inspired by different motives and committed for different reasons, the accused must be treated as having done one act with the intention of causing death and as having succeeded in carrying out his object and he was therefore, guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 27=32 Cr.L.J. 483=130 Ind. Cas. 321.

—Ss. 300, 302, 307 and 324—Throwing of acid on another causing burns of a simple nature—Development of complications on account of pneumonia resulting in death—Offence made out.

Where the accused are found to have thrown acid on the deceased which caused only burns of a simple nature but death resulted as a consequence of complications during the course of the illness, it could not be said that the accused intended to cause the injuries which he knew were likely to cause death and hence he could be convicted only under S. 324, Penal Code and cannot be convicted under S. 302 or S. 307, Penal Code. 4 A.I.Cr.D. 125=A.I.R. 1950 Ajmer 21=51 Cr.L.J. 905.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 326—Offence under—Accused participating in assault along with others—Death due to multiple injuries.

Where the accused participated in an assault along with others and there was no direct evidence as to how many injuries were caused by him and there was no proof that each injury on the head was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the cause of death was stated to be the multiple injuries inflicted on the deceased:

Held, that in the circumstances it was difficult to say that death had been caused by the act of the accused or that injuries attributable to him could result in death in the ordinary course, but that as injuries on the head of the deceased was on a very vital part, each one of them could prove dangerous to life and it would therefore be safer to convict the accused under S. 326, I.P. Code. 3 A.I.Cr.D. 343=A.I.R. 1949 Ajmer 29=50 Cr.L.J. 583.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 325—Death caused by fracture of skull—Two injuries collectively sufficient to cause death—Assailant armed with ordinary stick and aged only 18 years—Likelihood of fatal injury being due to knocking against hard substance when falling—Offence.

The deceased had received two injuries, both of which collectively, were sufficient, in the opinion of the doctor, to cause death in the ordinary course of nature, but one of which was not sufficient so to cause death. The post mortem examination revealed that the skull of the deceased had been fractured and that death was due to the consequences resulting from the fracture. It appeared that the assailant (accused) was only a lad of 18 and had only an ordinary stick. It was not clear that more than one blow was dealt by the accused. There was a possibility that the deceased fell down and in falling sustained an injury as a result of knocking against a hard substance.

Held, that it could not be held that the accused had the intention of causing death or of causing injuries sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course only an intention to cause grievous death or an injury likely to result into grievous hurt could be presumed and the accused was therefore liable to conviction only under S. 325 and not under S. 302, I.P. Code. 229 Ind. Cas. 293=48 Cr.L.J. 367.

—Ss. 300, 325 and S. 34—Four persons beating deceased with lathis—Uncertainty as to who struck fatal blow—Common intention not to kill deceased but to cause only grievous hurt—Conviction changed from S. 302 to S. 325-34.

Where out of the four accused who beat the deceased with lathis it was not certain as to who struck the fatal blow and the common intention of them was, as shown by the circumstances, only to break him up in such way as legally amounted to grievous hurt and not to kill the deceased, the accused cannot be convicted of murder but only under S. 325 read with S. 34. A.I.R. 1946 Oudh 250=1946 A.W.R.C.C. 162=47 Cr.L.J. 714=1946 O.W.N. 249=21 Luck. 527=225 Ind. Cas. 308.

The causing of contusions on the head not resulting in the fracture of any of the bones of the skull and though these are by no means small, in the absence of anything to show that they were caused by a blow aimed with a weapon which can be called deadly or with an unduly violent force, does not amount to murder but only a simple hurt. —Ss. 300, 302 and 326.

There was no premeditation about the matter. The party did not go to attack armed in any way. They had gone there to rescue the cattle from the deceased who was taking them to the pound. The attack was only a scuffle between the rescuers and the deceased except that one of the rescuers suddenly inflicted a blow with his knife on the deceased which proved fatal:

Held, that it was clear that grievous hurt endangering life was caused to the deceased and there could be no doubt that the accused voluntarily caused hurt to him and intended or knew himself likely to cause hurt endangering life. He was, therefore, clearly guilty under S. 306, while there was room for doubt as regards the charge under S. 302. A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 426=43 Cr.L.J. 455=199 Ind. Cas. 55.

—Ss. 300 and 328—Accused administering dhatura with food to three persons—All of them found lying in open next day—Two of them recovering from poisoning but one dying after a week after developing pneumonia—Death held not due to poisoning—Offence held fell not under S. 302, but under S. 328.

On the night of December 6, the accused gave some food with which dhatara was mixed to three Malayees in order that he might rob them of whatever they had on their person. The three men were found next morning lying out in the open in a state of coma or unconsciousness and they were taken to the hospital. The medical evidence showed that all of them had been given dhatara. Two of them recovered completely. The third developed pneumonia and died on December 13:

Held, that the conviction of the accused for the offence of murder could not be sustained, since it was not shown that pneumonia was a likely consequence of the administration of dhatara nor was it established that the pneumonia was caused by the exposure or was a probable consequence of sleeping out. The accused must therefore, be held to be guilty under S. 328, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 100=(1941) 2 M.L.J. 661=43 Cr.L.J. 320=1941 M.W.N. 1038=198 Ind. Cas. 225.

Accused stabbing deceased with knife on forearm during altercation between them—Death resulting due to haemorrhage—Accused held guilty under S. 326 only and not under S. 302. A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 269=1938 M.W.N. 1274=(1939) 1 M.L.J. 123=40 Cr.L.J. 308 (1)=179 Ind. Cas. 982.

—Ss. 300, 302 325 and 34.

Several accused attacking deceased with lathis and beating him—Death caused by two serious injuries on vital part while other bodily injuries simple—They are guilty of offence under S. 325 read with S. 34 and not under S. 302. A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 254=1939 O.W.N. 662=40 Cr.L.J. 754=1939 A.W.R. 96=183 Ind. Cas. 265.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 326.

Where the common intention of the two accused was to effect an attack on some one with dahs, and they had knowledge that the probable result of that attack at least would be to cause grievous hurt with a deadly weapon, but there was no sufficient proof to show that there was a common intention of the two accused to cause death or injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death:

Held, that the accused could be convicted only under S. 326, and not under S. 302. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 263=40 Cr.L.J. 871=184 Ind.Cas. 78.

—S. 300—No intention to cause grievous hurt but knowledge that such hurt is likely to be caused—Injured person dying—Offence.

A person can be guilty of voluntarily causing grievous hurt who does not intend to cause grievous hurt but only knows himself likely to cause grievous hurt; and if he did not intend to cause grievous hurt but only knew himself likely to cause grievous hurt, it would probably not fall under any of the clauses of S. 300, and so would not be murder. A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 792=46 M.L.W. 486=39 Cr.L.J. 139=(1937) 2 M.L.J. 490=1937 M.W.N. 1124=172 Ind. Cas. 382.

—S. 300.

Where there was no evidence that the accused caused the injuries which were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the accused cannot be held to be guilty of murder, but only of causing grievous hurt. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 444=37 Cr.L.J. 1022 (2)=164 Ind. Cas. 967.

—Ss. 300 and 326.

Where there is nothing to show which of two accused persons committed the crime or that there was any common intention to commit the crime of murder, one of them must have committed it, but it cannot be said that the other man abetted the crime of murder by his mere presence, in the absence of any evidence to show that he instigated the murder or intentionally committed it or engaged in a conspiracy to commit murder or, what is much the same thing, that the murder was committed in pursuance of a common intention. The mere fact that the accused's companion tried to commit an assault on the deceased's companion is not sufficient in itself to show that the accused's companion contemplated murder being committed. The accused were held guilty under S. 326. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 131=37 Cr.L.J. 531=162 Ind. Cas. 6.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304 and 323.

The deceased who was 65 years old received a blow on the chest and died of cerebral haemorrhage due to excitement.

Held, the offence fell under S. 323 and not under S. 302 or 304. 1935 M.W.N. 812.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 325—Five persons beating two—Death of one five days after by grievous hurt—Offence.

Five persons took part in beating two persons one of whom sustained grievous hurt and the other died five days after. The motive for the beating could not be ascertained. The deceased had received seven injuries on the head and one injury fracturing the ulna bone and the other had received only one grievous injury:

Held, that the conviction under Ss. 302-149, Penal Code, for causing death was wrong and that the proper conviction was to be under Ss. 325-147 as regards both. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 486=35 Cr.L.J. 1355=151 Ind. Cas. 391.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 326—Fight during drunken brawl—Blow resulting in death—Offence.

Where there was a fight at the accused's house in which he, his brothers and the deceased took part and in the course of this drunken brawl the accused gave one blow to the deceased, which ultimately resulted in his death:

Held, that a conviction under S. 302 or S. 304, Penal Code, could not be passed but that S. 326, Penal Code, applied. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 477=36 P.L.R. 88=35 Cr.L.J. 1407 (2)=151 Ind. Cas. 760.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 325.

Where the only inference possible from all the circumstances of the case was that the accused did not intend anything more than causing grievous hurt to the deceased under sudden impulse when he found that another person had escaped due to the accused having been brought on one side by the deceased, and the accused struck him on the head by a dang lying near by;

Held, that S. 325, Penal Code, applied and not S. 302. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 335=35 Cr.L.J. 1348=36 P.L.R. 313=151 Ind. Cas. 390.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 326—Injuries not necessarily sufficient to cause death—Death due to meningitis and compression of brain—No connection between this and injuries—Offence.

Where in a trial for murder, the medical evidence was that the injuries inflicted on the deceased were not necessarily sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and that death was due to meningitis and compression of the brain but this had no direct connexion with the injuries:

Held, that the offence fell under S. 326, Penal Code, and not under S. 302. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 368=35 Cr.L.J. 1283=151 Ind. Cas. 238.

—Ss. 300 and 326.

Death caused by seven accused—No clear evidence as to who inflicted the fatal wound and of common intention to murder—Conviction only under S. 326. 1934 M.W.N. 729.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304, 326—Deceased given one blow with takwa—Injury not dangerous to life—Deceased dying of septicaemia—Offence.

The accused struck one blow with a takwa on the head of the deceased from whom the provocation had proceeded. No further advantage was taken of the fallen man. The medical evidence disclosed that the injury was not by itself dangerous to life and it was more probable than not that a man would normally recover from such injuries. Further, it was impossible to say whether the poison was introduced at the time wound was inflicted or subsequently. The deceased died of septicaemia long after the wound was inflicted after keeping a normal temperature for a number of days:

Held, that the offence committed was neither murder nor culpable homicide not amounting to murder but one under S. 326. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 103=33 Cr.L.J. 183=135 Ind. Cas. 668.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 326—One blow with spear on fleshy part—Not fatal in the natural course.

A, B, C, D, assembled together, three of them armed with spears with the intention of attacking another party of men. A gave only one blow with a spear on fleshy part of the body of one of his opponents.

Held, that such injury was not necessarily fatal and A could not be convicted under S. 302, and his case fell within the purview of S. 326, but as there had been a loss of life in the fight, a severe sentence was called for. A's companions having been acting in furtherance of a common intention were also guilty under S. 326, read with S. 34. 1930 Cr. C. 1046=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 950.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 325—Intention—Absence of—Accused chagrined at his melons not brought—

Fit of temper—Dang lying close by—Picking up dealt a blow—No intention to cause death.

The accused, who was chagrined because his melons were not purchased, went into a fit of temper and lost self-control. The dang, with which the blow on the uncovered head of the deceased came to be inflicted, was lying close at hand. The accused picked it up and at once dealt the blow which resulted in the fatal injury to the deceased.

Held: that there was no intention on the part of the accused to cause the death;

Held further, that the case fell within the purview of S. 325 instead of S. 302. 1929 Cr.C. 639=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 863.

—S. 300—Death due to shock from multiple injuries—No single injury fatal—Not known who inflicted which injury—No common intention—Guilty of grievous hurt only.

Three persons were accused of having injured a person and thus causing his death. The deceased died of shock from multiple injuries which included a fracture of five ribs. None of the injuries in itself was such as could be called a fatal injury. They were believed to have been caused by a blunt weapon like a sota.

Held: It was not possible to attribute any particular injury to any individual assailant. Nor could it be said that any particular injury was a direct cause of death. The common intent of the assailants could not be held to have been to cause such injury as they knew was likely to result in death. The accused could not therefore be safely convicted of murder. They were guilty of grievous hurt. 114 Ind. Cas. 704=30 P.L.R. 171=30 Cr.L.J. 368=1929 Cr.C. 8=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 456.

—S. 300—Murder or hurt—Drunken man shooting at point blank range—Injury not in the ordinary course causing death—Supervening causes leading to death—Guilty of grievous hurt.

The accused, when he was full drunk, fired at the deceased and caused a wound on the upper portion of his thigh with a shot which was fired at point blank range. The injury was not fatal and was not such as in the ordinary course of nature would cause death. After nearly two months the injured person died, the wound having become septic and dysentery having supervened a few days before his death.

Held: that neither 300 (3) nor (4) applied to the case, and the accused was not guilty of murder; he was not also guilty under S. 304. But he was guilty under S. 326 and as the shot was fired at point blank range on the upper portion of the thigh maximum sentence should be passed. 120 Ind. Cas. 183=11 L.L.J. 44=31 Cr.L.J. 44=1929 Cr.C. 4=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 433.

—Ss. 300 and 325—Hitting with hockey stick in return for injuries received the previous day—Death by internal bleeding and clotting of blood on the surface of the brain—Guilty of grievous hurt only.

The accused and the deceased were both young men of about 18 years. The deceased and a friend of his gave a beating to the accused. The next day the accused unexpectedly met the deceased, and forthwith formed the design of hitting him in return for the beating which he had received. Then he struck him a violent blow on the back of his head, with a hockey stick which he was carrying and ran away. The deceased walked on for about 30 paces and sat down. He was taken home where, half an hour later, he was unconscious. The blow caused internal bleeding and a clot of blood on the surface of the brain. This caused death.

Held, that the accused was not guilty of murder, but of an offence under S. 325 as it could not be said under the circumstances of the case that the accused knew that the blow was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or that the bodily injury which he intended to cause was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 88 Ind. Cas. 286=7 L.L.J. 573=26 Cr.L.J. 1118=26 P.L.R. 430=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 559.

—S. 300—Quarrel among young boys living near each other—Lathi blow found on dead body—Guilty of grievous hurt only.

Where a quarrel began with young boys calling each other by perverted names and it ended in the death of one man, but it was found that both the parties were peaceably living near each other but that lathi wounds were found on the body of the deceased,

Held: the accused should be convicted of causing grievous hurt only and not of murder. 83 Ind. Cas. 636=26 Cr.L.J. 76=A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 284.

—Ss. 300 and 325—Swinging sideways blow of lathi—Intention or knowledge of rupturing liver proved—Guilty of grievous hurt only.

Where the accused did not lift his lathi above his head, with both hands and bring it down on the head of the deceased but struck a swinging sideways blow and it was not proved that the accused intended to rupture the deceased's liver or even knew that he was likely to do so. Held, the offence committed was one under S. 325. 81 Ind. Cas. 969=11 O.L.J. 563=25 Cr.L.J. 1145=A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 135.

—Ss. 300 and 325—Blow aimed at woman trying to close the door—Child, the woman carried, was struck and killed—Guilty of grievous hurt only.

The accused with three others, came to beat the owner of the house. His wife who had her small son, aged 1, in her arms, tried to close deorhi door but the three men forced it open and the accused aimed a blow at her which struck the little child and killed it. It was doubtful whether he ever knew that the owner's wife was carrying the child. The affray took place at half past seven in the evening on the threshold of the deorhi which was a roofed building. The sun had set at 6 o'clock and it was, therefore, dark. The woman was trying to shut the door to keep out the three men who had come to attack her husband, and the accused struck at her as he forced the door open.

Held: A woman or anybody else closing a door against a person trying to get in would naturally put down anything he or she was carrying in order to have both hands free. Therefore the offence appears to be equivalent to striking the woman and nothing more. Conviction altered from S. 304 to S. 325. 71 Ind. Cas. 52=5 L.L.J. 228=24 Cr.L.J. 4=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 47.

—Ss. 300 and 326—Boyish quarrel—Stab with pen-knife—Offence is one under S. 326 only.

In a case where as a result merely of a boyish quarrel just a short time before, the accused stabbed the deceased with a pen-knife four inches in length, there can be no conviction for murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder where the 'corpus delicti' is not established. The offence of which the accused is guilty is voluntarily causing grievous hurt by an instrument used for cutting. 63 Ind. Cas. 450=3 L.L.J. 581=22 Cr.L.J. 658=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 26.

—Ss. 300 and 325—Murder or hurt.

In a case where it is found that there was no intention of the accused to cause death or to deal such a bodily injury as is likely to cause death and if the injured party succumbs to death due not directly to the blows struck by the accused but the disease having supervened, the conviction ought to be either under S. 304 or 325 but not under S. 302 as the case would not fall within the definition of murder. 42 All. 302=18 A.L.J. 224=21 Cr.L.J. 783=58 Ind. Cas. 463.

—Ss. 300 and 323—Murder or hurt—Intervention of woman with a child in a scuffle—Death of child—Offence.

A woman with a child interfered unexpectedly in a scuffle between her husband and the accused in a dark night. The blow aimed at the husband missed its aim, but fell on the head of the child causing severe injuries, from the effects of which it died. Held, that as the blow, if it had reached the complainant would have caused simple hurt, the accused was guilty of simple hurt only. 21 Bom. L.R. 1101=54 Ind. Cas. 485.

—Ss. 300 and 326—Murder or hurt—Intention to cause death—Grievous hurt.

L who had a stick attacked B. Learning that G was coming to help B, L, entered his house whence he fetched a chopper and renewed his attack on B, inflicting more than one injury. B was sent to the hospital where he died of septic pneumonia. Held, that there being no intention to cause death, L could not be convicted of murder but only of having caused grievous hurt under S. 326. 17 A.L.J. 56=1 U.L.R. (H.C.) 42=20 Cr.L.J. 137=49 Ind. Cas. 169.

—Ss. 300 and 320—Murder or hurt.

Where a person squeezed the testicles with a considerable force for a considerable time in a sudden quarrel and the medical evidence showed that under normal conditions it would not endanger life, Held, it was a simple hurt and not an offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, since the offender did not know that the injury would endanger life or under normal conditions would cause death. 19 Bom. L.R. 823=18 Cr.L.J. 1010=42 Ind. Cas. 754.

—Ss. 300 and 325—Murder or hurt—Provocation—Anger.

Where being provoked by the conduct of the deceased and his son coming armed with a pitch fork and stick respectively and abusing accused's sister and striking on her head the accused in a moment of anger and without premeditation struck a blow on the deceased's head, with a pitch fork, not knowing it was likely to cause death, she was guilty of an offence under S. 325 and not under S. 304, I.P.C. 69 P.L.R. 1916=17 Cr. L. J. 270=48 P.W.R. 1916 Cr.=34 Ind. Cas. 990.

—Ss. 300, 302 and 328—Murder or hurt—Grievous hurt.

Where the chemical analysis did not disclose how much arsenic was found and there is no evidence otherwise, it is doubtful whether the case would come under S. 302 or S. 328, I.P.C. 20 C.W.N. 512=23 C.L.J. 477=17 Cr. L. J. 188=33 Ind. Cas. 823.

—Ss. 300 and 326—Murder or hurt—Causing death by dhatara—Commission of robbery.

The accused who had caused the death of two persons by administering to them dhatara in order to facilitate the commission of robbery, were guilty of offence under S. 326 of the Penal Code and not under S. 302, 31 All. 148, not foll. 19 P.R. 1916 Cr.=20 Cr.L.J. 510=51 Ind. Cas. 670.

—Ss. 300 and 325—Murder or hurt.

No adequate motive for the murder was proved. A perusal of the medical evidence showed that although there were two contused wounds on the head a bruise on the forehead and a bruise on the neck, there was no fracture of any bones of the skull. Nor was there any fracture of any bone of the body. Death probably resulted from direct violence. None of the injuries taken alone could be termed mortal but taking all the injuries into consideration it might be inferred that they caused death. Held, that the accused cannot be held to have intended to cause the death. The hurts caused having actually resulted in death amounted collectively to grievous hurt. The accused caused grievous hurt and either he intended to cause or knew that he was likely to cause grievous hurt when he gave the deceased such a severe beating and he committed an offence under S. 325, I.P.C. 1 Lah. L. J. 247.

—Ss. 300, 304 (2) and 320(8)—Murder or hurt—Death caused by injury with weapon—Grievous hurt—Mis-direction.

Where death has been caused by a blow which does not necessarily suggest an intention to cause such bodily injury as would ordinarily cause death, and it is presumed in accused's favour that he had no knowledge that the injury which he intended to cause was likely to cause death, it is not unreasonable to infer intention to cause hurt dangerous to life and conviction should be had under S. 320 (8). S. 304(2) is not appropriate to a case where there was deliberate intention to inflict bodily injury to the person whose death resulted from such injuries. 6 S.L.R. 116=13 Cr.L.J. 750=17 Ind. Cas. 62.

—S. 300—Murder or hurt.

In a riot the accused gave blows one of which fell on the temple of the deceased of which he died 4 days after. The accused did not commit culpable homicide but only an offence of grievous hurt. (1911) 2 M. W. N. 188=12 Cr. L. J. 528=12 Ind. Cas. 296.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304, 325, 328, 329—Administration of dhatara for the purpose of facilitating robbery—Death of person to whom dhatara is so administered—Offence not murder, but only causing grievous hurt.

Where for the purpose of facilitating robbery, dhatara was administered by two persons to certain travellers in consequence of which one of the travellers died and others were made seriously ill, it was held that in respect of the traveller who died the offence committed was that punishable under S. 325 viz., grievous hurt; and in respect of the travellers who did not die the offence committed was that defined by S. 328. 20 A. 143, not foll. 1908 A.W.N. 243=30 A. 568.

16. Murder with consent of Victim—S. 300, Exception (5).

The accused and the deceased who was his concubine were on affectionate terms and there was no motive whatever for the accused to encompass the death of the deceased. In his confession to the Magistrate, the accused stated that he killed the deceased at her own request and with her glad consent.

Held, that the offence amounted to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 138=1939 M.W.N. 1132=50 L. W. 784=41 Cr.L.J. 322=1.L.R. (1940) Mad.428=(1940)2 M.L.J. 89=186 Ind. Cas. 479.

—S. 300, Excep. (5)—Accused killing person above 18 years of age with deceased's consent—Offence.

Where the accused killed a woman above the age of 18 years, at her request and with her consent:

Held, that the accused was entitled to the benefit of Excep. 5 to S. 300, and was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, punishable under the earlier part, S. 304. A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 436=33 L.W. 218=1931 M.W.N. 393=32 Cr.L.J. 659=60 M.L.J. 616=54 M. 504=131 Ind. Cas. 147.

—Ss. 300—Exception (5).

The accused strangled his beloved aged 16 years to death upon their decision to die together in despair of the future separation and feeling that they could not live apart,

Held, that this was essentially the case where the spirit, if not the letter, of Exception 5 may be applied and, though convicted of murder, sentence should be transportation for life.

—S. 300, Excep. 5—Murder or culpable homicide—Murder with the consent of victim—Liability for.

Applicant killed his step-father, an infirm old man and an invalid, with the latter's consent with the object of getting 3 innocent men (his enemies) hanged, Held, that the offence was covered by the fifth exception to S. 300, I.P.C., and was punishable not under S. 302 but under S. 304. 45 P.R. 1917 Cr.=19 Cr.L.J. 125=43 Ind. Cas. 413.

—S. 300, Exception 5—Murder or culpable homicide—Essentials—Onus of proof.

A person claiming the benefit of exception 5 has to show that the person, whose death he caused, consented to have the particular act done upon him, knowing that it would cause his death or knowing that his life would be endangered thereby. It is not sufficient to show that the person voluntarily took the risk of death. 3 Bur.L.T. 64=5 L.B.R. 160=11 Cr.L.J. 345=5 Ind. Cas. 988.

17. Nature of weapon.

—Ss. 299, 300 and 302—Weapon used—Inference of offence.

A man who drives a spear into the stomach of another and causes that man's death, commits murder, and should be charged under S. 302. A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 397=22 Pat. 338=10 B.R. 168=45 Cr.L.J. 213=210 Ind. Cas. 210.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Inference from weapon used.

When a rifle is aimed at the head of another, accompanied by words of abuse which cannot be spoken in jest, and the rifle is one not liable to sudden or accidental discharge, and the person with the rifle had full knowledge that the rifle was loaded, it is impossible to hold that the rifle was fired without an intent to inflict such bodily injury as would in the ordinary course of nature result in death. A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 274=39 Cr.L.J. 92=172 Ind. Cas. 204.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Accused hitting deceased with lathi — Fracture of skull — Death — Offence.

Where the accused hit the deceased with a lathi first on the arm when he attempted to ward a blow off his head and then when his arm was disabled, gave him two blows on the head on which the deceased's skull was fractured and he died as a result of the injuries.

Held, that there was no reason for supposing that the accused intended to cause death or to cause such injuries as would be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death or to do an act so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death and that the offence was one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. (1936) 164 Ind. Cas. 662=1936 A.W.R. 327=(1936) A.L.J. 383=37 Cr.L.J. 1020.

—Ss. 299 and 300.

If weapons like lathis or the blunt side of axes are used in order to break every limb of a man's body, it is just as surely a murder as if the head had been smashed. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 233=37 Cr. L. J. 751=38 P. L. R. 695=163 Ind. Cas. 143.

—Ss. 299 and 300 — Severe blow with deadly weapon fracturing skull—Offence.

Where a severe blow was delivered by the accused on the head of the deceased and the weapon used was a deadly one causing extensive fracture of the skull as not to leave much hope of recovery, even if skilled treatment had been applied from the beginning.

Held, that the accused was guilty of murder and that the fact that the deceased died only a month after the commission of the offence was immaterial. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 94=26 Cr.L.J. 1335=16 Lah. 589=37 P.L.R. 705=158 Ind. Cas. 336.

—Ss. 299 and 300 — Inference from weapon used.

The use of a pocket knife in a sudden fight does not necessarily mean that the accused intends to cause death or that he knows it to be likely that death will follow. Every case is to be decided on its own merits. It depends on the way the weapon is used and part of the body selected for the purpose and not only on the nature of the weapon. The violent use of a pocket knife on a vital part of the body would necessarily imply the knowledge that the act committed was so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death as is laid down in cl. 4 to S. 300, and would therefore be murder. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 155=37 Cr.L.J. 87=159 Ind. Cas. 284.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Causing death by wounds on head with sharp cutting weapon.

If a man, who is armed with a deadly weapon like a sela, thrusts that weapon into the chest of his victim and causes instantaneous death, he can have only one intention, namely, intention to murder. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 741=35 P.L.R. 715=36 Cr.L.J. 696=155 Ind. Cas. 275.

Where the accused gave a blow to the deceased with the wooden handle of a hoe measuring

3" X 10" and weighing 82 tolas, and it appeared that the accused gave only one blow on the spur of the moment on the thinner part of the head:

Held, that the weapon could not be said to be a formidable one and that as the intention to kill could not be presumed, the offence was culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 338=35 Cr.L.J. 43=146 Ind. Cas. 315.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Violent blow on head with lethal weapon.

A person inflicting a violent blow on the head of his victim with a lethal weapon such as an iron-shod dang must be presumed to intend to cause such injury as he knew was likely to cause death. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 244=33 P.L.R. 130=33 Cr.L.J. 378=137 Ind. Cas. 86 (1).

—Ss. 299 and 300—Death by blow with heavy stick—Offence.

Where a person strikes another on the head with a heavy stick and thereby causes the death of the latter he is guilty of murder, as he must be taken to have known that what he was doing must in all probability cause the death of the deceased. —Ss. 299 and 300—Violent blow with lethal weapon at vital part—Intention must be presumed.

The best criterion of the force and character of a blow is to regard the result which it has effected. A person delivering a violent blow with a lethal weapon like a lathi on a vulnerable part of the body as the head must be deemed to have intended to cause such bodily injury as he knew was likely to cause the death of the person to whom the injury was caused.

Where therefore there are no indications that the accused dealt any other kind of blow or to cause any other sort of injury he can be held guilty under S. 302. 126 Ind. Cas. 572=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 490.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Fatal wounds with knife—Intention to cause death presumed.

A person who inflicts on the deceased fatal wounds with a knife intends nothing short of inflicting death and so the offence in the absence of extenuating circumstances, is murder. 1930 M.W.N. 681=32 M.L.W. 220=129 Ind. Cas. 228=53 Mad. 861=A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 972=59 M.L.J. 939.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Fight with lathis—knowledge of probability of death presumed.

When men who expected a lathi fight use their lathis with the result that a man is killed, it must be taken, in the absence of special circumstances, that they knew that they were doing an act so eminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. 116 Ind. Cas. 19=1929 A.L.J. 244=10 L.R.A.Cr. 47=11 A.I.Cr.R. 299=30 Cr.L.J. 559=A.I.R. 1929 All. 160.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Plunging knife into stomach—Intention to cause death or fatal injury—If can be presumed—Rule of intending natural or probable consequences of act—If applicable to Indian Criminal law.

Per Cuming, J.—The natural result of plunging a knife into a man's stomach is death or such bodily injury as is likely to result in death. The man who plunges a knife into another man's stomach must know that it would cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death and that hence death would be the probable result of his act. The man who does such an act therefore must be held to intend to cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to result in death, for a man is presumed to intend the natural consequence of his action. If he had not that knowledge or intention in the circumstances and he did the act with some other knowledge or intention then it is for him to prove it, for that is a fact peculiarly within his own knowledge.

Per Mukerji, J.—The presumption that one must be taken to intend the natural or probable consequences of his act—a rule of English criminal law which, originally but a rule of evidence, has now acquired the dignity of a legal axiom—is not always quite easy to apply to the Indian Criminal Law in view of the distinction that the Indian Penal Code makes between intention and knowledge. On the question of knowledge much depends on the intellectual capacity of the actor. 109 Ind. Cas. 482=47 C.L.J. 240=32 C.W.N. 345=29 Cr.L.J. 546=10 A.I.Cr.R. 259=A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 430.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Organised fights with lathis—Combatant using fire-arm.

Organised fights with each side armed with lathis are grave infractions of the law and frequently result in the death of one or more combatants. The introduction of the pistol is an added aggravation and in such cases transportation for life is the only appropriate sentence that could be passed against the combatant who uses the fire-arm and brings down a man to the ground though not dead, at least wounded. 87 Ind. —Ss. 299 and 300—Violent blow with takwa cutting through skull—Intention presumed.

A takwa is a deadly weapon and a person who strikes a blow on the head with such a weapon and with such violence as to cut through the skull should be presumed to do so with the intention of causing death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. 88 Ind. Cas. 995=7 L.L.J. 175=26 P.L.R. 221=26 Cr.L.J. 1251=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 373.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Striking with wooden pestle on head—Knowledge presumed.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Stab in the stomach—Sufficient in ordinary course to cause death—Intention to cause injury sufficient to cause death presumed.

Common knowledge and experience tell us that any cut into peritoneum and stomach, is sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death, unless done by a skilful surgeon under safe-guards discovered during comparatively recent years. The fact that persons have under medical treatment, recovered from wounds in the stomach affords no ground for holding that a stab in the stomach, is not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. If a person stabs another in the abdomen with sufficient force to penetrate the abdominal walls, and the internal viscera, he must undoubtedly be held (whatever his station in life) to have intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A.I.R. 1922 All. 487 Dis. 27 M. 119, Foll. 76 Ind. Cas. 711=1 Rang. 436=25 Cr.L.J. 247=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 93.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Attack with chhavis on the head—Intention presumed.

When two persons armed with dangerous weapons like chhavis attacked their enemy on the head, they were deemed to intend to cause his death and sentence of death was passed.

Where a person is convicted under S. 302 of murder, sentence of death should ordinarily be imposed unless there are mitigating circumstances which would justify a Court in awarding a lesser sentence. 75 Ind. Cas. 359=6 L.L.J. 62=24 Cr.L.J. 935=A.I.R. 1323 Lah. 598.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Striking blow with deadly weapon—Knowledge of probability of death presumed.

A man, who deliberately strikes a blow with a weapon such as a takwa, on the head of another who is held in position so that he can make no mistake as to what he is doing, must know that his act is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death, and the circumstances are aggravated when the murderer is not one of those taking part in the original quarrel. 69 Ind. Cas. 439=23 Cr.L.J. 711=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 68.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Striking with blunt edge of chhavi—Not killed outright—Death by the supervision of erysipelas—No intention to kill or cause fatal injury.

The deceased was not killed outright but survived for eleven days. The Assistant Surgeon was moreover doubtful whether the deceased would have died if erysipelas had not supervened. Had it been the intention to kill deceased, Jalal would naturally have struck him with the sharp edge of his chhavi and the other men also would have inflicted more serious injuries than they did. There was nothing to prevent them from despatching him at once.

Held, taking all the circumstances into consideration, it has not been shown that any of the appellants intended to kill deceased or to cause such injury as they knew to be likely to cause his death. There is, however, no doubt that they all knew that grievous hurt was likely to result from an assault of so serious nature, as dangerous weapons were employed. A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 441.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Single blow on head with hollow bamboo—Factors for consideration.

It would be most unsafe to suggest that in all cases where death is caused by a single blow from a hollow bamboo, the offence is not murder i.e., that the sole criterion is the nature of the weapon used. The size, and the weight of the stick, the manner in which it is used, and the actual injuries caused by the blow must all be considered. 65 Ind. Cas. 495=11 L.B.R. 115=A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 4.

—Ss. 299, 300, 301, 304 and 304-A—Use of deadly weapons.

A person is not absolved from the charge of culpable homicide even without intention of causing death or such bodily injury as would likely to cause it, in cases where the offender commits lurking house trespass by night and strikes the inmates with a dangerous weapon to evade his arrest and the inmate dies eventually, simply because his guilt is far more serious than mere rash and negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide. 12 P.R. 1911 Cr.=41 P.W.R. 1911 Cr.=12 Cr.L.J. 591=12 Ind. —Ss. 299 and 300 (4)—Use of deadly weapons—Fight.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Onus.

Where in a murder case the accused sets up the plea of self-defence, the burden lies on him under S. 105, Evidence Act to prove it and in the absence of proof it is not possible for the Court to presume the truth of plea of self-defence. #### 18 (c). Private defence—Right exceeded—Offence—S. 300, Exception (2).

—S. 300, Excep. 2—Applicability—Conditions of.

In order that Exception 2 to S. 300, I. P. Code, should apply, it is essential that the person causing hurt in the exercise of his right of private defence should act "without any intention of causing more harm than is necessary for the purpose of such defence." 231 Ind. Cas. 462=48 Cr. L.J. 809.

—S. 300, Excep. 2—Applicability and scope—Damage to crops by cattle grazing—Owner of crops hitting owner of cattle with bhala on chest—Death caused—Offence.

Exception 2 to S. 300, I.P. Code, is a necessary corollary to S. 99. A person whose ripe crops are about to be damaged or being damaged by cattle grazing in the field, is not entitled to kill the owner of the cattle who grazes them in defence of his property. If he strikes a blow on the chest of the grazer with a bhala and inflicts an injury which is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, he is guilty of murder under S. 302, I. P. Code, and his case does not fall under Exception 2 to that section. 26 Pat. 49=48 Cr.L.J. 565=230 Ind. Cas. 167=13 B. R. 462=A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 62.

—S. 300, Excep. 2—Applicability—Attempt at house-breaking by persons armed with lorch and deadly axe—Aiming of axe at face and head of pursuer—Death caused—Offence.

Where two persons armed with a lorch and a deadly axe with a blade 8 1/4 inches broad, proceed upon a house-breaking expedition, and in order to escape capture, the man with the axe uses that axe aiming his blows at the face and head of a pursuer armed only with a lathi or lorch, it cannot be held that he is bona fide exercising the right of private defence without premeditation or without the intention of causing more harm than is necessary, so as to reduce his act of killing from murder to culpable homicide. Right of private defence—Extent of—Deceased armed with weapon—Accused snatching it from him and causing his death by inflicting several wounds—If exceeds his right. See Penal Code, Ss. 99 and 304. 223 Ind. Cas. 99=47 Cr.L.J. 358=A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 37.

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—Exceeding right of private defence.

The accused and the deceased were the land-lords of a village. The deceased who was a lambardar, on being informed that the accused had prevented his tenants from paying revenue direct to the deceased, went to the dera of the accused with a number of unarmed persons with the object of remonstrating the accused. On seeing these men the accused got frightened and lost control of himself and in that confused state of mind he picked up a gun and fired without having any intention to kill, as a result of which the deceased and one other man of his party died.

Held, that the accused was not justified to pick up the gun and fire, as he could not have reasonably expected to be killed by the party which was coming up to his house or to receive grievous injuries from them. But as he was undoubtedly overawed by the number of the members of the party and must have felt that they had come to his dera with the intention of insulting or annoying him, he might have been justified to use a much lesser force. He was not in any case entitled to use his gun. The accused, therefore, exceeded his right of self-defence and was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under the first part of S. 304. A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 97=45 P.L.R. 393=45 Cr. L.J. 634=212 Ind.Cas. 440.

—Ss. 300 and 304 — Using dagger in the exercise of right of self-defence — Death caused—Offence.

Where the accused, in exercise of their right of private defence of property, use daggers and cause injuries to the members of the other party resulting in death of some of them, not because they felt it necessary to use the daggers for the protection of their person or property but were actuated by the desire to punish those who tried to enter upon their land, they must be deemed to have exceeded the right of private defence and must be held to be guilty under S. 304. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 58=1942 M.W.N. 42=201 Ind. Cas. 390.

—S. 300, Excep. (2) — Accused seeing his brother struck by deceased with cart prop, stabbing deceased and killing him—Case held fell under Exceptions I and 2 to S. 300.

What is due care and attention depends on the position in which a man finds himself, and varies in different cases. The question here must be whether the offender acted honestly, or whether he used the opportunity to pursue a private grudge and to inflict injuries which he intended to be inflicted regardless of his rights. Section 300, punishes a criminal act in excess of the right of private defence, and it is impossible to regard "due care and attention" in the sense which is usually ascribed to it as an element in such criminality.

The accused seeing his brother struck on the head by the deceased with a bamboo implement, described as a cart prop, and felled to the ground, stabbed the deceased which resulted in his death:

Held, that the accused was so provoked as to be deprived of the power of self-control and there was no reason to suppose that the accused was actuated by any impulse but that of exercising the right of private defence of the body. The exceptions 1 and 2 to S. 300, therefore applied. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 129=1940 Rang. L.R. 109=41 Cr. L.J. 634=188 Ind. Cas. 578.

✓ —Ss. 300 and 304—Exceeding right of private defence and killing—Offence.

Held, on facts that the accused had a right of private defence but in hitting the deceased on head with axe and killing him, he exceeded that right. (The conviction was altered to one under second part of S. 304). A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 534=41 Cr. L.J. 150=1.L.R. (1950) Lah. 217=42 P.L.R. 711=185 Ind. Cas. 274.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Exceeding right of private defence—Offence.

Where, in a course of fight, a person from one of the parties runs away but is chased by another from the opposite party and is overtaken at a considerable distance and is killed, the person chasing would be deemed to have exceeded his right of private defence and is, therefore, guilty under S. 304 (1). A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 393=41 P.L.R. 360=40 Cr. L.J. 904=184 Ind. Cas. 270.

—S. 300, Excep. (2) — Accused acting cruelly —Right of self defence.

An accused cannot plead the right of self-defence, if his action is cruel and unusual, and he is guilty under S. 302. He has no right of private defence, because he has no occasion to apprehend death or grievous hurt. Few scratches on his back do not give him this right, the burden of proving which, is on him. A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 101=39 Cr.L.J. 142=172 Ind. Cas. 499.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Exceeding right of private defence and causing death—Offence.

Where, while the deceased and others were grazing their cattle on land in the ownership of the accused, the accused came with lathis and began to drive the cattle away towards the pound and on the deceased and his party rescuing the cattle, there was a lathi fight between the accused and the deceased and his party during which the deceased received fatal injuries:

Held, that although the accused had a right to drive the cattle that had strayed into their land to the cattle pound, that right did not extend to the causing of the death of the deceased. But as it appeared that the deceased and his men did attack the accused, while the accused were not free from blame, in awarding sentences consideration may legitimately be given to the fact that they were really in the right at first and were performing a legitimate duty in taking the cattle of the deceased and others to the pound which had strayed into their land, although in doing so, they exceeded the right of private defence of person and property. Consequently, the conviction for offences under Ss. 147 and 304, I.P.C., would stand but their sentences might be reduced, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 54=37 Cr. L. J. 931=1936 O.W.N. 766=164 Ind. Cas. 151.

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—Right of self-defence when not available.

Under the first two paras. of S. 99 the right of private defence is not available against acts done or directed by public servants acting in good faith under colour of their office, even though such acts may not be strictly justifiable by law. Unlike the second proviso to Excep. 1 the exclusion of the right of private defence is not confined to things done in strict conformity with law. —Ss. 300, Excep. 2, 304, Part. 1—Deceased in excitement brandishing lathi determined to use violence—Accused snatching lathi and striking deceased—Death—Offence.

Where the accused had been carrying on liaison with the deceased's wife and the deceased came in a state of excitement brandishing a lathi determined to use violence against his wife while the accused snatching the lathi from his hand struck the deceased twice on the head which resulted in his death:

Held, that the second exception to S. 300 applied and that the conviction should be altered from one under S. 302 to one under S. 304, Part 1. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 144=34 P.L.R. 886=34 Cr. L. J. 1160=145 Ind. Cas. 921.

Where of two persons A and B, A was armed with a dang and B with a knife, A tried to strike B and missed the stroke and the two then grappled with each other, in the course of which A was unarmed but threw down B who then struck A with his knife and A collapsed and died under the shock:

Held, that B exceeded the right of private defence which he had and that he should be convicted under S. 304, Part 1, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1048=35 Cr.L.J. 639=148 Ind. Cas. 243 (2).

—Ss. 300 and 304—Sudden quarrel—Altercation in relation to tree to which accused had right—Accused hitting deceased with iron-bound stick—Death—Right of private defence exceeded.

The accused was an occupancy-tenant of a field adjoining the field of the deceased. There was a kikar tree near the boundary of the two fields in respect of which there was a dispute between the parties. One day the deceased and another went to the field and lopped off branches from the tree and were collecting the leaves and branches when the accused arrived. An altercation ensued in the course of which the accused gave a lathi blow on the head of the deceased which proved fatal. It appeared that the accused was prima facie entitled to the tree:

Held, although the accused had a right to prevent the deceased from taking away the branches and leaves of the tree, he had no justification for going to the length of hitting the deceased on the head with an iron-bound stick as he did and hence he exceeded his right of private defence. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1052=35 Cr.L.J. 461=35 P.L.R. 195=147 Ind. Cas. 681.

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—Excessive exercise of right of self-defence.

If while defending himself such person strikes the person against whom he was defending on a sudden irrational impulse thereby exceeding the power given to him under the statute and causes death of the other person, the offence comes not under S. 302 but under S. 304. 11 P. —Ss. 300 and 304.

Right of killing offender found committing burglary given by S. 103 is subject to provisions of S. 99—Deceased beaten to death by lathi blow while found coming out of hole in wall after committing burglary—Accused held guilty of offence under S. 304—S. 300, Excep. (2) held applicable but accused held to have exceeded right of private defence of property. 1930 Cr. C. 948=7 O.W.N. 797=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 408.

—S. 300. Excep. (2)—Private defence.

When a person kills a man without premeditation in excess of the right of private defence, he is guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, 106 Ind. Cas. 213=3 Luck. 244=9 A.I.Cr. R. 217=28 Cr. L. J. 1029=1 L. C. 579=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 15.

—Ss. 300 and 304.

The deceased went up the roof of the accused's house and began to remove the rafters which he had no right to do. The accused flung a heavy balla at the deceased which fractured the deceased's skull and caused his death.

Held, that although the accused had a right to defend his property, he exceeded that right and was guilty under S. 304 (2) 101 Ind. Cas. 663=28 P.L.R. 279=8 A.I.Cr.R. 164=28 Cr. L. J. 487=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 730.

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—Enmity between parties—Challenges to come out and fight—Accused being followed by deceased inside the accused's house—Encounter occurring inside the accused's house where fatal injury inflicted—Application of the right of private defence.

Where a savage enmity had been growing up for some time between the two accused, and the deceased and his brother who were their next door neighbours, and acts of aggression had been committed on both sides on the evening of the occurrence, and challenges to come out and fight had passed from one house to the other and there was an encounter in the open space in front of the two houses, in the course of which injuries were inflicted and suffered on both sides, and at some stage of that encounter one of the accused ran into the dahliz of his own house and was followed thereby by the deceased, and a sharp struggle then occurred just inside the entrance door of the dahliz, and in the course of that struggle the same accused with his spear inflicted upon the deceased the fatal wound, of which the unfortunate man expired almost immediately.

Held: that as the accused was within the threshold of his own house when he inflicted the fatal injury, though his act was not completely covered by the provisions of the law relating to the right of private defence, Exception 2 to S. 300 sufficiently covered the case to warrant the altering of the conviction to one under S. 304, I.P.C. from under S. 302, I.P.C. 89 Ind. Cas. 264=26 Cr. L. J. 1320=6 L.R.A.Cr. 113=A.I.R. 1925 All. 753.

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—Private defence.

Continued attack after the opponent has fallen down is not exercise of private defence. 6 L.L.J. 483=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 230.

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—Exceeding right of—No apprehension of being killed—Aggressor killed in defence—May be guilty under S. 304.

If a person in defending himself exceeds the right of private defence and intends to cause death of his assailant he must not be held to be guilty of murder. A person in order to defend himself, may kill his adversary provided he has a reasonable apprehension that otherwise he himself would be killed. But if he exceeds the right of self defence where there is no reasonable apprehension of his being killed but only had reasonable apprehension of grievous hurt and in defending himself exceeds his right of private defence and kills the other, he is guilty of an offence less than murder. His act may amount to an offence under S. 304, Indian Penal Code. 88 Ind. Cas. 455=26 Cr. L. J. 1143=A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1069.

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—More harm than necessary caused—Accused cannot claim benefit of exception.

To claim the benefit of Exception 2 to Section 300 the accused must show that they had no intention of doing more harm than is necessary. When the person killed was not merely disabled but was beaten to death by opponents in considerable numbers, with a sharp weapon held the offence of murder was committed. 81 Ind. Cas. 347=25 Cr.L.J. 811=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 232.

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—Killing under grave provocation and in belief that murderous assault by deceased not otherwise be prevented—Accused are not guilty of murder.

If some persons were acting in the exercise of their rights to defend their master against what was certainly a murderous assault, and with such care and attention as was humanly possible at the moment and in the circumstances, they did believe that they could not protect their master from that assault otherwise than by striking the deceased with their lathis, even at the moment imminent risk of hitting him on the head and cracking his skull their acts then amply satisfy the conditions required to bring them within the terms of second exception to the definition of murder in S. 300 of the Penal Code. An assault by a mahar tenant on a Rajput Zemindar, even supposing not likely to result in anything worse than grievous hurt, would undoubtedly give so grave a provocation to the Zemindar's followers as to deprive ordinary men of their self-control and if they suddenly and immediately assault the tenant it must be held that they acted while they were still under the full influence of the passion engendered by the provocation. 66 Ind. Cas. 665=23 Cr. L.J. 313=A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 141.

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—Lathi aimed at the head of a thief trying to run away—Exceeding the right of—Offence under S. 304.

Accused a servant employed to watch the crops of a field, went round one night and saw a man cutting the crop at midnight. The thief on seeing the accused tried to run but accused, who was armed with a lathi at once strinck him a blow on the head felling him to the ground; the victim of the blow eventually died.

Held, that under Exception 2 to S. 300, Penal Code, the accused exceeded the right of private defence of property. The conviction of the accused should be under S. 304 and not under S. 325, I.P.C. 64 Ind. Cas. 133=22 Cr.L.J. 741. (All).

—S. 300, Excep. (2)—Private defence—Death caused by stone throwing—Wound on the injured person—Liability—Grievous hurt.

Owing to long standing enmity and fresh altercation, two parties encountered and hurled stones against each other. One of the party was struck by a stone of considerable weight which ruptured his liver and immediately caused his death. As he fell down and lay on the ground, the accused belonging to the other party, caused a serious wound in his leg with a sword. Held, that the accused was not guilty of murder, as there could be no intention to kill. The stone-throwing by his party was resorted to by way of defence to a similar act by the other party and the causing of the death in stone-throwing was an unusual incident which could not be regarded as likely to result in injuries which caused death in the ordinary course of nature. In causing the wound by a sword the accused was guilty of inflicting grievous hurt. 19 Bom.L.R. 902=19 Cr. L. J. 93=43 Ind. Cas. 253.

—Ss. 300, Excep. (2), 96 and 99 (4)—Private defence—Excess of—Right of private defence—More harm than is necessary.

G while running away met the accused who tried to stop him. G hit the accused on the head with a bamboo, and the accused in return gave G a fatal blow on the neck and caused his death. The accused exceeded his right of private defence and should be convicted under the first part of S. 304 but not under the second part. 18 Cr. L. J. 284=38 Ind. Cas. 316 (L. Bur.).

—S. 300, Excep. 2—Private defence.

Accused beat the deceased with chairs and danga and caused his death as the latter was cutting the rice crop belonging to the former. They exceeded the right of private defence of property and as they inflicted more harm than necessary and caused death and therefore they were guilty of murder. 35 P.R. 1916 Cr.=18 Cr.L.J. 367=38 Ind. Cas. 751.

—S. 300, Excep. 2—Private defence—When arises—Sentence what is proper.

When a man is seen with a stick trailing in his hand and for purposes of committing theft, the right of private defence arises but when the person exercising the right has an armed companion on his side he should warn the man with the stick, to drop it and surrender, the failure to give the proper warning brings the case under S. 300, Exception 2, I.P.C., and in such cases long terms of imprisonment are not called for. Firing the first shot in the air is not a sufficient warning. 17 Cr.L.J. 335=35 Ind. Cas. 511.

—S. 300, Excep. 2—Private defence—Proclaimed offender murdering a Police Officer trying to arrest him—Publication of proclamation not proved—Cr. P. Code, S. 87 (3).

A proclaimed offender was tried for murdering a Police Officer trying to arrest him. The prosecution failed either to file the statement referred to in cl. 3, S. 87, or to adduce any other evidence of publication.

Held, that the accused was entitled to the benefit of Excep. 2 to S. 300, I.P.C. and was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 17 Cr.L.J. 78=32 Ind. Cas. 670 (Mad.).

—S. 300, Excep. 2—Private defence—Firing at a person mistaken for thief.

Where the accused had no reason to believe that the person shot at was doing anything more than theft of certain fruits, the mere fact that the shot was fired under the mistaken impression that the person was the thief, would not entitle the accused to the benefit of exception II to S. 300. 13 Cr.L.J. 782=17 Ind. Cas. 414 (Mad.).

—S. 300, Excep. 2—Private defence—Excess of.

Where the accused who was wanted by the police on being seized by the deceased, in order to rescue himself struck two severe blows on the head in consequence of which the deceased expired within a week, held, the accused exceeded his right of private defence in that he caused more harm than was necessary. 12 Cr.L.J. 81=9 Ind. Cas. 452 (Sind.).

—S. 300, Excep. 2—Private defence—Plea not put forth in defence.

A man was assaulted at night by three men. He did not expect any danger of death or grievous hurt, but he believed that he could not escape without using a knife which he picked up and used, stabbing one to death and wounding the other. On his trial for murder the accused did not plead his self-defence.

Held, that as it was in evidence that the accused had to struggle against three persons, the Court was bound to consider the accused's right of self-defence and to decide the case on the facts proved in his favor though he had not set up those facts in his defence. Held, further, that the accused had exceeded his right of private defence, but being within the second exception to S. 300 was only guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 8 M.L.T. 462=12 Cr.L.J. 18=8 Ind. Cas. 1088.

18 (d). Private defence—Right, when affords defence.

—Ss. 300, 302, 97.—Police constable on duty going to station premises and waking up beggars sleeping on ground, without using force—One of beggars entering into argument and suddenly hitting constable on forehead with heavy implement—Constable striking beggar on head with hatchet he was carrying, while reeling from effect of blow received by him—Act of constable held could not be said to be voluntary so as to render it criminal—Even otherwise there was held a good case for exercise of right of private defence. A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 33=43 P.L.R. 721=43 Cr.L.J. 439=198 Ind. Cas. 860.

—Ss. 299 and 300.

The deceased who had two das in his possession threw one at the accused and advanced to attack with the other, whereupon the accused becoming alarmed and finding that the only way in which it was possible to defend himself was to ward off, struck at the deceased with his spear and inflicted the wound which ultimately became fatal.

Held, that the accused acted under the right of private defence of the body. A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 175=42 Cr.L.J. 661=195 Ind. Cas. 71.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Right of private defence, if can afford complete defence to culpable homicide and murder.

The possibility of murder being reduced to culpable homicide through the exercise of right of private defence is also bound up with the possibility of such right going so far as to afford a complete defence not only to a charge of murder but also to a charge of the lesser offence of culpable homicide. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr.L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Police investigation—Suspect subjected to torture—Suspect's right to kill.

When during the investigation of a crime the suspect is mercilessly tortured and this is carried on for a length of time he has every reason to think that he might either be killed and would be justified even to the extent of killing, in endeavouring to stop the tortures to which he is being subjected. (1938) 40 P.L.R. 104.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Death caused in free fight in private defence of property.

Where both sides were prepared for battle and both sides were equally responsible for fighting, but the party of the accused had a right to turn the complainants out of the land which had been in their possession for a long time, and the complainants were the provoking party, were in the wrong and were in force and armed and it needed force and arms to turn them out, and in the course of the exercise of their right, the accused unfortunately killed a person receiving themselves serious injuries:

Held, that no criminal liability could be put upon the party of the accused at all and in these matters it was impossible to judge exactly the right amount of force to be used. (37) 169 Ind. Cas. 826=38 P.L.R. 131=38 Cr.L.J. 807.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Extent of right of self defence.

The accused who were in possession of land were attacked with dangerous weapons and while defending themselves, they inflicted fatal injuries on some of the attackers which resulted in their death:

Held, that so long as the accused were confronted by an unlawful assembly, they were entitled to deal with that assembly as a whole, so long as it continued to be dangerous to them. Though the accused inflicted fatal injuries on members of that assembly, they themselves had been dangerously attacked and were entitled to take all measures necessary for their own safety and they could not be expected to judge too accurately what was the exact amount of force necessary for that purpose and that they were entitled to acquittal. A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 622=38 Cr. L. J. 139=18 P.L.T. 21=3 B.R. 131=166 Ind. Cas. 129.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Deceased endeavouring to violate accused's wife—Accused seeing the act and striking deceased.

Where the accused, on seeing the deceased, whom he had brought up from his childhood in his own house hold lying on and trying to commit rape on the accused's wife, took a gandasa and gave the deceased a number of blows as a result of which he died, and it appeared that all the injuries were inflicted whilst the deceased was in a lying position.

Held, that the action of the accused was covered by Cl. 3, of S. 100, I.P.C., and that although the right of private defence laid down in that S. 100, is a restricted right and has to be read subject to the provisions of S. 99, the assault made by the accused upon the deceased while he was endeavouring to violate the accused's wife brought the case within S. 100, even as qualified by S. 99 and the accused was entitled to an acquittal. A.I.R. 1933 All. 213=1933 A.L.J. 472=34 Cr. L. J. 882=144 Ind. Cas. 1010.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Accused's attack on deceased while protecting himself and persons in whom he was interested—Conviction under S. 302, is not justifiable. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1053=35 Cr.L. J. 468=147 Ind. Cas. 705.

—Ss. 300 and 304.—Where the accused were attacked by a strong and powerful adversary who dealt them blows with an iron-bound lathi and they, in order to protect their lives, attacked the deceased and caused his death:

Held, that they could not be convicted under S. 304. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 59=9 O.W.N. 1146=34 Cr. L. J. 243=141 Ind. Cas. 751.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Person inflicting wounds in defending himself is not guilty.

The law does not require a citizen to behave like a rank coward on any occasion. The right of self-defence as defined by law must be fostered in the citizens of every free country. If a man is attacked he need not run away and he would be perfectly justified in the eye of law if he holds his ground and delivers a counter attack to his assailants provided always that the injury which he inflicts in self-defence is not out of proportion to the injury with which he is threatened.

Where the accused is attacked by a party of men armed with dangs and having no alternative but to defend himself to the best of his ability retaliates, he acts in private defence although in doing so he inflicts injuries some of which prove fatal. 1930 Cr. C. 109=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 93.

—Ss. 300 and 304.—One person, charged with lathis by five men, killed two in exercising right of self-defence—Exact number and force of blows necessary for such right is impossible to decide in such situation. 117 Ind. Cas. 907=30 Cr. L. J. 863=1929 Cr. C. 58=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 494.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Free fight over the village bandh—Resisting trespasser of rival villagers—Death caused—Right of private defence exercised—Offence under S. 326 only.

People of the village S not heeding the Sub-Inspector's warning, having assembled, proceeded to cut the bandh. People of village K resisted but were turned back. Meanwhile a large crowd collected on both sides, armed with lathis, spears, and garases. People of K, seeing that the people of S were not likely to listen to their remonstrances, proceeded in a body to prevent them from cutting the bandh and to drive them away. A free fight ensued; one man from village S received mortal injuries and died on his way to the hospital. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused, who were residents of K under S. 302 read with Ss. 147 148 and 149, I. P. C.:

Held also, that under the circumstances of the case and keeping in view the fact that mortal injuries were caused to the deceased in a free fight and in the exercise of the right of private defence of person and property, the conviction of the accused appellants under S. 302 could not be sustained, especially when the deceased had received injuries from several other assailants. The conviction was therefore altered to one under S. 326, and the sentence of transportation for life passed was reduced to one of three years' rigorous imprisonment. 1929 Cr. C. 283=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 523.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Deadly assault on wife of accused—Accused struck with aruval and killed—Private defence.

A dispute occurred about the headship of a family under whom the deceased and his sister were joint tenants, and in consequence there was a quarrel between them over taking charge of paddy stored in a store room. During the quarrel, the sister cried out that she was being killed. The accused, her husband, ran to the place and saw that his wife was being wounded and gave a blow with an aruval to the deceased. Another person who attacked accused was also wounded and he died.

Held, that the accused acted in private defence and was not guilty under Ss. 302 and 304. 94 Ind. Cas. 361=27 Cr. L. J. 617=1926 M. W.N. 212, 18 (e). Private defence—Right, when does not afford defence.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Private defence—Free fight between persons unknown to N—Firing by N—N cannot claim right of private defence of person or property.

It is notorious that the countryside in the province of Sind is infested with dacoits and criminals. N, who was permitted by the authorities to keep a gun and use it freely when any occasion arose, fired his gun on his own initiative at a crowd engaged in free fight with out knowing the identity of the person, with the result that one A was killed. N pleaded the right of private self-defence of person and property and further contended that his case fell under S. 304-A.

Held, that as N fired at a crowd of persons engaged in free fight there was no question of a mistake of fact which occasioned the exercise of the right of private defence either as regards person or property.

Held, also that N must have known when he fired his gun at a crowd that if the shot hit one of the persons, that person would be likely to die of the injury caused to him. The proper section applicable was S. 304 and not S. 304-A.

Held, further that having regard to unsettled conditions prevailing in country side, N should be given the liberal interpretation of his act. The act of N, while amounting to culpable homicide, was not one which amounted to murder and he should be convicted under S. 304 Part II. A.I.R. 1945 Sind 38=I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 420.

—S. 300.

One K established her title to a certain plot of land by a decree against one H, one of the accused, and obtained delivery of possession in execution of the decree. She then executed a sale-deed in favour of the Chaudhuris. The Chaudhuris had gone with labourers to plough the field when they were opposed by the Mahathas the party of the accused, who demanded that the Chaudhuris should stop ploughing because H said "the land belongs to me." On the Chaudhuris objecting that they had taken the land by a registered deed the party of the Mahathas made a violent attack on them with deadly weapons with the result that three persons from the party of the Chaudhuris were killed and two injured.

Held, that on the facts there was no right of private defence and the party of the accused were fortunate in escaping from a conviction on the charge of rioting.

Held, also that the injuries ascribed to the accused were inflicted with the intention of causing death or at least injury sufficient to cause death. The accused were, therefore, guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 96=8 B.R. 43=43 Cr.L.J. 41=23 P.L.T. 438=196 Ind. Cas. 587.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Accused during altercation disarming deceased and stabbing him to death—No right of private defence can be claimed—Offence held murder.

There was an altercation between the accused and the deceased who was armed with hatchet. The accused first wrested the hatchet from the hands of the deceased and then stabbed him to death while the other accused held the deceased.

Held, that the accused were not acting in the exercise of the right of private defence but were guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 45=42 Cr.L.J. 450=193 Ind. Cas. 594.

—Ss. 300, 302, 325 and 34.

Dispute between deceased and accused who were brothers, over right to possess certain land—Land admittedly in possession of accused—Deceased attempting to plough land—Accused and his party arriving on the spot—Sudden quarrel arising between parties and accused and his party inflicting injuries on deceased with sticks—Accused held to be guilty under S. 325-34 and not under S. 302—No right of private defence of person or property held to exist. A.I.R. 1938 Pesh. 18=39 Cr.L.J. 627=174 Ind. Cas. 678.

—Ss. 300 and 302.

An accused began a quarrel by acting in an improper manner towards the deceased's wife, and when he was asked by the deceased and the deceased's wife to leave the scene peacefully, he declined to do so. Consequently, a fight ensued in which the accused stabbed the deceased with a knife, who died as a result.

Held, that the accused had no right of self-defence and was guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 441=40 Cr.L.J. 59=178 Ind. Cas. 413.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Parties going armed to the scene of fight expecting fight—Death of one member of one party—Offence.

Members of faction A went to a school armed with sticks with the intention of causing injuries to three men of faction B who had already gone there. The partisans of faction B, knowing of this came armed with hatchets and spears. The three persons who had already gone before joined their faction B and attacked the members of faction A with the result that one of the latter got a spear thrust and died on the spot. Commuting the death sentence passed on the assailant to that of transportation for life as the party attacked was initially the aggressor:

Held, that the person thrusting the spear could not take the plea of private defence. Any of the faction B, present at the assault could be convicted under S. 302, read with S. 34, even if it was found that he did not actually strike the deceased. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 11=35 Cr.L.J. 1441=151 Ind. Cas. 887.

—Ss. 300, 302, 304, 100.

Deceased assaulting accused's pregnant wife violently with a weapon—Accused giving blows on deceased and fracturing skull—Accused giving water and allowing deceased to return home—Conviction either under Ss. 302 or 304. A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 588=1 B.R. 183=36 Cr.L.J. 316=153 Ind. Cas. 301.

—Ss. 300 and 304.

Where the accused was not doing a lawful act when he was attacked but was himself the aggressor and commenced the beating of his assailants which resulted in the death of one of them, he is not entitled to claim the right of private defence. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 207=11 O.W.N. 425=35 Cr.L.J. 801=148 Ind. Cas. 804.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Rejection of plea of self-defence—Effect.

In a case where on a charge of murder, the plea of self-defence is rejected, the offence can only fall under S. 302, because if a man stabs another over the heart deliberately with a knife capable of penetrating into the heart, the law would presume that he intended to cause his death, and, therefore the offence would be murder. (1932) 138 Ind. Cas. 217=33 P.L.R. 287=33 Cr.L.J. 570.

19. Proper way to deal with case under Ss. 299 and 300.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Case under—Proper way to deal with, stated—Stages by which it should be dealt, enumerated.

The proper way, in which those who have to conduct criminal trials should approach the facts and apply the law in those cases where one person has, by doing some act, caused the death of another person is to deal with the matter by stages following.

Stage 1: The first stage requires that it shall be established to the satisfaction of the Court that the accused person has done an act by doing which he has caused the death of another person. This is the starting point.

Stage 2: The trial Court must next consider whether that act on the part of the accused amounts to culpable homicide.

Stage 3: Section 300, now, and only now, comes into operation. If it is established that an act which caused death was done either with one of the two intentions or with the knowledge necessary to cause that act to amount to culpable homicide, then, and then only, S. 300 comes into operation, and therefore the next thing to do is to ascertain whether the ingredients of S. 300 have been satisfied.

Stage 4: If the culpable homicide is murder: If the prosecution has proved that the act either (a) was done by the accused with the intention of causing death, or (b) fulfilled one of the other requirements of S. 299 and also fulfilled one of the other requirements of S. 300, then it must further be considered whether, on the facts of the particular case, the culpable homicide is brought down from the higher plane of murder to which it has been raised, to the lower plane of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, by reason of the case falling within any of the Exceptions of S. 300.

If the culpable homicide is not murder. If the culpable homicide is not murder, the only matter to be considered at stage 4 is whether the accused has established (if such is his case) the right of private defence as a complete defence under S. 96.

If in a case of culpable homicide amounting to murder, it is not established that the case comes within one of the Exceptions to S. 300, then it remains a case of murder. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr.L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

20. Sudden fight—S. 300, Exception (4).

—S. 300 Excep. (4)—Sudden quarrel—Death caused by a blow with hammer on head.

If a man, even in the course of a sudden quarrel, gives a terrific blow on the head of another with a weapon like a heavy hammer or a heavy hatchet and the result is that the headbones are smashed to pieces, it must, on the principle that a man intends the natural consequences of his act, be held that he intended to cause such bodily injury as he knew was likely to cause death or that the injury intended to be inflicted was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The offence thus committed is therefore murder both under clauses secondly and thirdly to S. 300, I. P. Code, unless some exception to that section reduces it from murder to culpable homicide. Pak. L. R. (1950) Lah. 132=51 Cr.L.J. 962=A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 149.

—S. 300, Excep. 4 and S. 302—Applicability—Quarrel between parties over past incident—Accused flushed with drink and getting provoked—Accused picking up lathi and striking head of deceased—Death—Offence.

Where there is no fight, but only a quarrel in respect of a past incident between the accused and deceased, and there is no offer of violence or use of force on the part of the deceased, and the accused who is in a state of drink gets provoked and takes up a lath and strikes a blow on the head of the deceased, intending to break his head, and the deceased dies in a few minutes, the offence is clearly one of murder, and Exception 4 to S. 300 does not apply so as to reduce the offence to culpable homicide. Though the accused may not intend to kill the deceased, he must be held to intend to break his head, and that is sufficient to attract the application of S. 302, I. P. Code. 49 Cr.L. J. 110=A.I.R. 1948 Lah. 75.

—S. 300, Excep. 4—Applicability—Test of—Stab by knife following verbal altercation—Death—Offence—Right to claim benefit of exception.

A mere verbal quarrel preceding a stab with a knife would not ordinarily raise a question as to the applicability of Exception 4, to S. 300, I. P. Code. A word or a gesticulation may be as provocative as a blow, but such a case is rare. The proper test of the applicability of Exception 4 to S. 300 is whether or not the accused shows that he acted solely out of the provocation engendered by the heat of a sudden quarrel followed by a sudden fight. Where one person picks up a knife and stabs another in the stomach merely following an exchange of heated words, the ordinary inference is that the attacker has acted out of some other motive as well as the provocation that may have been engendered by the verbal altercation. Exception 4 to S. 300, I. P. Code, cannot be availed of in such a case by the

—S. 300, Excep. 4—Applicability—Quarrel—Exchange of hot words and blows—Parties separated and disengaged—Accused going home and fetching deadly weapon and thrusting it in back of deceased who stands unguardedly—Death caused—Offence.

Where after a sudden quarrel in which hot words and blows are exchanged between the accused and the deceased, the parties get disengaged, being separated by the persons present there, the accused runs to his house near by and comes out of it with a barchha and thrusts it in the back of the deceased who falls down, and the injury is found sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature, the offence is murder. Exception 4 to S. 300, I. P. Code, does not apply to the case. The act of the accused must be held to be deliberate and calculated in that he attacks the deceased who is unguarded. 231 Ind. Cas. 400=48 Cr.L.J. 786.

—S. 300, Excep. 4 — Applicability — Conditions—Accused party going out fully armed and prepared for fight—Some carrying hatchets — Blow on head with hatchet causing death — Offence.

Exception 4 to S. 300, I.P.Code, can apply only if all the four conditions laid down are satisfied: (1) absence of premeditation; (2) there must be a sudden fight; (3) the killing must be in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel; (4) the offender should not have taken undue advantage or acted in a cruel or unusual manner. Where a party of persons go out fully armed and fully prepared for a fight, some of them armed with hatchets, and in the fight some of them kill one of the persons on the other side who resist the trespass and aggression by the accused party, Exception 4 to S. 300 cannot apply. Causing death by Causing a fatal injury on the head with a hatchet is murder. The intention must be presumed to be to cause death. 230 Ind. Cas. 277=18 Cr.L.J. 590=48 P.L.R. 526=A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 236.

—Ss. 300, Excep. 4, 302 and 304, Part I — Sudden fight—Accused exceeding right of private defence—Offence committed.

Where there was a sudden quarrel leading to a sudden fight and without premeditation, exception 4 to S. 300, I.P.Code, clearly applies. If when the deceased was about to strike with a stick, the accused gave him a blow on his head with his kulhari and caused his death, he exceeded his right of private defence, and is guilty of an offence under S. 304, Part I, and not under S. 302, I. P. Code. 226 Ind. Cas 29=47 Cr.L.J. 810=48 P.L.R. 39=A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 275.

—S. 300, Excep. 4—Applicability—"Fight"—Blows on each side—If necessary.

Per Mohd. Sharif. J.—If A beats B, without B having beaten A, it can nevertheless be a fight. In order to apply Exception 4 to S. 300, I.P. Code, it is not essential that there should have been blows on each side. A word or a gesticulation may be as provocative as a blow.

Per Teja Singh, J.—If a person gives a blow to another, there will be a fight only if the other hits him back or at least he gets ready and attempts to assault but none if he keeps quiet and does nothing. In that case, it will be only a one-sided attack but not a fight. If blows are exchanged, the fact that the person assaulted hits back in self-defence would not make any difference. If, in the course of a sudden quarrel, one of the parties gives a blow to his adversary and that blow results in death, he cannot take advantage of Excep. 4 notwithstanding the fact that after he has given the blow, he is belaboured by the deceased, before he dies, or by his companions, for the simple reason that at the time he gave the fatal blow, there was no fight. 221 Ind. Cas. 675=48 P.L.R. 56=47 Cr.L.J. 234=A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 41.

—Ss. 300, Excep. (4) 302 and 304—Sudden fight—No premeditation—Accused in heat of passion striking by knife—Injury caused near liver—Conviction held should be altered from one under S. 302 to one under S. 304.

Something was said in the course of a conversation between two men which led to sudden quarrel, and that led to a sudden fight. There was no premeditation, the fight was sudden and it had been the result of a sudden quarrel. In the course of the sudden fight, the accused in heat of passion, took out a knife (which was not of a very dangerous character) which happened to be with him and struck out without aiming at any particular part of the body. It landed on a part of the deceased's body which was not far removed from a vital organ, namely, the liver, and caused an injury to that organ which brought about the death of the deceased:

Held, that the accused did not take undue advantage or act in a cruel or unusual manner. The conviction should be altered from one under S. 302 to one under S. 304, para. 2. A.I.R. 1946 All. 19=1945 A.L.J. 388=47 Cr.L.J. 469=222 Ind. Cas. 477.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Fight—Weapon not necessary.

(Per Verma J.) The "fight" contemplated by the Exception need not necessarily be with weapons. A.I.R. 1946 All. 19=1945 A.L.J. 388=47 Cr.L.J. 469=222 Ind. Cas. 477.

—S. 300, Excep. (4) and S. 304—Illegal seizure of bullocks by person amounting to theft—Struggle between owner and such person—Owner exceeding private right of defence of person and property and causing death of such person—Lack of premeditation and sudden fight—Held accused's action fell under Excep. (4) to S. 300—No intention to cause death—Accused rightly adjudged liable under Part 2 of S. 304.

A seized some bullocks belonging to B which had strayed into his field and released them on B's assurance that the damage caused by them would be estimated by panchas. Two days later A went to B and demanded compensation, but B temporised. Next day while the cattle were being driven to field by B's servants, A with the help of his brother D seized them and began to drive them to the cattle pound. Soon B and his brother C arrived on the scene and a quarrel ensued. B opened the attack against D and in the course of the struggle A also joined and struck B who shouted for help. At this stage F, B's servant, dashed to separate B and D. Thereupon C struck A on the head with his stick which resulted in the fracture of skull and death of A. B was convicted under S. 323, Penal Code, and C under S. 304 (2). In appeal against their convictions, B and C pleaded right of private defence of person and property:

Held, that (1) the seizure of the bullocks by A and D after 24 hours after the trespass was illegal and amounted to theft and therefore gave B and C a right of private defence of property under S. 97, Penal Code. But S. 97 is subject to S. 103 under which the right of private defence of property extends to the voluntary causing of death or of other harm to the thief under such circumstances as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt will be the consequence, if such right of private defence is not exercised. Section 103 is itself subject to S. 99;

(2) that so far as the right of private defence of person was concerned, S. 97 is subject to restriction in S. 99 and the provisions of S. 100 under which the right extends to the voluntary causing of death or of any other harm to the assailant if the offence which occasions the exercise is inter alia such an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt will otherwise be the consequence of such assault;

(3) that as B opened the attack by hitting D, he was the aggressor and the question of defending his person did not arise. When the struggle was going on there were on the scene B and C with F on one side and A and D on the other. The odds were very much in favour of B and C and as F's intervention was for peaceful purpose C could not have had a reasonable cause for apprehending death or grievous hurt either to B or to himself. He was therefore not entitled to attack A in the manner shown. Therefore C by striking A on the head clearly exceeded any right of private defence to which he might have otherwise been entitled;

(4) as C acted in the heat of passion and in view of lack of premeditation, the suddenness of fight and the absence of undue advantage, his act fell within the scope of Excep. 4 to S. 300, Penal Code, and he was rightly adjudged liable under S. 304 (2), Penal Code, as the act was done with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death but without the intention of causing death. A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 221 = I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 326 = 1946 N.L.J. 198 = 47 Cr.L.J. 348 = 223 Ind. Cas. 123.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Two accused charged with murder—Finding of jury that one of them came within Excep. 4 to S. 300—Effect.

Two accused were charged with murder. The jury acquitted them of this charge but found that one of them brought himself within Excep. 4 to S. 300:

Held, that when once the jury were satisfied that one of the accused had brought himself within Excep. 4, there was no room for the application of S. 34 against the other at all. A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 147 = 70 C.L.J. 299 = 41 Cr.L.J. 383 = 186 Ind. Cas. 847.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Scope.

In order to bring a case within Excep. 4 to S. 300, it is necessary to establish inter alia that the act was done upon a sudden quarrel and where, therefore, there is no quarrel either sudden or otherwise, it is unnecessary to look further and enquire whether there have been established any of the other facts which are essential for the purpose of bringing a case within this exception. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225 = 40 Cr.L.J. 725 = 183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Criterion.

Whether or not the killing was premeditated is not the first test to be applied when considering, whether the exception of "a sudden fight in the heat of passion" is applicable to any given set of facts. The first test is whether the act of the accused which caused the deceased's death was done without premeditation. The distinction is not to be ignored. If the other essentials necessary to bring a case within Excep. (4) to S. 300 are also established, such as, whether the accused acted in the heat of passion or whether the accused acted in a manner which was either cruel or unusual and the exception is thereby brought into play, the effect would be to reduce what would otherwise be murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225 = 40 Cr.L.J. 725 = 183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Applicability.

The fourth exception to S. 300, Penal Code, covers acts done in a sudden fight. 1937 M.W.N. 1129.

—Ss. 300, Excep. (4), 302, 304—Sudden quarrel.

Where as a result of a quarrel between the parties which was admittedly sudden, a fight ensued and one person was killed and it appeared that in all probability the assailants had run to take part in the fight with the winnowing implements which they were using in their respective threshing floors and had inflicted blows with them.

Held: that the offence was one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and fell under S. 304, Part I of the Penal Code. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 3 = 33 P.L.R. 513 = 34 Cr.L.J. 535 = 143 Ind. Cas. 125.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Blow inflicted in sudden fight.

A person who strikes a heavy blow on the head of another with a weapon such as a pestle, must be deemed to intend to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death and even when such a blow is given in the course of a sudden quarrel between the accused and the deceased causing the death, the offence committed is one of murder. 177 Ind. Cas. 944 = 1938 M.W.N. 871 (1) = 48 L.W. 415 = 39 Cr.L.J. 979.

—Ss. 300, Excep. (4), 302—Accused armed with spears and lathis—Offence.

In a fight that took place between two sets of men it appeared that the accused were armed with spears and other sharp edged weapons and lathis and persons on the other side, were armed with lathis only. From the nature of the injuries sustained inflicted with spears in the side, breast and abdomen, it was clear that the assailants had the intention to cause death:

Held, that the offence was one of murder punishable under S. 302, Penal Code, and was not covered by the fourth exception to S. 304. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 296 = 35 Cr.L.J. 626 (2) = 148 Ind. Cas. 36.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Use of weapon by accused against unarmed person—Exception 4 to S. 300, if applies.

The using of a weapon by one person against an unarmed person in a sudden fight is not within the limits of Excep. 4 to S. 300, of a sudden fight, because it is expressly provided that no unfair or undue advantage must be taken by one of the combatants, if the plea of sudden fight is to be raised by way of exception. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 15=39 Cr.L.J. 300=173 Ind. Cas. 299.

—S. 300, Excep. 4—Taking undue advantage.

When a man attacks an unarmed person with a dagger he takes undue advantage and acts in a cruel manner. A.I.R. 1940 Pesh. 1=41 Cr.L.J. 574=188 Ind. Cas. 313.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Striking unarmed person—Offence.

Where the accused who in a sudden fight strikes an unarmed person with a stick, thereby causing his death, and himself getting a few scratches on his back, Excep. 4 of S. 300, does not apply. A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 101=39 Cr.L.J. 142=172 Ind. Cas. 449.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Application of—Sentence.

To attract the application of the fourth exception to S. 300, Penal Code, it is necessary to show that the accused did not take undue advantage or acted in a cruel or unusual manner. Where a person without provocation takes out a knife and stabs an unarmed person, he acts in a cruel or unusual manner.

The question of sentence considered. 1937 M.W.N. 1236.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Accused armed with hatchet attacking deceased unarmed—Case not one of sudden fight—Offence not committed in heat of passion—Exceptions 2 and 4, if apply.

Where the accused was armed with a hatchet when he attacked the deceased who was unarmed and the case could not be said to be one of sudden fight, or that in the heat of passion the accused without having taken undue advantage or without having acted in a cruel or unusual manner did what he is alleged to have done, Excep. 2 and 4 to S. 300 cannot be availed of by him. A.I.R. 1936 Sind 31=37 Cr.L.J. 483=161 Ind.Cas. 414.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Criterion for application of.

The number of wounds is not the criterion, but in fact the position of the two combatants with regard to their arms and also the use of those arms are the considerations to be kept in mind when applying Excep. 4 to S. 300. Consequently, where the deceased is not armed but the accused is and he causes grievous hurt to the deceased with fatal results by causing only one wound, he is not protected by Excep. 4 to S. 300, and the offence committed is murder. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 59=36 Cr. L. J. 914=156 Ind. Cas. 6.

—Ss. 299, and 300—Attack on man unarmed—Heat of passion—Undue advantage of victim's helplessness—Murder.

Where the accused took undue advantage of the victim, who was lying on his charpoy when he was attacked with a formidable weapon, was not armed and was not in a position to defend himself.

Held: that the crime was one of murder even though committed without premeditation and in the heat of passion. 101 Ind. Cas. 191=28 Cr. L. J. 415=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 808.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Sudden quarrel—Single dang blow on head—Death—Offence.

Where in a sudden quarrel, the accused deals a single blow with a dang on the head of his antagonist an old man whose weakness and enlarged spleen might have hastened his death which ensues, the accused is guilty not of murder but of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 467=35 P.L.R. 371=36 Cr.L.J. 629=155 Ind. Cas. 77. (1).

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Unpremeditated assault—No intention to cause death—Offence.

Where the assault was committed by an impulsive young man as a result of sudden excitement, and though he gave two blows to his victim, neither of the blows was aimed at a vital part of the body, and it appeared that it could not have been present to the mind of the accused that a stab on the frontal prominence of the hip would penetrate the abdominal cavity:

Held, that the accused had no intention to cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, that at the most he could be burdened with knowledge that his act was likely to cause death and that he should be convicted under S. 304, Part II and not S. 302. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 332=35 Cr.L.J. 1319=151 Ind. Cas. 469.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Splitting skull of an unarmed man with hatchet—No apprehension of injury to accused—Excep. 4 does not apply.

Although culpable homicide is committed without premeditation and in a sudden fight, and also in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel, when a man uses a hatchet on another unarmed man and strikes him a blow on the head with that hatchet splitting his skull while he was under no reasonable apprehension of injury to himself, he cannot claim the protection of Exception 4. 94 Ind. Cas. 134=8 L.L.J. 188=27 Cr.L.J. 566=27 P.L.R. 244=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 361.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—One member in a brawl striking with hatchet—Victim unarmed and taking no active part—Excep. 4 does not apply.

When a brawl is taking place in which the assailants on both sides are using sticks a member of one side, who intervenes with a hatchet and strikes over the head of a member of the other side, who is empty-handed and is taking no active part in the fight and kills him in consequence commits murder and nothing less. Excep. 4, S. 300 I.P.C. has no application. 107 Ind. Cas. 177=5 O.W.N. 29=29 Cr.L.J. 230=9 A.I.Cr.R. 488=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 221.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Undue advantage when can be deemed to be taken.

When Excep. IV to S. 300 is applicable at the beginning of a fight, it cannot be held that one of the participants has taken an undue advantage over the other, because the latter has acknowledged defeat and has turned tail, and thereupon the former combatant pursues the advantage which he has obtained. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 2=38 Cr.L.J. 321=167 Ind. Cas. 114 (D.B.).

—S. 300, Exception 4—Absence of premeditation—Accused stabbing deceased in heat of passion—Offence.

Where there is no premeditation on the part of the accused who stabs the deceased fatally in heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel and no undue advantage is taken of the deceased, the offence is one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and Excep. 4 to S. 300, applies. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 2=38 Cr.L.J. 321=167 Ind. Cas. 114.

—S. 300. Excep. (4) — Injury resulting in death—Offence,

Where there was in fact a sudden fight and everyone was trying to hit one of the opposite side and no body thought about the private right of self-defence and one person from the opposite side received blows during the fight which resulted in his death:

Held, that the offence committed was culpable homicide. A.I.R. 1935 All. 428=36 Cr.L.J. 1145=1935 A.W.R. 340=157 Ind. Cas. 422.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Skewer for breaking ice, picked up and plunged into stomach of victim in heat of passion—Offence.

The deceased was instrumental in raiding a house, where the accused and some others were gambling. The raid, however, was unsuccessful. Some days afterwards, the deceased and the accused met in a hotel where an altercation started, the accused saying that if the deceased took steps to have him captured again, he would kill him outright. The deceased got up and said that he could not kill him and he could try whether he could. Thereupon the accused who had picked up a long skewer-like instrument for breaking ice in his hand, thrust it into the stomach of the deceased and the deceased died of those wounds:

Held, the crime was unpremeditated, that there was a sudden altercation and fight and that the accused picked up a skewer for breaking ice in the heat of passion and plunged it into the stomach of his victim. It was not a weapon which he was carrying himself and everything pointed to the suddenness of the fight. Consequently, the offence he committed was culpable homicide not amounting to murder punishable under the first part of S. 304, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 149=36 Cr.L.J. 190=152 Ind. Cas. 860.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Exchange of abuses and sudden fight—Accused stabbing deceased—Absence of motive—Offence.

The deceased and his brother while coming home in the evening came to a dry water course where the accused was sitting. The deceased and he commenced to exchange abuses and grappled with each other. During the struggle, the accused suddenly took out his knife and stabbed the deceased piercing the lung and causing his death. Motive was not established:

Held, that in the district where the incident took place, knives were commonly carried and the accused suddenly, without realising the consequences, in the heat of passion, thrust the knife into the side of the deceased during the fight and that Excep. (4) to

S. 300, applied to the case and the offence was that of culpable homicide not amounting to murder punishable under the first part of S. 304. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 818=35 Cr.L.J. 1165=150 Ind. Cas. 640.

—S. 300, Exception 4, when available.

The latter part of the exception provides that the offender must not have taken undue advantage or acted in a cruel and unusual manner. 1934 M.W.N. 47.

—S. 300, Excep. (4).

Where the accused and the deceased simultaneously made preparation to assault each other with deadly weapons and they immediately fought:

Held, that the accused could not be held to have succeeded in the plea of self-defence, but that the case fell under Excep. 4 to S. 300. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 142=34 Cr.L.J. 783=144 Ind. Cas. 420.

—S. 300, Exception (4) — Application of.

Whether there is premeditation or not, Excep. 4 to S. 300 cannot apply even if the accused stabbed in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel when the stab cannot be said to have been given without the offender having taken undue advantage. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 508=14 P.L.T. 464=35 Cr.L.J. 725=148 Ind. Cas. 574.

—S. 300, Exception (4)—When applicable,

The fact that an offence was committed without premeditation, in a sudden fight, in the heat of passion, upon a sudden quarrel, is not alone sufficient for the application of Excep. 4 to S. 300. It must also be found that the offender did not take any undue advantage or did not act in a cruel or unusual manner. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 438=10 O.W.N. 986=35 Cr.L.J. 115=146 Ind. Cas. 563.

—S. 300—Exception (4)—When applies.

In order to take advantage of Excep. 4 to S. 300, it must be shown that the offender did not take undue advantage or act in a cruel or unusual manner. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 606=33 P.L.R. 718=34 Cr.L.J. 462=142 Ind. Cas. 901.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Sudden altercation—Single blow on head—Offence.

The accused and his uncle lived in adjacent houses. One day the accused found his uncle digging some earth in a land leading to his house; an altercation arose and the accused struck his uncle on the head with a lathi with the result that the latter fell down unconscious and died soon after:

Held, on the facts that the offence amounted only to culpable homicide not amounting to murder within S. 304, Part II of the I. P. C. 137 Ind. Cas. 267=33 Cr.L.J. 446=33 P.L.R. 546.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Six injuries on head—Exception (4) not applicable.

In a case under S. 302, where it was found that the deceased who was unarmed and who had not assaulted the accused had as many as six injuries on his head:

Held, that it was difficult to hold that the case fell within Excep. (4) to S. 300, because even assuming that the quarrel was sudden, the accused must have acted in a cruel manner in so assaulting and causing so many injuries to a man who was unarmed. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 280=32 Cr. L. J. 1254=134 Ind. Cas. 829.

—Ss. 300 and 304—Offence under.

A sudden dispute arose between the accused and another person. The deceased, who was a friend and partisan of the other party, came upon the scene and the accused thinking that he came to help his opponent, gave only one blow to him with a kasi with which he was scraping grass. The blow resulted in the death of the deceased.

Held, that as the culpable homicide was caused without premeditation and only one single blow was given, the offence was punishable only under S. 304. 115 Ind. Cas. 144=1929 A.L.J. 508=10 L.R.A.Cr. 78=11 A.I.Cr.R. 537=30 Cr. L. J. 410=1929 Cr.C. 77=A.I.R. 1929 All. 535.

—S. 300, Excep. (4) — Sudden quarrel—A blow on the head and another on the leg not cruel and unusual act.

Where the accused struck with lathi only one blow on the head and one on the leg in a sudden and unpremeditated quarrel, such blows with a lathi do not amount to acting in a cruel and unusual manner and the accused is entitled to the benefit of the Exception 4. 121 Ind. Cas. 724=30 P.L.R. 487=1929 Cr.C. 311=31 Cr.L.J. 289=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 719.

—Ss. 300 and 304 — Sudden quarrel — Both parties armed and receiving injuries—Proper section is 304.

Where there was a sudden quarrel and a fight, in the course of which the deceased was stabbed by the accused and the accused himself received an injury from some weapon such as a knife:

Held, that the accused cannot be said to have taken undue advantage of the deceased since he himself was attacked and wounded also by a knife, and the more appropriate section under which the accused should have been convicted is S. 304. 97 Ind. Cas. 952=27 Cr.L.J. 1192 (Mad.).

—Ss. 300 and 304 —Fracturing of skull with a lathi in sudden anger—Death caused—Intention to kill cannot be inferred.

Where the wife of the accused and the deceased woman were quarrelling and the accused being provoked by the abuse given to his wife, in sudden anger struck the deceased a heavy blow on the head with a heavy lathi and fractured her skull and caused her death:

Held, that the circumstances of the case did not lead to the inference of an intention to kill and it could not be inferred on the evidence that the accused had the knowledge that the act was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death. 102 Ind. Cas. 349=8 A.I.Cr.R. 189=8 P.L.T. 591=28 Cr. L. J. 541=A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 406.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Subsequent conduct.

Exception 4 to S. 300 is meant to apply to cases wherein, in whatsoever way the quarrel originated, the subsequent conduct of both the parties put them upon an equal footing. 93 Ind. Cas. 251=8 L.L.J. 93=27 Cr.L.J. 459=27 P.L.R. 132=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 219.

—Ss. 300 and 304.

Where the accused had a pistol upon him but he did not come with the intention of using it out, and he used it in the course of a sudden fight:

Held: that he is guilty only of culpable homicide, not amounting to murder under the first part of S. 304. 93 Ind. Cas. 251=8 L.L.J. 93=27 Cr.L.J. 459=27 P.L.R. 132=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 219.

—S. 300, Excep. (4) — Only one out of four injuries serious — Accused received twelve injuries, some serious—Offence committed without premeditation—Excep. 4, applies.

Where the accused was found to have caused four injuries to the deceased with a clasp knife and the only serious injury was one in the abdomen of the deceased and the accused to save himself received presumably at the hand of the deceased no less than twelve injuries including a contused wound on the front of his head and a fracture of metacarpal bone of the index finger of the right hand.

Held: that the offence was committed without premeditation in a sudden fight and the accused was entitled to the benefit of the 4th exception to S. 300. 91 Ind. Cas. 58=7 L.L.J. 538=26 P.L.R. 620=27 Cr.L.J. 26=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 633.

—Ss. 300 and 304 — Death caused by knife stabbed in sudden fight—Offence falls under section.

A sudden fight arose between accused and another person about drawing water at a tap. They abused each other and in the heat of the moment accused drew out his knife and stabbed his opponent in the chest. This resulted in the latter's death.

Held: that the knife though it had a blade of only three or four inches was a dangerous weapon as it had actually caused a fatal injury, and that the accused, though, he did not intend to cause death or to cause such injury as was likely to cause death yet he must have known that he was likely to cause death and that he was therefore guilty of an offence under Section 304 (2). 82 Ind. Cas. 361=25 Cr. L. J. 1289=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 148.

—Ss. 300 and 304.

Because the fight is a sudden one, it cannot be said that each accused must be held responsible only for the part played by him individually. 40 All. 686 Foll. 24 P.R. 1919, Foll. Where it is proved that each of the two accused used kulhari or axe, and their intention when they attacked the deceased, was a common one:

Held, the intention must be presumed to have been to inflict injuries likely to cause death. It is not necessary to make out premeditation in order to establish a common intention at the moment of action. 76 Ind. Cas. 692=25 Cr.L.J. 228=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 336.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Fatal assault—Sudden fight.

Owing to a dispute about payment of rent three men attacked two others with lathis. A free fight took place. Considerable injuries were inflicted on both sides. One of the persons attacked received several injuries which culminated in his death, some of which were inflicted after the deceased had been felled to the ground. It did not appear, however, which of the injuries had been caused by which of the assailants. Held, that the accused were guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under S. 304, I.P.C. as the assault was sudden and the injuries had been inflicted in the heat of passion. 40 All. 686=16 A.L.J. 751=19 Cr.L.J. 953=47 Ind. Cas. 805.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Sudden fight—‘Using knife when no danger to body.’

Mere use of knife by accused, where there is no danger, even of serious hurt to his person, deprives him of the protection under exception. 4 of S. 300, I.P.C. 4 Cr.L. Rev. 373, Foll. 16 Cr.L.J. 747=31 Ind. Cas. 347. (Mad.).

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Sudden fight—Culpable homicide—Scope.

It is not culpable homicide where an accused on a sudden quarrel without premeditation and on the spur of the moment causes the death of a human being by striking a blow on his head with Chhavi. 3 P.L.R. 1914=4 P.W.R. 1914 Cr.=15 Cr.L.J. 178=22 Ind. Cas. 754.

—Ss. 300, Excep. (4) 323 and 325—Sudden fight Death—Absence of conclusive proof.

Where one of several persons engaged in a sudden fight died by a severe blow and it was not proved conclusively as to who caused the blow or as to whether accused or any member of his party intended or knew that he is likely that such would be the result the accused should not be convicted under S. 304 or 325; but only under S. 323 of the Code. 1 P.W.R. 1913 Cr.=14 Cr.L.J. 104=162 P.L.R. 1913=18 Ind. Cas. 664.

—S. 300 Excep. 4—Sudden fight.

Where it is proved that there was a fight between the accused and the deceased in the course of which the latter received the injuries and died, but there was not sufficient cause of the motive for the murder. Held, that the accused might properly be given the benefit of Excep. 4 of S. 300 and convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 5 M.L.T. 207=11 Cr.L.J. 191=4 Ind. Cas. 1116.

—S. 300, Excep. (4)—Murder sudden fight—Private defence.

Where the accused's party pursued the complainants in three boats for a long distance and then when they had them in their power landed and attacked them with spears and killed three of them, their action does not come within Exception 4 to S. 300, but certainly amounts to murder. There is no right of private defence against persons who are merely taking refuge in the offender's land from other persons trying to take their lives. 29 C. 306, Foll. (1907) 8 C.L.J. 561.

21. Sufficient or likely to cause death.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Offence under—Bodily injury intended to be inflicted sufficient to cause death—Injury to vital part—If necessary.

Per Puranik, J.—Injury to a vital part of the body is not necessarily an ingredient to determine whether the case falls under S. 300, I. P. Code, or not. If the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death the offence falls under S. 300. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 931=222 Ind. Cas. 389=47 Cr. L. J. 441=A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 120=1945 N.L.J. 612.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Offence, held fell under S. 300.

Where bodily injuries intended to be inflicted are sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the offence falls under S. 300.

An accused giving several blows with a fairly heavy lathi on the body of the deceased causing fracture of two ribs, injury to pleura and laceration and puncture of one of the lungs was guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 120=47 Cr.L.J. 441=I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 931=222 Ind. Cas. 389.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Injury in ordinary course of nature sufficient to cause death, what is—Probability of death very great.

An injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death need not be an injury which inevitably and in all circumstances must cause death. If the probability of death is very great, then the requirements of thirdly, under S. 300, are satisfied, and the fact that a particular individual may by the fortunate accident of his having secured specially skilled treatment, or being in possession of a particularly strong constitution have survived an injury which would prove fatal to the majority of persons subjected to it is not enough to prove that such an injury is not sufficient “in the ordinary course of nature” to cause death. A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 223=57 L.W. 13=(1944) 1 M.L.J. 25=1944 M.W.N. 29=45 Cr.L.J. 729=I.L.R. (1944) Mad. 763=214 Ind. Cas. 113.

—Ss. 299 and 300.

It is not correct to say that the words “sufficient in the ordinary course of nature” in cl. 3 of S. 300, can only be applied when death must be an almost certain result. A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 255=43 Cr.L.J. 812=I.L.R. (1942) Lah. 145=202 Ind. Cas. 315.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death—What is.

Whether an injury is or is not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, is a question of fact and it does not cease to be sufficient merely because the person who inflicts the injury does not know that it is sufficient. A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 245=I.L.R. (1939) Lah. 77=41 P.L.R. 443=40 Cr.L.J. 712=182 Ind. Cas. 900.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Sufficient to cause death—What is.

Where a wound inflicted is not necessarily fatal but the injury is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the actual death is caused by an infection setting in the wound, the fact makes no difference to the criminal responsibility of the person charged. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 56=39 Cr.L.J. 412=174 Ind. Cas. 338. (D.B.).

—Ss. 299 and 300—Distinction between, whether bodily injury is likely to cause death and whether such injury is sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death.

The distinction between whether a bodily injury intended to be inflicted is likely to cause death and whether such injury is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death is fine but appreciable, and it is a question of degree of probability. The matter would generally resolve itself into a consideration of the nature of the weapon used. Although such consideration may give rise to much anxious consideration and difficulty when the weapon used is the one so frequently employed in this country, namely, a lathi, there is no such difficulty when the weapon used is a rifle, and a rifle aimed at the head at a distance of about 2 feet. The injury intended to be inflicted, if there be intention, is one which transcends the possibility of a likelihood of death, and must come within the category of an "injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death." A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 274=39 Cr. L. J. 92=172 Ind. Cas. 204.

—S. 300—Striking with dah at skull.

A man who strikes another on the head with dah with such force as to divide the skull right through and expose the brain, must be held to know that he will inflict an injury that may be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and, therefore, must be held to intend the natural consequences of his act. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 429=39 Cr.L.J. 217=172 Ind. Cas. 926.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Stab in abdomen with force.

A person who stabs another in the abdomen with sufficient force to penetrate the abdominal walls must undoubtedly be held to have intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. But it must be understood that that means that it is his intention in the ordinary way, because all presumptions with regard to intention are rebuttable. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 421=37 Cr.L.J. 1050=14 R. 716=164 Ind. Cas. 884. (F.B.).

—Ss. 299 and 300.

Dacoity—Gunners having lightmen to spot out person—Shot fired only on lower part of body—Injury on stomach—Death:

Held, that the intention of the dacoits was not to kill but only to cause some injury as would disable the deceased from offering resistance either by his acts or his shouts and the bodily injury was not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the first two clauses of S. 300, were excluded. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 580=39 C.W.N. 188=36 Cr.L.J. 1322=158 Ind. Cas. 176 (S.B.).

—Ss. 300 and 302—Stab wound penetrating walls of abdominal cavity.

A stab wound which penetrates the wall of the abdominal cavity ought to be held to be one which is sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 408=37 Cr.L.J. 214=159 Ind. Cas. 1058.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Datura administered to make the patient come for treatment—Intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course to cause death.

Datura was administered in sharbat on a boy 10 years old in order that according to accused's explanation the victim might become mad and his mother might seek accused's assistance for medical treatment of her son and so come under his influence. The boy died within three or four hours after drinking sharbat. The assessors were of opinion that there was no intention to cause death.

Held: (1) That the fact that the accused had no intention to cause death does not take the case out of the purview of S. 300. The act by which the death was caused was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the case satisfied the requirements of S. 300 so as to sustain conviction under S. 302. (2) That the explanation was reasonable and so case did not call for extreme penalty. 120 Ind. Cas. 534=1930 Cr.C. 106=31 Cr.L.J. 140=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 90.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Datura poisoning—Large quantity—Intention not to kill—Effect of death.

Where a man gives datura to another in such a large quantity as to result in his death within 3 or 4 hours although he may not have had any intention to kill, he must be held to have known that his act in giving a dangerous substance in such a quantity was likely to cause death. (1908) 6 A.L.J. 129=31 A. 148=1 Ind. Cas. 765=9 Cr.L.J. 383.

—Ss. 299 & 300—Likely to cause death—Depends on weapon, part of the body struck and violence of the blow—Intention to cause death—Immaterial.

Where the weapon used, the part of the body aimed at and pierced and the violence with which the blow was inflicted lead to the inference that the accused intended to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death even though the accused did not intend to cause death, the accused can be rightly convicted of murder.

But the fact that the assault followed sudden quarrel without pre-meditation is an extenuating circumstance as also the fact that accused belongs to a peaceful trading class and extreme penalty of law should not be inflicted and sentence should be reduced to transportation for life. 1930 Cr.C. 162=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 154.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Sufficient or likely to cause death—Murder—Intention—Death by thrashing.

Where the accused caused the death of the deceased by giving a sound thrashing with sticks which smashed both bones of each forearm, the right elbow and the right knee cap and the skull, the act amounts to murder. 3 P.R. 1919 Cr.=5 P.W.R. 1919 Cr.=20 Cr.L.J. 157=49 Ind. Cas. 349.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Sufficient or likely to cause death—Death caused by arsenic.

Where the accused administered arsenic to a boy with the object of preventing his father from giving evidence against the accused and the boy subsequently died, Held, that the accused was guilty of murder as he knew that the act was so dangerous that in all probability it must cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. 40 All. 360=16 A.L.J. 178=19 Cr.L.J. 382=44 Ind. Cas. 686.

—Ss. 299 and 300 (1) to (4)—Knowledge or intention—Murder—Brutal assault with lathis.

A brutal assault with lathis which results in the death of the person assaulted does not ordinarily amount to murder unless the accused intended to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 7 S.L.R. 29, Foll. 9 S.L.R. 99=16 Cr.L.J. 710=30 Ind. Cas. 998.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Sufficient or likely to cause death.

Causing eight severe wounds on the face of the deceased with a hatchet indicated causing something more than a disfigurement and when death occurs, the accused must be taken to have intended to cause death or to cause bodily injuries likely to cause death. 14 P.R. 1911 Cr.=42 P.W.R. Cr. 1911=12 Cr.L.J. 597=12 Ind. Cas. 973.

22. Miscellaneous.

—Ss. 299 and 300—Culpable homicide and grievous hurt—Distinction.

The line between culpable homicide not amounting to murder and grievous hurt is a very thin and subtle one. In the one case the injuries must be such as are likely to cause death; in the other, the injuries must be such as to endanger life. A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 38=47 Bom. L.R. 998=223 Ind. Cas. 195 (F.B.).

—S. 300—Case inadvertently transferred to Assistant Sessions Judge—Procedure.

The Law prescribes only two possible punishments for murder—death or transportation for life. It is the duty of the Sessions Judge to examine every commitment order bearing this in mind, and if there is any possibility that murder has been committed, he must either try the case himself, or send it to an Additional Sessions Judge, if one is available. Should a Court, not empowered to impose the legal sentence, find that a case of this type has been inadvertently transferred to it, it should not proceed to try it, but should return the case at once to the transferring authority for necessary orders. A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 92=22 Pat. 607=10 B.R. 388=45 Cr. L. J. 409=211 Ind. Cas. 532.

Illustration (c) to S. 300, applies as much to a revolver as to a sword or club. A.L.R. 1941 Sind 117=42 Cr.L.J. 786=195 Ind. Cas. 833.

—S. 300—Defence of ungovernable fury—Proof that it amounted to insanity—Necessity of.

There is no rule of law which enables a person to set up a defence of ungovernable fury unless that defence is proved affirmatively to amount to a defence of insanity so that the accused either did not know what he was doing or did not know that what he was doing was wrong. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 26=38 Cr.L.J. 278=166 Ind. Cas. 527.

—S. 300—Divine influence or inspiration.

Divine influence or inspiration is no defence to what is otherwise a murder or any other offence, so long as the non-responsibility is not due to any disease or infirmity of the mind. 1937 M.W.N. 93.

—Ss. 300, 84—Insanity induced by taking intoxicating drugs.

12—F. Y. D.—16.

A person who, though of unsound mind, knows that in killing another he is committing a wrongful act is not entitled to the benefit of S. 84. Persons who are in fact insane, whether they have become so from persistent indulgence in intoxicating drugs or from brain disease must be judged by the ordinary rules of law affecting insane persons. (1906) A.W.N. 193=3 A.L.J. 463.

—Ss. 301, 302 and 307 and 34—Charge of murder—Procuring poison to be administered to a particular person—Another accused administering poison to wrong person—Death of that person due to the poison—Offence made out.

Two accused were charged under S. 302 read with S. 34 of the I.P. Code for the murder of A, by the second accused procuring cleander seeds and giving them to the first accused so that the latter might administer the poison to B in order to kill her in furtherance of a common intention. It was found that the first accused crushed an oleander seed and mixed it with arsenic in buttermilk and gave the buttermilk to B but the buttermilk was drunk by A and he died as a result thereof. They were found not guilty under S. 302 but guilty under S. 307. On appeal by the accused.

Held, on the findings arrived at, the case clearly fell within the provisions of S. 301, I. P. Code. As there was no appeal against the acquittal of the accused, it was not necessary to interfere. So far as S. 307 is concerned, there was no such charge which the accused were called upon to meet. The case would have to go back for retrial and a proper charge under S. 307 read with S. 34, I.P. Code would have to be framed for the attempt to murder B. 1947 M.W.N. 771=49 Cr.L.J. 360=A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 293=(1948) 1 M.L.J. 1.

—S. 301—Scope.

Under S. 301, where a person who wishes to kill A by mistake kills B, he is as much guilty of murder as if he had killed A himself. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 74=37 Cr. L.J. 25=158 Ind. Cas. 648.

—S. 301—Scope.

When the accused intended to kill A, but by mistake killed B, he is guilty of the offence of murder. 1934 M.W.N. 99.

—S. 301—Aimed at one, another killed—Offence, the same.

Where a blow aimed at one person alights upon another and kills him the offence committed by the assailant is the same as it would have been if blow had struck the intended victim. 8 W.R.Cr. 78, Foll. 107 Ind. Cas. 764=29 Cr.L.J. 280=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 344.

1. Applicability and scope.

—Ss. 302 and 364—Applicability and relative scope—Murder committed in consequence of abduction—Murder or abetment of murder by three persons who were found holding deceased as captive—Offence.

S. 302, I.P. Code, is not inapplicable to a case of murder committed in consequence of an abduction. Where it is found that three persons were found holding the deceased as a captive, and that his dead body was discovered the next day under a heap of straw and the case for the prosecution is that the three accused either themselves murdered the deceased or abetted his murder and that the murder was committed in consequence of the abduction, the offence is one under S. 302 or 302/109, I. P. Code, the punishment in each case being the capital sentence. Only a Sessions Judge can try the case, and it is not permissible to proceed under S. 364, I.P. Code and thereby give jurisdiction to an Assistant Sessions Judge. S. 364 is mainly a special case of enhanced punishment for a particular type of abetment of murder; and such enhanced punishment will be applicable even though the murder is not committed in consequence of abduction. S. 364 cannot legally be resorted to in a case of murder by three persons or abetment of murder committed in consequence of abduction. 224 Ind. Cas. 435=47 Cr.L.J. 680=A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 35.

—Ss. 302, 109 and 364—Murder committed in consequence of abduction—Proper charge.

A charge under S. 364, I.P. Code, where murder has been committed in consequence of an alleged abduction, must amount to a charge of abetment of murder under Ss. 302, 109, I.P. Code, I.L.R. (1946) 1 Cal. 15.

—Ss. 302, 304 and 460.

If a person causes the death of another at the time of committing lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night, it does not mean that he escapes being tried under S. 302 or S. 304, as the case may be, and that he can only be tried under S. 460. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 281=42 P.L.R. 229=41 Cr.L.J. 779=189 Ind. Cas. 672.

—Ss. 302 and 304.

Accused believing in good faith that object of assault was not human being but evil spirit—He cannot be convicted under S. 302 or S. 304. A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 64=8 B.R. 829=43 Cr.L.J. 787=23 P.L.T. 670=202 Ind. Cas. 20.

—S. 302—Hallucination.

Where accused assaulted a man believing him to be a ghost and the assault proved fatal:

Held, that he was neither guilty under S. 302 nor S. 304, nor S. 304-A. 99 Ind. Cas. 71=28 Cr.L.J. 39=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 554.

—S. 302—Supervening illness—Grievous injuries—Pneumonia supervening as a result—Guilty of murder.

If a person receives grievous injuries and is detained in hospital and as a result of those injuries pneumonia supervenes and the victim dies, the perpetrators of the attack upon him are guilty of murder: 7 S.L.R. 83, Foll. 110 Ind. Cas. 230=10 A.I.Cr.R. 517=29 Cr.L.J. 678=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 851.

—Ss. 302, 325, 109 and 147—Intention of two accused only to give beating to deceased—Third accused committing murder—Offence.

Where the intention of the two accused was to give the deceased a beating with lathis, they abetted the offence under S. 325, read with S. 109 and not under S. 302 read with S. 149 and though the Act of murder committed by the third accused was done with their aid, it could not be said that it was the probable consequence of the abetment on their part. A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 33=1938 O.W.N. 1103=40 Cr.L.J. 38=1938 A.W.R. 108=178 Ind. Cas. 348.

—S. 302—Deadly weapon—Fetching of evidence.

Mere fetching of a spear by one of the accused is not sufficient evidence to hold him guilty for abetment of murder. The intention to see the chief accused killing the deceased must be proved. 1941 M.W.N. 872.

—S. 302.

A person who instigates others to beat the deceased and they inflict several injuries on him resulting in his death, cannot escape responsibility for abetment of murder and he should be convicted under S. 302. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 928=35 Cr. L. J. 301=147 Ind. Cas. 109.

—Ss. 302, 109 and 115—Giving aconite to wife to be administered to husband—Other relations killed—Offence.

The accused gave aconite to a girl for being administered to her husband with the object of gaining his love. The girl mixed the powder in cooked food and served the same to her husband, father-in-law and brother-in-law. The husband did not die but the others died. The accused was prosecuted and convicted under Ss. 302 and 109:

(ii) That though the conviction of the accused under Ss. 302 and 109, was unsustainable a conviction under Ss. 302 and 115 should be substituted. A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 757=58 C. 1228=35 C.W.N. 573=33 Cr.L.J. 79=34 Ind. Cas. 896 (2).

3. Benefit of doubt.

—S. 302—B member of unlawful assembly charged with murder of A—At trial evidence given to show that bhala wounds of which A died were caused by B—No such allegation made in first information report—Accused held entitled to benefit of doubt.

The accused who were members of an unlawful assembly were charged with murder of A, a member of the other party. There was no doubt that A had died of bhala blows inflicted by some members of the unlawful assembly. At the trial evidence was led to show that the accused had inflicted the bhala blows resulting in A's death. In the first information report the names of 13 persons were mentioned and it was stated that they began to attack A and his party with lathi, bhala and pharsa. The question was whether in view of the fact that the first information report did not state that the accused inflicted the bhala blows resulting in A's death the accused could be found guilty under S. 302:

Held, that the accused could not be found guilty of the offence under S. 302 as they were entitled to benefit of doubt as the first information report did not state that the accused had given the bhala blows. A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 84=24 Pat. 578.

—S. 302.

Where the chief culprit had secreted a knife in his waist and this fact was not proved to be within the knowledge and intention of the other co-accused and also where the co-accused did not in any manner facilitate the murder, they were given the benefit of doubt so far as S. 302 was concerned 1941 M.W.N. 815.

—S. 302.

A woman was murdered shortly after taking her night meal. Accused, the husband of the deceased, was with her that night on his own admission. At midnight a cry was heard from the house and the accused's sister who lived nearby went to investigate. She was told by the accused that there was nothing wrong. Later that night, others summoned by accused's sister went to the scene and they found not only the deceased but her husband absent. The next morning the body of the deceased was found in the well suffocated. At the Magistrate's Court the accused reserved his defence. At the Sessions, he stated that the next morning, he woke up and saw her missing. He denied that he ever saw his sister:

Held, that the facts undoubtedly cast the utmost suspicion on accused; but did not contain that element of certainty so essential to a conviction in a criminal case. There was, therefore, a doubt and the accused must be given the benefit of doubt. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 238=52 M.L.W. 420 (2)=1940 M.W.N. 1045=42 Cr.L.J. 654=195 Ind. Cas. 53. *

—S. 302.

In a case where a man is on trial for his life every ambiguity in the law of procedure should be resolved in his favour. A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 94=1940 N.L.J. 565=42 Cr. L. J. 154=I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 157=191 Ind. Cas. 371.

—S. 302—Facts consistent both with intention to kill and exercise of private defence—Effect.

The deceased had contracted an illicit intimacy with the wife of the accused. When the accused had remonstrated with the deceased, there had been an altercation and the deceased had given him a beating. He had told the deceased to desist from the intrigue with his wife and had warned him not to come near his house. Nevertheless one evening the deceased had gone past the accused's house. On his return the accused saw the deceased and with the intention of remonstrating he took a kulhari with him and the quarrel ensued resulting in death:

Held, that the facts were clearly just consistent with the hypothesis that the only object of the accused was to remonstrate with the deceased for his conduct in coming past his house again. It was true that the accused took a kulhari with him, but it was also equally true that the deceased used to go about armed with a dang and had on a previous occasion beaten the accused. Therefore, he could quite well think that the result of his remonstrating might be that he would be attacked and therefore, might have taken the kulhari to protect himself in the case of attack and not necessarily as a weapon of offence. The facts were equally consistent with that there was a deliberate intention to attack. The accused, therefore, was entitled to the benefit of doubt and the case came under Excep. 4 to S. 300 and the offence fell under the first part of S. 304. A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 426=41 P.L.R. 315=40 Cr.L.J. 928=184 Ind. Cas. 325.

—S. 302.

Held, on facts of the case, after discussing the prosecution evidence that there was sufficient amount of doubt in the case and the accused who were charged under Ss. 302 and 307 read with S. 149, were entitled to the benefit of doubt. A. I. R. 1938 Lah. 787=40 P.L.R. 697=40 Cr.L.J. 435=180 Ind. Cas. 507.

—S. 302.

Where death can be explained on the hypothesis of murder as well as of an accident, the accused is entitled to the benefit of hypothesis and the part of his absconding makes no difference. (38) 40 P.L.R. 542.

—S. 302.

Where it is doubtful whether the accused had the intention of causing injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, he must be given the benefit of this doubt. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 156=39 Cr.L.J. 561=175 Ind. Cas. 345.

—S. 302.

When it is reasonably doubtful upon the evidence of the prosecution the accused is entitled to the benefit of that reasonable doubt, and he must be acquitted of the charge of murder, even if he is to be convicted of the charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 63=31 S.L.R. 480=39 Cr.L.J. 460=174 Ind. Cas. 497.

—S. 302—Tampered evidence.

Where there are strong reasons for suspecting that evidence had been tampered with and there are grave reasons for suspecting that the accused was the man who committed the murder but on the record as it stands it is impossible to say that his guilt has been proved beyond all reasonable doubt and there is a support given to the dying declaration of the deceased by an incredible witness the conviction of the accused is not warranted. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 431=39 Cr.L.J. 70=172 Ind. Cas. 110.

—S. 302—Benefit of doubt.

It is for the prosecution to prove their case of murder and if upon a review of all the available evidence a doubt arises as to whether appellant committed murder or whether he committed culpable homicide by reason of exceeding the right of private self-defence, he is entitled to be found guilty of the lesser offence only. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 343=38 Cr.L.J. 1095=171 Ind. Cas. 586.

—S. 302—Benefit of doubt—Case on border-line between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Doubt as to intention—Accused should be given benefit of this doubt.

Where the injury results in death and the case is on the border-line between an intention to cause injury merely likely to cause death and an intention to cause injury such as is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and it is not free from doubt that the accused had the latter of these two intentions in attacking the deceased, he must be given the benefit of this doubt and he must be held to have intended merely to cause injury likely to cause death. The offence committed by him is, therefore, culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 443=10 R. Rang. 230=39 Cr.L.J. 114=172 Ind. Cas. 179 (D.B.).

—S. 302—Benefit of doubt, when given.

Where it appeared that out of spite and because of old-standing enmity which existed between the deceased and the accused, the latter were falsely implicated in a murder and for this reason two persons named in the first information report were not prepared to support the prosecution story:

Held, that the charge against the accused was not proved beyond all reasonable doubt and they could be given the benefit of the doubt and acquitted. (36) 164 Ind. Cas. 422=1936 O.W.N. 838=37 Cr.L.J. 986.

—S. 302—Conduct of accused suspicious—Motive lacking—Evidence not convincing.

In a charge for murder by poisoning, the accused's conduct on the day of the crime was suspicious, but motive was lacking. The evidence of the poison-vendor was also not convincing. In the Sessions Court, witnesses to prove threats of the accused to the deceased—a point of vital importance—were not examined, but the Judge convicted the accused of murder:

Held, that the circumstantial evidence, as it was presented to the Court, was not such as to make it clear beyond doubt that the accused murdered the deceased. There was not even actually a weak link in each chain and there was ground for doubt of which the benefit must go to the accused. A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 486=2 B.R. 791=37 Cr.L.J. 106=164 Ind. Cas. 1079.

—S. 302—Benefit of doubt.

Where the case is on the border line between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, the accused is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt and he can be convicted only under S. 304, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 110=33 Cr.L.J. 1112=150 Ind. Cas. 599.

—Ss. 302, 304, Part II—Death caused by strangulation—Ignorance as to effect of applying pressure on neck—Doubt whether death was not accidental—Benefit of doubt.

Knowledge that pressure applied to the neck is likely to cause death must be attributed to every adult. When the accused is a man of thirty he cannot plead ignorance on the ground of youth or inexperience. It, however, remains with the Court to determine whether the circumstances show that the accused intended to cause death.

Where it appears that a dispute must have taken place before the accused became violent and though it is evident that the accused was violent and intended to be so, a doubt must remain whether so far as his intention went, the deceased's death was not accidental; of this doubt he is entitled to the benefit:

Held, that the conviction should be altered from one of murder under S. 302, to one of culpable homicide under S. 304, Part II. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 511=34 Cr.L.J. 1213=146 Ind. Cas. 224.

—S. 302—Student distributing sweets containing arsenic—Motive not made out—Accused himself ate—No evidence who prepared them—Benefit given.

The accused, a student, aged 17 was alleged to have distributed certain sweets containing arsenic among his fellow students. All who had received it ate it then and there except one person who took it home and gave it to his young niece and father. All the persons showed signs of arsenic poisoning and all of them recovered except the niece who died. It appeared that the accused himself had eaten a portion of the sweets and there was no motive for the crime. There was no evidence that the accused prepared the sweets.

Held, that the whole case was doubtful and that the accused could not be convicted of murder. 115 Ind. Cas. 469=30 P.L.R. 424=10 Lah. L.J. 555=30 Cr.L.J. 478.

—S. 302—Poisoned sweets given—Knowledge not proved, no motive—Accused partook—Case very doubtful—Benefit given.

An accused distributed poisoned sweets to several friends of his but it was not satisfactorily proved that the accused knew that the sweets contained poison. No motive was alleged. The accused had also partaken some of the sweets. Some arsenic was found in the room occupied by the accused after six days from his arrest and there was no evidence to show as to who had the control and custody of the room during those six days.

Held, that the case against the accused was very doubtful and the accused should be given the benefit of doubt. 115 Ind. Cas. 469=10 L.L.J. 555=30 P.L.R. 424=30 Cr.L.J. 478=12 A.I.Cr.R. 354.

—S. 302—Fight—Gun went off during struggle—Doubtful if anybody fired—Benefit given.

Where there was a fight in the course of which one J. died owing to a shot from T's gun but whether the shot which killed him was fired by S as the prosecution alleged or by T or whether it was the result of an accident due to the gun going off of itself during the struggle for its possession was doubtful and the probability was that the gun went off during the struggle.

Held, benefit of doubt must be given to the accused. 88 Ind. Cas. 711=26 Cr.L.J. 1191=6 L.L.J. 271=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 720.

—S. 302—Body not identified—Prosecution evidence inconsistent with medical—Benefit given.

Where the body of the deceased was not identified when it was discovered and the prosecution evidence was inconsistent with the medical evidence, the accused was given the benefit of doubt. 18 P. R. 1917 distinguished mainly on the ground that the parties in the present case were not shown to be on bad terms. 76 Ind. Cas. 307=5 L.L.J. 417=25 Cr.L.J. 173=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 168.

—S. 302—Poisoning—Doubtful if wife or any body else had done—Benefit given.

Where it was doubtful whether accused poisoned her husband and from the circumstances it was equally possible that some one else had done the foul deed, benefit of doubt was given to the accused. The mere recovery of utensils with particles of arsenic adhering does not necessarily fix the guilt upon the wife in the absence of clear proof. 77 Ind. Cas. 600=25 Cr.L.J. 421=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 537.

—S. 302—No opportunity to cross-examine expert witness—Subsequent modification of opinion by expert—Benefit given.

Where the prosecution theory in a murder case was presumably built on the opinion first expressed by an expert witness (civil surgeon) whom the accused had no proper opportunity to cross-examine but who subsequently modified his opinion, and there were other informative circumstances in the prosecution case, the benefit of doubt was given to the accused. A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 189.

—Ss. 302 and 304—Strangulation by twisting hair round throat—Deed suggestive of provocation—No evidence—Benefit of doubt.

Where facts showed that the crime was not a premeditated one and death took place by strangulation effected by twisting deceased's hair round her throat:

Held, the accused must have acted on a sudden impulse; some sudden provocation must have arisen to impel the accused to do this deed and in the absence of any evidence on this point the accused was entitled to the benefit of the doubt as to whether sudden and grave provocation did not arise which temporarily deprived him of self-control. 77 Ind. Cas. 983=25 Cr.L.J. 519=5 L.L.J. 528=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 691.

—S. 302—Wife administering arsenic—Believed by her to be a charm to work on husband—Reasonable doubt.

The appellant was convicted of murder of her husband by administering arsenic in halwa. There being reason to believe that she did not know that it contained arsenic and that she gave it to her husband (as also to her father-in-law) believing it to be charmed, like other charmed things, to induce him to divorce her, held, as there was reasonable doubt as to her guilty, she was entitled to the benefit thereof. 4 L.L.J. 445=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 55.

—S. 302—Sentence.

A person accused of murder should not be sentenced to transportation for life instead of to death merely on the ground that the evidence is not strong enough to justify an irrevocable sentence. If the Court has any doubt as to the guilt of the accused, he should be acquitted. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 100=13 P.L.T. 702=11 Pat. 807=33 Cr.L.J. 427=142 Ind. Cas. 841 (2).

—S. 302—Benefit of doubt in matter of sentence.

The accused, a youth of 17 or 18, had been insulted and provoked and as a result of the fighting which ensued, the deceased met with his death. It was also possible that the accused in order to live up to his reputation of being a bully wantonly attacked the deceased who was unarmed.

Held, that as an accused person is entitled to the benefit of reasonable doubt in the matter of sentence as in the matter of conviction and as there was doubt about the cause of the quarrel and the accused was only a lad of 17 or 18, the extreme penalty of the law was not called for. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 71=37 Cr.L.J. 463=161 Ind. Cas. 574.

4. Duty of Court.

—S. 302—Points to be considered.

It is the duty of the Judge to consider first of all on a charge under S. 302, whether the case is not murder as defined in S. 300, and if he considers that it does not fall within the definition, to give his reasons. Knowledge in a case like this is a matter of presumption and a person must be presumed to know the natural consequences of his act.

If the accused intended to cause such injuries as were likely to result in the victim's death it must be presumed that they knew that such injuries were likely to cause his death. A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 368 = 1942 O.W.N. 316 = 1942 A.W.R. 211 = 43 Cr. L. J. 634 = 18 Luck. 235 = 200 Ind. Cas. 500.

—S. 302—Weight to be attached to assessor's opinion.

The opinion of assessors is of course entitled to due consideration especially of intelligent assessor and especially when they consider a man guilty for it is so seldom that that happens in capital cases. A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 52 = 39 Cr. L. J. 105 = 172 Ind. Cas. 213.

—Ss. 302 and 304.

It is the duty of a Judge to make up his mind upon the fact of the case before him, and if there is any real doubt as to the facts, then he must give the accused the benefit of that doubt, not by finding him guilty, even in the alternative, of the offence in respect of which the reasonable doubt exists, but by acquitting him of that offence. In other words, he should remember that the burden lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused, and if the prosecution fail to prove the intention which is necessary in order that an accused should be convicted of murder, then they fail to prove that accused is guilty of murder, and the accused should not be convicted of murder even in the alternative. If the prosecution can prove the knowledge which is necessary for the conviction of an offence under S. 304, Part 2, the proper course is to convict the accused of an offence under S. 304, Part 2, and not in the alternative. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 63 = 31 S.L.R. 480 = 39 Cr. L. J. 460 = 174 Ind. Cas. 497.

—S. 302—Finding as to intention.

In a case of murder, where "intention" is one of the essential elements of the offence, it is always necessary that there should be a definite finding as to whether the necessary guilty intention is or is not present. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 63 = 31 S.L.R. 480 = 39 Cr. L. J. 460 = 174 Ind. Cas. 497.

—S. 302—Prosecution case based on circumstantial evidence establishing guilt of accused—Procedure.

In a case of murder where the prosecution case is based on circumstantial evidence, the cumulative effect of which establishes the guilt of the accused, having settled the legal criterion applicable to the case, viz., whether the evidence led would satisfy the jury beyond reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused—it is then for the jury, or for the Judge, if there is no jury, to say, whether, applying that criterion to the facts proved, the verdict should or should not be one of guilty. This is the law in England and the Courts in India have held the same view. A.I.R. 1937 P. C. 179 = 1937 O. W. N. 540 = 3 B. R. 501 = 38 Cr. L. J. 573 = 41 C.W.N. 805 = 39 P.L.R. 426 = 1937 M.W.N. 633(2) = 46 L.W. 33 = 31 S.L.R. 300 = I.L.R. (1937) Lah. 371 = 39 Bom. L.R. 960 = 64 I.A. 134 = (1937) 2 M.L.J. 684 = 1937 A.W.R. 1014 = 168 Ind. Cas. 432 (P.C.).

—S. 302—Murder by poisoning.

In cases of murder by poisoning, the Judge should minutely analyse evidence before jury. A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 756 = 39 Cr. L. J. 182 = I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 315 = 172 Ind. Cas. 891.

—S. 302.

The proper way in which to decide whether an offence has or has not been committed under S. 300 read with S. 302, is to apply the words of the section to the facts and to see how the facts satisfy the essentials of the section. But it is obvious that the nature of the material object used and the force used must be useful guides to the trial Court in arriving at a decision as to whether the intention and knowledge referred to in S. 300, can be attributed to the accused. A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 634 = 1937 M.W.N. 456 = (1937) 1 M.L.J. 743 = 45 L.W. 698 = 38 Cr. L. J. 1109 = I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 684 = 171 Ind. Cas. 694.

—S. 302—Court should act on evidence and not on moral conviction.

A conviction under S. 302, should not be made when the Court is morally convinced of the guilt of the accused but only when there is good and sufficient evidence to support such conviction. And the responsibility for a conviction (or acquittal) must rest principally upon the Sessions Judge, because he has the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses face to face; where as the High Court has perforce to be content with seeing the Judge's record only. If the Sessions Judge feels quiam about the case, he should give the accused the benefit of doubt and acquit him. A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 19 = 1 B.R. 119 = 36 Cr. L. J. 195 = 152 Ind. Cas. 832.

—Ss. 302 and 304.

If a prima facie case of murder under S. 302 or of culpable homicide punishable under S. 304 has been made out by the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, then it is the duty of the Judge to examine carefully the version of the occurrence set up by the accused and to see how far they could legally plead the right of private defence of person. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 427 = 11 O.W.N. 1117 = 35 Cr. L. J. 1347 = 151 Ind. Cas. 559.

—S. 302—Arsenic poisoning—Questions to be determined by Court.

In cases of alleged arsenical poisoning the two material questions requiring determination are, firstly did the deceased die of arisenic posion and secondly had the posion been administered to the deceased by the accused. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 62 = 11 O.W.N. 312 = 35 Cr. L. J. 700 = 148 Ind. Cas. 600.

—S. 302—Duty of Court—Jury finding accused did not know that injury was likely to cause death—Judge differing as to intention and knowledge—Conviction not warranted.

The only question, in case of an alleged homicide, that the Judge has to see is, first, what degree of injury did the man intend, and secondly what did he know as to the consequences of such injury. Where the jury found the accused did not know the amount of injury caused by him would be such as would be likely to cause death the judge is not warranted in differing from them as to the intention or knowledge of the accused, based upon the reasoning of 'post hoc ergo propter hoc'. In such a case the conviction should be under the second clause of S. 304. 34 C.W.N. 1127=1931 Cr.C. 293=32 Cr.L.J. 187=128 Ind. Cas. 808=A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 261.

—S. 302—Sufficiently certain of guilt—Not sufficiently certain of sentence.

It is not permissible for Judge to sentence a prisoner to transportation for life on the ground that he is sufficiently certain of the guilt for that purpose but not sufficiently certain to sentence him to death. 124 Ind.Cas. 841=11 P.L.T. 166=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 252.

—S. 302—Trial for murder—Every procedure must be strictly followed.

It is imperative in cases where accused is being tried for his life that the provisions of the law should be strictly adhered to and that the accused should not have any manner of grievance with regard to the procedure adopted at the trial. 103 Ind. Cas. 790=46 C.L.J. 31=31 C.W.N. 881=8 A. I. Cr. R. 316=28 Cr. L. J. 742=A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 631.

—S. 302 — Finding of murder — Inadequate sentence—Reference to High Court.

If a Judge accepts a finding of murder there are only two penalties. He has no right to pass inadequate sentence. If he does not believe the verdict to be right it is his duty to refer the case to the High Court. 98 Ind. Cas. 102=30 C.W.N. 376=27 Cr.L.J. 1254.

—S. 302—Murder — Accused the culprit—Gravity of the offence—Sentence.

In order to convict an accused for murder the Court must be satisfied first that the murder had been committed; then it must be satisfied that the accused has committed the murder. At the third stage the question of sentence should be determined upon the gravity of the offence quite irrespective of the circumstances whether the body has or has not been discovered. A.I.R. 1925 All. 627 (F.B.), Foll. 93 Ind. Cas. 252=1 Luck. 327=13 O.L.J. 484=3 O.W.N. 204=27 Cr.L.J. 460=A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 234.

—S. 302 — Mitigation of death sentence—Reasons to be recorded.

The extreme sentence is the normal sentence; the mitigated sentence is the exception. It is not for the Judge to ask himself whether there are reasons for imposing the penalty of death. If the Judge does not pass the sentence of death, he is bound to record the reasons why death sentence was not passed, i. e., he must find, that there are really extenuating circumstances and not merely an absence of aggravating circumstances. 1 L.B.R. 216, foll. 67 Ind. Cas 613=11 L.B.R. 323=1 Bur. L. J. 66=23 Cr.L.J. 437=A.I.R. 1922 L.B. 32.

—S. 302—Duty of committing Magistrate—Prosecution evidence not disbelieved—Commitment to sessions.

A Magistrate not disbelieving the evidence for the prosecution, which tends to show that an offence under S. 302, Penal Code, has been committed, should better commit the accused to the sessions and leave the Sessions Judge to decide upon the value of the evidence led. 114 Ind. Cas. 58=30 P.L.R. 36=30 Cr. L. J. 234=12 A. I. Cr. R. 116=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 403.

—S. 302—Murder trial—Identification of things containing poison.

Judges who try cases of murder by poisoning should invariably put beyond the possibility of doubt the identification of every single thing that is suspected to contain any poison. The evidence should be complete as to the history of such articles, and it should be shown that they have been kept in proper custody throughout if they are to be relied on as supporting a conviction. (1905) 7 Bom.L.R. 640=2 Cr.L.J. 585.

5. Jury.

—S. 302—Number of jurymen.

It is quite clear from proviso to sub-s. (2) of S. 274, Criminal P. C., that whenever it is practicable the jury must consist of nine members in a trial for murder. A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 515=I. L. R. (1943) 1 Cal. 522=47 C.W.N. 345=44 Cr.L.J. 483=77 C.L.J. 120=206 Ind. Cas. 26.

—S. 302.

Murder case—18 jurors summoned—8 present—7 selected and trial with their aid—Trial held valid. A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 10=61 C. 190=36 Cr. L. J. 803=155 Ind. Cas. 599 (D. B.).

—S. 302—Failure to summon full number of jurors—Effect.

Assuming that it is incumbent on Judge under S. 326, Criminal P. C., to summon a minimum of 18 jurors for a murder trial mere failure on the part of Judge to summon the full number will not by itself vitiate the trial. A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 152=32 Cr. L. J. 797=12 P.L.T. 798=10 Pat. 107=131 Ind. Cas. 801.

—S. 302—Judge's failure to consider number of jurymen—Effect.

Where the Judge never applies his mind to the question whether it is practicable to have nine jurors, there is an illegality which vitiates the whole trial even in respect of persons not charged under S. 302, I.P.C., but who are jointly tried with person charged under S. 302; I. P. C. A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 793=58 Cal. 1272=35 C.W.N. 711=54 C.L.J. 307=33 Cr.L.J. 129=135 Ind. Cas. 435.

—Ss. 302, 326, 324 and 149—Charge under S. 302—149 includes minor charge under S. 326-149 or S. 324—149.

Charge under S. 302-149, includes the minor charge under S. 326-149 or S. 324-149. Hence, where the accused are charged under S. 302-149, the mere fact that the jury return a verdict of guilty under S. 326-149 and under S. 324-149 is no ground for interfering with the verdict of the jury. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 446=8 B.R. 237=43 Cr.L.J. 205=21 Pat. 138=23 P.L.T. 707=197 Ind. Cas. 504.

—S. 302—Charge to jury—Procedure.

The death of the deceased was due to the effect of all the injuries inflicted by several accused combined. The common object specified in the charges under Ss. 148 and 147 was not to kill the deceased but merely to assault him, yet all the accused were charged with the substantive offence of murder under S. 302. The judge explained to the jury the provisions of Ss. 300 and 299 and endeavoured to make them understand the exact difference between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The jury ultimately convicted all the accused under S. 302.

Held, that the conviction was illegal and the whole procedure amounted to misdirection and non-direction to the jury inasmuch as no alternative charges for lesser offences under Ss. 301, 326, or 325 were framed nor were the principles of S. 34 or S. 149, explained to the jury and particularly because the charge was put before the jury in such a way that they might have thought that they could only convict or acquit wholesale under S. 302. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 417=21 P.L.T. 349=6 B.R. 805=41 Cr.L.J. 738=189 Ind. Cas. 426.

—S. 302—Misdirection to jury—What is.

Attack by armed men on unarmed men—Death of some—Direction to jury to consider accused's cases under S. 304-109, I.P.C., instead of directing trial for murder:

Held, that there was misdirection. A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 309=I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 308=38 Cr.L.J. 1067=171 Ind. Cas. 269.

—S. 302—Jury—Failure to point out all matters in evidence—Non-direction as to facts constituting a lesser offence—If misdirections.

A mere failure on the part of the Sessions Judge to point out to the Jury all the matters which may be considered by them in evidence, does not necessarily amount to a misdirection. Where the facts disclose a case to be either of murder or nothing else, the non-direction by a Sessions Judge of the attention of the Jury to the fact that even if an offence under S. 302 of the Penal Code has not been made out the facts established might constitute a minor offence, does not amount to a misdirection. 64 Ind. Cas. 671=23 Cr.L.J. 47= A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 321.

—Ss. 302, 304 and 326—Charge to jury—Defective charge—Intention how to be inferred.

In trials under Ss. 302, 304 and 326 the charge to the jury is defective if the jury is not asked to consider the intention of the accused. The considerations for arriving at the intention are the accused's frame of mind, nature of weapon used, number of wounds inflicted and the testimony of the eye-witness as to how the accused acted. 8 L.B.R. 125=17 Cr.L.J. 154=33 Ind. Cas. 634.

Powers and duties of High Court.

—S. 302.

The intention of the law is that a man should not be condemned to death unless at least two High Court Judges have had the opportunity of scrutinising the case on facts as well as on law and unless they are satisfied that he is guilty. The law quite definitely does not intend that the final result in such cases should depend upon the opinion of the jury. A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 94=1940 N.L.I. 565=42 Cr.L.J. 154=I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 157=191 Ind. Cas. 371.

The High Court will always set its face against private individuals, whether they be Baluchis or members of any other tribe, executing their own sentences of death. A.I.R. 1937 Sind 239=30 S.L.R. 354=38 Cr.L.J. 953=170 Ind. Cas. 605.

—S. 302—Delay in confirming death sentence—When to be considered.

Per Wild, A.J.C.—In the case of an ordinary murder the delay in confirming sentence of death may be taken into consideration but not so when the murder is not ordinary. 1930 Cr. C. 865=A.I.R. 1930 Sind 225.

—S. 302—Murder—Death sentence—When should be confirmed.

In the case of alternative sentences of death or transportation, the High Court ought not to confirm the death sentence except where it thinks that it should be carried into effect. In an appeal from a capital sentence, if a High Court Judge is for acquittal and there is some delay in hearing the appeal, there was sufficient reason for not imposing the extreme penalty. 17 C.W.N. 1213=14 Cr.L.J. 642=21 Ind. —Ss. 302, 302/109, 364—Facts establishing offence of murder or abetment of murder.

Where the facts relied upon by the prosecution to prove an offence under S. 364, Penal Code, are such that if believed they are sufficient to establish an offence of murder under S. 302 or abetment of murder under S. 302/109 and if not believed the case under S. 364 would fail, the Court should frame a charge under S. 302 or S. 302/109. —Ss. 302, 201—While convicting accused of murder it is not desirable to convict him for concealing evidence.

Where the whole question is whether the accused was guilty of murder and it is not suggested, that the murder was committed by anybody else, it is highly unusual and undesirable to convict the accused for concealing the evidence while convicting him of murder though as a strict question of law it may not be wrong to do so. An accused may be tried at one trial both for murder under S. 302, and for causing the disappearance of evidence of it under S. 201. It is not necessary that only a person completely innocent of the murder can be convicted under S. 201. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 289=19 Pat. 369=7 B.R. 59=41 Cr.L.J. 910=22 P.L.T. 98=190 Ind. Cas. 457.

—Ss. 302, 201, 72—Charge in alternative under S. 302 and S. 201—Position may arise for punishment under S. 72.

Where the charge is framed in the alternative in respect of offences under Ss. 302 and 201, the position may arise as contemplated by S. 72. It may be open to the Court to give judgment that a person is guilty of one of several offences specified in the judgment, but it is doubtful of which of these offences he is guilty. Such a finding is in accordance with S. 367 (3), Criminal P. C., and will have the consequence that under S. 72, the offender is to be punished for the offence for which the lowest punishment is provided, the same punishment not being provided for all. Where the accused is charged with murder but he is also found guilty of an offence under S. 201, the proper avenue of approach is, first and foremost, to consider whether the case under S. 302 has been made out. If so, that is an end of the matter. If, on the other hand, it is thought that the case under that section was not proved then, and only then would it be proper to consider whether an offence under S. 201 had been established. A conviction under S. 411 cannot be substituted for it, that being entirely a separate offence with which the accused are not charged. Held: that it would have been proper to charge the accused persons with an offence under S. 396, I. P. C., rather than with the two offences of murder and dacoity. 88 Ind. Cas. 513=6 Lah. 24=26 Cr.L.J. 1153=26 P.L.R. 139=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 337.

—Ss. 302, 114 and 34—Part of jury's verdict accepted by Judge—Part differed from—Reference to High Court—No interference with part accepted—Applicability of S. 34 doubtful—

Alternative charge under S. 302 and 114 should have been framed.

The jury were unanimous that there was not sufficient evidence to find accused guilty under Section 302 without the aid of Section 34. The jury also found unanimously that there was a doubt that accused was guilty under Section 302 with S. 34. Sessions Judge himself was satisfied that accused was the man who struck the blow, the Jury evidently had a doubt on the matter, and he was not able to say that the doubt was unreasonable; consequently, he could accept the verdict of the Jury as to that part of the case. But the Jury also held that there was a reasonable doubt that the two youths (Petitioner, and the other who was acquitted) acted in furtherance of a common intention. But the Judge thought admitted circumstances were wholly inconsistent with the view that either of the two youths could be ignorant of his companion's intention, and referred the case under Section 307 of the Cr. P. C.

Held: that as the Jury found that there was a doubt whether accused struck the blow and the Judge has clearly accepted the verdict of the Jury on that part of the case, the High Court ought not to enter upon the consideration of the question involved in that part of the case. Assuming that High Court had to approach the case on the basis that it was not proved which of the two men stabbed the deceased man and that one of them only undoubtedly did, it was doubtful whether the provisions of Section 34 are applicable. Section 34 does not create an offence. The provisions thereof merely lay down a rule of law. The charge which should have been preferred against the accused as an alternative to the main charge under Section 302 of the Indian Penal Code was a charge under Section 302 read with Section 114 of the Indian Penal Code. But the accused was not charged under Section 114 with abetment and he could not be convicted by High Court under Section 114 inasmuch as the charge was not framed against him in the trial Court. 74 Ind. P. C. and in the same trial convicted the accused of the minor offence, though it was triable in that District only by a jury.

Held, that the accused was rightly convicted of an offence punishable under S. 326, even though it was triable by a jury. 59 Ind. Cas. 195=45 Bom. 619=22 Cr.L.J. 51=A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 39.

7 (b). Procedure—Joint trial.

—Ss. 302, 34—Joint trial.

The word 'transaction' is not to be interpreted in any special or artificial or conventional or technical sense, but as it is ordinarily understood by men of education and common sense. The usual tests applied to decide whether different acts are parts of the same transaction are proximity of time, unity of place, community of purpose or design and continuity of action. It is not possible to enunciate any comprehensive formula of universal applicability for the purpose of determining whether two or more acts constitute the same transaction, but circumstances which bear on the determination of the question in any individual case can be indicated by saying that proximity of time, unity or proximity of place, continuity of action and community of purpose or design are the principal criteria for deciding whether certain acts form parts of the same transaction or not. The real and substantial test for determination whether several offences are so connected together as to form one transaction is to see upon whether they are related together in point of purpose, or as cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary acts so as to constitute one continuous action. Where A is murdered and left for dead by the assailants and thereafter they go and commit a fresh act of murder of his brother B in another place, although a common identity of purpose may be said to run through both the transactions, the murder of A is a transaction complete in itself and does not need the murder of B to complete it. In such circumstances two separate trials are proper. But when there has been no failure of justice and the accused have not been prejudiced in their defence on the merits, the irregularity, in the circumstances, may be condoned under S. 537, Criminal P. C.

In a case tried with the aid of assessors, the assessors form an integral part of the Court and any proceedings taken by the Judge in the absence of the jurors or assessors are necessarily void and illegal. Where the Judge alone inspects the spot under S. 539-B, Criminal P. C., the inspection note must be ruled out and when it has been utilised by the Sessions Judge, all reference to it must be excluded from consideration. A.I.R. 1904 Oudh 499=35 Cr. L. #### —S. 302—Plea of guilty in murder case.

Under S. 271, Criminal P. C., accused may be convicted on his pleading guilty. But where the crime on the face of it appears to be murder evidence should be taken. A.I.R. 1934 Sind 204=36 Cr. L. J. 324=28 S.L.R. 327=153 Ind. Cas. 288.

—S. 302—Pleading guilty—Trial not ended—Evidence must be taken and case decided ignoring the plea.

The trial of an accused person does not necessarily end if he pleads guilty but evidence may and should be taken in cases of murder as if the plea had been one of not guilty and case decided upon the whole of the evidence including the accused's plea. It is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty in a case where the natural sequence would be a sentence of death. 115 Ind. Cas. 582=30 Cr. L. —S. 302—Accused giving unequivocal statement of facts admitting guilt—Stated his reason to be jealousy—Conviction on the statement—Retrial ordered directing his plea of jealousy to be gone into.

The accused was undoubtedly a man of very considerable intelligence, and having beyond question killed a woman, made a few hours later, on the same day, a perfectly clear statement about the facts, and later, on the day after the crime, gave to a Magistrate of the first class the most clear and convincing account of the whole occurrence, and stated as a preliminary to it that he knew that he could be convicted on his own statement. Before the S. J. he agreed that he had made the two statements referred to above, and he pleaded guilty and said he killed the woman with the chopper produced and the reason for killing her was jealousy. The accused elaborated in his petition of appeal to the High Court, the statement he had made before the S. J. to the effect that he killed the woman out of jealousy. That document gave rise to the bare possibility that the accused might be able to put forward some ground for the application of S. 304 of the I. P. C.

Held: that though there was before the S. J. enough material to make him perfectly confident as to the guilt of the accused, yet in view of the contents of his petition of appeal to the High Court, the safer and better course would be to return the case to the S. J. with a direction to him to put accused up for trial again, to take his plea and whether that be guilty or not guilty to hear the whole of the evidence in relation to the case. 89=Ind. Cas. 260=23 A. L. J. 587=26 Cr. L. J. 1316=6 L.R.A. Cr. 152=A. I. R. 1925 All. 647.

—S. 302—Accused pleading guilty—Trial must proceed.

In a case of murder it has long been the practice not to accept the plea of guilty. After all murder is a mixed question of fact and law and unless the Court is perfectly satisfied that the accused knew exactly what was necessarily implied by his plea of guilty, the case should be tried. 66 Ind. Cas. 427=20 A. L. J. 326=23 Cr. L. J. 283=A.I.R. 1922 All. 233.

—S. 302—Murder—Plea of guilty.

Before a plea of guilty is accepted in a case of murder the record should clearly show that the accused understood and admitted facts bringing the offence within the definition of murder and that he does not plead any of the exceptions set out in the Penal Code. (1919) 3 U.B.R. 137=20 Cr. L. J. 540=51 Ind. Cas. 780.

—S. 302—Plea of guilty.

It is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty in a case where the natural sequence would be a sentence of death. A man may plead that he hit some one who there by died and that he did it for the purpose of taking away the ornaments of the person injured without necessarily admitting that he committed murder; for murder, under the Penal Code, requires a certain intention or a certain knowledge. (1906) 8 Bom. L.R. 240=3 Cr. L. J. 337.

7 (d). Procedure—Separate sentences on all charges.

—Ss. 302, 304 and 324—Judge's duty to pass sentences on all charges.

Under S. 309, Criminal P. C., Judge is bound to pass a sentence on each of the charges of which the accused is found by him to be guilty and hence, where the Magistrate had convicted the accused under Ss. 302, 304 (1) and 324, Penal Code, his refusal to prescribe the punishment under Ss. 304 (1) and S. 324, Penal Code is illegal. A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 23=40 Cr. L. J. 686=182 Ind. Cas. 572.

—Ss. 302 and 392—Conviction under—Separate sentences.

When a person is convicted of murder and also of robbing the ornaments of the murdered, and a conviction under S. 392 is recorded, separate sentences should be imposed on the accused. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 200=37 Cr. L. J. 1047=I. L. R. (1936) Nag. 78=164 Ind. Cas. 964.

8 (a). Sentence—Abettor.

—S. 302—Abettor—Confederate armed for eventuality—Liability.

A confederate accompanying the murderer on his murderous errand armed with a weapon to meet all eventualities is just as much responsible for the murder as his associate, though he does not actually inflict any injury on the deceased. 116 Ind. Cas. 613=30 Cr. L. J. 637=1929 Cr. C. 423=13 A. I. Cr. R. 41=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 791.

—S. 302—Sentence—Abettor—One struck with a hatchet and killed—The other stood by—Full punishment for former and transportation for latter.

Where G and C accused, proceeded to the house of the deceased, G armed with a hatchet and C with a stick and where G admitted and it was also proved that G inflicted a blow with the hatchet on the neck of the deceased which resulted in his death and C did not inflict any injury but was present and acting under the influence of his brother G.

Held: that G and C were guilty of murder and that G deserved the full punishment namely death but that C only deserved transportation for life. 88 Ind. Cas. 66=7 I. L. J. 479=26 Cr. L. J. 1133=26 P.L.R. 405=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 584.

8 (b). Sentence—Age and sex.

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

Where in a case under S. 302, the accused is aged 20 years, the lesser sentence of transportation for life cannot be said to be justified on the ground of the youth and hot headedness of the accused especially when the attack on the deceased was deliberate. A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 104=45 P.L.R. 140=44 Cr.L.J. 546=206 Ind. Cas. 617 (D.B.).

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

In view of the youth of the accused (19 or 20 years of age) the lesser sentence of transportation is not inappropriate for an offence under S. 302. A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 89=45 P.L.R. 82=44 Cr.L.J. 552=207 Ind. Cas. 32.

—S. 302—Youth of accused whether ground for reducing sentence to transportation for life.

There is no provision of law that sentence of death shall not be passed on a person of or above sixteen but not more than 18 years of age. Youth is not a reason why the Court should not do its duty of awarding a death sentence in a murder case. To commute a sentence of death in the absence of any mitigating circumstances purely on the ground of the age of the accused is in effect to lay it down that persons of a certain age should never be sentenced to death, even though that is not the law. The Court is concerned with the passing of sentence and not with its execution and when it has passed or confirmed a sentence its duty is done. The prerogative of mercy in individual cases lies with the Provincial Government. A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 69=55 L.W. 552=1942 M.W.N. 584=(1942)2 M.L.J. 312=44 Cr.L.J. 299=I.L.R. (1943) Mad. 148=204 Ind. Cas. 545.

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

Held, on facts that the case fell under S. 302, but considering the young age of the accused the sentence of transportation passed by the Sessions Court was maintained. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 427=23 P.L.T. 763=43 Cr.L.J. 544=8 B.R. 542=199 Ind. Cas. 307.

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

Youth, undoubtedly, in some cases may be a very excellent ground for giving the lower sentence. It is a very rare thing for the High Court to sentence a youth of 17 or below to death. It would only be in a very exceptional case that this would be done. In fact the normal sentence for a youth of this age would be transportation for life. A very strong case, indeed, would have to be made out in order to justify the hanging of a youth of this age. When a youth of this age commits a murder in company with an elder relative that is another excellent reason for giving only transportation for life. A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 220=43 P.L.R. 95=42 Cr. L. J. 614=I.L.R. (1941) Lah. 366=194 Ind. Cas. 719.

—S. 302—Youth as extenuating circumstance.

Although youth alone is not a reason for mitigating punishment in murder cases, it is very rarely that young murderers under 18 are sentenced to death. [Accused in this case who was below 18 years was sentenced to transportation for life.] A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 358=42 Cr.L.J. 311=52 L.W. 949=(1941) 1 M.L.J. 34=1941 M.W.N. 58=I.L.R. (1941) Mad. 428=192 Ind. Cas. 579.

—Ss. 302, 299—Youth of accused.

It is quite true that youth by itself is not such an extenuating circumstance as would justify the imposition of the lesser penalty, but regard may be had to the fact that persons of immature age are sometimes more easily provoked and behave in a less responsible manner than their elders.

A cow-herd aged 17 years who was searching for a missing cow-bell, which he had good reason to suspect was in the possession of the deceased, was virtually met with a blank refusal by the deceased a boy two years younger than himself, and in those circumstances he lost his temper and committed a terrible assault with a dah which resulted in the serious injury and subsequent death of the deceased:

Held, that in all the circumstances of the case, the Court would be justified not only in commuting the sentence to one of transportation for life, whilst refusing to confirm the sentence of death passed by the Sessions Judge, but also in drawing the attention of the executive authorities to the provisions of S. 29, Burma Prevention of Crime (Young offenders) Act, 1930. A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 319=43 Cr.L.J. 266=197 Ind. Cas. 786.

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

If the case is not governed by the provisions of S. 83 and the accused is a young man of normal understanding and mature mind, the age by itself will not be sufficient to justify the awarding of the lesser sentence, particularly if the offence is committed in a cold blooded manner and has been the result of a premeditated plan. On the other hand, if in consequence of inexperience and youth the prisoner commits murder in vindication of a supposed wrong, the youth in conjunction with other circumstances may be taken into consideration in favour of the accused and the lesser of the two punishments may be awarded.

Held, on facts of the case that though the offence fell under S. 302, yet there were sufficient extenuating circumstances, apart from the youth of the accused to justify the sentence of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1940 All. 480=1940 A.L.J. 607=42 Cr.L.J. 115=1940 A.W.R. 480=191 Ind. Cas. 303.

—S. 302—Youth as mitigating circumstances.

Youth by itself is not a reason why the Court should evade its duty of sentencing the accused to death especially in the case a cruel of murder. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 710=1940 M.W.N. 86=I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 254=52 L.W. 981=42 Cr.L.J. 582=194 Ind. Cas. 527.

—S. 302—Youth and provocation.

Where the accused was only sixteen years old and had committed murder by a blow with a dah on the back of the neck of the deceased half an hour after the accused had received some provocation from the deceased.

Held, that the circumstances afforded ample justification for the imposition of the lesser penalty. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 140=41 Cr.L.J. 706=188 Ind.Cas. 858 (D.B.).

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

Youth of accused convicted under S. 302, Penal Code, is a sufficiently strong reason for not passing a death sentence on him. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 200=I.L.R. (1937) Lah. 658=40 P.L.R. 401=39 Cr.L.J. 488=174 Ind. Cas. 881.

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

Held, on facts, that under the circumstances of the case the accused being young and drunk and being excited by some incident, the sentence of transportation should be passed with further recommendation to the authorities that the sentence should be further commuted to one of four years' detention in a Borstal Institute. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 62=39 Cr.L.J. 403=174 Ind. Cas. 442.

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

That the accused in a murder case is only 18 years old is not by itself a sufficient ground for the Court to reduce the sentence. This will be a matter for the Local Government when the case comes before them. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 399=38 Cr.L.J. 879=I.L.R. (1937) Lah. 481=39 P.L.R. 834=170 Ind. Cas. 5.

—S. 302—Extreme youth of accused.

Where the accused was found to have pledged the bangles belonging to his deceased sister shortly after she was seen alive last and there were marks of blood on his dhoti, he was held guilty of murder. But since he was only just 16, he was given the lesser penalty of transportation for life. 1937 M.W.N. 1133.

—S. 302—Extreme youth of accused.

Where the accused committed murder with a definite motive, the assault being a very brutal one and there was a doubt whether he had completed his 16 years of age:

Held, that the accused was at a time of life when what will not be considered as a circumstance sufficient to upset a man of more mature years may upset him and send him off his balance quite materially, and taking into account the doubt that existed with reference to his having completed his 16th year of age the sentence of death was unsuitable to the case and that sentence of transportation for life would adequately meet the ends of justice. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 121=38 Cr.L.J. 1022=171 Ind. Cas. 125.

—S. 302—Youth, whether extenuating circumstance.

In every case of murder, youth alone is not such an extenuating circumstance as to justify awarding of lesser punishment, but it should be taken into consideration with other facts. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 121=38 Cr.L.J. 1022=171 Ind. Cas. 125.

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

Youth alone in every case is not such an extenuating circumstance as would justify the imposition of the lesser penalty in case of murder, but it should be taken into consideration with the other facts. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 71=37 Cr.L.J. 463=161 Ind. Cas. 574.

—S. 302.

Where the accused is young and inflicted the injuries together with another man in the course of a blind assault in the dark, the sentence of death must be reduced to one of transportation for life although the assault is premeditated and the offence is murder. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 46=37 Cr.L.J. 290=160 Ind. Cas. 459.

—S. 302—Youth as extenuating circumstance.

Extenuating circumstances are circumstances connected with a particular crime which tend to lessen the amount of guilt attaching to it, and do not include characteristics of the offender unconnected with his crime, even though in some circumstances such characteristics may give the offender the benefit of exceptions mentioned in the Penal Code. The mere youth of the offender is in itself no judicial reason for not inflicting the major penalty in the case of a deliberate murder in which there are no extenuating circumstances. Youth, however, does affect the extent to which a person may be affected by outside influences and thus where there is reason to believe that a youthful offender has acted under the direct or indirect influence of his elders or those who can exert any form of influence over him, the fact of his youth associated with the effect that he may have come under such influence may create such extenuation as can be considered when imposing sentence. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 170=37 Cr.L.J. 201=159 Ind. Cas. 830.

—S. 302—Extreme youth.

When the accused is a boy of 15 or 16, it is not proper that he should be hanged, however horrible the crime be. At the age of 15 or 16 when a boy has just come to the age of puberty, he may do many things then which he would never dream of doing when he was older. It is even possible that he may become a useful citizen. A.I.R. 1934 All. 132=35 Cr.L.J. 448=1934 A.L.J. 143=3 A.W.R. 419=147 Ind. Cas. 630.

—S. 302—Youth as extenuating circumstance.

Where a man of seventeen years of age is engaged in a murder under the influence of people very much older than himself, he may be awarded the lesser penalty, i.e., transportation for life instead of death, although he is involved in the conspiracy to commit the murder and has taken an actual part in the crime. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 786=36 P.L.R. 40=36 Cr.L.J. 313=153 Ind. Cas. 228.

—S. 302—Youth as extenuating circumstance.

The accused, a young man of 18 or 19 years of age, a month before the occurrence made indecent overtures to the deceased and asked him to have unnatural intercourse with him. He refused to do so and complained to his mother. In spite of being rebuked by the mother of the deceased and his own grandfather, the accused wanted to play with the deceased and on the latter's refusal, he got a churri and gave the deceased several stabs causing serious injuries:

Held, that in view of the most objectionable motive which the accused had for causing injuries to the deceased and on account of the number and nature of the serious injuries caused with a sharp-edged and pointed weapon of a formidable nature, no sentence less than that of a death could be passed on the accused whose youth was no extenuating circumstance. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 20 (21)=35 Cr.L.J. 619=148 Ind. Cas. 191.

—S. 302—Youth as extenuating circumstance.

There is no law which justifies a Court in not passing a sentence of death on any person merely because of his youth, and all persons who could understand the nature of their act are liable to the extreme penalty of the law, and although youth might be a circumstance to be taken into consideration in offences where the accused person was not fully able to understand the nature of his act or had been influenced by other persons, yet it was not so in a case where a youth deliberately murdered a small boy for motives of greed, being actuated to the crime by his own base nature. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 405=35 Cr.L.J. 1113=11 O.W.N. 851=150 Ind. Cas. 819.

—S. 302—Youth as extenuating circumstance.

Where a young man 22 years of age is convicted under S. 302, Penal Code, and he is found to have acted with deliberation, the mere fact of his youth is no circumstance for reducing the sentence of death passed on him. A.I.R. 1933 All. 939=35 Cr.L.J. 464=147 Ind. Cas. 676.

—S. 302—Youth as extenuating circumstance.

There is no hard and fast rule that because the murderer is of what is called tender age he must necessarily escape the normal penalty prescribed by the law. Age is no doubt a circumstance to be taken into consideration, but this has got to be taken into consideration along with various other circumstances present on the record and to which attention may be drawn either by the prosecution or by the defence. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 1 (2)=33 Cr.L.J. 837=140 Ind. Cas. 80 (F.B.).

—S. 302—Youth of accused.

Where a heinous crime has been carefully planned and carried out in a treacherous and cruel manner, the accused's youth alone cannot be considered to be an adequate ground for mitigation of punishment. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 956=35 Cr.L.J. 288=35 P.L.R. 115=146 Ind. Cas. 1061.

—S. 302.

Youth alone does not constitute an extenuating circumstance such as would justify the lesser penalty prescribed by the law. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 305=34 Cr.L.J. 720=34 P.L.R. 691=144 Ind. Cas. 294.

—S. 302.

Where a boy of 17 committed murder without premeditation under a sudden impulse:

Held, that he should be given a 'locus paenitentiae' and the irrevocable sentence of death should not be passed upon him.

Per Agha Haidar J. It is true that in older times boys of tender years used to be executed very often for petty crimes, but we are well on into the twentieth century and live under its humanitarian influences. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 229=34 P.L.R. 414=34 Cr.L.J. 375=142 Ind. Cas. 654.

—S. 302—Youth as extenuating circumstance.

There is no law which justifies a Court in not passing a sentence of death on any person merely because he is young. All persons who can understand the nature of their act are liable to the extreme penalty of the law. Youth may be a circumstance to be taken into consideration in offences where the accused person is not fully able to understand the nature of his act or has been influenced by older persons, but not in a case where a youth deliberately murders a small boy for motive of greed, being prompted to the crime by his own base nature. Sentence of transportation for life is imposed only where there are some extenuating circumstances and where sentence of death is not necessary in the interests of the public at large. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 52=9 O.W.N. 1161=34 Cr.L.J. 250 (1)=141 Ind. Cas. 747 (1).

—S. 302 — Boy of 18 acting under elder brother's compulsion.

Where a boy of 18 is convicted almost entirely on his own confession, and according to that confession he was acting under instructions from and semi-compulsion by his elder brother, who was the prime mover in the affair and who alone would benefit from the murder, the extreme penalty of the law is not called for. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 134=34 Cr.L.J. 835=144 Ind. Cas. 829.

—S. 302—Youth of offender.

The proposition that youth is not in itself a sufficient ground for reducing the punishment for murder from death to transportation for life is correct where a youth deliberately by himself sets out to kill another man. But where a youth is associated with older persons, it may be proper in certain cases to infer that he was influenced by the older and more mature persons and to inflict the lesser sentence. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 536=32 Cr.L.J. 645=32 P.L.R. 414=131 Ind. Cas. 122.

—S. 302.

Though mere youth may not in itself be a reason for not hanging a murderer, extreme youth may be such a reason. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 177=32 Cr.L.J. 682=131 Ind. Cas. 276.

—S. 302—Youth, how far an extenuating circumstance.

Youth alone is not in every case such an extenuating circumstance as would justify the imposition of the lesser penalty in cases of murder, but it should be taken into consideration with the other facts of the case.

Where, though the accused was aged only about 18, his attack on the deceased was obviously premeditated, and the murder was perpetrated in a cold-blooded manner while the deceased was peacefully engaged in his daily occupation of ploughing the fields and was unarmed.

Held, that under the circumstances, his youth was no sufficient ground to mitigate the sentence of death. A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 171=9 Rang. 81=32 Cr.L.J. 941=132 Ind. Cas. 716.

—S. 302—Sentence—Youth—No ground for lenience—Murder not wholly deliberate and cold blooded—Some provocation—Capital sentence not appropriate.

In cases where the murder has been deliberately planned and is essentially of a cold blooded and contemptible nature, the death sentence is appropriate whatever be the age of the accused provided his case does not come under S. 22, Madras Children Act 4 of 1920. But where the murder by a juvenile cannot be said to be wholly deliberate and cold blooded, and where there may be a certain amount of legitimate provocation rankling, which in an immature mind might assume an exaggerated importance, the capital sentence might assume as in certain cases not be the appropriate one. 1930 M.W.N. 681=32 M.L.W. 220=129 Ind. Cas. 228=53 Mad. 861= A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 972=59 M.L.J. 939.

—S. 302—Youth and promptings of veneration for founder of religion.

The mere fact that the murderer is only 19 or 20 years of age and that the act was prompted by feelings of veneration for the founder of his religion and anger at one who had scurrilously attacked him, is a wholly insufficient reason for not imposing the appropriate sentence provided by law. 120 Ind. Cas. 1=1930 Cr.C. 165=30 Cr.L.J. 1125=11 L.L.J. 533=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 157.

—S. 302—Youth of the offender.

A particularly cruel and cowardly murder was committed by a lad of about 19 or 20 without any apparent motive and the capital sentence was sought to be reduced:

Held, that the mere youth of the murderer was insufficient for not imposing the capital punishment and that the absence of an apparent motive could not be construed as indicating the existence of a provoking cause, which would amount to a mitigating circumstance. 120 Ind. Cas. 276=31 Cr.L.J. 81=1930 Cr.C. 18=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 50.

—S. 302—No ground for mitigation—Inability to understand nature of the act—Influenced by older persons—Extenuating circumstances.

There is no law which justifies a court in not passing a sentence of death on any person merely because he is young. All persons who can understand their acts are liable to the extreme penalty of the law. Youth may be a circumstance to be taken into consideration in offences where the accused person is not fully able to understand the nature of his act or has been influenced by older persons. The sentence of transportation for life is imposed in cases where there are in the opinion of the court some extenuating circumstances. 7 O. W. N. 767=1930 Cr. C. 965=32 Cr.L.J. 83=128 Ind. Cas. 80=A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 89.

—S. 302—Youth—A mere tool.

Youth alone does not constitute such an extenuating circumstance as would justify the imposition of the lesser penalty prescribed by the law.

But where a youth charged under S. 302 had no personal enmity with the victim, and he was found to be only a tool in the hands of the enemies of the victims:

Held: the extreme penalty of the law should not be exacted in the case. 110 Ind. Cas. 234=10 A.I.Cr.R. 501=29 Cr.L.J. 682=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 855.

—S. 302—No reason for not giving death sentence.

The mere fact that the murderer is 19 or 20 years of age is a wholly insufficient reason for not imposing the extreme penalty. 112 Ind. Cas. 345=29 Cr.L.J. 1017=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 531.

—S. 302—Brutal crime—No reason for mitigation.

Murder resulting in death is a particularly ruthless and brutal crime and therefore, the mere fact that the murderer is 18 years of age is a wholly insufficient reason for not imposing the appropriate sentence provided by law. A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 531, Foll. 107 Ind. Cas. 99=29 Cr.L.J. 211=9 A.I.Cr.R. 525 (Lah.).

—S. 302—Sentence—Youth of the offender—Some though not adequate provocation—Extreme penalty.

Where the accused had some provocation though not sudden and grave provocation, so as to reduce the offence to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and where he was only nineteen years old:

Held, that the extreme penalty of the law was not necessary and that transportation for life was enough. 99 Ind. Cas. 1017=27 P. L. R. 15=28 Cr.L.J. 217 (Lah.).

—S. 302—No reason for mitigation.

Although ordinarily in cases of deliberate murder the major sentence allowed by the law should be imposed, yet it cannot be affirmed that the tender age of an accused is not of itself a sufficient reason for passing the lesser sentence, i.e., transportation for life. Any definite standard as to the limit of age in this connexion cannot be laid down, as circumstances must vary with the particular case. A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 65, Diss. from. 96 Ind. Cas. 507=22 N.L.R. 104=27 Cr. L.J. 955=7 A.I.Cr.R. 37=A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 461.

—S. 302—Extreme youth.

Extreme youth of the offender was taken into consideration along with the absence of circumstance as to how murder took place as an extenuating circumstance for reducing the sentence of death under S. 302 to one of transportation for life. 88 Ind. Cas. 353=7 N.L.J. 144=26 Cr.L.J. 1121=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 115.

—S. 302—Motive for premeditated murder absent—Capital sentence not to be passed.

Where there was no motive for a premeditated murder and the probability was that there was a violent quarrel when the accused, a young man of 20 was taking his wife and child from a neighbouring village to his own village and he killed them on the way.

Held, that capital sentence in such a case should not be passed. 84 Ind. Cas. 653=26 Cr. L.J. 349=6 L.L.J. 323=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 654.

—S. 302—Youth—Lack of motive.

It is impossible to lay down that youth alone in every case would be such an extenuating circumstance as would justify the imposition of lesser penalty, but it must be taken into consideration with other facts of the case. It would be dangerous for the Court to hold that an inadequate reason for inflicting a severe blow on a vital part causing instantaneous death would be sufficient when taken with the accused's age to justify the lesser penalty. 1 Bur. L.J. 70=A.I.R. 1922 L.B. 34.

—S. 302—Offender's youth—Sentence.

In murder cases offender's youth is not generally extenuating but Court should use its discretion under S. 302, I.P.C. 9 L.B.R. 165=19 Cr.L.J. 648=11 Bur. L.T. 100=45 Ind. Cas. 840.

—S. 302—Extenuating circumstances—Youth—Ordinarily.

Youth is an extenuating circumstance but it does not mean that in every case of murder by a person under a certain age, the lesser penalty ought to be awarded. U.B.R. (1914) 11; 28=16 Cr.L.J. 95=26 Ind. Cas. 1007.

—S. 302—Youth—Sentence—Practice.

Youth is a ground to be taken into consideration in determining the punishment to be awarded for murder. 1 L.B.R. 359, Diss. 11 C.W.N. 904 Foll. The penal Code leaves it discretionary with judges, even in cases of murder to consider mitigating circumstances in awarding punishment. Punishment should be as moderate as is consistent with the object aimed at. The law indicates the gravity of an act by the maximum penalty and the Courts have to judge whether the act committed falls short of the maximum degree of gravity, and, if so, to what extent. (1911) 1 U.B.R. 87=12 Cr.L.J. 443=11 Ind. Cas. 792.

—S. 302—Old age of accused.

Old age is a point to be considered in awarding a sentence. But standing alone it is not enough to entitle the accused to the lesser penalty of transportation in a case of murder. 1937 M.W.N. 728.

—S. 302—Sex and age—Extenuating circumstance.

The age and sex of the accused convicted of murder and the fact that she has recently been delivered in jail may be taken into account by the Local Government, but these circumstances will not have any weight with Court and the revolting crime of murdering a child for the sake of its ornaments should be punished by the penalty of death. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 200=37 Cr.L.J. 1047=I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 78=164 Ind. Cas. 964.

—S. 302—Sentence—Age or sex—No reason for leniency—When may be considered.

The age or sex of a murderer cannot generally, of itself, be a sufficient reason for a leniency in sentence. If there are other reasons which very nearly justify the passing of a lesser sentence, but do not quite do so or when it is doubtful whether they do so or not, then the youth or sex of the criminal may certainly tip the scale to the side of mercy. 64 Ind. Cas. 277=18 N.L.R. 101=A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 65.

—S. 302.

It is undesirable that a girl of ten or eleven years of age should be sent to prison even for an offence of murder. In such a case S. 31 of the Reformatory Schools Act should be applied. 65 Ind. Cas. 609=23 Cr.L.J. 145=24 O.C. 305=A.I.R. 1921 Oudh 190.

—S. 302—Sex or age—No ground for altering a sentence.

Comparative lenity to a woman is a commonly accepted rule of practice, but in atrocious crimes the mere sex should not bar the imposition of a maximum sentence. Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Where a conviction is based merely on circumstantial evidence the age of the accused is an element to be taken into consideration in awarding sentence. 16 Cr.L.J. 20=26 Ind. Cas. 324 (Mad.)

—S. 302—Sentence for murder—Age of accused.

Where the accused, a girl of 16, was held guilty of deliberately killing her husband by means of arsenic poison which she mixed up with the food cooked and served up by herself to the husband: Held.—That in consideration of her age she should be transported for life instead of suffering the extreme penalty of death. (1907) 11 C.W.N. 904=6 Cr.L.J. 154.

8 (c). Sentence—Circumstantial evidence.

—S. 302.

It matters not how an accused's guilt is established whether by the testimony of eye-witnesses or by the testimony of combined circumstances provided that it is established beyond all reasonable doubt and the measure of proof must be the same in either case. Hence, the fact that the conviction is based on circumstantial evidence is no reason for not awarding capital punishment. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 120=(1940) 2 M.L.J. 895=1940 M.W.N. 1229=52 L.W. 853=I.L.R. —S. 302.

There is no rule of law that if there be no eye-witnesses to a murder, the accused should not be sentenced to death. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 180=14 P.L.T. 96=34 Cr.L.J. 395=142 Ind. Cas. 613 (2).

—S. 302—Sentence—Circumstantial evidence—Case clearly proved—No reason for lesser sentence.

In a case of murder the mere fact that the conviction is based on circumstantial evidence is no reason why a lesser sentence should be passed. If the case though depending on circumstantial evidence, is perfectly clear and conclusive and excludes all other reasonable hypotheses except the guilt of the accused, death sentence can be passed: 76 Ind. Cas. 97, not Foll. 1930 Cr.C. 865=A.I.R. 1930 Sind 225.

—S. 302—No ground for not passing death sentence.

The fact, that the conviction of a deliberate wife-murderer rests entirely on circumstantial evidence, is no ground whatever for not passing a sentence of death on him. 118 Ind. Cas. 817=1929 M.W.N. 270=2 M.Cr.C. 158=30 Cr.L.J. 971=1929 Cr.C. 138=A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 667.

—S. 302—Sentence—Circumstantial evidence.

Provided the court is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty of murder and that the circumstances of the case require the imposition of a death sentence, it is absolutely immaterial whether the conviction is based on direct or circumstantial evidence. It is only where the evidence leaves room for reasonable doubt on either point that the accused is entitled to the benefit of it. 61 Ind. Cas. 524=44 Mad. 443=13 M.L.W. 377=22 Cr.L.J. 396=A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 423=40 M.L.J. 464.

Where in a reference under S. 307, Cr.P. C., the High Court held, overruling the verdict of the jury, that the accused was guilty of murder:

Held, that in view of the verdict of the jury and the circumstantial nature of the evidence, the death sentence should not be awarded but that transportation for life was enough. 85 Ind. Cas. 833=26 Cr.L.J. 609=16 S.L.R. 143=A.I.R. 1921 Sind. 145.

—S. 302—Circumstantial evidence—Considerations of.

There is no principle of law which prohibits the imposition of a death sentence in cases where the evidence is purely circumstantial. 11 C.W.N. 904 Foll. 16 M.L.T. 535=1 L.W. 1007=(1915) M.W.N. 34=16 Cr.L.J. 38=26 Ind. Cas. 332.

8 (d). Sentence—Drunkenness.

—S. 302.

The mere fact that the accused was drinking before the occurrence took place does not minimise the nature of the offence especially when it is found that he ran to his house to fetch a balua and gave a severe blow with it on the head of the deceased. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 427=23 P.L.T. 763=43 Cr. L.J. 544=8 B.R. 542=199 Ind. Cas. 307.

—S. 302.

The law gives a discretion to Courts to impose the lesser penalty of transportation for the offence of murder, and the discretion must be exercised with due regard to the circumstances of each case. The discretion of Courts cannot be fettered by any hard and fast rule in this respect. The mere fact that a man was drunk would be no justification whatever for not imposing the capital sentence. But all the circumstances of the case have to be taken into consideration. A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 454=43 P.L.R. 698=43 Cr.L.J. 332=I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 39=198 Ind. Cas. 252.

—S. 302.

Where an offence committed is undoubtedly murder, the drunkenness of the accused is not sufficient to reduce the crime to anything below that of murder. But a drunken man may be provoked by a taunt which could not, in any way, ruffle the temper of a man who is in his sober senses. Where, therefore, an accused commits murder while drunk as a result of a provocation, however slight, it is a case in which maximum punishment should not be given.

[In this case the sentence of death was reduced to one of transportation for life.] A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 448=40 Cr.L.J. 67=178 Ind. Cas. 431.

—S. 302.

No general rule can be laid down that voluntary drunkenness is in all or even in the majority of cases, a reason for not passing the death sentence. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 477=31 Cr.L.J. 52=165 Ind. Cas. 762.

—S. 302.

Where the parties were drunk and the first blow was struck by the deceased, the lesser penalty should be imposed. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 10=35 Cr.L.J. 1065=149 Ind. Cas. 1176.

—S. 302.

Where there was evidence that the accused had been drinking shortly before the occurrence, the attack was entirely unpremeditated and committed without reason and the weapons used were not such weapons as any man would use who had formed a prior intention of killing his enemy, the sentence might be reduced to one of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 278=34 Cr.L.J. 1245=146 Ind. Cas. 216.

8 (e). Sentence—Duty of court.

—S. 302—Sentence—Lesser penalty—Grounds—Discretion and Duty of court.

The question whether on a conviction of murder the sentence of death or the lesser sentence of transportation for life should be passed is essentially a matter in the discretion of the convicting judge, but while exercising this discretion he must bear in mind the position that the usual sentence on such conviction is death unless there be any extenuating circumstance. The law requires the Judge to give reasons when he imposes the lesser penalty but the reasons given by him are not conclusive and are open to revision. It is only when any well-recognised ground is found to exist that the Judge is justified in withholding the capital sentence. It is impossible to lay down any general rule defining the classes of cases in which the lesser sentence may be imposed though from time to time certain circumstances have been recognised by the judges who had to consider this question as valid grounds for imposing such sentence. One of these is the extreme youth of the offender, however brutal or premeditated the offence; but there is no precedent for the proposition that a youth of 19 or 20 comes within this exception. Another ground for the lesser penalty is to be found in those cases where an offender, who does not come within the first exception, is young and acts at the instigation or under the influence of his elders. There are several cases in which young men of 20 and above have been awarded the lesser penalty because they joined their elders in the murder. Where the murder is committed in the course of a sudden quarrel and without premeditation or on the impulse of the moment it is usual not to pass the death sentence unless the circumstances be exceptional. In cases of premeditated murder, however, the usual sentence is death unless the conduct of the deceased furnishes grave though not sudden provocation for the murder, as for instance, where an aggrieved husband or other near relation of a woman murders a man who persists in offending the feelings of the aggrieved relative by publicly carrying on an immoral intrigue with the woman. There is still another class of cases where the usual sentence may be withheld. These are cases where a man is convicted of murder by reason of vicarious liability. Where death is intended and the murder is premeditated the offender should usually be sentenced to death irrespective of whether the vicarious liability arises by reason of S. 34 or S. 149, I. P. Code. But where the common object of an unlawful assembly is the beating of a person and death is not intended but is a likely consequence of the riot, the death sentence is withheld from those who are only constructively liable, but is imposed on the particular member of the unlawful assembly who brought about the death. These are some of the well-recognised cases where the lesser penalty may be awarded on a conviction of murder, but the classification is neither exhaustive nor absolute and many a case may arise which is not covered either by the rule or by the exception. In such cases the matter rests in the discretion of the convicting Judge which cannot be fettered by any hard and fast rule. 49 P.L.R. 137=A. I. R. 1948 Lah. 58=49 Cr.L.J. 26.

—S. 302.

A Judge is bound to pass a sentence of death on a person convicted of murder unless there are substantial reasons for not doing so. The reasons for passing the lesser sentence must be adequate and express. Too much leniency should not be exercised in favour of persons whose participation alone makes it possible that the crime could be committed, even if their participation was not due to any direct motive, but only to oblige a friend. A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 140=1944 A.W.R. 275=1944 O.W.N. 419=219 Ind. Cas. 183=46 Cr.L.J. 532.

—S. 302.

The law gives the Sessions Judge the option of sentencing a person convicted of murder either to death or to transportation for life. Where there are extenuating circumstances, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to award the lesser sentence and not to pass the sentence of death. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 50=52 L.W. 472=1940 M.W.N. 943=(1940) 2 M.L.J. 492=42 Cr.L.J. 270=192 Ind. Cas. 278.

—S. 302.

Section 302 provides two punishments. In the absence of any extenuating circumstances, the sentence of death is the only appropriate sentence. The Court whose duty it is to award punishment must exercise its own discretion. The discretion is to be exercised in a judicial manner and not arbitrarily. A.I.R. 1940 All. 480=1940 A.L.J. 607=42 Cr.L.J. 115=1940 A.W.R. 480=191 Ind. Cas. 303.

—S. 302.

In the case of a cold-blooded and brutal murder carried out by the accused with considerable amount of determination, the only appropriate sentence for an offence is one of death. The fact that the sentence of death passed on the co-accused was commuted by the executive Government is no judicial consideration for not passing the sentence of death on the accused. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 494=42 Cr.L.J. 156=191 Ind. Cas. 376.

—S. 302.

It is no part of the duty of a Judge to be influenced by public feeling. His duty is to administer the law. The law says that the proper sentence for murder is death and whenever a person is convicted of an offence punishable with death, and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall, in its judgment, state the reasons why the sentence of death was not passed. The state of public feeling is not an admissible reason for refraining from passing the sentence of death. Nor is it permissible to refrain from sentencing the murderers to death merely because their numbers exceed the numbers of their victims. When a number of persons have together planned and executed the murder of a single person, each of them must be sentenced to death unless there are some legal reasons for not doing so. A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 109=48 L.W. 730=1938 M.W.N. 1166=(1938) 2 M.L.J. 1028=40 Cr.L.J. 249=179 Ind. Cas. 682.

—S. 302.

The judge is either satisfied that the accused is guilty or he is not. There can be only two positions. If he is satisfied, the accused must get the normal punishment; if he is not, the accused must be acquitted. There is no middle course at all in judging the guilt of the accused. A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 47=41 Cr.L.J. 132=185 Ind. Cas. 208.

—S. 302—Doubt in guilt of accused—Duty of Court.

The I.P.C. provides two penalties for murder, namely death and the lesser penalty of transportation. The lesser sentence was never intended to be imposed in a case where there appears to be some doubt. If the Court at the end of a case is left in any reasonable doubt about the matter, it must acquit, but on the other hand if it is left in no reasonable doubt concerning the guilt of the accused, the appropriate penalty must in all cases be imposed. Where there is a doubt in a murder case the Court should not and cannot pass a sentence of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1935 All. 919=1935 A.W.R. 806=36 Cr.L.J. 1496=158 Ind. Cas. 1041.

—S. 302.

Where the assault is of a murderous and brutal nature and the injuries are inflicted deliberately on a vital part of the body, namely the head, and death has ensued, the accused should be sentenced to capital punishment. A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 110=36 Cr.L.J. 249=11 O.W.N. 1543=153 Ind. Cas. 81.

—S. 302.

The fact that the assessors gave their opinion that the accused was not guilty is no reason for passing the lesser sentence. Responsibility for the sentence rests with the Judge. A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 307=34 Cr.L.J. 1168=30 N.L.R. 9=146 Ind. Cas. 118.

—S. 302.

Per Agha Haider, J. The extenuating circumstances which would justify a Court in inflicting the lesser penalty upon a person convicted of a murder are well understood and a Court cannot make a departure and introduce an entirely novel extenuating circumstance which has not so far occurred to another Court. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 500=33 P.L.R. 580=33 Cr.L.J. 497 (2)=137 Ind. Cas. 691.

—S. 302—Sentence—Death.

Unless extenuating circumstances can be found a murderer must be sentenced to death. 124 Ind. Cas. 841=11 P.L.T. 166=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 252.

—S. 302—Sentence—Crime to absolve crime.

Per Percival, J. C. and Wild, A. J. C.—Where an accused commits one criminal offence, it is no palliation of his guilt that to absolve himself from punishment he commits another and more grievous offence, namely murder.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—It is not improper to inflict a lesser sentence where there are circumstances demanding the exercise of such discretion as for instance the absence of strong motive coupled with the possibility of the murder having been committed without premeditation and under temporary derangement of the mind due to the fear of being prosecuted and convicted for a criminal offence. But the exercise of such discretionary powers under S. 302, Penal Code, in any particular case must depend on its own facts considered in the light of various circumstances such as the magnitude of the mischief which the crime has a tendency to produce, the effect of the punishment in preventing similar crimes the motive or inducement to the crime, aggravating or instigating circumstances and the like. When murder is committed for lust or for rape perhaps it is necessary to take the life of the murderer not so much as to prevent him from committing similar offences but to serve as a deterrent to others for committing similar offences. Again when a crime of a particular character is rampant in any locality, extreme penalty of law is necessary to serve as a deterrent. 1930 Cr. C. 865=A.I.R. 1930 Sind 225.

—S. 302—Death sentence—Mitigation.

Where a person is convicted under S. 302 of murder sentence of death should ordinarily be imposed unless there are mitigating circumstances which would justify a court in awarding a lesser sentence. 75 Ind. Cas. 359=6 L.L.J. 62=24 Cr. L. J. 935=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 598.

[In view of the evidence showing that the murder was unpremeditated and that the act was committed in sudden anger, the death sentence was changed to one of transportation for life.] A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 83=(1945) 2 M. L. J. 547=1945 M.W.N. 732.

—S. 302—Single blow in heat of passion.

Striking of fatal blow preceded by exchange of abuse and a struggle between the accused and deceased—Accused acted without premeditation in a moment of anger and dealt a single blow—Sentence of death, held, should be reduced to transportation for life. 1936 O.W.N. 597.

—S. 302.

The extreme penalty of the law is not called for where the accused gave only one blow and no more and he gave that blow in the heat of passion aroused at the sight of his brother-in-law being assaulted in public. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 115=37 Cr. L. J. 467=161 Ind. Cas. 578.

—S. 302.

The extreme penalty of law should not be passed, where the attack is unpremeditated and the accused acts under the impulse of the moment. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 94=16 Lah. 589=36 Cr. L. J. 1335=37 P.L.R. 705=158 Ind. Cas. 336.

—S. 302.

The deceased, a woman, visited the accused's house and presented a piece of roti to his female child who was about a year old, in the presence of its parents. After the visitor had left, the child, though previously perfectly well and playing about began to be ill after having eaten the bread given to her by the deceased. It suffered from cramps and lock jaw and eventually died in a few hours. The accused believing his only child to have been poisoned by the visitor, took his balua, proceeded to the visitor's house, and dealt her violent blows one at least of which was necessarily fatal.

Held, that the accused was beset himself with grief and having connected his bereavement with the visit and gift of bread by the deceased rushed away before he had any time to think and committed crime and in view of this and in consideration of the class to which he belonged, the lesser sentence should be passed on the accused. A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 356=35 Cr. L. J. 1128=150 Ind. Cas. 543 (2).

—S. 302—Requisites of Excep. 4 satisfied—Other facts prove murder—Death sentence not called for.

Where the fatal attack was not a premeditated one and the victims were injured in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel and the offenders did neither take undue advantage nor acted in a cruel or unusual manner, but from the other facts of the case the case would not come under Excep. 4 to S. 300:

Held, that the offence was one of murder, but that the extreme penalty of the law should not be exacted in the case. 105 Ind. Cas. 678=26 P.L.R. 363=28 Cr. L. J. 966=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 93.

—S. 302—Sentence—Heat of passion.

Where there has been some provocation and there is no premeditation, and the crime has been committed in the heat of passion, it is not necessary to inflict the death penalty. Transportation for life is enough. 98 Ind. Cas. 608=7 L. R. A. Cr. 186=27 Cr. L. J. 1392=A.I.R. 1927 All. 105.

—S. 302—Deep wrong suffered—Losing head—Massacre not ordered by him—Nor present at the scene.

In this case the Court found that the accused was suffering doubtless under a deep sense of wrong and helplessness and lost his head and acted as he did. And taking all the circumstances into consideration and in view of the facts that he did not order the final massacre in the Chauhundi and that the evidence showed that he did not enter the enclosure till all the killing was over, it was ordered that he should not suffer the extreme penalty of the law, and that the sentence be reduced to one of transportation for life. 68 Ind. Cas. 113=3 Lah. 144=4 L.L.J. 91=9 P.W.R. Cr. 1922=23 Cr.L.J. 513=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 1.

—S. 302—Sentence for murder under extenuating circumstances and otherwise.

In the absence of extenuating circumstances, death sentence should ordinarily be inflicted in a case of murder and the sentence for transportation for life should not be passed merely because there are no aggravating circumstances in the case. The commission of murder without premeditation, in the heat of passion, upon a sudden quarrel, is not an extenuating circumstance. 18 Cr.L. J. 113=37 Ind. Cas. 465 (L. Bur.).

8 (i). Sentence—Ignorance.

—S. 302.

Sentence of death awarded for the cruel and wanton murder cannot be reduced to one of transportation for life on the ground that the murder was one committed by ignorant men disturbed and excited by the events of those days when communal feeling was extreme. A.I.R.

1941 Sind 129=I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 257=42 Cr.L.J. 741=195 Ind. Cas. 458.

Where an illiterate young woman living in the midst of environments reminiscent only of the Dark Ages and where gross ignorance and superstition prevailed and throughout whose life, all opportunities of receiving education and enlightenment had been denied, believed that the death of her children was the direct result of the influence of the 'evil shadow' cast upon her by another woman, her husband's brother's wife, and in this superstitious state of mind picked up the latter's child and caused its death.

Held, that under the circumstances it was sufficient that the transportation for life was inflicted on her and in view of the extraordinary circumstances of the case, the Court would invite the attention of the Local Government to take steps for further mitigation of the sentence under S. 401, Criminal P. C. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 718=34 Cr.L.J. 1251=146 Ind. Cas. 228.

—S. 302.

Where a person is killed by the accused who are of primitive belief and rudimentary intelligence that the victim is a sorcerer, the extreme penalty of death is not necessary to be inflicted. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 815=33 Cr.L.J. 663=139 Ind. Cas. 81 (F.B).

—S. 302—Sentence—Ignorance played upon—Sufficient reason for passing lesser sentence.

Where the accused were ignorant peasants and were led to commit offences under Ss. 49 and 302 of the Penal Code by misrepresentations and preposterous promises of millennium which was to be brought about by courage and resolution on their part and were some of them believed that the person whose orders they believed they were carrying out was a worker of miracles. Held, that this was a sufficient reason for passing on the accused the lesser sentence of transportation for life. 92 Ind. Cas. 145=4 L.R.A.Cr. 145=27 Cr.L.J. 193=A.I.R. 1924 All. 233.

8 (j). Sentence—Legal sentence.

—Ss. 302 and 396.

Section 396 differs from S. 302 in that whereas a sentence of death should necessarily not follow a conviction under the former, when death has been caused under the latter a sentence of death should follow, unless reasons are shown for giving a lesser sentence. A.I.R. 1938 All. 625=1938 A.L.J. 913=I.L.R. (1938) All. 875=1938 A.W.R. 642=40 Cr.L.J. 132=178 Ind. Cas. 694.

—S. 302.

Where five persons are convicted under S. 302 for the murder of two men, the reasoning that five persons should not be sentenced to death for the murder of two, is not in accordance with law and cannot be sustained. A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 497=18 P.L.T. 416=38 Cr.L.J. 1007=3 B.R. 794=170 Ind. Cas. 785.

A person charged with an offence under S. 302, read with S. 120-B, I.P.C., can be convicted either under S. 302, read with S. 109, if the conspiracy to murder is established, or under S. 302, read with S. 115, if such conspiracy is not established. In either case he cannot be sentenced to 10 years' rigorous imprisonment and such punishment is illegal. A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 578=I.L.R. (1937) I Cal. 484=39 Cr.L.J. 31=171 Ind. Cas. 944.

—S. 302.

A sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment passed upon an accused person in respect of offence under S. 302-149 is illegal. [The sentence was enhanced to a sentence of transportation for life which is the minimum punishment that can be imposed upon an accused who has been convicted of an offence under S. 302, I.P.C.] A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 190=1935 O.W.N. 145=153 Ind. 8 (k). Sentence—Motive.

—S. 302—Sentence—Accused taking part to oblige his friend.

Where a murder was of the most brutal kind and there was no extenuating circumstance the fact that one of the accused took part in the murder simply to oblige the other accused who was his thick friend, is an inadequate reason for imposing on him the lesser sentence of transportation for life. 4 A.I.Cr.D. 123=A.I.R. 1950 E.P. 159=52 P.L.R. 73=51 Cr.L.J. 747.

—S. 302—Sentence—Motive not proved—Possibility of cause for quarrel—Proper sentence.

Although the accused is convicted of the offence of murder under S. 302 when the prosecution fails to prove the alleged motive, and there is a possibility of a reasonable cause for a quarrel between the accused and the deceased, the extreme penalty of the law is not called for. 231 Ind. Cas. 400=48 Cr.L.J. 786.

—S. 302.

Held, that there was sufficient justification for not imposing the capital sentence. In the first place, no motive for the commission of the offence had been proved by any reliable evidence. In the second place, he was being invited by others to inflict injuries and the deceased might have avoided taking unnecessary risk by accepting the challenge. Hence, a sentence of transportation for life was a proper one. A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 454=43 P.L.R. 698=43 Cr.L.J. 332=1.L.R. (1943) Lah. 39=198 Ind. Cas. 252.

—S. 302.

Held, that the unnecessary brutality of the murder, the large number of injuries inflicted not only on the neck, but also on the chest and face, the fact that the accused herself brought the neighbours on the scene by her cries, and her failure to make even a pretence of grief by shedding tears, are, however, features which, together with the want of an intelligible motive, and the full confession made by her, seem to bring this case within the class in which it is not usual to pass the capital sentence. A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 245=2 B.R. 410=37 Cr.L.J. 543=162 Ind. Cas. 25.

—S. 302.

The fact that the accused had no personal grudge against the deceased and was either a hired murderer or one who was ready to kill another to please his master or landlord is no ground for not giving him the capital sentence. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 623=34 Cr.L.J. 372=34 P.L.R. 427=142 Ind. Cas. 620.

—S. 302.

The fact that the motive was not personal enmity but merely a desire to injure the head of the Government does not justify a refusal to enforce the ordinary punishment provided by law when a criminal has been convicted. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 305=34 Cr.L.J. 720=34 P.L.R. 691=144 Ind. Cas. 294.

8 (m). Sentence—Premeditation.

—Ss. 302, 149—Premeditated and brutal attack on deceased by several accused—Injuries sufficient to cause death—Offence under Ss. 302/149—Sentence of death on elderly accused, held proper but in case of one who was young, commuted to transportation for life.

Five accused who were armed with lathis made a premeditated and brutal attack upon the two deceased. One of the victims had ten injuries two of which were on the head and had fractured the skull. According to medical evidence, each of these injuries was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course. The other victim had twenty-five injuries spread on all parts of his body. His right ulna bone and two ribs were fractured. Death was due to shock caused by all the injuries collectively:

Held, that taking into consideration the concerted attack to which the dead men were subjected and the multiple injuries that were inflicted upon them, there could not be any doubt that the intention of their assailants was to kill them or at least to inflict injuries that were sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course. They were, therefore, rightly convicted under Ss. 302 (1) 149, I. P. C.:

Held, further that the sentence of death passed upon the four elderly accused was proper as the offence was premeditated and brutal and there were no extenuating circumstances but as the fifth accused was only twenty years old and was the nephew of the main accused and could, therefore, be said to have acted under the influence of the older members of the family, particularly his uncle, his sentence should be commuted from death to transportation for life. A. I. R. 1946 Lah. 229=47 Cr. L. J. 225=221 Ind. Cas. 629.

—S. 302—Plea of belief that accused's wife was carrying on intrigue with the deceased.

S, the accused, suspected G, the deceased, of carrying on an intrigue with his wife. On one night, S found that his wife who had been sleeping with him during night was missing. He thought that she must have gone to G and they must be having intercourse. Being provoked by this thought, he went to the place where G and G's wife lived and slept. S picked up a hatchet and when he went to the house of the deceased and saw a woman sleeping with G, he believed that she must be his own wife. He, therefore, inflicted a couple of injuries upon each of them with the result that both of them died.

Held, that the offence was premeditated and brutal and the fact that S committed it under the belief that G was carrying on an intrigue with his wife could not be regarded as an extenuating circumstance. A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 91=47 P.L.R. 11.

—S. 302.

Where the case is not one where a man and woman were surprised in the act of guilty intercourse, but it is a case where the brother of the woman, with others deliberately armed themselves with weapons and came and murdered the two with premeditation and in cold blood, even though the custom of karokari among Baluchis is a common custom, the death sentence should be confirmed. A.I.R. 1943 Sind 237=I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 326=45 Cr.L.J. 138=209 Ind. Cas. 335.

—S. 302—Proper sentence—Deliberate action

A band of armed Baluchis, setting out deliberately to execute a sentence of death which they or others had passed, committed a deliberate, audacious and premeditated murder. There was no immediate provocation and hasty action in response but the accused set themselves as executioners:

Held, that the only proper sentence was the sentence of death. But as Government had not moved, for enhancement of sentence of transportation for life and some considerable time had passed, the sentences were confirmed and not enhanced. A.I.R. 1937 Sind 239=30 S.L.R. 354=38 Cr.L.J. 953=170 Ind. Cas. 605.

—S. 302.

Where a brutal crime was premeditated and carried out in a most brutal manner on a defenceless boy who was sound asleep when he was attacked:

8 (n). Sentence—Premeditation absent.

—S. 302.

Where the murder was not premeditated or there were reasons for disagreement which might very well have provoked the quarrel, it is not necessary to make a recommendation for commutation of death penalty to the Government. —S. 302.

Where the offence committed was not premeditated in any way but was the result of impulse and temper, the proper sentence is one of transportation for life, though the assault was a violent one. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 326=1940 M.W.N. 963=52 L.W. 689=42 Cr.L.J. 558=194 Ind. Cas. 332.

—S. 302.

—S. 302.

Where the murder is not a premeditated one but the result of anger and passions engendered in a sudden quarrel, it is not a case where a sentence of death is necessary in the interest of justice. A.I.R. 1935 All. 346 (2)=1935 A.L.J. 54=57 A. 717=1935 A.W.R. 64=36 Cr.L.J. 438=153 Ind. Cas. 999 (2).

—S. 302—No premeditation—Sudden quarrel and abuse—Sentence.

There was no premeditation; there was a sudden quarrel and abuse, and in the heat of the moment, one blow was struck at the deceased:

—S. 302—Absence of premeditation.

There was a fight going on between two men both unarmed. The weaker one called to the villagers to separate them and the accused came up and stabbed the man who had got the better of the struggle. There was no premeditation at all, merely an excess of zeal, possibly due, in part at any rate, to the fact that the appellant had been drinking:

Held, that the extreme penalty was not called for though the offence was undoubtedly murder. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 408=37 Cr.L.J. 214=159 Ind. Cas. 1058.

—S. 302—Sentence—Sudden quarrel—Premeditation absent—Accused of a peaceful trading class.

But the fact that the assault followed sudden quarrel without premeditation is an extenuating circumstance as also the fact that accused belongs to a peaceful trading class and extreme penalty of law should not be inflicted and sentence should be reduced to transportation for life. 1930 Cr.C. 162=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 154.

—S. 302—Sentence—Premeditation absent—Transportation, not death sentence.

While a wrestling match was going on, the deceased, a Kamin boy, obstructed the sight of an old Jat and consequently there was exchange of abuse. The old man ordered his friends to kill the deceased. Thereupon the appellants, the sons of the old man and his followers assaulted the deceased with lathis and dangs which resulted in the death of the boy and grievous hurt to his father who tried to protect the deceased. The deceased and his father were defenceless, not having even a stick with them.

Held: that the appellants who attacked the deceased with dangs were guilty under S. 302 but as the elements of preparation and premeditation were absent, the sentence to transportation for life should be passed. 106 Ind. Cas. 451=9 L.L.J. 262=28 P.L.R. 674=29 Cr.L.J. 35=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 516.

—S. 302—Capital sentence may not be passed.

Where the accused using his spear as lathi gives a violent blow over the head which has the result of fracturing the skull of the deceased and killing him on the spot, the offence committed is the offence of murder but where it is not premeditated, the Court may refuse to pass capital sentence. 101 Ind. Cas. 484=4 O.W.N. 445=28 Cr. L.J. 452=8 A.I.Cr.R. 88=A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 174.

8(o). Sentence—Provocation.

—S. 302—Exchange of abuse.

The mere fact that the attack may have been preceded by some exchange of abuse between the assailants and the deceased, is not a mitigating circumstance. A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 206=46 P.L.R. 69=45 Cr.L.J. 660=213 Ind.Cas. 355.

—S. 302.

Where it was not shown how the attack started and it was possible that there was some sort of altercation and the deceased might have been provocative, the capital sentence was not called for even though the accused was the aggressor. A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 301=44 P.L.R. 457=44 Cr.L.J. 117=203 Ind.Cas. 605.

—S. 302.

The fact that the accused found the deceased in a compromising position with his wife, is not sufficient to take the offence outside the category of murder where he had made a murderous attack on him seeing it. It only shows that the affair was a sudden and unpremeditated one calling for transportation for life and not death. A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 37=43 P.L.R. 672=43 Cr.L.J. 370=I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 77=198 Ind. Cas. 441.

—S. 302.

The meeting of the accused and the deceased was a chance meeting. The blow was not struck until there had been some interchange of abuse between the two, only one blow was struck suggesting very strongly that there was no meditation to kill. The blow was a deliberate blow:

Held, that the sentence should be reduced from death to transportation for life. A.I.R. 1942 Sind 11=I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 525=43 Cr.L.J. 308=198 Ind. Cas. 110.

—S. 302.

Where there was some provocation regarding the circumstances surrounding the episode the proper sentence was one of transportation for life and not one of death. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 251=1940 M.W.N. 811=42 Cr.L.J. 668=195 Ind. Cas. 64.

—S. 302.

Insulting language used by the deceased provides ground for mitigation of sentence. 1941 M.W.N. 872.

—S. 302.

A man who is willing to have casual intercourse with a woman, treating her as a prostitute, may nevertheless justifiably resent any suggestion amounting to importunity that he should instal her as a permanent mistress, which would result in heavy caste penalties. Then if on her insistence, he loses control and gives a lathi blow on her head causing her immediate death, the accused is entitled to a lesser penalty and not that of death. A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 86=1940 N.L.J. 623=I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 679=42 Cr.L.J. 390=193 Ind. Cas. 6.

—S. 302 — Extenuating circumstances — Sentence.

The accused was a tea-garden cooly. His wife left him and went to live with another cooly. After a few days she was brought back and the accused lived with her for a short time, but she again left the accused and resided with her paramour and refused to return back. Thereupon, the accused became angry and stated that he did not want the woman back and returned back to his hut but on the same day he went to the place where his wife was living and murdered her. The accused was a man of humble origin and of limited intelligence. He was 25 years old and his domestic life was extremely trying and unhappy. His character throughout had been exemplary and he stated that his wife had brought shame upon him by her conduct and it would be difficult for him to face public opinion apart from his relatives:

Held, that these were the circumstances which the Court should take into consideration and which could justify the Court in passing the alternative sentence of transportation for life rather than the extreme penalty of death. I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 518.

—S. 302 — Unchastity of wife.

The deceased was a person of loose character and while living in her parents' village, she conceived from a stranger and came to her husband's house in a stage of pregnancy. She then gave birth to an illegitimate child in his house, and he was chafed by his fellow villagers who "congratulated" him on the birth of a son, whereupon he murdered her:

Held, that this was not a case in which the extreme penalty of the law should be imposed on him. The ends of justice would be met by imposing a sentence of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 556=39 Cr.L.J. 769=40 P.L.R. 854=176 Ind. Cas. 666.

—S. 302.

In case of great provocation the lesser punishment of transportation for life should be inflicted instead of death-sentence. (1937) 39 P.L.R. 741.

—S. 302.

Where an accused on refusal by his concubine to go on an errand beats her and after beating her goes to a pig-sty not far away and fetches a heavy rice pounder and hits her on her head thus causing death, he cannot claim the benefit of lighter penalty on the score of sudden provocation. 1937 M.W.N. 549.

—S. 302.

Held, however, that in view of the fact that the accused received a certain amount of provocation, and acted without premeditation, there was just sufficient reason to substitute for the sentence of death the sentence of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 457=38 Cr.L.J. 938=1937 O.W.N. 917=170 Ind. Cas. 341.

—S. 302.

Held, that the provocation received, though not sufficient to reduce the crime from that of murder to one of culpable homicide, may nevertheless have been in its cumulative effect so exasperating as to render the crime one which might be punished in a manner similar to that in which the offence of culpable homicide might be punished in somewhat similar circumstances. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 4=38 Cr.L.J. 366=166 Ind. Cas. 994.

—S. 302 — Intention sudden and impulse momentary—Whether mitigates offence.

That the intention was sudden and the impulse momentary, and even uncontrollable, is no mitigation unless it can be shown that the act was the result of grave and sudden provocation as laid down in Excep. 1 to S. 300. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 274=39 Cr.L.J. 92=172 Ind. Cas. 204.

—S. 302.

The mere fact that a woman has been unfaithful to her husband is not in itself sufficient ground for substitution of lesser sentence where there has been deliberate premeditation. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 580=1936 Cr.C. 651.

—S. 302.

Although provocation may not amount to provocation of a nature which would reduce the crime to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, yet it is a factor which must be taken into consideration when considering the question of sentence. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 442=37 Cr.L.J. 1119=14 R. 643=165 Ind. Cas. 245.

—S. 302—Drunken state of accused.

Although a provocation which is not of a kind such as to reduce the offence of the accused to culpable homicide, yet it may be taken into account in deciding whether sentence of death should be passed and in assessing this provocation the Court is entitled to take into account the drunken condition of the accused at the time and the effect of this drunkenness upon his sensibilities. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 325=37 Cr.L.J. 902=164 Ind. Cas. 206.

—S. 302—Accused suspecting son of deceased of having murdered his brother—Murder of deceased.

The accused's brother had been murdered and the accused had lodged a report at the Police Station charging amongst others the son of the deceased. Finding that the Police had taken no action in the matter, he went out with a dao and instead of attacking the son he attacked the deceased:

Held, (Per Mosley and Mackney, J.; Baguley, J. contra) that the accused's suspicion that the deceased's son had murdered his brother was no palliation of or justification for the accused's conduct in murdering the father and that the sentence of death was proper. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 38=37 Cr.L.J. 297=160 Ind. Cas. 466.

—S. 302—Extenuating circumstances.

The evidence for the prosecution and the accused's confession showed that the accused was overcome with passion at the insults which his brother had heaped on him in the presence of his friends, and that it was under the influence of a passion almost amounting to insanity that he procured and concealed a dao, made his preparation for the crime, and actually committed the crime. The crime was, in a sense premeditated, inasmuch as the accused appeared to have thought it out carefully beforehand, and to have procured and concealed the dao for the purpose of killing his brother. At the same time, the period that lapsed from the moment that the idea of killing his brother entered the accused's mind, to the time when he actually carried out his purpose, was very short perhaps only one or two hours, and during this period the accused must still have been smarting under the insults which his brother is said to have heaped upon him in the presence of his friends:

Held, that the accused clearly had some provocation although the provocation was not such as could operate to take the offence out of the section, that is to say, to convert the offence from one of murder to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. At the same time, the fact that the accused did commit the murder under the influence of such provocation, is one to which great weight ought to be attached in considering the question of sentence. These facts considered with the age of the accused and the class to which he belonged and the state of mind that he was in at the time of the crime, justified infliction of the lesser penalty for the offence. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 591=36 Cr.L.J. 1254=39 C.W.N. 262=158 Ind. Cas. 67.

—S. 302—Deceased paramour of accused persisting in carrying on illicit intimacy—Accused getting disgusted with accused—Poisoning—Sentence.

The deceased was the paramour of the accused and she got disgusted with her paramour as he would not allow her to discontinue sexual intercourse with him in spite of the fact that she was suffering from some female complaint. Her husband too coming to know of the liaison began to maltreat her. She tried to get the land-lord of the deceased to turn him out of the village. Failing to achieve this object she decided to get rid of him by poisoning. She was tried, convicted and sentenced to death:

Held, that this was not a fit case in which the extreme penalty permissible under the law should be exacted and that the sentence of death might be commuted to one of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 673=35 P.L.R. 559=36 Cr. L. J. 247=152 Ind. Cas. 1077.

—S. 302—Intrigue with girl betrothed to accused.

In view of the fact that the deceased was persisting in his intrigues with the girl who was betrothed to one of the accused, the capital sentence was not called for. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 239=35 Cr. L. J. 1476=151 Ind. Cas. 1012.

—S. 302.

Accused strongly suspecting fidelity of his wife—Summoning of paramour—Accused acting with deliberation—Confession by wife in presence of paramour—Accused stabbing paramour to death—Lesser penalty inflicted. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 176=39 L.W. 190=1933 M.W.N. 543=65 M.L.J. 213=35 Cr.L.J. 694=148 Ind. Cas. 590.

—S. 302—Jealousy in intrigue.

The mere fact that the accused was suffering the pangs of jealousy, which drove him to commit the murder, does not furnish any ground for saying that he received any provocation at all of any kind. The fact that the deceased fell in love with the same woman the accused was in love with and the fact that the deceased was not prepared to give up his illicit connection with that woman at the bidding of accused, can hardly be said to be conduct which gave grave provocation to the accused and will not mitigate his crime of brutal murder committed after premeditation. A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 222=35 Cr.L.J. 894=11 O.W.N. 636=149 Ind. Cas. 69.

—S. 302—Accused having illicit relations with deceased for long time with husband's connivance—Death of husband—Deceased commencing intrigue with another man—Accused killing deceased.

Where the accused was having illicit relations with a woman with the connivance of her husband and after the death of the husband the woman was found to have commenced intrigues with another man at which the accused remonstrated with her but on her persisting to go with the new paramour, he killed the woman:

Held, that although the relations between the accused and the deceased were illicit, having regard to human nature, it must be considered natural that after a long period of years, the accused should look on the deceased as his woman and a woman who was bound to render him fidelity, and that in the circumstances the commencement of an intrigue between her and another man being a matter which would cause provocation to the accused, the sentence should be reduced from that of death to one of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1933 All. 533=35 Cr.L.J. 232=146 Ind. Cas. 929.

—S. 302—Provocation.

The fact that the deceased had been carrying on an illicit intrigue with the wife of the accused is sufficient reason for not imposing the extreme penalty on the accused. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 382=10 O.W.N. 771=35 Cr.L.J. 189 (2)=146 Ind. Cas. 817.

—S. 302.

Although a provocation be not grave and sudden so as to reduce the offence of murder to that of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, yet it may be sufficient ground for not sentencing accused to the extreme penalty of death. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 302=33 P.L.R. 154=33 Cr.L.J. 577=138 Ind. Cas. 321.

—S. 302.

Provocation though not grave and sudden, e. g., vulgar abuse, may be a sufficient reason for not imposing the capital sentence. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 369=33 Cr.L.J. 338=33 P.L.R. 382=136 Ind. Cas. 715.

—S. 302.

Where the complainant's side deliberately provoked a conflict and there was no previous intention on the part of the accused to kill anybody the proper sentence would be one of transportation of life. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 5=32 P.L.R. 810=33 Cr.L.J. 184=135 Ind. Cas. 670.

—S. 302.

Where the provocation is not grave and sudden, the offence committed is murder but the accused may be awarded the lesser penalty. 1931 M.W.N. 134.

—S. 302.

Where a person who was of immoral character, contracted criminal intimacy with the wives of the accused and some other women of the mouza, and the accused conspiring with some others deliberately murdered him by cutting his throat with an axe:

Held, that as there was grave provocation a sentence of transportation for life would sufficiently meet the ends of justice. 131 Ind. Cas. 431=13 N. L. J. 107=32 Cr. L. J. 712.

—Ss. 302 and 300—Provocation—Striking to death with hatchet with knowledge of consequence—Result of foul language—Mitigation.

Where the accused knew what he was doing when he struck the deceased on the head with a hatchet and also knew that his act was imminently dangerous to life he can be rightly convicted under S. 302.

But where there is no premeditation nor any enmity between the accused and the deceased or his relation and the attack on the deceased is the result of foul language used by him, the extreme penalty of law is not called for and sentence of transportation for life is sufficient to meet the case. A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 545.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Improper overtures by step-mother to step-son—Not sufficient provocation—Lesser sentence.

When the deceased makes improper overtures to the accused who is her step-son and the latter in a fit of resentment stabs her with a knife to death, the act of the deceased does not amount to grave and sudden provocation and the accused is guilty of murder. But the act, however, may be taken into consideration and is a sufficient ground for not imposing the maximum penalty of death. 121 Ind. Cas. 185=31 Cr. L. J. 229 =A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 415.

—S. 302—Sentence—Grave provocation.

The deceased was seen talking to her paramour L, who had been following her from place to place, and when reprimanded by the accused she replied that she did not like to live with him but would again elope with L. She persisted in this statement and repeated it shortly before the occurrence which resulted in accused strangulating her to death.

Held: that the accused was guilty of murder but under the circumstances the case was a fit one for lesser penalty than death. 11 L.L.J. 461=1930 Cr.C. 179=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 171.

—Ss. 300 and 302—Provocation—Wife abducted and kept in haveli—Death penalty not proper.

Where the wife of one of the accused appellants is abducted with the help of the deceased and kept in his haveli from time to time, the appellants being all near relatives have cause to be angry with the deceased. Therefore, this is not a proper case to impose death penalty on the murderer. 120 Ind. Cas. 6=11 L.L.J. 299=1929 Cr. C. 420=30 Cr. L. J. 1126=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 788.

—S. 302—Extreme penalty—Not to be exacted.

The extreme penalty of the law should not be exacted under S. 302, in the case of murder committed on provocation which though not sudden is undoubtedly grave and likely to leave its sting behind. 116 Ind. Cas. 613=30 Cr. L. J. 637=1929 Cr.C. 423=13 A. I. Cr. R. 41=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 791.

—S. 302—Sentence—Sudden provocation—Death reduced to transportation.

Where the murder was not a deliberate one but occurred suddenly after mutual abuse and the accused who did not belong to a turbulent class took up on the spur of moment the weapon and killed the deceased with it, a sentence of transportation for life was substituted for the death sentence. 116 Ind. Cas. 187=

11 L. L. J. 1=12 A. I. Cr. R. 453=30 Cr. L. J. 571=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 913.

—S. 302—Wife deserted—Lover killed while asleep—Murder thought out and deliberate—Death, the proper sentence

In a case of murder of the lover of his wife by the accused, where the accused had himself left his wife for a period of several months and thereby subjected her to temptation and he killed her lover while he was asleep and the murder was thought out and deliberate and there was no grave or sudden provocation:

Held: that punishment of death was the fit punishment to be inflicted. 109 Ind. Cas. 113=5 O.W.N. 160=29 Cr. L. J. 465=10 A.I.Cr.R. 241=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 241.

—S. 302—Trust and hospitality returned by seduction of wife—Extreme penalty.

Where deceased, who was trusted and treated with hospitality by the convict, seduced his wife and persisted in remaining in his house after he had been requested to leave, his conduct is certainly provoking and so this is not a case in which the extreme penalty of the law should be inflicted on the convict. 106 Ind. Cas. 457=9 A. I. Cr. R. 311=29 Cr. L. J. 41 (Lab.)

—S. 302—Murder in a fit of fury provoked by persistent abuse.

Where the accused was found to have murdered the deceased in a sudden fit of fury provoked by the deceased's persistent abuse held, that a sentence of transportation for life was sufficient. 72 Ind. Cas. 529=16 M.L.W. 239=1922 M.W.N. 506=31 M.L.T. 175=45 Mad. 766=24 Cr.L. J. 417=A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 20=43 M.L.J. 222.

—S. 302—Murder—Provocation—Grave but not sudden—Sentence, measure of.

A capital sentence is not to be passed where murder is committed under very serious though not sudden provocation. 3 O.L.J. 19=17 Cr.L.J. 190=33 Ind. Cas. 830.

—S. 302—Provocation, effect of—Murder—Sentence—Reduction of.

A provocation, though insufficient to bring a charge of murder within the exception to S. 300, may still be sufficient for the reduction of the sentence. 16 Cr.L. J. 611=30 Ind. Cas. 435 (Mad.)

—S. 302—Wife detected in act of adultery and killed—Sentence.

Wife-murder is so common an offence in Sind that deterrent sentences should be passed in all such cases even where the husband has killed his wife in the provocation that he detected her in the act of committing adultery. 5 S.L.R. 256=13 Cr.L. J. 585=15 Ind. Cas. 807.

—S. 302—Unfounded suspicion as to wife's chastity—Murder—Punishment.

Where an accused person was found to have murdered his wife under a mistaken impression that she was unchaste to him, the High Court set aside the sentence of death and passed upon him the sentence of transportation for life. (1903) 8 C.W.N. 218.

8 (p). Sentence—Several accused.

—S. 302—Common intention—Death—Offence—Sentence.

The two accused who were working in field about a furlong away from the spot, on hearing the quarrel came running to the spot to see what the quarrel was about. Even after they arrived, the quarrel continued, and the accused became more angry as they heard and saw what was taking place. The second accused first expressed his annoyance by striking a stone with his pitchfork. That had no effect and after some little time, he became so annoyed that he took his pitchfork and struck the deceased on the head with it. The first accused almost immediately raised a heavy stick taken from the side of a cart and struck the deceased on the head. The deceased fell down immediately and died on the following day. The deceased was found to have an extensive and radiating fracture of the skull, forming a diamond shaped depressed fracture, the side of the diamond being about two inches;

Held, that (i) the accused could not be said to have been actuated by a common intention and that each was responsible for his own act;

(ii) that the second accused who struck the first blow was guilty only of causing simple hurt with a dangerous weapon;

(iii) even if the fracture was caused by the blow struck by the second accused, the first accused who struck the second blow would still be guilty of murder for his blow must have accelerated the death of the deceased;

(iv) murder being unpremeditated and committed in a fit of anger, the first accused should be convicted for transportation for life. A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 83= (1945) 2 M.L.J. 547=1945 M.W.N. 732.

—S. 302—Sentence—Several persons participating in assault—Person giving fatal blow not known.

Where several persons participated in the assault upon the deceased and the beating given by them was merciless, the fact that it is not known which of them gave the fatal blow is no ground for not awarding the sentence of death which is the normal penalty for an offence of murder. 226 Ind. Cas. 84=47 Cr. L.J. 826=48 P.L.R. 176=A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 298.

—Ss. 302 and 149.

It is not a general rule that under S. 302 read with S. 149 the proper sentence in all cases is transportation for life. The question of sentence must in each case be decided upon the facts of the case. Where it is found that the accused, though they were among the rioters, some of whom in pursuance of the common object of the unlawful assembly, caused the death of the deceased, had themselves taken no part in the assault, the lesser sentence of transportation for life may be passed. But if it is found that the accused were among the seven or eight persons who had inflicted the large number of injuries which the deceased received, the sentence of death will be the appropriate one. A.I.R. 1944 F.C. 35=10 B.R. 603=1944 A.W.R. 20=25 P.L.T. 86=1944 M.W.N. 227=57 L.W. 295=1944-1 M.L.J. 353=48 C.W.N.F.R. 98=1 L.R. (1944) Kar. (F.C.) 72 Sup.=1944 F.C.R. 169=4 Cr.L.J. 305=213 Ind. Cas. 178 (F.C.).

—S. 302.

In riot cases, the extreme penalty of law i. e., the sentence of death, will not be exacted from any accused when it is impossible to determine what part he had actually played. A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 377=46 P.L.R. 135.

—Ss. 302, 149.

When a body of heavily armed men set out to take a woman back by force, they must be taken to know that some one was likely to be killed before the day was over. Hence, if in such a case one of the party commits murder, all the members of the party must be held either directly or constructively guilty of murder. A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 89=43 P.L.R. 680=43 Cr.L.J. 588=1 L.R. (1942) Lah. 470=199 Ind. Cas. 870.

—Ss. 302, 149.

Accused saddled with vicarious liability under S. 149—Intention to cause death not clearly established—Accused should be sentenced to transportation for life and not to death. A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 245=1 L.R. (1939) Lah. 77=41 P.L.R. 443=40 Cr. L.J. 712=182 Ind. Cas. 900.

—S. 302.

In cases where many persons are involved in a crime under S. 302, the Court should hesitate to pass sentence of death on all of them, and try to discriminate. Infliction of sentences of death on all accused in one and the same case is apt to fail of the effect which such sentences would otherwise have. A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 295=66 C.L.J. 351=39 Cr. L.J. 479=174 Ind. Cas. 803.

—S. 302—Sentence—Enhancement.

When once the guilt of murder is proved, the proper penalty to be awarded is a matter for the discretion of the Judge and it is by no means true to say that merely because there is doubt as to which of several of the attackers inflicted the fatal blow, this is a sufficient ground for withholding the death sentence in the case of any or all of them. But a person who has even wrongly got the benefit of a lenient sentence at his trial may sometimes be allowed to benefit by his good fortune, provided the sentence passed is one which is legal. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 331=40 Cr. L.J. 49=178 Ind. Cas. 298.

—S. 302.

Where several persons join together to murder another and do murder him under such circumstances that there can be no doubt that the intention was to murder, each and everyone of them ought to receive the sentence of death, unless there is any circumstance to distinguish one case from another. 166 Ind. Cas. 1005=17 L. 536=38 P.L.R. 909=38 Cr.L.J. 342.

—S. 302.

Brutal murder—All accused taking part in beating—Mere fact that it is not known by whom fatal wound is caused is no ground for not awarding death penalty. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 337=36 Cr. L.J. 1001=16 Lah. 1131=38 P.L.R. 109=156 Ind. Cas. 786.

—S. 302 —Evidence against all accused precisely the same—Sentence on all should be same.

Where the evidence against all the accused is precisely the same and the testimony of the witnesses does not indicate that a more prominent part in the attack was taken by one of them, any the Court will be unjustified in holding that that person was in any degree more responsible for the death of the murdered than the other accused and there should be no difference in the sentence imposed. A.I.R. 1935 All. 362=37 Cr.L.J. 32=1935 A.W.R. 53=159 Ind. Cas. 155(2).

—S. 302—Accused old man of 73—Doubt as to who struck blow.

Where the accused (appellant) is an old man of 73 while his co-accused is a young man of 20 years, and there is nothing on the record to show as to who actually struck the fatal blow on the head of the deceased and the fight was sudden:

Held, that in the circumstances a sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment would meet the ends of justice. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 251=11 O.W.N. 698=35 Cr.L.J. 943=149 Ind. Cas. 343.

—Ss. 302, 303, 396 —Murder by one of the dacoits in attempting to carry away stolen property —All dacoits, whether punishable.

Where all the accused conjointly stole property in a railway train and in doing so caused hurt to certain persons and in attempting to carry away the stolen property, one of them murdered a person within a short time of their escape from the train:

Held, that in such circumstances, the murder must be held to have been committed "in the commission of the dacoity" within the meaning of S. 396 and every one of the dacoits is liable to be punished with death or transportation for life or rigorous imprisonment which may extend to ten years. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 977=15 Lah. 84=35 Cr. L. J. 322=35 P.L.R. 51=147 Ind. Cas. 2.

—Ss. 302 and 149.

Where several persons are convicted of rioting and of murder committed with a view to prosecution of the common object of the rioters, prima facie all the persons so convicted should be sentenced to the extreme penalty. It is only when specified circumstances are shown to exist in favour of any individual that the alternative punishment of transportation for life should be substituted for a sentence of death. Each case or class of cases is to be considered on its own facts and what may be admissible upon a conviction under S. 302 read with S. 149 in a village agrarian dispute "where a free and honest fight on equal terms results in death" would be an enormity in a case of gang assassination. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 100=13 P.L.T. 702=11 Pat. 807=34 Cr.L.J. 427=142 Ind. Cas. 841 (2).

—S. 302.

Where in a murder case, it is not established who inflicted the blow the extreme penalty of law need not be extracted from the accused. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 189=33 P.L.R. 1=33 Cr.L.J. 457=137 Ind. Cas. 282.

8 (q). Sentence—State of mind.

—S. 302.

Where in committing the offence the accused must have been actuated by jealousy or by indignation either of which would tend further to disturb the balance of his mind and he has also been awaiting the execution of his death sentence for over a year, a sentence of transportation for life would be more appropriate than the sentence of death. A.I.R. 1944 F.C. 1=1944 M.W.N. 1=48 C.W.N.F.R. 43=1944 A.W.R. 1=45 Cr.L.J. 413=23 Pat. 159=10 B.R. 444=78 C.L.J. 14=(1944) 1 M.L.J. 305=I.L.R. (1944) Kar (F.C.) 8 Sup.=1944 F.C.R. 61=211 Ind. Cas. 556.

—S. 302.

A woman threw her children into a well and jumped into the well herself, but afterwards, repenting of her intention to take her own life, managed to get out. The reason why she had decided to take her children's life and her own was that she had been very harshly treated by her husband and was living a life of the utmost misery. She was convicted for murdering the children:

Held, that the sentence of transportation for life was proper and not that of death. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 50=42 Cr.L.J. 270=1940 M.W.N. 943=52 L.W. 472=(1940) 2 M.L.J. 492=192 Ind. Cas. 278.

—S. 302—Young girl of 15 killing her newborn child—Proper sentence.

Where a young girl of 15 kills her newly born illegitimate baby, a sentence of transportation for life is wholly inappropriate. In England it is always assumed that a girl who commits such a murder at such a time is hardly responsible for her actions, it being well known that child birth produces occasionally peculiar reactions in the mother.

—S. 302—Killing under pressure of threats.

Where one assailant amongst others commits the offence of killing by yielding to the threats of others, it is no mitigation of the circumstances. A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 258=4 B.R. 568=39 Cr.L.J. 554=19 P.L.T. 476=175 Ind. Cas. 300 (S.B.).

—S. 302—Accused in abnormal mood.

Where in a charge of murder it is found that although it could not be said that the accused was insane or did not know the nature of his actions, it appeared that he was in an abnormal mood when he committed the offence, there is sufficient reason for not inflicting the extreme sentence. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 113=37 Cr.L.J. 435=161 Ind. Cas. 250.

—S. 302—Factors to be considered.

In a case of murder of his brother by the accused the circumstance that the accused is the only remaining son of his widowed mother and the circumstance that he afterwards displayed considerable remorse ought not to be taken into consideration at all. What ought to guide the Court in a question of this character is the ascertainment of the state of mind of the accused at the time when the crime was committed. Whether or not a man who has committed an atrocious crime like this is truly penitent, is a matter which ought not to be taken into consideration in deciding the question of sentence, at any rate so far as the Courts are concerned, though it might perhaps be a circumstance which might induce the Local Government in the exercise of its prerogative, to remit the death penalty. But the question of provocation has to be taken into consideration in inflicting the sentence. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 591=39 C.W.N. 262=36 Cr.L.J. 1254=158 Ind. Cas. 67.

—S. 302—Extenuating circumstance.

Where the accused had undergone protracted sufferings through the obstinacy, viciousness and flagrant immorality of the deceased, his wife whom he pushed into the river there is a mitigating circumstance entitling the accused to a lenient sentence. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 675 (2)=35 P.L.R. 746=36 Cr.L.J. 683=155 Ind. Cas. 265.

—Ss. 302 and 84—Sentence—State of mind.

Where a person was tried for murdering his two children and convicted under S. 302, I.P.C., and it appeared that at or about the time when he made the murderous attack his mind was unsound but it could not be said with any degree of certainty that he did not know that what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law within the meaning of S. 84, and it also appeared upon the evidence that he was a fond and affectionate father:

Held, that the sheer brutality of the assault in the absence of any provocation, was a circumstance which would lead to the inference that the mind of the accused was in fact unhinged and far from normal; and that, therefore, the capital sentence should not be imposed. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 123=34 Cr.L.J. 909=34 P.L.R. 1044=145 Ind. Cas. 119.

—S. 302.

Where a murder is committed by an educated young man of mature years, the fact that he has been impelled to commit the crime fostered by the reading of mischievous literature intended to arouse sympathy with revolutionary crime, is no ground for the exercise of leniency in his favour. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 305=34 Cr.L.J. 720=34 P.L.R. 691=144 Ind. Cas. 294.

—S. 302 — Death sentence — Extenuating circumstances—Murder committed with inadequate motive—Accused proved to have been eccentric.

Where the accused who was guilty of double murder was shown to have been eccentric in the past and it appeared that the double murder of which he was guilty had been perpetrated with an inadequate motive.

Held, that they were not sufficient grounds for not passing the extreme penalty of death. 7 O.W.N. 1100=129 Ind. Cas. 323=32 Cr.L.J. 327=1931 Cr.C. 133=A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 77.

—S. 302—Sentence—Belief that victim was a witch—Killing woman under conviction that she is witch—Transportation for life enough sentence.

Where the accused killed a woman under the conviction that she was a witch and was responsible for the illness of his wife and daughter.

Held. (per Das and Sultan Ahmed, JJ., Mullick, J., differing) that transportation for life was the proper sentence to pass and not death. 1921 P.H.C.C. 76=A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 63=1 Pat. L.T. 282=57 Ind. Cas. 171.

8 (r). Sentence—Weapon used.

—S. 302.

Some accused men of primitive character who were lying in wait with the intention of committing the most violent assault upon the deceased, attacked the deceased and caused injuries with sticks and a deadly weapon. Only one of them had used a deadly weapon:

Held, that in the case of the accused who used the deadly weapon, the sentence of death should be confirmed but in the case of others in view of their primitive character, the sentence of transportation was enough in the interest of justice. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 237=1941 M.W.N. 956=43 Cr.L.J. 463=199 Ind. Cas. 87.

—S. 302.

Where a murder is by a bully, a man armed with deadly weapon against a man who was unarmed, the proper sentence is that of death. A.I.R. 1941 Sind 117=42 Cr.L.J. 786=195 Ind. Cas. 833.

—S. 302.

Where the wound inflicted on the deceased was a stab wound penetrating into the abdominal cavity and cutting the small intestines and the deceased died the day after his admission into the hospital, and there is no extenuating circumstance in favour of the accused, the sentence of death should be confirmed. A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 60=37 Cr.L.J. 418=161 Ind. Cas. 113.

8 (s). Sentence—Miscellaneous extenuating circumstances.

—S. 302—Sentence—Deceased found to be the aggressor.

In a case where the deceased is found to have been the aggressor and that the accused inflicted injuries which resulted in the death of the deceased, on his conviction under S. 302, Penal Code, a sentence of transportation for life would be a sentence which would meet the ends of justice. 4 A.I.Cr.D. 143.

—S. 302—Sentence—Lapse of time.

The mere fact that a long time had elapsed between the commission of the crime of murder and punishment for it alone is no ground for imposing a lesser sentence. On the contrary, it would be a dangerous proposition to state that if a murderer succeeds in making himself scarce for a number of years, he may then hope to escape the extreme penalty of the law in a case in which the extreme penalty is clearly called for. There are no extenuating circumstances in this case. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 258=52 L.W. 634=1940-2 M.L.J. 767=42 Cr.L.J. 265=1940 M.W.N. 1235=I.L.R. (1941) Mad. 172=192 Ind. Cas. 299.

—S. 302 — Sentence — Obedience to illegal order.

Obedience to an illegal order can be used in mitigation of punishment. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 210=41 Cr.L.J. 639=I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 521=188 Ind. Cas. 440.

—S. 302—Sentence—No intention to kill.

Where the accused attacks a person with a heavy bill book and thereby causes several injuries to him and also one injury to a child who was asleep over his shoulders which results in the death of the child, the accused is guilty of an attempt to murder the father and though guilty of murder of the child, he is entitled to the lesser sentence on account of absence of his intention to kill him. 1937 M.W.N. 723.

—S. 302.

Where the accused has no real intention in the strict sense of the word to kill the deceased, the Court will be justified in awarding the lesser sentence of transportation for life. A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 420=1931 M.W.N. 266=32 Cr.L.J. 623=34 L.W. 631=130 Ind. Cas. 847.

—S. 302—Plea of starvation.

The gravity of an offence of deliberate murder is in no way lessened because the accused was starving. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 49=12 R. 616=36 Cr.L.J. 336=153 Ind. Cas. 390.

—S. 302.

The Baluchi custom of killing for unchastity is no extenuation of the crime of murder and cannot be taken into consideration in the mitigation of sentence. A.I.R. 1935 Sind 44=28 S.L.R. 279=36 Cr. L. J. 497=153 Ind. Cas. 976.

—S. 302—Custom of killing—Baluchi custom of killing for unchastity.

A so-called Baluchi custom justifying murder for unchastity is no ground for mitigation of sentence. 7 S.L.R. 118=15 Cr.L.J. 501=24 Ind. Cas. 589.

—S. 302—Sentence—Party fight.

Where a person thrusts a knife in the abdomen of another in a party fight in which several men take part and which is not proved to have been started by him, the lesser punishment of transportation for life is sufficient to meet the ends of justice. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 434=34 P.L.R. 255=34 Cr.L.J. 711=144 Ind. Cas. 292.

—S. 302.

The fact that a murder was committed when the offender was being brought to bay and in his desire to escape is not an extenuating circumstance. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 818=33 Cr.L.J. 722=139 Ind. Cas. 213 (F.B.).

—S. 302—Sentence—Dead body not recovered.

In a case of murder, once the Court is satisfied that the murder has been committed and that the accused person has committed it, the question of sentence must be determined upon the gravity of the offence irrespective of the circumstance whether the body has or has not been recovered. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 25=32 Cr.L.J. 493=130 Ind. Cas. 331.

—S. 302—Sentence—Absence of dead body.

If one is satisfied that murder was committed the appropriate punishment should follow. The discovery of the body is not a material circumstance. It is the murder which is the thing to be regarded, that is to say, the killing of a human being by one or more human beings without just cause or excuse. It is not the finding of the body. The absence of the body is a circumstance which makes it necessary to proceed with the greatest care and caution, and one must never confirm a sentence of death, unless one feels completely satisfied about it. If there is such an element of doubt to render a Judge in the least degree uneasy, the proper course is not to change the nature of sentence from death to transportation for life, but to acquit the man altogether.

Per Mukerji, J.—Where the dead body does not appear and the factum of death is established by nothing but a retracted confession, there is a suitable case where a sentence of transportation may be awarded instead of the heavier sentence. 89 Ind. Cas. 903=23 A.L.J. 821=26 Cr.L.J. 1431=6 L.R.A.Cr. 161=A.I.R. 1925 All. 627 (F.B.).

—S. 302—Sentence—Single blow.

The fact that a murder was caused by a single blow is not a ground for passing the lesser sentence. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 749=32 P.L.R. 925=12 Lah. 442=32 Cr.L.J. 1219=134 Ind. Cas. 793.

—S. 302—Saving family honour—Murder of erring wife.

The reason for passing a lesser sentence on conviction for murder ought to be express and adequate. Such reasons are sometimes to be found in the order of the mentality to which the person belongs. But the fact that a murder of his wife by a husband was inspired with a view to save his family from dishonour which would sooner or later have fallen upon them by reason of the habits of the wife does not constitute any extenuating circumstance, for lesser sentence of transportation. 124 Ind. Cas. 836=11 P.L.T. 148=9 Pat. 474=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 247.

—S. 302—Sentence—Minor—Death penalty—Not to be inflicted.

Where a person who was convicted of murder was a minor who had not attained a legal age of discretion, he should not, under ordinary humane principles, be made to pay the death penalty where the law allows an alternative punishment. 113 Ind. Cas. 177=10 L.L.J. 463=30 Cr.L.J. 65=11 A.L.Cr. R. 543=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 64.

—S. 302—Murder of newly born illegitimate child—By mother—By father.

In the murder of her newly born illegitimate child by a woman there are mitigating circumstances sufficient to reduce the appropriate penalty very much below a sentence of transportation for life; most of these apply though certainly in a less degree to the case of the father of such a child more especially where the mother is his own sister. 75 Ind. Cas. 767=25 Cr.L.J. 63=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 119.

—S. 302.

Where the appellant constituted himself a tribunal which decided that the making of a charge of paternity against him was an offence punishable with death, he appointed himself the executioner and carried out the sentence:

Held, that the lesser penalty provided for the offence of murder would not be proper in the circumstances. 73 Ind. Cas. 266=24 Cr.L.J. 570=8 N.L.J. 56=A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 251.

9. Miscellaneous.

—Ss. 302 and 34—Number of accused—Acquittal of all except two—Conviction of those two on the strength of the action of the others—Legality.

Where seven persons were accused of an offence under S. 302 read with S. 34, I. P. Code and the Court acquits five of them, the part, if any, played by those acquitted cannot be taken into account in determining the guilt of the remaining persons and convicting them. 1944 A.L.J. 447, Followed. 1950 A.L.J. 220=A.I.R. 1950 A. 355=51 Cr.L.J. 993.

—S. 302—Armed gang entering house at night to abduct woman—Scuffle—Death of one and grievous hurt to another—Offence—Sentence.

While abducting a woman, for which purpose a number of persons armed with chhavis and dangs entered a house at night, some of them attacked an inmate of the house with lathis. He died and grievous hurt was caused to another:

Held, that in the circumstances a common intention to commit culpable homicide amounting to murder, or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, could not possibly be imputed to them and in the absence of such an intention the charge under S. 302-34 could not possibly be sustained; but as the crime was particularly heinous and the ends of justice required that the maximum sentence should be imposed on them, the conviction of the accused for the major offence must be altered from one under S. 302-34 to that under S. 460, and the sentence of transportation for life imposed on each accused affirmed. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 911=38 Cr.L.J. 30=38 P.L.R. 1150=165 Ind. Cas. 874.

—S. 302—First conviction for attempt to murder—Subsequent trial on death of victim for murder not barred.

Held, that the previous conviction was no bar to subsequent trial and conviction. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 18=36 Cr.L.J. 813=155 Ind. Cas. 287.

—S. 302—Committal without weighing evidence.

Murder case—Committal by Magistrate without weighing evidence against accused—Procedure held was in consonance with practice in Punjab and that at any rate no point of law was involved and consequently, High Court cannot quash commitment under S. 215, Criminal P. —S. 302—Challan under S. 304—Judge ordering Magistrate to commit under S. 302—Legality.

Accused challaned under S. 304, I.P.C. and charge framed against that section—Application to Sessions Judge under S. 437, Criminal P.C., asking Judge to set aside implied order of discharge under S. 302, I.P.C.—Application accepted by Judge and Judge ordering Magistrate to commit the case to him:

—Ss. 302 and 369—Kidnapping and murder—Distinct offences.

—Ss. 302 and 460—Murder—Death caused by accused in breaking house trespass.

An accused was committed under S. 460, I. P. C. on the assessors giving their opinion, that the accused struck a blow on the deceased, and was caught in the house of the deceased in the act of committing burglary. In the circumstances, Judge altered charge to one under S. 302. The conviction under S. 302 is not according to law in the circumstances. 50 P.W.R. 1916 Cr.=33 P.L.R. 1917=33 P.R. 1916 Cr.=17 Cr. L.J. 454=36 Ind. Cas. 134.

—Ss. 302 and 460—Murder while committing burglary—Punishment.

A person who commits murder while committing burglary should be punished for murder, not merely for burglary. 8 A. L. J. 574=12 Cr. L. J. 395=11 Ind. Cas. 579.

—S. 302—Culpable homicide if amounts to murder—Issue ought to be tried.

When culpable homicide has been committed, prima facie the principal issue is whether the culpable homicide does not amount to murder. Generally the issue ought to be tried and not pre-judged by an authority less than the Court of Session. 15 Bom.L.R. 303=14 Cr. L. J. 235=19 Ind. Cas. 331.

—S. 303—Applicability.

When an accused person has been convicted of murder and sentenced to transportation for life and the remainder of that sentence has been remitted without condition by the Provincial Government under S. 401, Criminal P. C., he can no longer be said to be under a sentence of transportation for life, that sentence having, in effect, been served. Hence when such person commits second murder, the provisions of S. 303, Penal Code, cannot apply. A.I.R. 1943 Sind 114 (114)=I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 25=44 Cr. L. J. 530=206 Ind. Cas. 493 (D.B.).

—S. 303—Applicability and scope.

If the sentence of transportation for life passed on a person is conditionally remitted by the Government under S. 401, Criminal P. C. and the prisoner is released, in spite of the fact that the prisoner is not actually in prison or in a penal settlement, he must be deemed to be still "under sentence of transportation for life."

Consequently, where such a person, after his release on remission, breaks the conditions on which remission was granted and commits an offence of murder, his case falls under S. 303 and such person must be sentenced to death. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 124 (126)=40 Cr. L. J. 490=1939 Rang. L.R. 44=181 Ind. Cas. 144.

—S. 303—Sentence of transportation for life, what is.

1. Applicability and scope.

—S. 304, Part II—Applicability and scope.

S. 304 of the Penal Code will not apply if the Court comes to the conclusion that the intention of the person causing death was either to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as will bring the case either under Part I of S. 304 or under S. 302 of the Code. In case the Court comes to the conclusion that there was no intention of any of the kinds mentioned above, but there was knowledge that the act was likely to cause death, the offence will fall under Part II of S. 304 only if the Court finds that the offender did not know that the act was so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death and the offender had not committed the act without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or the bodily injury. But if the Court is unable to come to such finding, the offence would still be murder unless an exception to S. 300 be applicable. Pak. L.R. (1950) Lah. 349=A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 169=51 Cr. L. J. 1368.

—Ss. 304-II and 109—Offence under—Accused catching hold of deceased permitting principal offender to stab him.

Where the accused thinking that the deceased ought to be punished for abusing one of their dignitary in the village, ran, caught and held the deceased and thus permitted the principal offender to stab him with a dagger, he is guilty of abetment of culpable homicide under S. 304-II read with S. 109, I. P. Code. A.I.R. 1950 Kut. 5=51 Cr. L. J. 392.

—S. 304, Part 2.

Applicability—Accused striking deceased on head with wood and rendering her unconscious—Accused heaping wood and placing body on same and setting fire to it believing victim to be dead—Death caused by burns—Offence—Mistake of fact—Plea of—Availability.

—S. 304, Part II—Exchange of abusive language—Attack with knife on unarmed deceased—No previous enmity—S. 304, Part II, if applies.

A was charged with murder of B. A and B exchanged abusive language of ordinary type. A thrust a knife of ordinary size, which was lying by his side and which was used by him in ordinary course of business, in the abdomen of B who was empty-handed, resulting in B's death. There was no previous enmity between A and B:

—S. 304—Absence of intention to cause death—Section does not necessarily apply.

Section 304, second part, does not apply merely because there has been no intention to cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, but there has only been knowledge that the injury inflicted was likely to cause death. Where the case comes under any of the clauses of S. 300 and none of the exceptions mentioned in the section applies, the offence is one of murder and S. 304 can have no application to such a case. A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 120=I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 931=222 Ind. Cas. 389.

—Ss. 304, 335—Death caused by two injuries, one on head and other causing rupture of spleen—Self defence—Grave and sudden provocation—Offence.

The accused had given two blows to the deceased, one on the head resulting in the fracture of the skull and second in the rupturing of the enlarged spleen and left kidney. The death was the result of both the injuries but the first injury was protected by the right of private defence:

Held, that the offence committed was not one under S. 304 but under S. 335 where the accused had acted under grave and sudden provocation. A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 43=46 P.L.R. 379.

—S. 304.

Obiter.—The second part of S. 304 applies (inter alia) to those rather rare cases of deliberate assault where the act of assault can be separated from the injury caused with result that knowledge of likelihood to cause death can be proved without intention to cause vital injury being established. Such cases sometimes occur in combined assaults. Where death is not caused, it may of course be very difficult to prove likelihood of causing death or knowledge of such likelihood, but stabs with lethal weapons in the body recklessly delivered may not reasonably in some cases be regarded as likely to cause death, and known to be so for the very reason that the depth of penetration is uncontrolled. A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 145=I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 411=1943 N.L.J. 90=44 Cr. L.J. 512=206 Ind. Cas. 382.

—S. 304.

Section 304, second part, must be read with the last few words of S. 299 and has no reference to S. 300 or to the exceptions mentioned therein and must not be confused with culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1943 All. 344=1943 A.L.J. 456=45 Cr. L.J. 97=I.L.R. (1943) All. 853=1943 A.W.R. 215=209 Ind. Cas. 205.

—S. 304—Distinction between Part I and Part II.

The first part of S. 304 should be applied only where the offence is not murder by reason of its falling within one of the exceptions in S. 300. Section 304 creates no offence but provides the punishment for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and draws a distinction in the penalty to be inflicted where an intention to kill or intention to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death being present, the act would have amounted to murder but for its having fallen within one of the exceptions to S. 300, and those cases in which the crime is culpable homicide not amounting to murder, that is to say, where there is knowledge that death will be a likely result but intention to cause death or bodily injury likely to cause death is absent. A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 368=1942 O.W.N. 316=43 Cr. L.J. 634=1942 A.W.R. 211=18 Luck. 235=200 Ind. Cas. 500.

—S. 304—Distinction between Part I and Part II.

In considering the scope of S. 304, care must be taken to avoid confusion of thought. First, culpable homicide is defined in S. 299, and then certain classes of culpable homicide are said to be prima facie murder, that is, unless any of the mitigating circumstances set out in the exceptions to S. 300 apply. If they do apply, the prima facie presumption that the offence is murder is removed and the offence becomes culpable homicide not amounting to murder. But there is another class of offences which amount to culpable homicide, namely, those in which the presumption of murder is never raised at all because the intention ascribed to the offender in S. 300 is not apparent. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 259=1940 Rang. L.R. 441=42 Cr. L.J. 124=191 Ind. Cas. 306.

—S. 304—Distinction between Part I and Part II.

Whether culpable homicide not amounting to murder is punishable under Part I or whether under Part II of S. 304, depends entirely upon whether the act by which the death was caused was done with one of the two intentions, or whether it was done with the knowledge mentioned in S. 299. Hence, unless that is first ascertained, it is not possible to pass a sentence under second part of S. 304 rather than under the first. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr. L.J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—S. 304—Degrees of culpable homicide—Distinction from murder.

Section 304 divides the offences of culpable homicide into two degrees of guilt, the graver of which depends on the intention proved or to be inferred from all the circumstances and the less serious of which does not depend on the intention at all. But though the absence or presence of intention is the criterion to be adopted in deciding on which side of the line an offence under S. 304 falls, that is whether on the graver or on the less serious side, there are cases in which there is an intention which makes the offence the graver offence of culpable homicide but which would yet fall short of intention requisite to satisfy S. 300. Where no higher intention can be imputed than to inflict an injury which is, in fact, likely to cause death, there is the graver degree of guilt in culpable homicide, but there are no elements which bring the case under S. 300. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 259=1940 Rang. L.R. 441=44 Cr. L.J. 124=191 Ind. Cas. 306 (F. B.).

—S. 304—Degrees of culpable homicide.

If the killing comes within the second part of S. 299 that which relates to the intention of causing a bodily injury likely to cause death, it comes under S. 304, Part I, and if there is no intention but only knowledge, that is to say, if there is no intention to cause death or a bodily injury likely to cause death, but only knowledge that death is likely to be caused, the offence is under S. 304, Part II. Cases under the exceptions to S. 300 will fall under S. 304, Part I. A.I.R. 1939 Sind 57=32 S.L.R. 18=40 Cr.L.J. 375 (2)=180 Ind. Cas. 418.

The second part of S. 304 deals with cases where the act is done with the knowledge that it is likely to cause death but without any intention to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 540=39 Cr.L.J. 255=173 Ind. Cas. 92.

—S. 304.

Where it appears that the accused had no intention to cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, although death has been the consequence the case falls under S. 304, Part II. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 269=10 O.W.N. 482=35 Cr.L.J. 58=146 Ind. Cas. 452.

Per Macnair, J. C.—Section 304 must be interpreted as providing punishment for the offence of culpable homicide in all cases where the accused cannot be convicted of murder. A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 121=28 N.L.R. 233=33 Cr.L.J. 849=140 Ind. Cas. 49.

—S. 304.

The first part of S. 304, Penal Code applies where there is guilty intention and the second part applies where there is no such intention but there is guilty knowledge. A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 345=32 Cr.L.J. 598=35 C.W.N. 456=58 Cal. 1138=130 Ind. Cas. 884.

—S. 304—Accused intending to cause injury likely to cause death—Punishment should be under Part I of S. 304.

If the act of the accused falls within either of the Cls. 1, 2 and 3, S. 300 but is covered by any of the five Exceptions it will be punishable under the first part of S. 304; and if the act falls within Cl. 4, S. 300 but is covered by any of the Exceptions it will be punishable under the second part of S. 304.

Where there is an intention on the part of the accused to cause some injury which injury is likely to cause death the case comes within the middle part of S. 299 and corresponds with the third part and not the fourth part of S. 300. 103 Ind. Cas. 841=28 Cr.L.J. 761=A.I.R. 1927 Sind 232.

—S. 304.

Knowledge that the act is likely to cause death is insufficient for conviction under Clause 4 of S. 300 but is sufficient for conviction under 2nd part of S. 304. 2 Bur. L.J. 99=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 33.

—S. 304, part 2—Application.

The second part of the S. 304, I. P. C., refers only to cases where the offender has no intention of injuring any one in particular. 17 Cr.L.J. 335=35 Ind. Cas. 511 (L. Bur.)

—Ss. 304 and 300—Applicability.

The first part of S. 304 includes only these cases in which the act of the accused would be culpable homicide not amounting to murder unless it was committed in circumstances which render one or other of the exceptions to S. 300 applicable. 9 P.W.R. 1911 Cr.=3 P.R. 1911 Cr.=87 P.L.R. 1911=12 Cr.L.J. 274=10 Ind. Cas. 852.

2. Common intention.

—S. 304, Parts I and II — Offence under— Application of S. 34.

S. 34, I. P. Code, will in no case apply to an offence falling under S. 304, Part II, I. P. Code, as the element of intention is missing in the case of such an offence. No hard and fast rule, however, can be laid down as regards the application of S. 34 to an offence falling under Part I of S. 304. Every case shall have to be decided on its own merits. Reading the two parts of S. 304, together, the conclusion is irresistible that while the intention to commit the death is missing from the second part, it is very much present in the first, and when a person commits the death of another person even if he may be unavoidably driven to it, can have common intention with another person committing the death under the same compulsion. It is true that in some cases in which a person commits the death of another person, without premeditation in a sudden fight in the heat of passion under a sudden quarrel and without the offender's having taken undue advantage or acted in an unusual manner, he may have same or similar intention with another person, but not the common intention, yet the possibility of his common intention with another person developing during the course of the event cannot altogether be excluded. S. 34, I. P. Code, cannot, however, be applied to a case where the entire incident took a very short time, and the participants in the fight did not come to the spot in a body, but arrived individually and took part in the fight on the spur of the moment. A.I.R. 1950 Pesh. 24=51 Cr.L.J. 1052.

—S. 304.

Applicability of S. 34, I. P. Code, to case falling under second part of S. 304. See Penal Code, Ss. 34 and 304. 1947 A.L.J. 277=A.I.R. 1947 A. 434.

—S. 304—Common intention, application of.

When five or more accused are found guilty under S. 304, second part, of causing death by doing an act with the knowledge that they were likely by such act to cause the death, they can be convicted under Ss. 304-149, because they knew that death was likely to result from their attack. But when there are only four accused, S. 34 would be involved. For the applicability of S. 34, there must be the furtherance of the common intention. Under S. 304, second part, however, there is no intention of causing death, the essential ingredient being the knowledge that the act done by the accused is likely to cause death. In order to make S. 34 applicable to the second part of S. 304, it will be necessary, therefore, to widen it in terms of S. 149. Until that is done, accused persons cannot be found guilty under S. 304, second part read with

In a case where the offence would be construed as one under S. 304 by the application of the third clause of S. 299, the difficulty arises that in such a case the person who has done the act falls within the scope of that section, not by reason of intention, but by reason of knowledge. In consequence, it is for practical purposes impossible to convict persons under S. 304 read with S. 34 if the case is one which falls within the knowledge of clause S. 299 and the same is true of a case under S. 302 falling within clause fourthly of S. 300. A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 49=1939 O.W.N. 7=40 Cr.L.J. 187=1939 A.W.R. 27=14 Luck. 378=179 Ind. Cas. 338.

—S. 304—Common intention to commit culpable homicide by exceeding right of self-defence.

It is almost impossible to visualise the practical mentality that can conceive a common intention to commit culpable homicide not amounting to murder by exceeding the right of private defence. (1937) 41 C.W.N. 570=I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 250.

—S. 304.

The doing to death of one person at the hands of several by blows or stabs under circumstances in which it can never be known which blow or blade actually extinguished life, if indeed one only produced that result, is common in criminal experience and the impossibility of doing justice, if the crime in such cases is the crime of attempted murder only, has been generally felt. There is an equal impossibility of doing justice if the offence is always reduced to either simple or grievous hurt; there is no doubt about the law, and the difficulty lies in determining the extent to which the common intention and the common contemplation of the gravest consequences may have gone. The question, therefore, always resolves itself into one of fact. To overcome these difficulties and obviate a failure of justice in such cases, the law has spread its net wide. A number of provisions have been enacted and though some of them may, to a certain extent, overlap, they have been designed to prevent loopholes of escape to guilty persons. One of these provisions is S. 34, Penal Code. It applies when there is a common intention to commit a certain act. (1937) 168 Ind. Cas. 748=38 Cr.L.J. 628.

Two persons having common intention to beat the party of which deceased was a member—Deceased dying as a consequence of blows struck in that beating—Offence under S. 304-34, is committed. A.I.R. 1935 All. 504=36 Cr.L.J. 549=1935 A.W.R. 336=154 Ind. Cas. 628.

—S. 304.

The common intention of the accused was to cause grievous hurt and there was only one serious blow on the head and the other blows on the head and on other parts of the body were of a trivial nature:

Held, the accused did not intend to cause death of their victim or to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. The case, therefore, fell under the second part of S. 304 and not under the first part. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 80.

—S. 304.

Certain persons without any bona fide right removed paddy sheaves belonging to the accused who attacked the cartmen in whose carts the sheaves were being carried. The cartmen jumped out and ran off, the accused chasing them and the persons at whose instance the sheaves were carted. Injuries were inflicted and the death of one of them was caused by the accused:

Held, that the accused had undoubtedly a right of private defence to their property and were entitled to prevent the paddy sheaves being taken away, but their right of private defence ceased from the moment the cartmen jumped down to make their escape leaving the paddy sheaves in the possession of the accused; that they had no right to chase the cartmen and in so doing, their actions were not covered by any right of private defence at all.

Held also, that the accused were guilty of offences under Cl. 1, S. 304 read with S. 34 in connection with the causing of the death of the deceased, even though the author of the injuries be not known. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 340=35 Cr.L.J. 267=147 Ind. Cas. 74.

Two persons joining to assault a third—One assaulting in a manner likely to cause death—Other standing by without interfering or helping deceased—He is liable under Penal Code, S. 304 read with S. 34. 114 Ind. Cas. 222=9 P.L.T. 826=30 Cr. L. J. 276=12 A.I.Cr.R. 150=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 65.

—S. 34 can apply to a case under S. 304, Part 2.

Although to constitute an offence under S. 304, Part 2, there must be no intention of causing death or such injury as the offender knew was likely to cause death, there must still be a common intention to do an act with the knowledge that it is likely to cause death though without the intention of causing death. Each of the assailants may know that the act, they are jointly doing, is one that is likely to cause death but have no intention of causing death, yet they may certainly have the common intention to do that act and therefore S. 34 can apply to a case under S. 304, Part 2. 100 Ind. Cas. 718=45 C.L.J. 131=31 C.W.N. 314=28 Cr.L.J. 334=7 A.I.Cr.R. 546=A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 324.

3. Culpable homicide or hurt.

—Ss. 304 and 325 — Culpable homicide and grievous hurt—Distinction between.

The line between culpable homicide not amounting to murder and grievous hurt is a very thin and subtle one. In the one case the injuries must be such as are likely to cause death; in the other the injuries must be such as endanger life. I.L.R. (1946) Bom. 258=223 Ind. Cas. 195=47 Cr. L. J. 378=47 Bom. L.R. 998=A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 38 (F.B.).

Sudden fight between N, A and H on one side and V and C on other on sudden quarrel—Fight lasting for some time and both sides receiving injuries—No undue advantage taken by any party and no intention to kill—V's rib fractured and fractured rib piercing his lung and causing death—Who gave the blow causing fracture of rib not known—N accompanying accused A and H to thana to help them in making first information report.

Held, that evidence against N was insufficient to prove his participation in fight.

A and H, held could be convicted only under S. 325 and not under S. 304. A.I.R. 1942 All. 400=1942 A.W.R. 259=44 Cr.L.J. 110=203 Ind. Cas. 546.

—Ss. 304 and 326.

The accused struck her daughter with a very heavy piece of wood whereupon she fell down and never stirred, and everybody took her to be dead. She was then hung to a beam to appear that she had committed suicide:

Held, that in the absence of the post mortem certificate, it was not easy to say that accused must have had requisite knowledge and intention for conviction under S. 302. Under the circumstances of the case, there was no reason to think that the deceased did not die immediately. The accused, therefore, committed at least an offence under S. 304. Even if the offence be under S. 323, and the girl might have died subsequent to strangulation, the accused was still guilty under S. 326. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 415=(1942) 1 M.L.J. 224=55 L.W. 78=1942 M.W.N. 169=43 Cr.L.J. 671=201 Ind. Cas. 444.

—Ss. 304 and 323.

The accused and the deceased (her father-in-law) were not friendly and one day the deceased went to some people with some injuries and stated that he was held by the tuft by the accused and assaulted with stones by her daughters. On the next day, he was found dead. The death was due to congestion of the brain as the result of beating with stones. It was not suggested that there was any common intention to cause death or grievous hurt:

Held, that on these facts the accused could not be convicted under S. 304 (2). As it was not known who caused the fatal injury and as the deceased had told that the accused had only held him by the tuft, the accused was guilty only under S. 323, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 746=42 Cr.L.J. 638=54 L.W. 62=1941 M.W.N. 528=195 Ind. Cas. 231.

—Ss. 304 (2) and 323.

The deceased owed one anna to the accused and the latter demanded repayment. The deceased promised to pay later and the accused kicked him twice on the abdomen remarking, "How long am I to wait." The deceased collapsed and died soon after. There was no mark of injury, external or internal:

Held, that it could not be said that the accused intended or knew that by kicking on the abdomen as he did he was likely to endanger life. The conviction under S. 304 (2) was, therefore, unsustainable and the conviction can only be under S. 323. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 560=1941 M.W.N. 220 (2)=(1941) 1 M.L.J. 364=42 Cr.L.J. 707=53 L.W. 363=195 Ind. Cas. 171.

—Ss. 304, 302, 324.

Injury by accused on deceased's head not of nature to entail serious consequences in man of normal health—Deceased suffering from chronic malaria—Formation of abscess due to lowered vitality—Offence held, fell under S. 324—Use of dangerous weapon held no indication of intention to cause injury likely to cause death—Offence, therefore, held did not amount to culpable homicide. A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 141=1941 Rang. L.R. 138=42 Cr.L.J. 591=194 Ind. Cas. 547.

—Ss. 304 and 325.

The deceased struck the accused a blow with a hockey stick on the thigh and then the accused struck only one blow with a stick on the head of the deceased. Up to that point the accused merely appeared to have wished to give an ordinary beating with stick to the deceased and an ordinary beating was all that seemed to have been required by the motive suggested for the attack:

Held, that it could not be assumed in the circumstances of the case that the accused intentionally struck a blow which he knew was likely to cause death. The offence did not, therefore, fall under S. 304, part II, but one under S. 325. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 714=40 Cr. L. J. 261=179 Ind. Cas. 880.

—Ss. 304, 335—Sudden provocation—Injury endangering life—Offence.

If the accused, under sudden provocation, caused an injury that endangered life and the deceased died as the result of that injury, the offence committed is certainly culpable homicide.

In very few cases of murder can it be said that the injury caused necessarily resulted in death, but if it is caused with the necessary intention or knowledge and death results from the injury caused, then the offence committed is murder or culpable homicide as the case may be. A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 723=1938 M.W.N. 605=48 L.W. 142=(1938) 2 M.L.J. 225=39 Cr.L.J. 871=177 Ind. Cas. 432.

—Ss. 304, 325, 323—Old man knocked down and killed—Presumption of knowledge.

Where as a result of knocking down by the accused, the death of an old man was caused, it is impossible to hold that this act of knocking him over, though it did result in his death was one that he could reasonably be held to have known to be likely to have caused his death. Therefore, the Part of S. 304, second, Penal Code, has no application. It cannot also be held that merely by knocking the old man down the accused intended or knew himself likely to be causing grievous hurt and a conviction under S. 325, Penal Code, cannot be sustained. (1938) 40 P.L.R. 562.

—Ss. 304, 326—Wound caused by accused not cause of death—No intention of causing death.

Where the wound caused by the accused on the arm of the deceased was not an act done with the intention of causing death nor with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death and death was not the natural result of the act, the post mortem examination having revealed that death was due to gangrene:

Held, that conviction under S. 304, could not be upheld but must be altered to one under S. 326. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 833=38 P.L.R. 203=37 Cr.L.J. 1079=165 Ind. Cas. 146.

—Ss. 304, 325—Accused hitting one blow on deceased—No enmity—Quarrel over grazing cattle—Death after three weeks due to bad handling of wound.

The deceased was the uncle of the accused. There was no previous ill-feeling between them. The occasion for the assault was an ordinary village quarrel due to the grazing of cattle. Admittedly only one blow was struck with a lathi. Whether or not it was deliberately aimed at the head it was not possible to say, but as stated by the Civil Surgeon "the injury on the top of the head was simple as examined externally. There was no fracture at the seat of the injury". The deceased himself did not regard the injury at all serious, as the complaint was made only under S. 323, Penal Code, and S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act. The deceased did not think it necessary to go to hospital. The deceased died three weeks after the occurrence due to sepsis consequent to the bad handling of the wound and application of wrong village remedies:

Held, that the accused had no intention of causing death or such bodily injury as he knew to be likely to cause death. It could not be held that the accused must have had the knowledge that the blow he was dealing was likely to cause death.

The conviction under S. 304, Penal Code, was set aside and the accused was convicted under S. 325, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 446=1935 O.W.N. 940=36 Cr.L.J. 1262=11 Luck. 401=157 Ind. Cas. 667.

—Ss. 304, 325 and 149—Seven persons making a deliberate attack on one man and causing his death—Intention of causing such bodily injuries as were likely to cause death or knowledge that they were likely, by such acts, to cause his death, clear—Conviction under S. 325 should be set aside and accused convicted under S. 304.

Seven persons made a deliberate attack upon one man, and ultimately caused his death by fracturing his ribs and rupturing his spleen and inflicting three injuries on his head which left him unconscious and which might, in the opinion of the Medical Officer, have also resulted in his death. They inflicted 24 injuries on the deceased, about 20 of them being inflicted after the deceased had fallen down and was unconscious:

Held, that even if it be assumed that the accused had no intention of committing wilful murder of the deceased, still the fact of the infliction of the injuries showed that they beat him with the intention of causing such bodily injuries as were likely to cause his death, or with the knowledge that they were likely, by such acts, to cause his death, and that in the circumstances of this case, all the accused were clearly guilty of an offence of culpable homicide punishable under S. 304, if not of the offence of wilful murder punishable under S. 302. Both the intention as well as the knowledge that death was likely to ensue could be imputed to the accused.

[Their Lordships set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the accused for an offence under S. 325, read with S. 149, and in lieu thereof convicted all the seven accused of an offence under S. 304 read with S. 149. The thrusting of a lathi into the anus of a man is causing grievous hurt which endangers life and when it is clear from medical evidence that injury to rectum was not the cause of death but that it created a shock which contributed to the cause of death, the offence is one under S. 324, Penal Code, and not under S. 304. Where the deceased and his son made an attack on the accused who attacked the deceased though his life was not in danger and it appeared that the accused had no knowledge that the wounds he inflicted were likely to cause death:

Where the main object of the accused was to rescue the cattle which the deceased had impounded and to give him a beating for refusal to surrender them, and no injury was inflicted on any vital part of the accused's body, and there was no evidence to show that the accused had any knowledge that the deceased had a badly enlarged heart on account of which he died:

Held, that under the circumstances, the accused could not be presumed to have had an intention to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, and was guilty only of an offence under S. 325 and not under S. 304. A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 279 = 9 O.W.N. 655 = 34 Cr.L.J. 99 = 140 Ind. Cas. 706.

Where the deceased had beaten the accused with a shoe and being overpowered by others, the accused lost self-control and picked up some sort of wooden substance which was lying near by and introduced it into the rectum of the deceased who died in consequence:

Held, that the offence was one under S. 304, Part II and not one under S. 325. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 199 = 33 P.L.R. 49 = 33 Cr.L.J. 365 = 136 Ind. Cas. 729 (2).

—Ss. 304 and 326—Drunken accused shooting at close range—Injury not fatal—Wound getting septic—Death two months after, dysentery supervening—Liability.

The accused, when he was full drunk, fired at the deceased and caused a wound on the upper portion of his thigh with a shot which was fired at point blank range. The injury was not fatal and was not such as in the ordinary course of nature would cause death. After nearly two months the injured person died, the wound having become septic and dysentery having supervened a few days before his death.

Held: that neither S. 300 (3) nor (4) applied to the case, and the accused was not guilty of murder; he was not also guilty under S. 304. But he was guilty under S. 326 and as the shot was fired at point blank range on the upper portion of the thigh maximum sentence should be passed. 120 Ind. —Ss. 304 and 323.

Accused hit his brother's wife with a moosal and dragged her inside house. Since then the woman was not to be seen.

Held: as there was no definite evidence about the nature of the wound inflicted and as it was not proved that she had died of the wound accused cannot be held guilty under S. 304. Offence committed fell under S. 323. 92 Ind. Cas. 451 = 26 P.L.R. 642 = 27 Cr.L.J. 275.

—Ss. 304 and 323—Fight over cattle trespass—Accused's party desirous of chastising cattle-owners—Accused holding deceased and his partisans beating him with lathis—Death caused by blows on temple—Accused is guilty only under S. 323.

There was a quarrel and fight over cattle trespass and the party in whose field trespass was committed disposed of the party of the owners of cattle as the supporters of the owners came one by one. When the deceased came up, the accused caught his hands and some of the members of his party hit deceased with lathi. There was no intention on the part of the accused's partisans of causing the death of or grievous injury to the owners of the cattle. The desire was to chastise the owners of the cattle which caused damage. One of the blows was hit on the temple and killed the deceased.

Held, that the accused must have expected that simple injuries would be caused and he could not be held liable for one of his party hitting a blow on the temple and causing the death of the deceased and that the accused was guilty only under S. 323. I.P.C. 88 Ind. Cas. 520 = 2 O.W.N. 465 = 26 Cr.L.J. 1160 = A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 482.

—Ss. 304 and 323—Continual ill-treatment of daughter-in-law by mother-in-law—Beating—Death—No evidence showing intention or knowledge of likelihood of causing death—Mother-in-law was held not guilty under S. 304 but under S. 323.

On the day before the death the deceased spilt some oil and her mother-in-law, the accused gave her a beating. The thing was done openly at 8 a. m. in the view of a number of neighbours. The evidence did not show that the accused either intended or contemplated the death of the deceased as a result of the beating which was inflicted on her. It was clear that the accused had taken a dislike to her daughter-in-law, that she underfed her, kept her short of clothes, and used at times to beat her. The circumstances in which the beating took place formed the strongest evidence that the accused did not realise that it was anything out of the ordinary or might produce serious consequences. There was no evidence, medical or other, to support the view that the ill-treatment by the accused would certainly have terminated in her death from natural causes if the accused had not accelerated it by beating her. The lack of nutrition had not reached a point which was in itself dangerous, or which suggested a deliberate attempt to starve the girl:

Held, that the evidence did not establish an offence under Section 304, still less under Section 302, against the accused. But that the offence under Section 323 of the Indian Penal Code had been committed and the maximum penalty under that section must be imposed. 85 Ind. Being enraged at the deceased's report to the headman that the accused had stolen gram from his threshing ground, the accused attacked the deceased and dealt him several blows on the body and he died on account of the only blow received on the head.

Held, the accused who dealt that blow was guilty under S. 304 (2) and under S. 325. A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 416.

—Ss. 304, 325—Grievous hurt—Assault by three persons armed with lathis—Intention—Culpable homicide.

Three persons attacked a fourth with lathis and one of the assailants struck a blow which fractured the skull of the person attacked and caused his death, but the evidence left it in doubt as to which of the three assailants struck that blow. Held, that the offence of which the three assailants were guilty was grievous hurt rather than culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 19 M. 433, Foll. 1907 A.W.N. 51=4 A.L.J. 207=29 A. 282.

—Ss. 304, 323—Hurt—Culpable homicide, facts amounting to.

The accused, believing that a woman had bewitched another gave the former a severe beating and branded her in several places. Four or five days after this her back swelled and fever came on. She finally took to her bed and died on the sixteenth day after the beating. The accused were, on these facts, tried by a Second Class Magistrate, who convicted them of offences under S. 323 and sentenced them each to rigorous imprisonment for six months. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the accused should be committed for trial on a charge of culpable homicide. (1902) 4 Bom. L.R. 879.

—S. 304—Trial by Magistrate.

An offence under S. 304 which is punishable with transportation for life and which is exclusively triable by the Court of Session cannot be tried by the Magistrate in charge of the Central Children Court. A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 487=59 Cal. 856=36 C.W.N. 164=33 Cr.L.J. 645=138 Ind. Cas. 626.

—S. 304—Offence prima facie culpable homicide amounting to murder—Case ought to be committed to the Sessions.

Where a person is attacked and killed, it must be decided whether the assailant is guilty of culpable homicide and if so, whether the culpable homicide amounts to murder or not. If it were found that the offence committed is culpable homicide but it does not amount to murder, it must be further made clear whether the offence falls under part 1 or 2, of S. 304. Where the offence committed is prima facie one of murder, the Magistrate empowered under S. 30 has no jurisdiction to try it, but he must commit the accused to the Sessions. 116 Ind. Cas. 190=12 A.I.Cr.R. 446=30 Cr.L.J. 573=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 868.

—S. 304.

In every case under the first part of S. 304, it is almost invariably proper for the case to be committed to the Sessions, if the evidence is sufficient to establish the charge.

Where the charge is one of murder under S. 302 and there is no question of the first exception to S. 300 being admitted by the prosecution and a magistrate specially empowered under S. 30, Cr. P. Code heard the case and convicted under S. 304, I.P.C., the proceedings were quashed and the accused committed to the Sessions. 69 Ind. Cas. 459=23 Cr.L.J. 731.

5. Knowledge, when presumed.

—S. 304, Part II.—The deceased and the accused were neighbours. One day the accused's father began to dig a water channel close to the wall of the deceased's house. The deceased begged him to dig it a little distance away so as to avert any danger of his wall collapsing. This request led to an altercation and the father of the accused and the deceased grappled with each other. While they were doing so, the accused came up with an iron rod with which the water-course was being dug and seizing it with both hands, struck a blow on the deceased's head. The deceased fell down and died:

Held, that the accused must be credited with the knowledge that this heavy iron rod was likely to cause death. (He could, therefore, be rightly convicted under Part II of S. 304). A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 618=39 Cr.L.J. 927=40 P.L.R. 935=177 Ind. Cas. 642.

—S. 304.—Where the accused struck the deceased two blows on the head with a stick and though he had a right of private defence, he had exceeded it and further neither the accused nor anybody thought that the injury was serious:

Held, that the accused was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 110=35 Cr.L.J. 1112=150 Ind. Cas. 599.

—S. 304—Accused beating deceased in merciless and determined manner—Bones not broken—Only hands and feet used—Infliction of injuries—Knowledge that death was likely—Offence.

Suspecting the fidelity of the deceased, the wife of the accused, the accused started beating her and it appeared that as a result of the beating which was of a most merciless and determined nature, a large number of injuries was inflicted but no bones were broken and the accused used only his hands and feet for the beating:

Held, that the accused must be held to have known that by administering such a thrashing, he was likely to cause her death and that the offence fell under S. 304, Part II. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 883=35 Cr.L.J. 65=34 P.L.R. 933=146 Ind. Cas. 326.

—Ss. 304, 357—Dying pagri round neck of boy and dragging him along—Death—Nature of offence.

In order to compel a boy to go in any direction against his will, it is a common practice to put a pagri round his neck and to drag him, and though it may be somewhat dangerous if he resists overmuch, or if the ground over which he is taken is hilly or broken, still, generally speaking, the practice leads to no more evil consequences than a swollen neck; and it cannot be said as a fact that it is imminently dangerous to the life.

The accused put his safa round the neck of a boy on his refusal to accompany him to a certain place and dragged him. When they had gone about 50 or 60 yards, the boy fell down unconscious. He never recovered his consciousness and died:

Held, that although the conduct of the accused was reprehensible and constituted a criminal offence, he could not be saddled with a knowledge necessary to constitute an offence under S. 304, Part II, nor could he be presumed to have intended to cause a grievous hurt inasmuch as such grievous hurt was not the natural consequence of his act, and the accused was, therefore, guilty only of an offence under S. 357, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 275=32 Cr.L.J. 1248=134 Ind. Cas. 772.

—S. 304—Knowledge, when presumed.

A person who voluntarily inflicts injury such as to endanger life must always, except in the most extraordinary and exceptional circumstances, be taken to know that he is likely to cause death. If the victim is actually killed, the conviction ought ordinarily to be of the offence of culpable homicide. A man who knows he is likely to smash the skull of his victim, knows as well he is likely to cause the death of his victim. 32 Bom.L.R. 1143=A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 483.

—S. 304.

A lathi is a lethal weapon and if a person chooses to lay about with a lethal weapon with all the force at his command, it must be presumed that he knew he was likely to cause death. 94 Ind. Cas. 137=27 Cr.L.J. 569=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 426.

—S. 304.

Presumably everybody knows that the abdomen is a most delicate and vulnerable part of the human body, and if a man with that knowledge kicks the abdomen with such violence as to cause fracture of two ribs and rupture of the spleen which was normal he should be presumed to have done so with the knowledge that he, by so kicking, was likely to cause death. 96 Ind. Cas. 641=27 Cr.L.J. 977=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 313.

—S. 304—Beating severely but not with big lathis—Injuries simple—Knowledge of likelihood of causing death must be attributed to the accused.

Where death was caused by beating a number of blows with a lathi but the injuries inflicted upon the deceased were all simple except one which fractured a finger bone and death was due to shock:

Held, that the assailants did not intend to cause death or such bodily injury as was sufficient in the ordinary course to cause death, but they must be presumed to have known that they were likely to cause death and that they were therefore, guilty of an offence under S. 304 (2). 86 Ind. Cas. 826=26 Cr.L.J. 890=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 549.

—S. 304—Death, caused by one blow with a lathi—Knowledge that death would be caused was presumed.

The accused struck the deceased, who was sitting with certain enemies of the accused watching an entertainment, on the head with a lathi which resulted in his death:

Held, that the accused must have known that he was likely to cause death and was guilty under S. 304 (2) and five years' rigorous imprisonment was appropriate sentence. 81 Ind. Cas. 143=5 L.L.J. 180=25 Cr.L.J. 655=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 111.

—S. 304—Kicking a prostrate woman—Knowledge that death would be caused is inferred.

The accused made a confessional statement in which he stated that he and his wife had a quarrel in the forest and that he slapped and then kicked her and unintentionally caused her death. There was nothing to suggest that the wife was suffering from any disease;

Held, that he must have kicked the woman with tremendous force to produce such an effect, and that a man who so kicks a prostrate woman on the side must be credited with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause her death, even if he be exonerated from the more definite intention or knowledge required by S. 302, and that in kicking the deceased accused knew that he was likely to cause death and therefore he was guilty of an offence under S. 304, I.P.C. (latter portion). 73 Ind. Cas. 961=18 M.L.W. 188=1923 M.W.N. 796=24 Cr.L.J. 721=A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 41.

There was no enmity between accused and deceased. The accused's wife and the deceased who were the wives of two brothers were quarrelling about sharing a pumpkin. The accused coming along broke the pumpkin into two against the wishes of the deceased wherefore she abused him. He thereupon struck her with a lump of limestone weighing 3 pounds. This resulted in the injury:

Held, accused acted from impulse of moment and had no intention either to kill her or to fracture her skull; but that as the lump of limestone weighed 3 pounds it must be taken that he knew that there was a probability of fatal injury being inflicted. 81 Ind. Cas. 320=5 L.R.A;Cr. 175 =25 Cr.L.J. 800=A.I.R. 1925 All. 4.

An unmarried girl gave birth to a child and for the purpose of concealing the child she wrapped it up in a cloth with the result that the child was suffocated and died. Held, that the mother was guilty of an offence under S. 304 of the I.P.C. and not of an offence under S. 334-A as the accused must be taken to have known that the way in which she tried to conceal the child was likely to result in its death. 7 Cr.L.R. 200 (Mad.)

—S. 304—Accused going to deceased's place and picking up quarrel—Free fight—Deceased struck on head with stick dying—Offence under S. 304, Part II.

Where the accused went to the place of the deceased in order to pick up a quarrel and in a free fight which took place between them, the accused struck the deceased on the head with a stick causing thereby his death:

Held, that the accused had no right of private defence. The accused did not intend to commit murder because he used only a stick. He, however, knew that he was striking on a vital part of the body and his act, therefore, fell within the mischief of the second part of S. 304. A.I.R. 1938 Pesh. 10 =39 Cr.L.J. 401=174 Ind. Cas. 137.

—S. 304.

A blow inflicted with a sharp-edged weapon with such violence as to sever completely the upper arm is one which is intended to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death and constitutes an offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under Cl. (1) of S. 304. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 156=39 Cr.L.J. 561=175 Ind. Cas. 345.

—S. 304, Part II.

Where the attack was directed, not against the head but against the body and the attack was made on the spur of the moment without premeditation and although every participant in the attack was actuated by the intention to inflict injury, it was not expected that he would weigh the violence of his blow and the medical testimony is to the effect that the death was due to shock which was the cumulative effect of the various injuries:

Held, that in an unpremeditated, joint attack when each individual beats with a stick, anything more than the knowledge that their joint act in its cumulative effect is likely to cause death cannot be imputed to them collectively, and that the intention was not to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death but there was knowledge that the cumulative injuries were likely to cause death and the offence fell within the second part of S. 304. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 103=37 Cr.L.J. 607=31 N.L.R. 215 Sup.=162 Ind. Cas. 430.

—Ss. 304, Part II, 302—Affray—Death—Absence of evidence to show that persons armed with sharp-edged weapons intended to cause death—Offence.

During the course of an altercation, A was felled to the ground by a blow by P and thereafter each party was re-inforced by its supporters and a free fight ensued. P's party lived at a neighbouring village and they had come to the village where fight took place in a large body prepared for a fight which was probably anticipated by both the parties. Although seven men of A's party were alleged to be armed with sharp-edged weapons, yet, in spite of this, no grievous incised wound was caused on any vital part of the body of any of the combatants by them. P deceased lost his life as a result of the fracture of the skull caused by a blunt weapon. It was not established that any of the accused was definitely responsible for causing P's death. It could not also be said with any certainty whether any of the appellants was armed with a sharp-edged weapon or whether the sharp-edged weapons were wielded by the absconders, or by those who died during the course of the inquiry. It also appeared that the persons armed with sharp-edged weapons did not intend to cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. The circumstances indicated that at the utmost the appellants can be burdened with the knowledge that their act was likely to cause death, but that they had no intention to cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death:

Held, that the offence committed by the accused fell under S. 304, Part II. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 341 =35 Cr. L. J. 1376=151 Ind. Cas. 449.

—S. 304, I.

The deceased, consequent on some exchange of words, threw a clod of earth at the accused who struck the deceased twice in quick succession on head with a stick that he was carrying, causing two injuries on the front part of the left parietal region and the right temporal region, respectively:

Held, that the accused was guilty under S. 304-I. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 345=35 Cr. L. J. 1163 (1)=150 Ind. Cas. 656.

—S. 304—Premeditation, if necessary.

Premeditation is not necessary for the offence under S. 304. Consequently, the mere fact that there is no specific evidence that the accused had come prepared to cause death is no ground for not convicting him under S. 304. A.I.R. 1934 All. 739=35 Cr. L. J. 1302=3 A.W.R. 835=151 Ind. Cas. 364.

—S. 304, Part I—Old man going about drunk causing nuisance — Exchange of words with accused — Accused picking up firewood and striking on head—Death—Offence.

Where the deceased, an old man of 67, went out of his house drunk and made a nuisance of himself to the bazar-sellers, and going to where the accused was standing with whom words were exchanged with the result that the accused picked up a piece of firewood and struck the deceased on his head once, and the deceased fell and died on the way to the hospital without regaining consciousness:

Held, that the accused, when he delivered the blow, should be deemed to have had only the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death within the meaning of Part I of S. 304, and the sentence should be reduced accordingly. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 270=34 Cr.L.J. 1182=146 Ind. Cas. 191.

—S. 304—Attack in the heat of passion—Intention of accused.

Where there was a quarrel between the accused and his father and the former suddenly getting enraged struck the latter in the heat of passion and caused three or four injuries:

Held, that there was no adequate ground for attributing to the assailant the intention contemplated by S. 304, Part I, and the conviction might be altered to one under S. 304, Part II. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 664=34 P.L.R. 330=34 Cr.L.J. 1173=146 Ind. Cas. 172.

—S. 304.

The fact that the injuries inflicted did in fact result in death, will not justify the court in reasoning backward from the result to an intention to cause death. 34 C.W.N. 1127=32 Cr. L. J. 187=128 Ind. Cas. 808=1931 Cr. C. 293=A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 261 (F.B.).

—S. 304—Knowledge and intention absent.

If a victim of an assault dies of peritonitis due to a rupture which could not be connected with the injuries received in the assault, there is no case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 7 O.W.N. 449=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 252.

—S. 304.

Accused inflicting in fit of provocation two lathi blows causing fracture on head of deceased — Third blow falling on chest — Conviction should be under S. 304, Part 2, and not under S. 304, Part. 1. 120 Ind. Cas. 182=31 Cr.L.J. 43=11 L.L.J. 52=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 180.

—S. 304—Striking with stick weighing 62 and 1-2 tolas and measuring 28 inches — Injury resulting in death—Intention to commit murder was not presumed.

Where the medical evidence showed that the fractures as the result of blow on the head were severe and the blow at hard one, but the weapon used in the assault was a stick weighing 62 and 1-2 tolas only and measuring 28 inches in length, and the blow was struck suddenly on the spur of the moment:

Held, that the intention necessary for offence must be presumed under the first part of S. 304, I.P.C. As the blow had not been shown to be so severe as to justify a departure from the general rule, that when one blow only is delivered with a stick, the intention requisite for murder cannot be presumed, the assailant was not guilty of murder but was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 109 Ind. Cas. 215=5 Rang. 817=29 Cr.L.J. 487=A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 64.

—S. 304.

Where accused ordered two other persons one of whom was armed with a spear and the other was armed with lathi, to beat another person who died subsequently as the result of wounds from the spear and lathi:

Held, that it is a reasonable inference that he intended all the results that followed and he was rightly convicted under Ss. 304-109. 107 Ind. Cas. 305=6 Pat. 627=29 Cr. L. J. 239=9 A.I.Cr.R. 460=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 100.

—S. 304—Knowledge but not intention.

Where the accused inflicted many blows on the body of the deceased, and also used kicks in order to drive away an evil spirit, and thereby caused the death, the accused is guilty under S. 304 (2). 114 Ind. Cas. 438=30 P.L.R. 611=12 A.I.Cr.R. 21=30 Cr.L.J. 299=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 917.

—S. 304—Hitting on the temple with lathi—Death caused—Act is offence under S. 304.

Where the accused hit the deceased with a lathi on the temple:

Held, though his intention might not be to cause death or grievous hurt yet he intended to cause such hurt as would in the ordinary course of nature cause death and that he was rightly convicted under S. 304. 88 Ind. Cas. 520=2 O.W.N. 465=26 Cr.L.J. 1160=A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 482.

—S. 304.

Where the accused were not likely to know that the deceased or any one was within a chaupal to which they set fire in a riot:

Held, a conviction under S. 304 was wrong. 82 Ind. Cas. 54=5 L.R.A.Cr. 140=25 Cr.L.J. 1190=A.I.R. 1924 All. 781.

—S. 304—Wound not on vital part—Death due to septic poisoning—Accused is guilty under 1st part of S. 304.

Where it was difficult to hold that the accused intended to inflict bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death the injuries being not on vital parts and being apparently intended to maim the victim and the deceased dying owing to septic poisoning:

Held, that the accused must be held to have intended to cause bodily injury which was likely to cause death, the degree of probability as to death ensuing, not being so high as to justify a finding of murder.

Held, further that he was therefore guilty of an offence punishable under the first part of

S. 304. 77 Ind. Cas. 889=2 Bur. L.J. 239=25
Cr.L.J. 489=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 212.

—S. 304—Death not natural consequence.

The deceased fell down on account of two serious blows given by the accused and had to be taken away on a charpoy. After being removed to the hospital he left it when he was progressing well. A month and a half after the receipt of the injuries he died of pneumonia. Medical evidence did not show that the death was due to the injury, held, no offence under S. 304, was committed. 81 Ind. Cas. 181=5 L.R.A.Cr. 43=25 Cr.L.J. 693=A.I.R. 1924 All. 441.

—S. 304—Death being not natural consequence of rape, no offence under S. 304 is committed if death occurs after rape.

A boy of about 18 had sexual intercourse without her consent with a well developed girl probably under 12 years of age; there was no ancillary violence but her vagina was ruptured and as a result she died of shock:

Held, that as death is not the natural consequence to be expected from a simple sexual offence, the accused was not guilty under S. 304. 83 Ind. Cas. 651=3 Pat. 410=26 Cr.L.J. 91=A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 553.

—S. 304—Beating severely a very weak person causing her death—Conviction under S. 304 is quite proper.

Khubi the accused had a young wife of 14 or 15. She was physically weak, mentally deficient and excitable, and certain to meet a premature death. Khubi must have known, even if he were a savage, that his wife demanded at his hands exceptional care and kindly treatment and could not stand brutality. For some cause which appears to have been due to her defective health, she irritated him into a savage beating which inflicted upon her frail body injuries which in the ordinary course of events would not cause death to a healthy person, but had caused her death. Instead of going to his friends or her friends or any body in authority to explain this accident, he surreptitiously by night carried what he thought was her dead body and threw it down a dry well 33 feet deep:

Held, that it was unnecessary to consider whether as a matter of law the conviction should not be altered to one under S. 325 and that his conviction under S. 304 was too merciful; he should have been convicted under S. 302. 81 Ind. Cas. 191=4 L.R.A. Cr. 131=25 Cr.L.J. 703=A.I.R. 1923 All. 545.

—S. 304—Parents throwing child to crocodiles in the superstitious belief that it will be ultimately saved are guilty under S. 304, last clause.

The accused were husband and wife. They had had a certain number of children all of whom died in their infancy. They were thus led to believe that there was an evil influence brooding over them and their children and they accordingly made a vow that in order to exercise this evil influence they would offer their next born to the crocodiles in a certain tank. Accordingly, they gave their next child to the crocodiles in the belief that the child would be ultimately saved. The child was devoured:

Held, that the accused were guilty under S. 304, last clause. 62 Ind. Cas. 414=33 C.L.J. 179=25 C.W.N. 676=22 Cr.L.J. 526=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 501.

—S. 304—Conviction—Legality.

Where the cause of death of a person was (found to be) either due to concussion of the brain due to head injuries or possibly opium poisoning and the accused were charged with causing violence to the deceased under S. 304, I.P.C., it is bad in law to convict the accused under S. 304, I.P.C. 17 Cr.L.J. 147=16 P.W.R. 1916 Cr.=33 Ind. Cas. 627.

7. Sentence.

—S. 304, Part II—Proper sentence—Husband killing wife on suspicion of unchastity.

In a case of culpable homicide punishable under S. 304, Part II, I.P. Code, a sentence of two year's rigorous imprisonment is grossly inadequate and cannot possibly meet the requirements of a case in which a husband brutally kills his wife on a mere suspicion that she had intimacy with someone or that she had brought about his indisposition by means of some charms. Pak. L.R. (1950) Lah. 304=A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 159=51 Cr.L.J. 975.

—S. 304.

Causing death under grave and sudden provocation—Sentence of three years R.I. is not excessive. Pak. L.R. (1950) Lah. 180=A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 131=51 Cr.L.J. 1132.

—S. 304—Sentence—No intention to kill—Intention only to facilitate theft.

Where there is no intention to kill but what the accused did was only in their attempt to facilitate the theft in which they were engaged, the ends of justice would be sufficiently met by a sentence of 2 years under the second part of S. 304 of the Penal Code. 228 Ind. Cas. 280=1946 A.L.W. 538=1946 A. Cr. C. 152=48 Cr.L.J. 181=1946 A.W.R. (H. C.) 572 (2)=1947 A.L.J. 274=A.I.R. 1947 A. 67.

—S. 304—Murder case falling under Exception to S. 300, reduced to culpable homicide—Only knowledge imputed to accused under S. 299—Maximum sentence.

A case of murder which, owing to the application of one of the Exceptions to S. 300, reduced to culpable homicide not amounting to murder is punishable, so far as imprisonment is concerned, with a maximum term of ten years, if no intention is imputable to the accused under S. 299 but only the knowledge therein mentioned. A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 225=40 Cr. L. J. 725=183 Ind. Cas. 145.

—S. 304—Provocation—Loss of self-control.

It must be a contradiction in terms to concede that a man has been wholly deprived of all power of self-control for a reason which the law recognizes as adequate and at the same time to say that he deserves the most severe punishment that his crime admits of.

And it is a confusion of thought to permit in such circumstances the nature or number of the blows given to count in assessing what punishment should be given. Ex hypothesi where the man had no control of himself, the number and nature of the injuries inflicted must necessarily lose their significance and cannot be a ground for an excessive sentence. A.I.R. 1941 All. 310=42 Cr. L. J. 755=1941 A.L.J. 395=1941 A.W.R. 238=I.L.R. (1941) All. 608=195 Ind. Cas. 599.

—S. 304.

Held, that the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment was unnecessarily severe when there was no antecedent enmity between the parties, and the quarrel arose very suddenly and the choice of weapon was fortuitous and was not one which indicated any real intention to kill or to cause serious injury and the accused who was a young man saw his father grappling with another man and to that extent there was some provocation to him to commit the act he did. These were extenuating circumstances and taking them all into consideration, the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment should be reduced to two and a half years. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 618=39 Cr. L. J. 927=40 P.L.R. 935=177 Ind. Cas. 642.

—S. 304—Provocation.

A Court must not pass the more severe sentence when circumstances of extenuation exist merely because the consequences of the crime have been more serious than in the ordinary case. The reasoning that although there was such provocation as to form a mitigating circumstance, yet that could not be taken into account because more lives than one had been sacrificed was an erroneous view of looking at the way in which circumstances of extenuation could be taken into account. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 466=39 Cr. L. J. 137=172 Ind. Cas. 395.

—S. 304—Provocation.

When a case under S. 304-I is not a case of deliberate assault, the accused having had some sort of provocation from the deceased, the sentence of transportation for life is excessive and should be reduced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 345=35 Cr. L. J. 1163 (1)=150 Ind. Cas. 656.

—S. 304.

The language used by the deceased was highly provocative and the murder was in no way premeditated by the accused:

Held, that the accused committed an offence under S. 304 and the sentence of five years rigorous imprisonment was sufficient. ('36) 38 Pun. L. R. 43.

—S. 304—Provocation.

Where the accused, seeing the deceased having sexual intercourse with the accused's wife, killed him and was convicted under S. 304-I for transportation or life:

Held, that the accused acted under grave and sudden provocation and the offence could not be put on the same terms as an actual murder and hence the sentence of transportation for life should be reduced. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 165=34 Cr. L. J. 1161 (2)=34 P.L.R. 899=145 Ind. Cas. 1009.

—S. 304.

Where, in a case under S. 304, Part II, it appears that the deceased used abusive and provocative language and the accused gave only a single blow, which proved fatal, a sentence of 3 years' rigorous imprisonment is sufficient. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 523=32 P.L.R. 696=133 Ind. Cas. 874 (2).

—S. 304—Deceased sister caught in the act of sexual intercourse with a stranger—Accused giving her blows and causing death—Sentence.

The accused actually caught his sister in the act of sexual intercourse with a stranger. Getting enraged, he gave a number of blows to his sister which caused her death:

Held, that considering all the circumstances, a reduction of sentence from five years' rigorous imprisonment to three years was justifiable. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 428=35 Cr. L. J. 1445 (1)=151 Ind. Cas. 898.

—S. 304—Immorality of wife.

Where an offence under S. 304 (1) was committed in the heat of passion and on the spur of the moment after the accused's patience had been strained to the utmost by the immoral conduct of the deceased, his wife:

Held, that the sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment might, in the circumstances, be reduced to one of rigorous imprisonment for five years. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 126=34 Cr. L. J. 1159 (1)=34 P.L.R. 889=145 Ind. Cas. 926.

—S. 304.

Deceased seen in night in accused's field—Accused believing him to be stealing paddy—Lathi blows on vital part of body:

Held, that the conviction of the accused under S. 304 was correct and in the circumstances, the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment awarded by the Sessions Judge was excessive and one year's rigorous imprisonment would meet the requirements of the case. A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 442=1935 O.W.N. 934=36 Cr. L. J. 1209=157 Ind. Cas. 641.

—S. 304—Use of provocative and abusive language by deceased—Death caused by single blow—Sentence.

Where, in a murder case, it appeared that the deceased used abusive and provocative language and the accused gave only a single blow, which, however, proved fatal:

Held, that the conviction under S. 304, Part II was valid but that under the special circumstances, a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment was sufficient. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 523=32 P.L.R. 387=32 Cr. L. J. 1082=133 Ind. Cas. 874 (1).

—S. 304.

Accused seeing deceased in the act of illicit intercourse with his wife—Grave and sudden provocation—Light punishment awarded. 1931 M.W.N. 553.

—S. 304—Exceeding right of private defence.

In case of a conviction under S. 304, in awarding sentence, consideration may legitimately be given to the fact that the accused were really in the right at first and were performing a legitimate duty in taking the cattle of the deceased to the pound which had strayed into their land, although in doing so they exceeded the right of private defence of person and property. A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 54=37 Cr. L. J. 931=1936 O.W.N. 766=164 Ind. Cas. 151.

—S. 304—Exceeding right of private defence—Lenient sentence.

Where the deceased who was a notorious bully along with another person attacked the accused with their first and after a scuffle which lasted for ten or fifteen minutes in which the accused received some slight injuries, the accused drew a knife and stabbed the deceased:

Held, that the fact that the deceased was a notorious bully and the accused received some slight injuries would not form any justification for drawing a knife and striking the deceased with it and that he had exceeded the right of private defence, but that in the circumstances of the case, the sentence might be reduced from one five years' rigorous imprisonment to one of three years' rigorous imprisonment. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 227=34 Cr. L. J. 1170=146 Ind. Cas. 34.

—S. 304—Accused having right of self-defence.

A sentence of transportation for life for an offence under S. 304, Part I, Penal Code is too severe in a case where the accused had a right of self-defence and is punished only for having exceeded it, especially in a case where the weapon used by the accused is one which he already had in hand. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 344=33 P.L.R. 282=33 Cr. L. J. 587=138 Ind. Cas. 418.

—S. 304.

Woman carried away by her husband—Her father and brother going out with lathis to fetch her by overcoming opposition—Fight invited by abusing husband's brother resulting in his death:

Held, that as regards the sentence, there was this much to be said in mitigation that the woman did not want to return to her husband, and was taken back by force. It was true, the force used did not appear to have been more than was necessary to get her home, and the husband was legally justified in employing it. But men could be forgiven for rebelling against a law of this kind which reduces a woman to the position of a chattel, and circumscribes her right to the command of her own body. It did not mean that they could be excused altogether, for the law must be obeyed above all else, but this circumstance could be taken into consideration. There was also the fact that the accused were attacked first, and attacked with considerable vehemence. A sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment in the case of each accused would meet the ends of justice here. (1937) 168 Ind. Cas. 748=38 Cr. L. J. 628.

—S. 304—Aggravating circumstances.

Held, that the concerted raid on the innocent and defenceless villagers, including the abominable conduct towards women was the more heinous and reprehensible by reason of the fact that it was perpetrated by British soldiers whose duty it is to protect the lives, persons and property of the inhabitants of India and that that duty they had shamefully betrayed and brought indelible disgrace on their uniform and there was no scope for mitigating the penalty. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 103=37 Cr. L. J. 607=31 N.L.R. 215 Sup.=162 Ind. Cas. 430.

—S. 304.

Where the offence was committed in the course of a sudden quarrel and in the heat of the moment only one blow was given, the sentence might be reduced from one of eight years' to one of two years' imprisonment. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1052=35 Cr. L. J. 461=35 P.L.R. 195=147 Ind. Cas. 681.

—S. 304.

Where it appeared that the accused struck only one blow on the head of the deceased and that abusive language was exchanged just before the blow was struck and that the blow was given in a sudden quarrel without any deliberate intention and without the accused having taken undue advantage or having acted in a cruel or unusual manner, and as soon as the deceased fell down, the accused refrained from inflicting any further injury upon him:

Held, that in the circumstances, a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment was excessive and might be reduced to one of two years' rigorous imprisonment. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 851=35 Cr. L. J. 174 (2)=34 P.L.R. 993=146 Ind. Cas. 695.

—S. 304.

Where as a result of the exchange of abuse between the woman-folk, the accused hit the deceased woman with a stick while he was in such a fit of temper that he could not control himself and there was only one blow struck, and where there was not the slightest suggestion anywhere that any previous ill-feeling existed between the accused and the deceased woman and the quarrel, certainly was not premeditated and the unfortunate incident happened in the heat of passion:

Held: that without in any way minimizing the seriousness of the offence and having regard to all the circumstances of the case, a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment would meet the ends of justice. 106 Ind. Cas. 449=29 Cr. L. J. 33=9 A.I.Cr. R. 313. (Lah.)

—S. 304.

Where the deceased was the aggressor and had gone to the land of the accused to molest him:

Held, that a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment would be sufficient. 99 Ind. Cas. 56=7 A.I. Cr. R. 224=28 Cr. L. J. 24=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 733.

—S. 304 — Two parties fighting — Appellants receiving injuries — Prosecution not telling the whole story—Too severe sentence not justified.

When it was found that two opposite parties were fighting out their differences and there were no independent witnesses, and one party was held by the lower Court to be exercising the right of self-defence:

Held, that it should be taken into consideration that the accused who formed the other party have themselves received more or less serious injuries, that one of their party has been killed, that the complete story has not been told by the prosecution and that, therefore, there is a possibility (which nevertheless amounts to nothing more) that they may have been acting in self-defence, and therefore too severe sentence is not justified. A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 313.

—S. 304—Blow struck without premeditation—Sentence of 7 years is excessive.

In a scuffle deceased received one injury on the chin and two on the head, one of which resulted in an extensive fracture of the skull. All that can be said to be proved was that G inflicted one of the injuries on deceased's head and that M inflicted the one on the jaw.

Held: G had been rightly convicted of an offence under Section 304 but as he is not shown to have struck more than one blow and as it was struck without any premeditation on a sudden quarrel, the sentence of seven years' imprisonment which has been passed on him is excessive. 5 L. L. J. 414=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 170.

8. Miscellaneous.

—S. 304, 34—Charge to jury.

In a clear case of murder, to direct the jury that they might alternatively return a verdict of guilty under S. 304 (1) read with S. 34, is to give jury an opportunity to bring in a loophole verdict. (1937) 41 C.W.N. 570=I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 250.

The 2nd part relates to death which is caused without any intention to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, but with the knowledge that such injury may lead to death":

Held, that that the explanation was wrong and the mistake was so palpable that it was a good ground for ordering re-trial. A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 345=35 C.W.N. 456=32 Cr. L. J. 598=58 Cal. 1138=130 Ind. Cas. 884.

Held, that the conviction was not illegal and was not liable to be set aside as no prejudice had been caused to the accused. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 565=1934 M.W.N. 241=67 M.L.J. 355=40 L.W. 476=36 Cr.L.J. 113=132 Ind. Cas. 554.

—S. 304.

A conviction cannot be made under Ss. 325 and 304, Part II in the alternative. If the evidence shows that an offence under S. 304, Part II has been committed, it is unnecessary to mention S. 325; if the evidence does not show an offence under S. 304, Part II, this section should not be mentioned. Held: that the act of B in firing was neither negligent nor rash within the meaning of S. 304-A, I.P.C. 9 I.L.J. 422=29 P.L.R. 45=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 880.

2 (b). Rash or negligent act—Contributory negligence.

—S. 304-A—Considerations for conviction under—Contributory negligence on the part of the deceased—If relevant.

The main thing for consideration in a criminal case, under S. 304-A of the Penal Code, is whether the accused in the case has caused the death of any person by doing any rash and negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide. Once that is proved, the little contributory negligence on the part of the victim is irrelevant except for the purpose of sentence. Contributory negligence, in the strict sense of the term, has no place in Criminal Law. 1950 M.W.N. 39=A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 308 (1)=51 Cr.L.J. 733=(1949) 2 M.L.J. 819.

Where the facts show that it was possible for the driver of a car to have averted the collision in spite of the (real or assumed) negligence of the pedestrian by leaving a sufficient margin for the man to pass; nevertheless as the collision occurred the inference is irresistible that it was directly due to the reckless and negligent conduct of the driver of the vehicle. In these circumstances, a driver of a motor vehicle is culpable even if there is proof of negligence on the part of the pedestrian.

A driver of a motor vehicle who is himself negligent cannot plead in his defence the negligence of a pedestrian whom he knocked unconscious and killed. A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 200=36 Cr.L.J. 1368=31 N.L.R. 26 Sup.=158 Ind. Cas. 330.

2 (d). Rash or negligent act—Motor-car collisions & accidents.

—S. 304-A—Rash and negligent driving of lorry resulting in death of a young girl—Benefit of doubt.

In the case of motor accidents it becomes very difficult for the Court to ascertain the circumstances of the incident. Where it is found that the speed of the vehicle was moderate and that it stopped within a few paces of the place of accident, it is quite possible that the deceased ran from one side to the other and the vehicle ran over the deceased and in such circumstances the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt. —S. 304-A—Duty of motor car driver pointed out.

When there is heavy vehicular traffic on the road and the road is invisible in a cloud of dust, it is the duty of all motorists under these conditions to stop the car. To continue driving must obviously be dangerous when it is impossible to see anything at all in the neighbourhood, particularly when the driver continues driving the car and manages to get on the wrong side of the road blocking the right of way of a car in the act of proceeding in the opposite direction and the act of driving amounts to undoubtedly a rash and negligent act. Held, that no rash or negligent act could be ascribed to the petitioner. It was not the case of the lorry striking against the boy, but was the case of the boy striking against the lorry. A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 33=40 Cr.L.J. 834=184 Ind. Cas. 157.

—S. 304-A—Rash and negligent driving—Motor cases.

Driving motor cars has become an essential part of human activities, and it is impossible to avoid a certain number of accidents. It is no part of the duty of Courts to punish with savage sentences every motorist who has the misfortune to have an accident, which results in a loss of life, even though the accident be due to an error of judgment on the part of the driver. The circumstances of each case must be considered in imposing sentence. A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 96=38 Bom.L.R. 1111=38 Cr.L.J. 660=168 Ind. Cas. 870.

—Ss. 304-A, 279, 338—Rash or negligent act—Meaning of.

The rash or negligent act referred to in S. 304-A means the act which is the immediate cause of death and not any act or omission which can at best be said to be a remote cause of death. The words "not amounting to culpable homicide" clearly show that what was intended was an act which had directly caused the death of any person. Sections 279 and 338 are correlative with S. 304-A, which section, while as general as S. 338, is restricted to cases where death has been caused:

Held, that where the absence of the horn or the inefficiency of the brakes was not in any way responsible for the death of the pedestrian, the fact that the accused's lorry had no horn or had inefficient brakes could not, in the circumstances of the case, be taken into consideration under S. 304-A, I. P. C., though they can be made the subject of a prosecution under the Motor Vehicles Act. A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 400=12 Luck. 336=1936 O.W.N. 720=37 Cr.L.J. 975=164 Ind. Cas. 333.

—S. 304-A—Rash and negligent driving—Criterion.

Mere velocity of the vehicle is not the only criterion of rash and negligent driving. It may consist in taking, while driving, risks which, by the exercise of a little diligence, could have been avoided.

Driving a car recklessly until it came so close to the pedestrian that it became impossible to save the collision, cannot but be characterised as rash and negligent driving. It is true that ordinarily the pedestrians who use the road are not exempt from the duty to take care of themselves, but negligence, if any, on the part of a pedestrian cannot excuse negligence on the part of a driver of such a fast and dangerous vehicle as a motor bus. As between a pedestrian and a driver of a motor vehicle, the responsibility of the latter is greater. He has a duty to keep better outlook than a pedestrian. The duty to use care increases in proportion to the danger involved in dealing with the instruments which, for a man's own purpose he brings into relations of proximity to his neighbours. There is the strongest presumption (of negligence) both in fact and in law against a driver who runs down a person in daylight. A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 200=36 Cr.L.J. 1368=31 N.L.R. 26 Sup.=158 Ind. Cas. 330.

—S. 304-A—Duty of drivers of motor cars.

A person driving a motor car is under a duty to control the car; he is prima facie guilty of negligence if the car leaves the road. It is for the person driving the car to explain the circumstances under which the car came to leave the road. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 209 (210)=1934 M.W.N. 102=39 L.W. 344=66 M.L.J. 318=35 Cr.L.J. 691=148 Ind. Cas. 573.

—S. 304-A.

To impose criminal liability under S. 304-A, it is necessary that the death should have been the direct result of a rash and negligent act of the accused, and that act must be the proximate and efficient cause without the intervention of another's negligence. It must be the causa causans; it is not enough that it may have the causa sine qua non.

Where, as the result of a collision of certain motor vehicles, the occupant in one of them was thrown away and killed;

Held, that in order to impose a criminal liability on the driver, it must be found as a fact that the collision was entirely or at least mainly due to the act of the driver and in the absence of such a finding his conviction could not be upheld. A.I.R. 1933 All. 232 (233)=1933 A.L.J. 205=34 Cr.L.J. 1013=55 All. 263=145 Ind. Cas. 612.

—S. 304-A—Negligence, what is—Accused driving too fast—Killing passenger in attempt to evade bullock carts.

The accused was driving a motor lorry very fast. Two bullock-carts came towards the lorry and on hearing the horn, instead of both going to the left, one cart went to the left and one to the right. The accused made a swerve hoping to get through on the right side. His lorry struck against a tree and a passenger was killed. The accused was convicted under S. 304-A for rash and negligent driving;

Held, that while there was negligence on the part of one of the bullock-cart drivers, the accused, if he had had his lorry under proper control, should have been able to avoid the consequences of that negligence. His negligence, therefore, was the negligence that substantially caused the accident and he was, therefore, rightly convicted. A.I.R. 1931 All. 708=1931 A.L.J. 770=32 Cr.L.J. 1061=133 Ind. Cas. 601.

—S. 304-A.

—S. 304-A—Driving motor at night along a road under repair—Persons sleeping on the road killed—Motor running at slow speed—Offence under S. 304-A is not committed.

Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so and that it may cause injury, but without intention to cause injury or knowledge that it will be probably caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequence. Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted: 3 All. 776 and 7 M.H.C. 119 Foll.

There is nothing rash or negligent per se in driving along a road under repair or partly under repair any more than on a road not under repair except perhaps to the person driving. Any one driving on a road under repair would be called on to exercise the same caution as he would on a road in its normal condition, that is to say, to look out to see what persons or vehicles were on the road making the ordinary use of the road; but it cannot possibly be held that a driver should anticipate that he will find persons sleeping on a road even at night, though a road is under repair, and that he must look out for persons making such an abnormal use of the road, and if he does not do so he is guilty of negligence or rashness.

There is nothing to prevent a man talking and at the same time taking the ordinary precautions against accident and, therefore, engaging in conversation whilst driving is not necessarily a rash or negligent act. 91 Ind. Cas. 889=53 Cal. 333=30 C.W.N. 66=27 Cr.L.J. 153=A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 300.

2 (e). Rash or negligent act—Rashness and negligence.*—S. 304-A—When applies—Rash and negligent act—Meaning.

S. 304-A of the Penal Code obviously does not apply to a case where there is an intention to cause death or knowledge that the act done will in all probability cause death. It only applies to cases in which without any such intention or knowledge death is caused by what is described as a rash or negligent act. A negligent act is an act done without doing something which a reasonable man guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do or an act which a prudent or reasonable man would not do in the circumstances attending it. A rash act is a negligent act done precipitately. Negligence is the genus, of which rashness is the species. 1950 A.L.J. 96=A.I.R. 1950 A. 300=51 Cr.L.J. 865=1950 A.W.R. 23.

—S. 304-A—Misdemeanour—Rash and negligent act—Degree of negligence to be charged—Manslaughter—Difference.

The negligence charged in the case of a rash and negligent act, is not necessarily as grave, either in its nature or in its consequences as in the offence of manslaughter. The degree of negligence differs in cases of felony of manslaughter and in cases of misdemeanour (rash and negligent act). Though the negligence in the case of the latter must be of a higher degree than the negligence which gives rise to a claim for compensation in a Civil Court, it is not of so high a degree as that which is necessary to constitute the offence of manslaughter. 61 L.W. 260=1948 M.W.N. 300=49 Cr.L.J. 665=A.I.R. 1948 P.C. 183.

—S. 304-A—Burden of proof—Res ipsa loquitur

Where the facts established were that the motor vehicle had knocked down the deceased who was driving his bullock cart, and the motor vehicle was being driven by a novice who was learning to drive and who had only 12 hours' driving experience, and that the instructor was sitting nearby the driver could not be charged with negligence. The responsibility would naturally fall on the shoulders of the instructor whose duty it was to be vigilant so as to guard against any untoward movement on the part of the learner. It is incumbent on the instructor to explain the circumstances in which the car swerved from the road and what he did to rectify the mistake committed by the novice driver.

The principle of res ipsa loquitur does not conflict with the principle of criminal jurisprudence that the burden of proving an offence lies on the prosecution. Res ipsa loquitur means that the circumstances are themselves eloquent of the negligence of somebody who brought about the state of things complained of. The res speaks because the facts remain unexplained and therefore, natural and reasonable, not conjectural, inference from the facts shows that what has happened is reasonably to be attributed to some act of negligence on the part of somebody. The prosecution has, in the first instance, the obligation of proving relevant facts from which the inference of negligence can be drawn. A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 242=1945 N.L.J. 300=1 L.R. (1945) Nag. 566.

—S. 304-A—Negligence, meaning of.

Negligence under S. 304-A does not mean absolute carelessness or indifference but want of such a degree of care as is required in particular circumstances. A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 285=1944 N.L.J. 451=1 L.R. (1944) Nag. 732.

—S. 304-A—Negligence, standard of.

Before a conviction can be properly made under S. 304-A, the carelessness shown must be such as to amount to such recklessness as would involve some element of criminality. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequences. Culpable rashness is acting with the consciousness that the mischievous and illegal consequences may follow but with the hope that they will not and often with the belief that the actor has taken sufficient precautions to prevent their happening. Before a person can be convicted of a criminal offence, it must be proved that mens rea exists, that in fact the accused had a guilty mind. In order to establish criminal liability the facts must be such that, in the opinion of the Court, the negligence of the accused went beyond a mere matter of compensation between subjects and showed such disregard for the life and safety of others as to amount to a crime against State and conduct deserving punishment. Simple lack of care such as will constitute civil liability is not enough. For purposes of the criminal law there are degrees of negligence, and a very high degree of negligence is required to be proved before the felony is established. Probably of all the epithets that can be applied "reckless" most nearly covers the case. But it is probably not all embracing, for "reckless" suggests an indifference to risk, whereas the accused may have appreciated the risk, and intended to avoid it, and yet shown in the means adopted to avoid the risk such a high degree of negligence as would justify a conviction.

A captain had certain military duties to perform and to that end, early in the morning, at about 2 A.M., he was driving in a car on his way to Oil Installations where he was to check the night guard patrol. He was driving at a speed of between 25 to 30 miles an hour. The lights were necessarily dim, because the A.R.P. regulations required that only one dim light should be shown by the car while the street lights were unlit. In the course of the journey, some pedestrians appeared on the road and one of them was knocked down and killed, but the Captain, not realizing that an accident had occurred, went on driving his car. It was only when he was informed of the accident at the Oil Installations that he came to know of the same and expressed his regret and surprise. The road on which accident occurred was uneven and bumps being common while driving a car, the Captain could not realise that an accident had occurred:

Held, that in the circumstances of the case, the Captain could not be said to have driven his car rashly or negligently and thereby caused the death of the pedestrian. A.I.R. 1944 Sind 124=46 Cr.L.J. 759=220 Ind. Cas. 452 (D.B.).

—S. 304-A — 'Medical practitioner—Criminal negligence, what is.

A great care which should be taken before imputing criminal negligence to a professional man acting in the course of his profession.

A doctor is not criminally responsible for a patient's death unless his negligence or incompetence passed beyond a mere matter of compensation and showed such disregard for life and safety as to amount to a crime against the State. What amount of negligence is to be regarded as gross is a question of degree for the jury, depending on the circumstances of each particular case. The degree of negligence required is that it should be gross, and that neither a jury nor a Court can transform negligence of a lesser degree into gross negligence merely by giving it that appellation.

Where, in a charge against a medical practitioner for manslaughter due to negligent administration of medical dose of sobita by injection, the defence maintained that the deceased was peculiarly susceptible to the effect of the particular medicine and, therefore, unexpectedly succumbed to a dose which would have been harmless in the case of a normal child, and that in any case, the negligence (if any) did not amount to criminal negligence:

Held, that in order to show that the injection given was too strong and to negative the suggestion that the boy's death was due to an exceptional re-action to the medicine in his case, evidence of the symptoms, illness and death of nine other children to whom the accused had given the same treatment, was admissible. The evidence of the illness and death of other persons was admissible, not to prove the bad character of the accused, nor to prove a course of conduct of system but to establish one of the essential points which the prosecution had to establish to show that such a large proportion of the other children who were similarly injected by the accused at the same time and place had re-actions similar to those of deceased at to prove that his re-action could not be due to his own idiosyncrasy, and therefore, must be due to an overdose.

Held further that it could not be said that criminal negligence had been proved merely because a number of persons had been made gravely ill after receiving an injection from the accused coupled with a finding that a high degree of care had not been exercised. Merely because too strong a mixture was once dispensed and a number of persons were made gravely ill, it could not be said that a criminal degree of negligence was proved. A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 72=44 Cr.L.J. 569=1943 A.L.J. 427=57 L.W. 269=1943 A.W.R. 48=207 Ind. Cas. 107 (P.C.).

—S. 304-A—Culpable negligence explained—Negligent act must be proximate and efficient cause of death.

Manslaughter by negligence occurs when a person is doing anything dangerous in itself, or has charge of anything dangerous in itself, and conducts himself in regard to it in such a careless manner that the jury feel that he is guilty of culpable negligence, and ought to be punished. Death should have been the direct result of a rash and negligent act of the accused and that act must have been the proximate and efficient cause without the intervention of another's negligence. It must have been the causa causans; it is not enough that it may have been the causa sine qua non.

While a village theatrical company was playing the piece called 'Sultana Dacoit' on a chabutra as part of the celebrations in connection with a wedding, the accused who was the mukhia of the village came on the scene carrying with him his twelve bore gun with one hammer at full cock and wearing a belt with cartridges, as he was in fear of being attacked by certain dacoits who had recently been released from jail, and took his stand on a corner of the chabutra or one side of the chabutra to watch the performance. While he was doing so, one of the actors B, who was playing the part of a drunken dacoit thought it would be an amusing addition to the play to make an apparent assault on the mukhia. He approached the mukhia who was standing holding his gun and grappled with him (lipat gaya) and there was something in the nature of a struggle or wrestling and in the course of this struggle, the gun went off and B received shots in his head from which he died:

Held, that as the accused was in fear of being attacked by dacoits, he was fully justified in carrying his gun with him and in having it loaded. There was nothing either rash or negligent in carrying a loaded gun at night and standing quietly in a corner and watching a dramatic performance. The accused was in the position of a person who was not endangering anybody's life at all as long as he stood where he was, whether the gun was loaded only or whether it was both loaded and cocked. No doubt the accused was the cause "sine qua non", but it was the intervention of the deceased B which brought about the situation of danger and that was not an intervention which the accused could, by any means, be able to foresee. In these circumstances, the accused could not be convicted of an offence under S. 304-A, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1942 All. 328=1942 A.L.J. 321=43 Cr.L.J. 921=I.L.R. (1942) All. 884=1942 A.W.R. 253=203 Ind. Cas. 128.

—S. 304-A—Negligence required.

Mere carelessness is not sufficient for conviction under S. 304-A. Section 304-A, like other sections of the Penal Code requires a mens rea or guilty mind. The rashness or negligence must be such as fairly to be described criminal. The phrase "criminal negligence" as used in ordinary conversation conveys something of the meaning. A.I.R. 1938 Sind 100=39 Cr.L.J. 566=32 S.L.R. 663=175 Ind. Cas. 116.

—S. 304-A.—Rash act—Meaning of.

The term 'rash act' within the meaning of S. 304-A connotes the want of proper care and caution. It means an overhasty act. A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 326 (328)=35 Cr.L.J. 248=147 Ind. Cas. 60.

—S. 304-A—Negligently unloading pistol—Person killing another in act of unloading pistol he knows to be loaded is guilty of negligence.

P knowing that a pistol was loaded, tried to unload it and while doing so acted so negligently that the pistol went off killing C's son.

Held; that the act had been negligent on P's part and came within the purview of S. 304-A, and that the sentence of six months' simple imprisonment and Rs. 250 fine or three months' more imprisonment in default was sufficient. 1930 Cr.C. 531=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 462.

—S. 304-A—Administering potion—Administering love potion or drug expecting benefit is no offence but where the wife administers at the instance of her paramour who was the enemy of her husband she is guilty under S. 304-A.

Where the intention to cause death cannot be clearly found without any other possible explanation of the act of the person giving poison a conviction for murder cannot stand. Unless it is shown clearly and without possible doubt that the intention was to cause death where a substance is administered as a love potion, the accused cannot be convicted of murder. The mere administering of a love potion or drug which a person thinks might be beneficial is not in itself an offence but when it is supposed to have effect upon persons with whom the paramour of the accused had enmity, and when she administers it without due care and caution or any enquiry as to what it really is, her act falls within S. 304-A. 77 Ind. Cas. 801=1924 P.H.C.C. 13=25 Cr.L.J. 449=A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 635.

Appellant in charge of a dispensary took out a bottle from a cup-board bearing a label with the word 'Poison' printed on it, thought it contained quinine and administered it as such. —S. 304-A—Death by rashness—Administering poison as a love potion.

The accused administered to her husband a deadly poison believing it to be a love potion to stimulate his affection for her. The husband died from the effects of the poison. Held, that the accused was guilty of an offence punishable under S. 304-A inasmuch as she acted both rashly and negligently in giving as a love potion, a deadly form of poison. 17 Bom. —S. 304-A—Wilful offence—Rash act—Distinction.

A wilful offence does not take the character of rashness because the consequences have been unfortunate. But acts which in themselves are not offences but which possibly or probably involved danger to others may be offences under S. 304-A, if done without due care to guard against dangerous consequences. 7 M.H.C.R. 119, 4 C. 764, Foll. 39 Cal. 855=15 C.L.J. 512=13 Cr.L.J. 195=16 C.W.N. 1055=14 Ind. Where the accused received a powder from an enemy of her relative, took no precaution to ascertain whether it was noxious and mixed it with his food believing that by doing so, he would become rich: Held, her conduct was wanting in that prudence and circumspection which every human being is supposed to exercise and as by her rash and thoughtless act she caused death she was guilty of an offence under S. 304-A. 4 Bom. —Ss. 304-A. 336, 337, 338, 114—Interpretation of—Scope of Ss. 304-A and 336—Rash and negligent act—Definition of abetment.

Where by the bullet fired by the one or the other of two accused persons who were practising at target shooting at a place near which was a public road, which the accused would have noticed if they had used the least circumspection, a man was wounded resulting in his death. Held that both the accused were guilty of an offence under S. 304-A, and that in such a case the one whose bullet struck the deceased and caused death cannot be held to be the only principal offender under S. 304-A, and the other whose shot did not strike the deceased, his abettor under S. 114. The definition of culpable rashness and negligence given by Holloway, J. in 7 M. H. C. 119, 120 foll. The words "rash or negligent act" as used in S. 304-A. have the same meaning as the words "does any act so rashly and negligently" which are to be found in Ss. 336, 337, 338. S. 304, does not create a new offence; its provisions are similar to those of S. 337 when an act is done so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the safety of others, it is an offence under S. 336, quite irrespective of the consequences that might follow and when such an act results in the death of the person, the offence becomes one under S. 304-A. 1 Ind. Cas. 814=9 Cr.L.J. 393=13 C.W.N. 362=9 C.L.J. 204=36 C. 302.

—S. 304-A—Proximate cause—Death—Rash or negligent act.

To impose criminal liability under S. 304-A, it is necessary that the death should have been the direct result of a rash and negligent act of the accused, and that act must be the proximate and efficient cause without the intervention of another's negligence. It must be the causa causans; it is not enough that it may have been the causa sine qua non. (1902) 4 Bom. L.R. 679.

Held, if the accused gives an explanation which might reasonably be true—Though one may not be convinced as to its truth—The prosecution cannot be held to have proved all that is necessary to bring home the guilt of murder to the accused. The mere fact that a human life is lost due to negligent driving of motor car does not justify the Court in passing a deterrent sentence, if the lost life could not have been reasonably anticipated by the accused. With that object, they made her sit on the pyre with the husband on her lap and instantly a fire broke out from her hand. She tried to escape and leapt in the adjoining river wherefrom she was rescued by the police but she died ultimately three days later. The accused foiled the attempts of the police to save her at an earlier stage.

—Ss. 307, 324—Applicability and Scope—P, when pursued as a thief by B, firing at B and hitting him not in vital part of body—Offence, held fell within S. 307.

F. Y. D. 12—19-A

P who was not an expert shot, pursued as a thief by B, fired at one particular part of his pursuer's body and hit that part and that part only, it was contended that the case did not come under S. 307 at all because P did not fire to kill at all but fired only to injure and stop pursuit.

Held, that when P fired his revolver under these circumstances, his act, if death had followed, would clearly have fallen under Part IV of S. 300, I.P.C. It was an act so imminently dangerous that it would, in all its probability, cause death or such bodily injury as would be likely to cause death. Fortunately, however, for him, B was not hit in a vital part of his body and did not die : nevertheless, it could not be said that this was a simple case only of an offence under S. 324, I.P.C., and that S. 307, I.P.C., did not apply. A.I.R. 1944 Sind 83=45 Cr. L. J. 598=212 Ind. Cas. 352 (F.B.).

—Ss. 307, 308—Applicability—Knowledge and intention—Effect.

Per Digby, J.—So far as a conviction is to be based on knowledge as opposed to intention, the act (not necessarily the injury caused) must be likely to cause death and S. 307 or S. 308 will reply according to the degree of likelihood and the knowledge of the assailant established. A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 145=I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 411=1943 N.L.J. 90=44 Cr. L.J. 512=206 Ind. Cas. 382.

—S. 307—Applicability and scope.

Per Niyogi, J.—An act may be regarded from two points of view; one in relation to the intention which preceded the act and another, the actual consequence which follows from it. For the purpose of S. 307 what is material is the intention or knowledge, not the consequence of the actual act done for the purpose of carrying out the intention. That section clearly contemplates an act which is done with the intention of causing death but which fails to bring about the intended consequence on account of the intervention of a cause operating independently of the volition of the agent. A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 145=44 Cr. L. J. 512=I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 411=1943 N.L.J. 90=206 Ind. Cas. 382.

—Ss. 307, 308—Applicability and scope—Type of case in illustration is not the only type of case under S. 308.

Per Digby J.—In Ss. 307 and 308, I.P.C., the words "under such circumstances" have been used to distinguish "attempted" murder from "attempted" culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The illustration to S. 308, though it supports the interpretation, does not warrant the conclusion that the type of case mentioned in the illustration is the only type of case falling under that section. An offence under S. 307 can be committed where there is no intention proved but only knowledge that the act is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death, and an offence under S. 308 can be committed where there is no intention proved but only knowledge by the offender that he is likely to cause death by his act. A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 145=I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 411=1943 N.L.J. 90=44 Cr. L. J. 512=206 Ind. Cas. 382.

—Ss. 307, 304—Applicability and scope—Accused caught by constable effecting escape by inflicting wound on chest with knife—Victim indoor patient for 11 days—Conviction, if should be under S. 307 or S. 304—Knowledge and intention.

M who was driving in his bullock cart was persistently molested by R. When M arrived at the cross-road, he appealed to a Police constable on point duty, for help. The Police constable intervened and demanded the name of R who defiantly refused to disclose his name. The constable caught hold of his right hand and led him to the Kotwall. On the way, R suddenly whipped out a knife from his waist, and with a sharp sweep of his left hand, dealt a blow with it on the chest of the Police constable. As his hold was relaxed, R set himself free and effected his escape. The constable's medical examination disclosed a punctured wound 7-10" x 1.5" x 1/2" deep situated on the left side of the chest nearly 3" away and in the line of left nipple; the wound was transverse, its edges were clean cut and there was oozing. The medical officer's opinion was that the injury had been caused by a sharp pointed weapon like a knife and that if it had penetrated an inch deeper it would have brought about instantaneous death. The constable remained in the hospital as an indoor patient for 11 days. R was acquitted of the offence of an attempt to commit murder (S. 307, I.P.C.) but was found guilty of the offence of voluntarily causing hurt by a dangerous weapon (S. 324, I.P.C.) and of voluntarily causing hurt to deter public servant from his duty (S. 332, I.P.C.). In an appeal by the Provincial Government it was contended that the accused should be convicted under S. 307.

Held, the knife and the injury on the chest were no doubt material but not conclusive in themselves to prove the requisite intention or knowledge contemplated in S. 307. On the other hand, the assailant's immediate purpose was to release himself from the constable's hold and run away. His object in dealing the blow would, therefore, be nothing more than to disable the constable. The surrounding circumstances made no contribution to the proof of the intention or knowledge. It had, therefore, to be inferred only from the nature of the act itself. If the act caused an injury which, in point of law, amounted only to simple hurt, it would not be open to impute to him an intention or knowledge other than that of causing simple hurt. When the nature of the act itself is the only means of judging the intention, the agent must be presumed to intend only the natural consequences of the act which in the present case was simple hurt. The accused, therefore, could not be convicted under S. 307, I.P.C. A. I. R. 1943 Nag. 145=1943 N.L.J. 90=I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 411=44 Cr. L.J. 512=206 Ind. Cas. 382.

—Ss. 307, 324—Applicability and scope—Simple injury with knife—Offence, held fell under S. 324, and not under S. 307.

The only act which could fall within the purview of S. 307, I. P. C., is an act which by itself must be ordinarily capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of events and the accused's criminal liability must be limited to the act which he, in fact, did and cannot be extended so as to embrace the consequences of another act which he might have done but did not do.

An accused stabbed the complainant with a knife and caused three injuries: (1) a stab wound 3/4" x 1/4" and 3/4" deep on the left back in the middle. (2) A contusion mark 2-3/4" x 1/4" on the right chest at its lower part. (3) A stab wound 1 1/2" x 1/2" and 1/4" deep on the back of the left thigh in its middle. All these injuries were simple in nature:

—Ss. 307, 337—Applicability and scope—

If a man fires blindly in the dark with a shot gun in the direction from which he has heard sounds coming from a distance away, it cannot be held that his act must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. Such a person cannot possibly be convicted under S. 307 but should be convicted under S. 337, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 220=39 Cr. L. J. 692=176 Ind. Cas. 150.

—S. 307—Applicability—Causing of injury, if necessary—Intention, proof of.

Section 307, Penal Code, may apply even if no hurt is caused. The causing of hurt is merely an aggravating circumstance and it cannot, therefore, be reasonably argued that unless an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death is inflicted on the victim, the intention contemplated by S. 307, Penal Code, cannot be presumed. Under this section, the intention precedes the act and is to be proved independently of the act, and not merely gathered from the consequences that ensue. All that is necessary to be established is the intention with which the act is done and if once that intention is established the nature of the act will be immaterial. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 619=I.L.R. (1957) Lah. 111=38 Cr. L. J. 1052=171 Ind. Cas. 284.

—Ss. 307, 324—Applicability and scope—Accused drunk and inflicting slight injuries on provocation—Offence.

Where the accused was drunk when he inflicted injuries and had both given and received provocation, the injuries were of a trivial nature and he himself had received beating.

—S. 307—Applicability and scope.

Held, after considering evidence that accused could not be convicted under S. 364, conviction under S. 307 would be proper. A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 44=37 Cr.L.J. 12=1935 O.W.N. 1177=159 Ind. Cas. 945.

—S. 307—Applicability and scope—Accused shooting at A but wounding B.

Section 307 provides for the punishment of a person who intends to commit murder but fails in achieving his object. The effect of Ss. 301 and 307 read together is that an accused person who shoots at A and wounds B by mistake would be guilty under S. 307 although he has not been able to get the person whom he intended to injure. A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 74=37 Cr. L.J. 25=158 Ind. Cas. 648.

—S. 307—Applicability and scope—Persons pursued by Police turning round and firing—Bullets not found and nobody hit—Offence.

Where certain persons who were pursued by the Police were found to have turned round and deliberately fired, it cannot be said that they were attempting to hit and the offence falls under S. 307, Penal Code, although nobody was hit and no bullets were found. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 354=37 C. W. N. 312=60 Cal. 543=34 Cr.L.J. 611=143 Ind. Cas. 593.

—S. 307—Applicability and scope—Use of pistol with reckless disregard to consequences—Offence—Arms Act (11 of 1878), S. 19 (f).

Where a pistol was used by the accused with a reckless disregard to consequences against a Police Constable who was chasing him and the bullet remained lodged inside.

Held, that the presumption of the accused's intention to cause death must be drawn and that he was guilty both under S. 307, Penal Code, and S. 19 (f), Arms Act. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 852=34 P.L.R. 672=35 Cr. L.J. 171=14 Lah. 820=146 Ind. Cas. 843.

—Ss. 307, 149—Applicability and scope.

Where, in a fight between the parties who are well armed, the way in which the spears are used is in itself strong proof of the intention of the persons using them and the protracted nature of the attack shows that all the accused had common object in the unlawful assembly, and death has ensued as a result the accused should be convicted under S. 307, read with S. 149. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 661=35 C. L. J. 250=35 P.L.R. 238=146 Ind. Cas. 949.

—Ss. 307, 149—Applicability and scope.

Person was assaulted and seriously injured and assailants were tried for offences under Ss. 307, 149. They were acquitted by the Sessions Judge :

Held, on an examination of evidence that the charge under S. 307 had been brought home and that the order of acquittal, would be set aside. A. I. R. 1933 Oudh 340=34 Cr. L. J. 538=10 O.W.N. 585=143 Ind. Cas. 129.

—Ss. 307, 324—Applicability and scope—Act not capable of causing death in the natural course of events—Conviction under S. 307, legality of.

The only act which could fall within the purview of S. 307, Penal Code, is an act which, by itself, must be ordinarily capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of events. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 63=32 Cr. L. J. 582=31 P.L.R. 1004=130 Ind. Cas. 649.

—Ss. 307, 328, 511—Applicability and scope—Administering poison—Victims recovering—Accused young and acting under instigation—Offence.

Where the accused who was a youth administered poison to his brother through food, of which his brother's son and daughter also partook and he was charged under S. 307, but the evidence showed that he was acting under the instigation of a person who had absconded and that owing to the ready help by neighbours none of the three succumbed, and there was, in the opinion of High Court, a probability for the accused to become a fit member of the society after discipline, the High Court convicted the accused under S. 328 instead of S. 307, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 346=32 Cr. L. J. 1228=134 Ind. Cas. 639.

—S. 307—Applicability and scope.

In determining the intention, the act done and the manner of its doing as well as the announced intention at the time may be taken into consideration.

The accused came armed with dangs and beat the complainant to unconsciousness with whom they had previous enmity. Previous to giving him this beating they announced their intention of killing him.

Held, that the charge under S. 307 was not wholly unjustified or illegal. 112 Ind. Cas. 224=29 Cr. L. J. 1008=11 A. I. Cr. R. 262=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 67.

—S. 307—Applicability and scope—Discharging loaded gun—Offence.

A person intentionally discharging a loaded gun at another, from a short distance and inflicting injuries which might have proved fatal, should be convicted of an offence under S. 307 and not merely of grievous hurt. 16 Cr. L.J. 542=29 Ind. Cas. 670 (Mad.).

—Ss. 307 and 324—Applicability and scope—Blow with hatchet—Nature of offence.

Where the accused struck his wife on the neck with a hatchet he ought to be convicted under S. 324, I.P.C. and not under S. 307 since the blow with a hatchet would not ordinarily cause death. The act contemplated by S. 307 is an act which by itself must be ordinarily capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of events. 15 Bom. L. R. 991=14 Cr. L. J. 641=21 Ind. Cas. 881.

—S. 307—Applicability and scope.

Where the accused who had previously administered datura to other persons who had died from the effects thereof, administered the same poison to C who became ill but recovered, he is guilty of an offence under S. 307. 32 P.L.R. 1911=12 Cr.L.J. 125=9 Ind. Cas. 731.

—S. 307—Applicability and scope—Throwing child and wishing that death should fall as a curse.

A woman, throwing her child three years old into a small pond wishing that its death should fall as a curse on the head of some other woman who was quarrelling with her, can be presumed to have an intention to cause death of the child, and is guilty under S. 307 though the child was immediately saved. 11 Cr. L.J. 48=5 Ind. Cas. 138 (All.).

2. Attempt to murder—What amounts to.

—S. 307—Attempt to murder—What amounts to—Number of blows struck at neck of person not in position to defend himself—No death caused—Act, if attempt to murder.

In order that an act shall amount to an attempt to murder all that it is necessary to prove is that if the act had caused death, it would have amounted to murder provided that it was done with such intention or knowledge as would be necessary to be proved in the case of murder. The fact that an act results in minor injuries or even in no injuries at all is not relevant for the purpose of deciding whether it amounted to an attempt to murder or not. Where a number of blows are struck at the neck of a person not in a position to defend himself and if the attack is successful, the act amounts to murder and when death does not result from such an attack, it is an attempt to murder within the meaning of S. 307. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 51=42 Cr. L.J. 303=7 B.R. 475=22 P. L. T. 419=192 Ind. Cas. 523.

person knows that certain result will ensue from his act he must be deemed to intend such result by doing the act. Further it is not necessary that the injury actually caused to the victim of the assault should be sufficient under ordinary circumstances to cause the death of the person assailed. What the Court has to see is whether the act, irrespective of its result, was done with the intention or knowledge and under circumstances mentioned in S. 307. 125 Ind. Cas. 183=A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 253.

—S. 307—Offence under—Essentials.

An offence under S. 307 is committed when the accused does an act which must in the ordinary course of events cause death. 130 Ind. Cas. 649=32 Cr. L. J. 582=A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 63=31 P. L. R. 1004.

5. Evidence.

—S. 307—Evidence—Attempt to kill or hurt—Benefit of doubt.

Where the accused took away a boy under the pretext of "magic worship" and caused several injuries on his body, mostly skin-deep, but one of which was an incised wound on the back of the neck, but subsequently he took the boy home, apologized and bandaged the wound :

Held, that though there were good reasons for believing that the accused actually intended to kill the boy, yet since he subsequently changed his mind, he was entitled to the benefit of doubt and the conviction from one of attempted murder should be altered to the less serious offence of causing grievous hurt, which he undoubtedly committed. A. I. R. 1935 All. 614=1935 A. W. R. 812=37 Cr. L. J. 305=160 Ind. Cas. 525.

—S. 307—Evidence.

Abrasions found on person of accused—Incriminating circumstance not proved against him—Accused cannot be called upon to explain them. 120 Ind. Cas. 210=31 Cr. L. J. 15=13 A. I. Cr. R. 157=1929 Cr. C. 673=A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 350.

—S. 307—Evidence.

Where it was proved that a shot was fired from the house in which the accused was residing, but it was not proved that the shot was aimed at any one in particular, and it was also doubtful whether the accused himself fired the shot.

Held, that the accused cannot be convicted under S. 307 as benefit of doubt should be given to him. 9 L. L. J. 331=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 853.

—S. 307—Evidence.

Where accused, a sowar pursued deceased whom he thought to be the person wanted at the police station, and fired three shots and deceased who was standing in the river at the time of the third shot never appeared again.

Held, there is no sufficient evidence to support the conviction. It is necessary to prove that the accused did an act with such intention or knowledge that if he had caused death by that act he would have been guilty of murder. The only act which he is clearly proved to have committed is to pull the trigger of a loaded rifle three times. It was just likely on the facts disclosed that he would have fired into the air in order to frighten and stop deceased as that he would fire at deceased. 76 Ind. Cas. 1028=25 Cr. L. J. 308=A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 415.

—S. 307—Evidence—Evidence doubtful against two of the accused—Conviction not proper.

Where a prosecution witness who was not interested in the accused Nos. 1 and 2, and who came up after the occurrence, deposed that he was told by Maula Bakhsh and Khair Din eye-witnesses that Abdul Hamid accused No. 3 had killed Nizam Din, and they did not immediately after the occurrence name the accused Nos. 1 and 2

Held, it appears highly probable that accused Nos. 1 and 2 did not take any part in the actual attack, and as Abdul Hamid alone could easily have caused all the injuries found on Nizam Din's person, it would be unsafe to convict accused Nos. 1 and 2. A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 236.

—S. 307—Evidence—Murderous intent—Benefit of doubt.

Where an accused has given several blows aimed at the head causing about 10 incised wounds, he must be charged with murderous intent. The accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt when it is found that, of the several alleged eye-witnesses to the occurrence standing at a short distance none of them came to the rescue of the injured man. The probability in such a case is that they did not see the assault. 13 P. W. R. 1915 Cr. =132 P. L. R. 1915=16 Cr. L. J. 462=29 Ind. Cas. 94.

—S. 307—Evidence—Circumstantial evidence, conviction under.

Where in a case under S. 307, I. P. Code, two persons were named at the thana as the assailants but a third was substituted for one at the spot and eye-witnesses saw only their backs the accused could not be convicted on the evidence, the existence of blood-stains on the clothes being insufficient. 14 Cr. L. J. 196=14 P. W. R. 1913 (Cr.)=67 P. L. R. 1913=19 Ind. Cas. 196.

—Ss. 307, 328 and 511—Evidence—Attempt to administer poison—Quantity not known—No evidence to prove—Probable effects—Intention to cause hurt.

Held, in absence of evidence of probable effects of poison administered it cannot be said that accused intended to cause more than hurt. 5 L. B. R. 79=3 Ind. Cas. 721.

6. Interpretation.

—Ss. 307, 308—Interpretation.

Per Digby J.—The word "attempt" used in the marginal notes to the sections should not receive weight in construing the sections themselves. A. I. R. 1943 Nag. 145=I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 411=1943 N. L. J. 90=44 Cr. L. J. 512=206 Ind. Cas. 382.

—S. 307—Interpretation—'Under such circumstances,' meaning of.

The expression "under such circumstances" refers to facts which would introduce a defence to a charge of murder such as for instance that the accused was acting in self-defence or in the course of military duty. A. I. R. 1932 Bom. 279=34 Bom. L. R. 571=33 Cr. L. J. 613=56 Bom. 434=138 Ind. Cas. 503.

7. Procedure.

—Ss. 307 and 324—Procedure.

Held, that the act of the accused amounted to an attempt to commit murder and the Deputy Magistrate should commit the accused to the Sessions and ought not to try it himself. 5 M. L. T. 257=11 Cr. L. J. 196=4 Ind. Cas. 1134.

8. Sentence.

—S. 307—Sentence.

Muderous assault by accused on his own brother—Sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment—Quarrel between brothers made up—Injured brother desiring reduction in sentence and making prayer to High Court—Revision by accused.

Held, that in the interests of justice the sentence should be reduced to one year, since a longer sentence would lead to renewal of old feud. A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 37=44 Cr.L.J. 336=9 B.R. 208=25 P.L.T. 43=205 Ind. Cas. 195.

—Ss. 307, 147, 148—Sentence.

Rioting and hurt—Section 149 applied—Accused convicted and sentenced under S. 307—Separate sentences under Ss. 147 or 148 should not be passed. A.I.R. 1943 Sind 212=I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 132=45 Cr.L.J. 130=209 Ind. Cas. 282.

—Ss. 307, 326—Sentence—Accused aiming gun and threatening to shoot a person—Grievous hurt to such person—Conviction under Ss. 307 and 326—Propriety of.

Where a person aimed his gun at another and tried to shoot him but in so doing, his gun went off and the person aimed at was grievously wounded and the accused was convicted, both of attempted murder and grievous hurt.

Held, that conviction was not improper as there was nothing incongruous between S. 307 and S. 326, but punishment should be one. A.I.R. 1937 Sind 61=30 S.L.R. 238=38 Cr.L.J. 487=167 Ind. Cas. 943.

—S. 307—Sentence.

Member of the conspiracy only aiding others who actually attempting murder, not himself taking part in it—No sentence of death can be passed against him under Ben. Criminal Law Amendment Act—Maximum sentence that can be passed is 14 years' imprisonment under S. 307, read with S. 115, Penal Code. A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 561=39 C.W.N. 334=36 Cr.L.J. 1275=62 Cal. 433=157 Ind. Cas. 1070.

—S. 307—Sentence.

Where, in pursuance of a conspiracy to murder the Governor of Bengal, one of the conspirators armed with a loaded revolver attempted to fire with such revolver at the Governor with intent to murder him.

Held, that the offence came under S. 307 and he could be sentenced to death under the Ben. Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1925, as amended by subsequent Acts. The fact that in the attempt some one else was hurt has some bearing on the sentence. A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 561=39 C.W.N. 334=62 Cal. 433=36 Cr. L. J. 1275=157 Ind. Cas. 1070.

—S. 307—Sentence—Conviction—Considerations to be made.

When awarding punishment the fact that the accused was a man of advanced years, of weak mind and had contracted morphia habit, may be considered though no mental aberration is proved. 6 P.R. 1912 (Cr.)=24 P.W.R. 1912 (Cr.)=13 Cr. L.J. 197=14 Ind. Cas. 197.

9. Miscellaneous.

—Ss. 307 and 323—Miscellaneous—Confirmation of order of discharge under S. 307 but ordering further enquiry into offence under S. 323—Legality—Trial Magistrate feeling evidence not sufficient.

Where a Sessions Judge set aside an order of discharge under S. 307, I.P. Code, but ordered a further enquiry with regard to the alleged offence under S. 323, I.P. Code.

Held, that it will not be open to a Sessions Judge to bisect an order of discharge into two parts, confirm one part and set aside the other. The order of discharge must be taken and read as a whole. As the Magistrate did not accept evidence of witnesses it necessarily followed that the non-acceptance would amount to disbelief of evidence regarding offence under S. 323. 1950 M.W.N. 875 (1)=51 Cr. L.J. 1176=A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 503=4 A.I.Cr. D. 441=(1950) 1 M.L.J. 313.

—S. 308—Grave and sudden provocation, what is.

A person can be said to have been provoked if he has been injured by some act or word, if by word, to his reputation, character or dignity. A well-merited rebuke cannot be described as a grave and sudden provocation. 1937 M.W.N. 637.

—S. 309—Attempts to commit suicide.

The offence is not an attempt to commit suicide inasmuch as the word "attempts" in S. 309, Penal Code, involves conscious effort. A.I.R. 1940 All. 486=1940 A.L.J. 583=42 Cr.L.J. 146=I.L.R. (1940) All. 647=1940 A.W.R. 488=191 Ind. Cas. 328.

—Ss. 309 and 302—Attempt to commit suicide—Pains of labour—Child born dead as a consequence.

If a woman attempts to commit suicide owing to the painful labour and in consequence the child is born dead, she is guilty for attempting to commit suicide only. 17 A.L.J. 478=20 Cr.L.J. 395=50 Ind. Cas. 1003.

—S. 309—Jumping into a well to avoid police—Attempt to commit suicide.

Mere jumping into a well to avoid the police cannot amount to an attempt to commit suicide in the absence of evidence that the jumping was to commit suicide. 14 Bom. L.R. 146=13 Cr. L. J. 246=14 Ind. Cas. 598.

—S. 309—Attempt to commit suicide—Sentence—Discretion of Court.

The law confers upon the Court a very wide discretion in the matter of punishment, and it is not necessary to inflict a sentence of imprisonment upon a person who, on account of family discord, destitution, loss of a dear relation, or other cause of a like nature, overcomes the instinct of a self-preservation and decides to take his life. In such a case, the unfortunate person deserves indulgence, and should be either released on probation of good conduct or sentenced to a fine if he is not too poor to pay the fine. These observations apply with greater force to the case of a woman who attempts to commit suicide in similar circumstances. It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule on the subject but the Court must, in each case, consider the motive which has prompted a person to destroy his or her life. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 514=35 P.L.R. 439=15 Lah. 872=36 Cr.L.J. 682=155 Ind. Cas. 283.

—S. 312—Attempt to commit an offence—Ingredients—Accused with intention of causing miscarriage administering harmless substance—Whether guilty of attempt to cause miscarriage.

Under the Criminal Law of India there are four stages in every crime, the intention to commit, the preparation to commit, the attempt to commit and if the third stage is successful, the commission itself. Intention alone, or intention followed by preparation are not sufficient to constitute an attempt. But intention followed by preparation, followed by any "act done towards the commission of the offence" are sufficient. "Act done towards the commission of the offence" are the vital words in this connection.

Where the accused, with the intention to administer something capable of causing a miscarriage to a woman with whom he was in criminal intimacy, administered a harmless substance to her :

Held, that this did not amount to an act towards the commission of the offence of causing miscarriage and that the accused should not be convicted of an attempt to cause miscarriage. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 893=37 C.W.N. 1151=35 Cr. L.J. 97=61 Cal. 54=146 Ind. Cas. 590.

—S. 312—Miscarriage—Attempt to commit suicide.

A woman attempting to take her own life owing to the severe pains of labour and the child was born dead, is not guilty of causing miscarriage. 17 A.L.J. 478=20 Cr. L.J. 395=50 Ind. Cas. 1093.

—S. 317—Abandonment of child—Benefit of doubt.

The prosecution must prove beyond all reasonable doubt, that the accused had exposed or left a child under the age of twelve years in some place with the intention of wholly abandoning it. Mere neglect or temporary abandonment is insufficient. In cases of reasonable doubt as to the intention with which the child was left, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. 21 Cr. L.J. 253=55 Ind. Cas. 205.

—S. 317—Concealing illegitimate child in bush.

Where after birth, of an illegitimate child a woman threw it into a bush and concealed the act and never showed any solicitude for the child, she commits an offence under S. 317. 11 U. B. R. (1914) 5=15 Cr. L.J. 525=24 Ind. Cas. 837.

—S. 317—Exposure and abandonment of child—Person having care of a child, exposing and abandoning it.

A person who received the child from the mother on condition of her not desiring to have it back must be deemed to be a person having the care of the child, until he entrusts it to some other person or institution. When the person so receiving the child abandons or exposes it, he is guilty under S. 317, though his custody of the child may have been only temporary or short and handing over by the mother for abandonment makes her also guilty under Ss. 317 and 109, I.P.C. 41 Bom. 152=18 Bom. L.R. 934=18 Cr. L.J. 98=37 Ind. Cas. 306.

—S. 317—Exposure and abandonment.

The gist of the offence under S. 317, is the exposure, with intention to abandon, and the manner of exposing and the fact that the child was sure to be found and looked after are not essential ingredient though they may be taken into consideration in passing the sentence. (1901) 24 M. 662. See 1903 A.W.N. 43 Supra.

—S. 318—Scope—Fact of birth merely disclosed to a confidant—Effect.

Section 318, Penal Code, is designed to punish a person for intentionally concealing the birth of the child from all and sundry, though she will not escape the consequences of her act if she merely discloses the fact of the birth to some confidant. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 489=36 C.W.N. 990=36 Cr. L.J. 1460=62 C.L.J. 260=62 Cal. 1127=158 Ind. Cas. 761.

—S. 318—Birth in hospital and known to nurses and others—Case of concealment of birth if made out.

Where the birth took place in the Medical School Hospital and was attended by nurses and others in the hospital who were well aware that the woman (accused) had given birth to twins and it was known to two women whom the nurse endeavoured to persuade to adopt the children and another relative of the woman (also accused) knew about the birth.

Held, that there was no concealment of birth within the meaning of S. 318, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 489=36 C.W.N. 990=36 Cr. L.J. 1460=62 C.L.J. 260=62 Cal. 1127=158 Ind. Cas. 761.

—S. 318—Attempt to conceal birth of child—Essentials to be proved.

In order to convict a woman of attempting to conceal the birth of her child, the dead body must be found and identified as that of the child of which she is alleged to have been delivered. A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 489=36 C.W.N. 990=36 Cr. L.J. 1460=62 C.L.J. 260=62 Cal. 1127=158 Ind. Cas. 761.

—S. 318—Placing the child on Batora.

The placing of the dead body of a child on a batora (dung heap) close to a public road does not amount to a secret disposing of it within S. 318 of the Code. 26 P.W.R. 1913 Cr.=14 Cr. L.J. 525=328 P.L.R. 1913=20 Ind. Cas. 1005.

—S. 318—Leaving in a public place, near houses.

Leaving the dead body of a child in a public place near a number of houses does not amount to secret deposition of the body under S. 318. (1911) 2 M.W.N. 379=12 Cr. L.J. 562=12 Ind. Cas. 650.

—Ss. 319, 323, 326, 352—Hurt—What amounts to.

Hurt need not be caused by direct physical contact between accused and victim—Victim woman—Serious mental derangement by causing shock amounts to hurt—Accused, with intent to frighten victim, presenting himself in dark in sudden and horrifying manner—Intention to cause hurt can be presumed—Hurt, whether simple or grievous depends on medical evidence. A.I.R. 1944 Sind 19=45 Cr. L.J. 247=211 Ind. Cas. 88.

—Ss. 319, 34, 149—Common intention—Joint liability.

Where S. 149 is found not applicable, yet if the accused are found to have the common intention of causing hurt to their victim and if hurt is caused by any of them, they are all liable under S. 34, for the offence of hurt. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 543=39 Cr. L.J. 781=40 P.L.R. 850=I.L.R. (1938) Lah. 608=176 Ind. Cas. 678.

—S. 319—Serious form.

Where a man of thirty, even though he had been dazed by a blow on the head inflicted by somebody else, approached the prostrate body of a dying man, kicked him on neck and then pressed with his foot the dying man's head into the ground so that it became buried in the earth.

Held, the man was guilty of the most serious form of simple hurt and maximum sentence should be awarded. 113 Ind. Cas. 481=5 O.W.O. 391=12 A.I.Cr.R. 2=30 Cr. L.J. 173=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 282.

—S. 320—Bone cut—No evidence to show extent of cut—Grievous hurt, if can be inferred.

Where the evidence is merely that a bone has been cut and there is nothing whatever to indicate the extent of the cut, whether deep or mere scratch upon the surface, it is impossible to infer from that evidence alone that grievous hurt has been caused within the meaning of the definition in S. 320. Penal Code. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 376=43 Cr.L.J. 511=8 B.R. 658=23 P.L.T. 633=200 Ind. Cas. 296.

—S. 320—Non-fatal wounds.

When two persons armed with deadly weapons intentionally attack and kill a person, and the deceased bears the marks of two wounds on his person, of which one only is fatal neither of the accused can escape being convicted of murder. 1941 M. W. N. 953.

—Ss. 320, 149—Presumption.

If a mob armed with deadly weapons goes to achieve a particular object by force or show of force, it is reasonable to infer that all the members of the assembly know that grievous hurt, if not murder, is likely to be caused in prosecution of that object. A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 611=18 Pat. 544=6 B.R. 203=41 Cr. L.J. 191=21 P.L.T. 45=185 Ind. Cas. 529.

—Ss. 320—Death due to tetanus—Wound not itself dangerous to life—Death within 20 days due to tetanus supervening—Hurt is not grievous.

The designation in S. 320, Penal Code of a hurt as grievous which causes the sufferer to be during the space of twenty days in severe bodily pain, applies only when such effect actually lasts for a period of twenty days and when the sufferer dies before that period has expired.

Where the wound was not itself dangerous to life but death was caused within 20 days, due to tetanus which supervened.

Held, that the wound was not 'grievous hurt'. 84 Ind. Cas. 438=26 Cr. L. J. 294=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 297.

—S. 320—Endangering life—Wound on neck with sharp-edged weapon is dangerous to life, but it is not sufficient in itself to cause death.

The accused, a young man of twenty, inflicted a wound with a sharp-edged weapon on the neck of the friend in a sudden impulse as a result of a quarrel. The wound became septic and wounded man died.

Held, that a wound on the neck was "dangerous to life" within the meaning of Cl. 8, S. 320 and was therefore grievous. But the wound itself was not in itself sufficient to cause death and the circumstances did not justify a finding that the accused knew that his act was likely to cause death. Considering the age of the accused and the circumstances, the sentence of seven years passed on the accused was very severe and sentence for two years was sufficient. 120 Ind. Cas. 431=31 Cr. L.J. 77=11 L.L.J. 519=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 305.

—S. 320—Endangering life.

Wounds, which though not likely to cause death cause death must be held to have 'endangered' life within the meaning of S. 320. 73 Ind. Cas. 49=9 F. Y. D. 12=20.

O.L.J. 490=26 O. C. 18=24 Cr. L.J. 513=A. I. R. 1923 Oudh 97.

—S. 321—Hurt—Elements of.

Causing bodily pain is the essential element of hurt. 167 Ind. Cas. 748=19 N.L.J. 18=38 Cr. L.J. 442.

—Ss. 322, 114, 109—Accused holding legs of complainant—Accused's son thrusting lathi into rectum—Offence—Section applicable.

A person who forcibly thrusts a lathi into rectum of another must at least know that he is likely thereby to cause grievous hurt to the victim as the rectum is a very tender part of human body, even if it be supposed for a moment that he did not thereby intend to cause grievous hurt. A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 468=36 Cr. L. J. 1151=1935 O.W.N. 902=11 Luck 384=157 Ind. Cas. 370.

—Ss. 352 and 322—Grievous hurt—Intention—Nature of injury—Intention.

An intent to cause grievous hurt may be inferred from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the injury caused. When a man hits another over the head with a stick hard enough to fracture his skull and endanger his life, he must in the circumstances, have either intended to cause grievous hurt or known that he was likely to cause it. (1911) 1 U.B.R. 105=13 Cr. L.J. 471=15 Ind. Cas. 311.

—Ss. 322 and 325—Offence—Essentials.

To sustain a conviction under S. 322 it must be shown not only that grievous hurt has been caused, but if it has been caused that the accused intended or knew himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. If the accused intended to cause or knew himself to be likely to cause simple hurt, a conviction under S. 325 is bad. 11 U.B.R. (1914) 35=16 Cr. L. J. 431=28 Ind. Cas. 1007.

1. Abatement.

—S. 323—Abatement.

A criminal prosecution under S. 323 does not abate by reason of the death of the person hurt. 25 P. R. Cr. 1919 and 26 P. R. Cr. 1917. Dissented from. 65 Ind. Cas. 549=44 Mad. 417=13 M.L.W. 379=1921 M.W.N. 227=30 M.L.T. 349=23 Cr. L. J. 117=A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 278=40 M.L.J. 351.

—S. 323—Abatement—Death of person hurt.

A criminal prosecution under Section 323 of the Indian Penal Code does not abate by reason of the death of the person injured. 44 Mad. 417, Foll. 81 Ind. Cas. 719=22 A.L.J. 520=5 L.R.A. Cr. 96=25 (Cr.) L.J. 1007=A.I.R. 1924 All. 666.

2. Alteration of conviction.

—Ss. 323, 376—Alteration of conviction.

A conviction under S. 376, I. P. C., cannot be altered to one under S. 323. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 178=34 P.L.R. 787=35 Cr. L.J. 519 (1)=147 Ind. Cas. 799 (2).

—S. 323—Alteration of conviction.

Accused assaulting Police constable in uniform. Matter should not be treated lightly. (Conviction under Ss. 325 and 353 was altered to one under S. 323, as the blows to the constable must have caused bodily pain.) A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 95=I.L.R. (1939) Nag. 488=1939 N.L.J. 101=40 Cr. L.J. 905=184 Ind. Cas. 231.

—S. 323—Alteration of conviction—Conviction under S. 147 can be altered to one under S. 323.

S. 238, Criminal Procedure Code is no bar to alter the conviction from one under S. 147 to one under S. 323; whether S. 147 is applicable or not depends on the number of persons concerned, and this is a question which has to be determined by the Judge. A.I.R. 1922 All. 114.

3. Applicability and Scope.

—Ss. 323 and 324—Applicability and scope—Offence under—Injuries caused by lathi.

Whether the lathi used in a case is or is not an instrument likely to cause death is a question of fact in each case and where the lathi used is not before the Court, it cannot be said that the injuries were caused by an instrument likely to cause death. The conviction of the accused in such a case would be under S. 323 and not under S. 324. I. P. Code. A.I.R. 1950 E.P. 209=51 Cr. L.J. 1005.

—S. 323—Applicability and scope—Offence under—Proof of—Medical evidence—Necessity.

No medical evidence is required to prove an offence of causing simple hurt. Causing any physical pain even momentarily is sufficient. A.I.R. 1950 Kut. 41=51 Cr. L.J. 1062.

—Ss. 323 and 147—Applicability and scope—Accused, held should be convicted under S. 323.

Where in a fight between the accused and the neighbours, injuries amounting to simple hurt were inflicted by the accused and the fight was a riot, not in a real but technical sense :

Held, that the accused should be convicted under S. 323 and not S. 147. A.I.R. 1945 All. 340=I. L. R. (1945) All. 422=1945 O. W. N. (H.C.) 148=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 142=221 Ind. Cas. 289.

—Ss. 323, 452—Applicability and scope—Accused charged of having committed dacoity—If can be convicted under Ss. 323 and 452.

An accused charged merely in general terms of "having committed dacoity" should not be convicted under Ss. 323 and 452 as latter offences are not necessarily cognate offences and in committing dacoity, one does not necessarily cause simple hurt or house trespass. A. I. R. 1345 All. 87=1945 A. I. J. 141

—Ss. 323, 362—Applicability and scope.

Charge of abduction supported by medical evidence of ruptured hymen—Charge should not be entered as under S. 323. A. I. R. 1942 Bom. 71=44 Bom. L.R. 27=43 Cr.L.J. 529=I.L. R. (1942) Bom. 384=199 Ind. Cas. 202 (F.B.).

—Ss. 323, 326, 302, 304—Applicability and scope—Offence, held one under S. 394.

The accused struck her daughter with a very heavy piece of wood whereupon she fell down and never stirred and everybody took her to be dead. She was then hung to a beam so as to make it appear that she had committed suicide :

Held, that in the absence of a post mortem certificate it was not easy to say that accused must have had the requisite knowledge and intention for a conviction under S. 302, I.P.C. Under the circumstances of the case, there was no reason to think that the deceased did not die immediately. Accused therefore, committed at least an offence punishable under S. 304.

Held, also that even if the offence might have been one of a minor nature punishable under S. 323 and the girl might have died subsequently after she had been hung to a beam the accused would still be guilty of an offence punishable under S. 326. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 415=55 L. W. 71=(1942) 1 M. L. J. 224=1942 M.W.N. 169=4 Cr. L.J. 671=201 Ind. Cas. 444.

—Ss. 323, 325—Applicability and scope.

Which of two accused caused grievous hurt, not clear—They cannot be convicted under S. 595, but only under S. 323. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 586=51 L.W. 590=(1940) M.W.N. 538=41 Cr.L.J. 923=412=190 Ind. Cas. 490.

—S. 323—Applicability and scope—Hurt—Several assailants—Some not actually striking—Conviction.

Where a number of persons are attacking, it is not necessary that every one of them should actually strike the victims although they may be near enough themselves to receive injuries if the victims are lashing out in self-defence. 40 P.L.R. 217.

—S. 323, 325, 97—Applicability and scope.

Accused, not a proclaimed offender rescued from custody of village chaukidar who, in the course thereof, receiving slight injury—Rescuers, held neither guilty under S. 325 nor under S. 323. A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 696=42 Cr. L.J. 199=7 B.R. 236=22 P.L.T. 80=191 Ind. Cas. 590.

—S. 323—Applicability and scope.

Constable assaulted at Ramilla performance—Constable not there in pursuance of duty, but only as spectator :

Held, that the offence, fell under S. 323 and not under S. 332, I.P.C. 161 Ind. Cas. 12=37 Cr. L.J. 375=58 N.L.J. 188.

—S. 323—Applicability and scope.

A person is not said to be guilty of robbery if he rescued illegally attached bull by inflicting an injury. He is guilty only under S. 323. 1935 M.W.N. 1295 (2).

—Ss. 323, 110—Applicability and scope.

Accused grappling with the deceased—Accused calling out her son—Son giving a lathi blow—Accused hitting on head of the deceased :

Held, that the accused could be convicted under Ss. 393, 110, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 473=1935 O.W.N. 909=36 Cr. L.J. 1201=157 Ind. Cas. 372.

—S. 323—Applicability and scope.

—Accused and number of other persons assaulting and causing injuries to complainant's men—When first injury was caused to any person, force was used and offence of rioting was complete and that subsequent injuries, though inflicted in pursuance of the same common object, were distinct injuries justifying a conviction under S. 323. A.I.R. 1933 All. 819=34 Cr.L.J. 1099=1933. A.L.J. 1178=145 Ind. Cas. 913.

—Ss. 323, 114—Applicability and scope—Previous conspiracy.

It is not necessary to sustain a conviction under S. 323 read with S. 114 that there should be any evidence of previous conspiracy between the abettor and that person abetted. 1933 M. W. N. 715.

—S. 323—Applicability and scope—Offence under.

Removing by force a person other than a person against whom a decree for ejectment from house and possession is obtained, is punishable under S. 323, I. P. C. 34 C.W.N. 583=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 720=127 Ind. Cas. 551.

—Ss. 323 and 34—Applicability and scope—Attempt to cause hurt—Joint action.

Two of the four persons with the common object of beating the complainant assaulted him while the other two stood ready armed with lathis to take part in the assault if required. Held, that the latter two were guilty, under S. 323, I.P.C. 18 Cr. L. J. 382=38 Ind. Cas. 766 (Pat.).

—S. 323—Applicability and scope—Biting by dog—Omission to take care of dog is offence under S. 289 and not under S. 323.

The accused was charged with omission to take order with his dog inasmuch as the animal bit the complainant in the front aspect of the right forearm causing three incised wounds :

Held, he is guilty under S. 289 and not under S. 323. 81 Ind. Cas. 53=2 Bur. L. J. 8=25 Cr. L.J. 565=A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 147.

—Ss. 323 and 336—Applicability and scope—Stone throwing—Rash or negligent act causing hurt—Intention—Offence.

S. 336 should not be applied where the facts constitute a graver offence. The accused, who had a quarrel with his debtor over non-discharge of a loan, pelted brickbats at his house knowing that there were occupants in it, and hurt one of them who was under medical treatment for ten days. Held, that the accused should be convicted under S. 323 and not under S. 336, as the hurt caused was the natural and probable consequence of his act. 17 Cr. L.J. 465=36 Ind. Cas. 145 (L.B.).

—S. 323—Applicability and scope—Conviction—Abusive language.

Conviction under S. 323 is bad where the complainant merely mentioned that accused used abusive language and made no mention of assault. 1 P.W.R. 1916 Cr.=17 Cr. L.J. 111=32 Ind. Cas. 847.

4. Conviction without specific charge.

—Ss. 323, 147—Conviction without charge—Accused prosecuted for rioting—Charge mentioning only S. 147 but indicating that accused were charged not merely with rioting but actually with causing hurt—Some accused acquitted and remaining convicted under S. 323—Conviction, held not illegal as offence of which accused were convicted was mentioned in charge sheet—Mere omission of "S. 323" held, did not prejudice accused. A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 10=42 Cr. L. J. 203=1940 N. L. J. 575=I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 139=191 Ind. Cas. 593.

—Ss. 323, 325—Conviction without specific charge—Attempt to commit murder—Conviction for voluntarily causing hurt without specific charge—Legality of.

The offence of hurt is included in the offence to the attempt to commit murder. The Court has jurisdiction to convict the accused of voluntarily causing hurt without a specific charge in that behalf. 167 Ind. Cas. 748=19 N.L.J. 18=38 Cr. L. J. 442.

5. Death by beating.*—Ss. 323, 324—Death by beating.

There was no previous premeditation about the matter. The party did not go to attack deceased in any way. They had gone to rescue the cattle from the deceased who was taking them to pound. The attack was only a scuffle between the deceased and the rescuers except that one of the rescuers suddenly inflicted a blow with his knife on the deceased which proved fatal :

Held that the accused other than the one who had inflicted a knife blow, were not guilty of offence more than under S. 322. It did not appear that at any stage before the incident happened they were aware that there was any likelihood of the deceased receiving any stab wound. Their conviction under S. 324/109 could not be sustained. A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 426 (2)=43 Cr. L. J. 455=199 Ind. Cas. 55.

—Ss. 323 and 304—Death by beating.

Deceased was dragged, fisted and kicked by accused—Death from asphyxia due to strangulation—No motive, no enmity—Intention to hurt only :

Held, that the accused could be convicted under S. 323 and not under S. 304. 1934 M.W.N. 691.

—S. 323—Death by beating—Continual ill-treatment of daughter-in-law by mother-in-law—Daughter-in-law spilling oil—Beating—Death—No evidence showing intention or knowledge of likelihood of causing death—Mother-in-law was held not guilty under S. 304 but under S. 323. 85 Ind. Cas. 150=5 L.R.A. (Cr.) 161=26 Cr.L.J. 470=A.I.R. 1925 All. 126.

—S. 323—Death by beating—Fight over cattle trespass—Accused's party desirous of chastising cattle-owners—Accused holding deceased and his partisans beating him with lathis—Death caused by blows on temple—Accused is guilty under S. 323.

There was a quarrel and fight over cattle trespass and the party in whose field trespass was committed disposed of the party of the owners of cattle, as the supporter of the owners came one by one. When the deceased came up, the accused caught his hands and some of the members of his party hit deceased with lathi. There was no intention on the part of the accused's partisans for causing the death of or grievous injury to the owners of the cattle. The desire was to chastise the owners of the cattle which caused damage. One of the blows was hit on the temple and killed the deceased.

Held: that the accused must have expected that simple injuries would be caused and he could not be held liable for one of his party hitting a blow on the temple and causing the death of the deceased and that the accused was guilty only under S. 323, I.P.C. 88 Ind. Cas. 520=2 O.W.N. 465=26 Cr. L.J. 1160=A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 482.

—S. 323—Death by beating.

Where death is caused as a result of simple injuries and where it is shown that the accused person had no knowledge that the deceased's spleen was diseased, he could only be convicted of causing simple hurt. 72 Ind. Cas. 533=24 Cr. L.J. 421=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 218.

—Ss. 323 and 325—Death by beating.

Where the accused gave blows and kicks to the deceased simply with intent to give him a good thrashing which resulted in his death should be convicted under S. 323 in absence of express proof that he intended to cause death or grievous hurt. 57 Ind. Cas. 826 (Pat.)

6. Evidence disbelieved—Conviction—Legality.
—Ss. 323, 324, 395, 452, 147, 148—Evidence disbelieved—Conviction—Legality—Case of dacoity—Entire evidence of prosecution found false—Case must fail—Case cannot fall under Ss. 323 and 324.

Where, in a case of dacoity, the Court disbelieves the entire evidence for the prosecution as regards the dacoity, the case must fail and the Court cannot convict the accused under S. 323 merely on the ground that the complainant's party had received injuries and the injuries may have been caused by some of the accused. A.I.R. 1945 All. 87=1945 A.L.J. 141=46 Cr. L.J. 495=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 138=I.L.R. (1945) All. 432=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 145=218 Ind. Cas. 372.

—S. 323—Prosecution evidence disbelieved—Conviction based on injuries on persons of accused—Whether can be upheld.

Where in a prosecution under S. 323, I.P.C., the Judge disbelieved the entire prosecution evidence and convicted the accused simply because they bore a number of injuries on their persons:

Held, that the conviction could not be upheld simply because they bore injuries on their persons. If the Judge wanted to maintain the convictions of the accused, it was incumbent upon him to base the convictions on some evidence apart from the presence of injuries on the persons of the accused. 169 Ind. Cas. 453=39 P.L.R. 7=38 Cr. L.J. 797 (1).

—S. 323—Disbelieved—Conviction—Legality—Evidence.

Where the major portion of the prosecution evidence is found to be false and tainted with gross exaggerations it is impossible to build up a case of an offence under S. 323, I.P.C., out of the mass of lies told by the prosecution witnesses. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 124=11 O.W.N. 337=35 Cr. L.J. 804=9 Luck. 517=148 Ind. Cas. 870.

7. Private Defence.

—Ss. 323, 96—Private defence—Boy raising cloud of dust in street—Passer-by chastising and beating boy—No offence is committed.

Where a boy is causing injury to the passers-by, of whom accused is one, by raising a cloud of dust, and the accused prevents the boy or chastises him and beats him, he cannot be said to be committing any offence. Technically, it would amount to an act done in the exercise of the right of private defence. A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 168=1943 M.W.N. 801=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 644=45 Cr. L.J. 524=212 Ind. Cas. 8.

—S. 323—S. 54, Criminal P.C.—Private defence—Non-cognizable offence—Refusal to go to thana.

Where the accused are charged under an offence which is non-cognizable and therefore, one to which S. 54 of Criminal P. C. does not apply, the accused are perfectly within their right to refuse to be driven to the thana. Even if they use some force to extricate themselves from the clutches of the Police, they cannot be held guilty. 22 P.L.T. 29.

—S. 323—Private defence.

The applicant was convicted of an offence under S. 224; Sessions Judge in appeal found that applicant was not in lawful custody and acquitted him of the offence under S. 324, but convicted him under S. 323.

Held, the constable was guilty of the offence of wrongful confinement and obviously as against him the appellant would be entitled to right of private defence. 85 Ind. Cas. 44=26 Cr. L.J. 428=A.I.R. 1923 All. 34.

8. Public Servant.

—S. 323—Public Servant—Offence under S. 359, Madras District Municipalities Act.

It is open to the Magistrate to proceed against the accused on a charge under S. 323 Penal Code when information was laid before him only for an offence under S. 359, Madras District Municipalities Act, for obstructing a municipal servant in the discharge of his duties. A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 102=(1945) 2 M.L.J. 541=58 L.W. 640 (1)=1946 M.W.N. 274=223 Ind. Cas. 575.

—Ss. 323, 307, 304—Public servant—Accused caught by constable, effecting escape by inflicting wound on chest with knife—Medical opinion that had the injury been deeper, an inch more, it would have caused instantaneous death—Victim indoor patient for 11 days:

Held, that the circumstances and situation proved that there was no requisite 'intention' or 'knowledge' as contemplated in S. 307. On the other hand, the assailant's intention was to release himself from the constable's hold and run away. His object in dealing the blow would be nothing more than to disable the constable. When the nature of the act itself is the only means of judging the intention, the agent must be presumed to intend only the natural consequence of the act, which in the present case, was simple hurt. Hence the accused could not be convicted under S. 307, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 145=1943 N.L.J. 90=44 Cr. L.J. 512=I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 411=206 Ind. Cas. 382.

—Ss. 323, 332—Public servant.

When the accused chased the Police Constable and beat him very severely but his attack was not concerned with the actual rescue of the arrested person, they were guilty of the minor offence punishable under S. 323 and not under S. 332. A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 321=44 C.W.N. 502=41 Cr. L.J. 744=12=189 Ind. Cas. 480.

—Ss. 323, 354—Public servant—Process-server and decree-holder going to house to effect delivery of it to decree-holder—Woman occupant refusing to vacate—Forcible removal—Struggle—Dhoti of woman getting loose—Civil P.C., O. 21, R. 35.

Where, under an order of a Civil Court a peon was deputed to hand over possession of a house to the decree-holder and on his going there to deliver possession, he was told by the daughter-in-law of the judgment-debtor that the latter was not there and she and her husband refused to vacate the house and they were forcibly removed from the house by the applicants :

Held, that she was wrong in refusing to vacate the house and being bound by the decree; under O. 24, R. 85, Civil P.C., she could, if necessary, be forcibly removed from the house if she refused to vacate and that the applicants were not to blame in removing her and her husband forcibly from the house on their refusal to vacate :

Held, also that as for the dhoti of the woman getting loose in her struggle, that was no deliberate act on the part of the applicants but that was a direct result of her own violence during the struggle and there was no attempt to violate her modesty. Consequently, the applicants were wrongly convicted of the offences of causing simple hurt and of assaulting a woman with the intention of outraging her modesty. The violence that was used was only sufficient to remove her from the house to which she was not legally entitled, and the applicants acted in good faith in the exercise of their legal rights. —Ss. 323, 332—Public servant—Naib Tahsildar going to accused's village and demanding revenue—Beating of Naib Tahsildar by accused's sons—Court considering it not improbable that accused was roughly treated by Naib Tahsildar—Section 332 if applies.

On the Naib Tahsildar going to the village of the accused to demand payment of land revenue from him he raised an outcry and his sons came out and beat Naib Tahsildar. The accused alleged that he raised an outcry because he was beaten and his beard was pulled by the chaprasis who had accompanied the Naib Tahsildar and under his orders. It appeared that although the reason alleged was not satisfactorily proved, there was more than a probability of the accused having been treated in the manner alleged :

Held, that, in the circumstances, the accused were entitled to the benefit of the doubt in that they tried to resist an illegal act of the officer and that S. 332, I.P.C., would not apply to the case, and that for the injuries caused to the Naib Tahsildar, the person who caused them committed an offence under S. 323. #### 10. Sentence.

—S. 117—Sentence—Three months R.I. not excessive. 4 A.I. Cr. D. 178.

—Ss. 423 and 147—Sentence.

Even when the proceedings under 8.145, Criminal P.C., had ended with an order declaring the accused to be in possession of property in dispute and that his possession should not be disturbed, the question of title not yet having been decided, even assuming that the accused was in actual possession of the fields at the time and had sown the crop, his behaviour in collecting men and making a violent attack in broadlight in the streets of the village on the party which had cut and removed the crop, instead of obtaining the assistance of the Police was an act of grave lawlessness for which sentences of imprisonment were properly imposed.

—Ss. 323, 304, 325—Sentence.

When deceased had come to make a report about a murder, the accused who was a Sub-Inspector, thinking that the deceased was concealing some facts, got angry and slapped and knocked him down. The deceased then went to the Police Station and when his report was copied down came back without any assistance but complaining of great pain. The accused took him to his house, where it was alleged he was killed and his body, with the aid of others was thrown in a jungle. The skull of the deceased was found fractured. No motive whatever was suggested why the Sub-Inspector should have wished to cause any serious injury. There was absolutely no evidence at all that the Sub-Inspector at any time used any weapon which could have caused the fracture of the skull. It was not impossible for the injury to be caused when the body was thrown into the ravine in the jungle. The doctor's evidence showed that the chankidar was a man of about 60 years of age and it might be probable that the fracture of the skull was caused by throwing the body into the ravine after death :

Held, that in the absence of any direct medical evidence on the point, it was not impossible that death may have been caused by some internal injury inflicted by the Sub-Inspector when he first attacked the deceased. The fact that the accused took him to his house did not necessarily suggest that there was any intention on the part of the accused to cause him further injury. Of the two alternatives that the Sub-Inspector caused his death by hitting him on the head with a lathi or similar weapon and that the Sub-Inspector caused his death by inflicting some internal injury, the Court must act upon that which involved the lesser guilt. The accused was, therefore, only guilty under S. 323, and not under S. 304 or S. 325 :

Held, however, that an assault upon an old man of 60 made in such a way that death resulted, even if that result was in some way unexpected, was an attack of a very brutal nature calling for the severest sentence for the offence that it was possible to inflict. A.I.R. 1938 All. 91=(1937) A.L.J. 1253=39 Cr. L.J. 364=1937 A.W.R. 1099=173 Ind. Cas. 838.

—S. 323—Sentence—Injuries of a minor nature and detected after four or five days.

Where the injuries inflicted are of a minor nature and are detected only after four or five days, a sentence of six months and three months on the accused is too severe and punishment for the period of imprisonment already undergone (one and a half months) would be sufficient. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 311 (1)=34 P.L.R. 68=35 Cr. L.J. 605 (1)=147 Ind. Cas. 1226 (1).

—S. 323—Sentence—Death by beating.

A strong young man, who on very trivial incident and without any provocation hits his wife in the abdomen within a few days of her having delivered of a child and thus causes her an injury which results in her death the next day may, if the woman had an enlarged spleen, not be guilty of an offence higher than that under S. 323, but there can be no doubt that a sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment only is ridiculously low in such a case, and should be enhanced. 114 Ind. Where some of the rioters threw stones causing injury and the persons who did so could not be known, the conviction should be under S. 323 read with S. 149 and not under S. 323 alone and the imposition of distinct and separate sentences under S. 323 and S. 149 is illegal. —Ss. 323, 452—Separate conviction and sentence—Conviction both under Ss. 323 and 452 for offence committed on same occasion—Separate sentences.

An offence under S. 323, I.P.C., is not necessarily included in one punishable under S. 431. Where therefore an accused is convicted for offences both under Ss. 323 and 152, committed on one and the same occasion, separate sentences can be passed for each offence. A.I.R. 1938 Rang 114=39 Cr. L.J. 487=174 Ind. Cas. 952.

—S. 323—Separate conviction and sentence—Rioting and causing hurt—Separate sentences can be passed.

Causing hurt and using force are not the same thing and the word "force" does not appear in the definition of "hurt". The use of criminal force is no doubt an ingredient of the offence of rioting, but the force necessary to constitute these offences may fall far short of "causing bodily pain," and if further force is used which does cause bodily pain, then the offences which involve and are complete by mere use of criminal force have been exceeded and that excess constitutes another offence, viz., that of causing whatever more serious form of bodily hurt has been the result: Mad. Cr. Revn. Cases 248 of 1924 and 982 of 1926. Diss. from. 105 Ind. Cas. 806=39 M. L. T. 543=1927 M.W.N. 850=28 Cr. L. J. 982=9 A.I. Cr. R. 160=A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 18=53 M.L.J. 653.

—S. 323—Separate conviction and sentence.

It is by no means uncommon for an offence punishable under S. 323 to require, and get, a much heavier sentence than one punishable under S. 325. 97 Ind. Cas. 1053=27 Cr. L.J. 1229=A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 49.

—Ss. 323, 326—Separate conviction and sentence.

Separate sentences cannot be passed under Ss. 323 and 326 in the case of an assault upon a single person. Where it is found as a matter of fact, that one of the accused attacked with a spear and the others inflicted blows on legs and arms with lathis, it is not necessary to find that all the accused are guilty of an offence under S. 326. In such a case each accused should be convicted for the offence of which he is actually found to be guilty. 103 Ind. Cas. 198=28 Cr. L.J. 662=A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 313.

—S. 323—Separate conviction and sentence—S. 149, merely declaratory—S. 147 and S. 323 create distinct offences—Separate sentences not illegal.

S. 149 creates no substantive offence in itself. It is merely declaratory of the law and makes a person who has been a member of an unlawful assembly liable for the offences committed by any other member of it. But S. 147 is a substantive offence in itself and makes a person guilty of the offence of rioting as distinct from actually causing any injury or hurt. Similarly S. 323 is a distinct offence in itself; therefore there is nothing illegal in convicting a person of offences under both these sections. As soon as the first injury is caused to any person force is used and the offences of rioting is complete. Subsequent injuries though inflicted in pursuance of the same common object, would be distinct injuries justifying a conviction under S. 323: 17 Bom. 260 (F.B.), Appr. 6 All. 21, Dist.; 9 All. 645 and 14 A.L.J. 738, Foll. 92 Ind. #### —S. 323—Separate conviction and sentence.

Conviction under Section 323 on charge under section 148 is not illegal. 85 Ind. Cas. 822=26 Cr. L.J. 598=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 326.

—S. 323—Separate conviction and sentence—Inter-relation of section discussed.

An unlawful assembly may have a common object of committing hurt or grievous hurt and when such an assembly uses force or violence of the least amount, the members thereof are guilty of rioting and punishable under S. 147. If, however, their common object is accomplished by causing hurt or grievous hurt, they would be liable to conviction for the further offence under S. 323 or 325 as the case may be. The individual members committing the hurt of grievous hurt will be convicted for those offences and, if the other members who did not actually commit the hurt of grievous hurt, knew that such an offence was likely to be committed in the prosecution of the common object they would also be liable to conviction for the hurt or grievous hurt, as the case may be, by reason of S. 149 of the Code.

Section 71 of the Code may be invoked to relieve the offender under S. 323 if that is stated to be the common object of the assembly and as necessary ingredient constituting an offence under S. 147. 16 61 Ind. Cas. 833=2 P.L.T. 91=22 Cr. L.J. 449=A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 432.

—Ss. 324, 307—Applicability.

An accused stabbed the complainant with a knife and caused three injuries, (1) a stab wound  $3\frac{1}{4}'' \times 1\frac{1}{4}''$  and  $3\frac{1}{4}''$  deep on the left back in the middle. (2) A contusion mark  $2\frac{3}{4}'' \times 1\frac{1}{4}''$  on the right chest at its lower part. (3) A stab wound  $1\frac{1}{2}'' \times 1\frac{1}{2}''$  and  $1\frac{1}{4}''$  deep on the back on the left thigh in its middle. All these injuries were simple in nature :

Held, that the offence was under S. 324 and not under S. 307, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1942 Pesh. 21 (2)=43 Cr. L.J. 595=191 Ind. Cas. 799.

—Ss. 324, 304, 302—Injury by accused on deceased's head not of nature to entail serious consequences in man of normal health—Deceased suffering from chronic malaria—Formation of abscess due to lowered vitality—Offence.

The injury inflicted by accused on the head of the deceased was not such as to entail serious consequences to a man in normal health. It had healed up at the end of seven days, but he had a temperature and on this account, the doctor advised him to remain in the hospital until the temperature had subsided. However, the deceased stated that he suffered from chronic malaria and that this fever was due to malaria, and he insisted on leaving the hospital. He was brought back to the hospital again. He was then partially paralyzed on the left side, and there was an abscess over the seat of the first injury which was healed. An operation was performed on the same day; the abscess was lanced and about eight ounces of pus were removed, but he became unconscious and died. Had the deceased stayed in hospital as advised, even if the abscess on the injury had formed, it would have been a simple matter to have cured it and no abscess on the brain would have formed at all and the deceased would have recovered. The deceased suffered from chronic malaria and this malaria lowered his power of resistance and helped the formation of pus when there was an open wound. Death was not due directly to the enlarged spleen or to the heart, but these contributed indirectly because they lowered the vitality and power of resistance of the deceased. Thus the immediate cause of his death was his debilitated condition for which the injury was in no way responsible :

Held, that the accused was guilty of causing simple hurt, with a weapon for cutting, punishable under S. 324, I.P.C.

Held further that the fact that a dangerous weapon was used was often and might be indeed generally, a matter to be taken into account in deciding questions of intention; but circumstances alter cases and, having regard to the medical evidence as to the wound itself it was impossible to say that there was an intention to cause such injury as was likely to cause death. The offence could not, therefore, amount even to culpable homicide. A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 141=1941 Rang. L.R. 138=42 Cr. L.J. 591=194 Ind. Cas. 547.

—S. 324—Evidence of attack and persons attacking doubtful—Conviction even for hurt is not justified.

Where the fact of the evidence itself being of a doubtful character, was the determining reason which led the Sessions Judge to reduce the offence to one of hurt under S. 324, I.P.C. there is really no justification for this conviction in view of the unsatisfactory evidence relating to the attack on the deceased and in particular to the persons who took part in it. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 43=1939 M.W.N. 879=50 L.W. 557=41 Cr. L.J. 337=186 Ind. Cas. 525.

—Ss. 324, 307—Attack by several accused—Benefit of doubt regarding weapons used—Conviction.

Where the only doubt arising from the prosecution evidence was as to the particular weapons used by particular accused, the accused cannot be acquitted altogether. The benefit of doubt on the question of possession of weapons only means that witnesses were not able to observe the details of attack with sufficient care or minuteness for them to be certain which accused caused which particular injury. In such a case all the accused will be held guilty of the lesser offence. 1937 M.W.N. 1331.

—S. 324—'Fracture', significance of—Cut on head with knife—Skin and membranes outside skull cut through—Knife touching skull-bone causing injury to surface but not cracking it—Held, offence fell under S. 324.

The primary meaning of the word "fracture" is "breaking," though it is not necessary in the case of a fracture of the skull bone that it be divided into two separate parts because it may consist merely of a crack which extends from the outer surface of the skull to the inner surface.

Where, therefore, on a cut on the head with a knife, the skin and membranes outside the skull bone were cut through and the knife then touched the skull bone and perhaps caused some injury to its surface but did not cut it through and did not crack it, though it may be that the knife cut through the substance of the skull-bone to a very small extent, there is nothing which even remotely suggests a fracture and the accused is guilty of offence under S. 324 I.P.C. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 253=38 Cr. L.J. 960=170 Ind. Cas. 753.

—Ss. 324, 323, 302—Offence under S. 324—Nature of instrument—Blow with bamboo stick—Offence, if under S. 324.

To bring an offence under S. 324, I.P.C., the instrument must be one, not which is "liable," but which is "likely" to cause death; the instrument used must be one of which one can predicate that the probable result of its use will be, by virtue of its very nature, cause death. It must be inherent in the nature of the instrument used that death is likely to ensue. Where the injury results from a blow with a bamboo stick, the conviction should be altered to one under S. 323. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 8=38 Cr. L.J. 299=166 Ind. Cas. 840.

—Ss. 324, 307—Alteration of conviction.

Where the accused was drunk when he inflicted injuries and had both given and received provocation, the injuries were of trivial nature and he himself had received beating:

—Ss. 324, 302, 34—No allegation of specific act against the accused—Conviction, legality.

Charge against three accused under S. 302 read with S. 34—No specific act alleged in charge to have been done by first accused—Such accused cannot be convicted under S. 324 even though there was prima facie evidence against him of the commission of offence under that section. 1935 M.W.N. 360.

—Ss. 324, 148—Conviction under—Only one sentence should be passed. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 614 (1)=35 P.L.R. 587=36 Cr.L.J. 294=153 Ind. Cas. 198 (1).

—Ss. 324, 325—Thrusting lathi into the anus of a man—Injury to rectum not cause of death—Offence.

The thrusting of a lathi into the anus of a man is causing grievous hurt which endangers life and when it is clear from the medical evidence that injury to rectum was not the cause of death but that it created a shock which contributed to the cause of death the offence committed is one under S. 324, I.P.C. and not one under S. 304. A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 87 (2)=11 O.W.N. 32=35 Cr. L.J. 467=147 Ind. Cas. 734.

—S. 324—Simple injury from a pistol shot—Nature of offence.

Where a quarrel took place over a disputed plot of land between the accused and an old lady, and the accused, a young man of 22, lost his head and in order to make an impression and to cause some injury to her, took out a pistol and fired it with the result that a simple injury was caused:

Held, that it would be safer to convict him of an offence under S. 324, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 315=34 Cr.L.J. 1051=145 Ind. Cas. 702.

—S. 324—Applicability.

Accused aged 21 hitting turbaned head of old man—No intention to kill—Death due to brittle skull:

Held, that the offence fell under S. 324. 1931 M.W.N. 1152.

—S. 324—Applicability.

Death resulting from small provocation—Offence does not amount to murder but one under S. 324, I.P.C. 1931 M.W.N. 765.

—S. 324—Mutual injuries—Fight between factions—Accused proved to have inflicted injuries—Self-defence not disproved—Conviction for hurt—Sustainability.

Where two factions were engaged in rioting and the accused were proved to have inflicted certain blows on the other party and there was nothing to show that the injuries were not in self defence or justified by extreme provocation.

Held, that under those circumstances the conviction for hurt should be set aside. 1929 M.W.N. 583.

1. Abatement.

—S. 325—Abatement.

A case under S. 325 can be proceeded with in spite of the death of the complainant. A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 379=9 C.L.T. 39=45 Cr.L.J. 331=10 B.R. 351=211 Ind. Cas. 200.

2. Grievous hurt—What is.

—S. 325—Grievous hurt—What is.

In order to frame a charge for grievous hurt under S. 325, there must be evidence to show not only that the assaulted person had remained under treatment in the hospital for more than 20 days but also that the injured person was in severe bodily pain for that period or was unable to carry on the ordinary avocations. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 280=32 Cr.L.J. 1254=134 Ind. Cas. 829.

—S. 325—Grievous hurt—What is.

When a man has been struck on the head and a fracture is caused, to surround and beat him with lathis is to cause hurt which endangers life within S. 320. 104 Ind. Cas. 708=28 Cr.L.J. 868=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 46.

3. Injuries causing death.

—Ss. 325, 302—Injuries causing death.

Thefts of jewels by cutting nostrils of the victim—Victim dying—Charge of murder, held must fail and that the accused must be convicted only under S. 325. 1944 M.W.N. 233=57 L.W. 211=I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 73=(1944) 1 M.L.J. 281.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death.

Number of persons inflicting lathi blows on deceased, some of which being fatal—Person who inflicted the fatal blow not known—Common intention to cause death, not proved:

Held, that it was impossible to hold that the convictions under S. 325 were incorrect. A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 207=1939 O.W.N. 576=40 Cr.L.J. 722=14 Luck. 660=182 Ind. Cas. 345.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death.

Where the intention of the accused was to give the deceased a beating with lathis, but one of them actually commits murder, others in reality abet an offence under S. 325, I.P.C., and are guilty under S. 325 read with S. 109 and though the act of murder committed by one of them was done with the aid of others it cannot be said that it was a probable consequence of the abetment on their part.

A lathi is a lethal weapon and anyone who uses it on the head of another with such force as to fracture the skull must know that he is doing an act which, in all probability, must cause death and the offence is murder. A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 256=40 Cr. L.J. 14=1938 O.W.N. 1057=1938 A.W.R. 92 (2)=178 Ind. Cas. 162.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death.

Inflicting a kick on temple—Deceased found hanging on a tree and the medical report disclosing that death was due to that blow.

Held, that accused was guilty of hurt and not of grievous hurt. 1935 M.W.N. 1094.

—S. 325, 302—Injuries causing death—Intention of accused only to cause grievous hurt—Sudden impulse—Accused striking deceased with dang lying nearby—Offence.

Where the only inference possible from all the circumstances of the case was that the accused did not intend anything more than causing grievous hurt to the deceased under sudden impulse, when he found that another person had escaped due to the accused having been brought on one side by the deceased, and the accused struck him on the head by a dang lying nearby.

Held, that S. 325, I.P.C., applied and not S. 302. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 335=35 Cr.L.J. 1348=36 P. L. R. 313=151 Ind. Cas. 390.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death.

When the accused knew he would be smashing his victim's skull by his blow, he must as well have known he was likely to cause the death of his victim. He ought, therefore, to be convicted for culpable homicide and not merely for grievous hurt. 32 Bom. L.R. 1143=129 Ind. Cas. 351=A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 483.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death—Accused in fit of temper losing self-control—Blow on head with dang—Death held not intentional.

The accused, who was chagrined because his melons were not purchased, went into a fit of temper and lost self-control. The dang, with which the blow on the uncovered head of the deceased came to be inflicted, was lying close at hand. The accused picked it up and at once dealt the blow which resulted in the fatal injury to the deceased.

Held, that there was no intention on the part of the accused to cause the death.

Held, further; that the case fell within the purview of S. 325 instead of S. 302. 1929 Cr. C. 639=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 863.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death—Death due to multiple injuries each not fatal by itself—No inference of common intent to cause injury likely to cause death.

Three persons were accused of having injured a person and thus causing his death. The deceased died of shock from multiple injuries which included a fracture of five ribs. None of the injuries in itself was such as could be called a fatal injury. They were believed to have been caused by a blunt weapon like a sota.

Held, It was not possible to attribute any particular injury to any individual assailant. Nor could it be said that any particular injury was the direct cause of death. The common intent of the assailants could not be held to have been to cause such injury as they knew was likely to result in death. The accused could not therefore be safely convicted of murder. They were guilty of grievous hurt. 114 Ind. Cas. 704=30 P.L.R. 171=30 Cr.L.J. 368=1929 Cr. C. 8=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 456.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death.

The accused seven in number attacked the deceased with the intention of beating him. They did so after an exchange of words with the deceased, and caused two incised wounds of trivial character, and three contused wounds sufficient to stun the victim, who subsequently died. There was no medical evidence to prove that death was due to the injuries.

Held, that the accused were guilty under S. 325 read with S. 149, and not under S. 304. 118 Ind. Cas. 433=30 Cr.L.J. 917=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 178.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death—Intention of causing death or injury likely to cause death absent—Liability.

Where the accused could not have known that they were inflicting such injury as would be likely to cause death and the intention of causing death or of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death was not even imputed to them and the injuries were not directly responsible for the death, but the death was only an indirect consequence of the wounds.

Held, that the accused cannot be convicted under S. 304, but the conviction should be under S. 325. 101 Ind. Cas. 177=2 Luck. 433=8 A.I. Cr. R. 46=4 O. W.N. 337=28 Cr. L.J. 401=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 36.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death—Culpable homicide—More than one person aggressive—Common object to inflict grievous hurt presumed.

Where six persons, one of whom had an iron-shod lathi, came determined to take possession of a taur while the deceased was determined to resist them and the person having the iron-shod lathi inflicted the fatal injury on the head of the deceased and thus fractured his skull and killed him :

Held, that the members of the party were undoubtedly the aggressors and they certainly knew that grievous hurt was likely to be inflicted and came prepared in furtherance of their common object to inflict it.

Further, the man who inflicted the fatal injury when he aimed the blow he did, at the deceased's head, knew that there was a likelihood of his death, seeing that he had brought with him such a lathi. 9 L.L.J. 529 = A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 881.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death.

Where all the accused had been convicted under Ss. 304-149 and Ss. 325-149 not for any injury caused by them individually but on account of injuries caused by some members of the unlawful assembly of which they also were members:

Held, that a conviction under Ss. 325-149 was not legal in the face of the conviction under Ss. 304-149 as the major offence included the minor. 91 Ind. Cas. 804=7 L.L.J. 368=26 P.L.R. 648=27 Cr. L.J. 132 = A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 539.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death.

Where a joint attack was made by two men armed with Jatrus on another who died of the injuries received.

Held : that there can be no doubt that there was a common intention to cause grievous hurt or that at least they knew that it was likely that grievous hurt would be caused, and that the accused were guilty under S. 325, though in the absence of clear proof as to who caused the fatal injury, neither of them could be convicted under S. 304. 86 Ind. Cas. 341 = 7 L. L. J. 44 = 26 Cr. L. J. 757 = A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 318.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death—Blow with stick on the head, in revenge for previous beating—Internal bleeding and death—Liability.

The accused and the deceased were both young men of about 18 years. The deceased and a friend of his gave a beating to the accused. The next day the accused unexpectedly met the deceased, and forthwith formed the design of hitting him in return for the beating which he had received. Then he struck him a violent blow on the back of his head with a hockey stick which he was carrying and ran away. The deceased walked on for about 30 paces and sat down. He was taken home where half an hour later, he was unconscious. The blow caused internal bleeding and a clot of blood on the surface of the brain. This caused death.

Held : that the accused was not guilty of murder, but of an offence under S. 325 as it could not be said under the circumstances of the case that the accused knew that the blow was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or that the bodily injury which he intended to cause was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 88 Ind. Cas. 286 = 26 Cr. L. J. 1118 = 7 L. L. J. 573 = 26 P. L. R. 430 = A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 559.

Where five persons armed with dangerous weapons made an attack upon another and death was due to a single blow inflicted by one of them but who that one was, was not proved.

Held : they could not be convicted under S. 304 read with S. 34 but should be convicted under S. 325 read with S. 109 or rather S. 114, as they had armed themselves with dangerous weapons. 86 Ind. Cas. 337 = 6 L. L. J. 385 = 26 Cr. L. J. 753 = A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 117.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death.

Where the accused did not lift his lathi above his head, with both hands and bring it down on the head of the deceased but struck a swinging sideways blow and it was not proved that the accused intended to rupture the deceased's liver or even knew that he was likely to do so. Held, the offence committed was one under S. 325. 81 Ind. Cas. 869 = 11 O. L. J. 563 = 25 Cr. L. J. 1145 = A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 135.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death—Attack by four persons with lathis—Blow by one fracturing skull and killing—Liability.

Where the skull of the deceased was fractured as a result of a blow on the head in an attack upon one man by four persons who beat him with lathis, but there was no other grievous hurt and it was not known which of the accused struck the blow which fractured the skull and resulted in his death.

Held : the accused did not know that death was likely to be caused but they must have known that grievous hurt was likely to be caused, and that they committed therefore the offence of causing grievous hurt. 84 Ind. Cas. 861 = 6 L. L. J. 317 = 26 Cr. L. J. 381 = A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 654.

—S. 325—Injury causing death—Causing death of child by accident while beating his mother—Conviction under S. 325 is proper.

The appellant was beating one S with his fist when the wife of S with a two months' baby on her shoulder interfered. The appellant hit at the woman and the blow struck the child on the head; the baby died two days later from the effects of the blow.

Held : although the child was hit by accident the appellant's act was not covered by the exception of S. 80, that he was not guilty of culpable homicide under S. 301 as, while wanting to hit the woman with his fist the appellant never intended or knew to be likely to cause the death of the woman, and that it would be proper to record a conviction under S. 325. 74 Ind. Cas. 533 = 24 Cr. L. J. 789 = A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 228.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death.

Where the common intention was not to cause death, but to cause grievous hurt or where all the members of the unlawful assembly at least knew that grievous hurt was likely to be caused, the accused can only be convicted under S. 325 read with S. 149 and not under S. 302. 81 Ind. Cas. 179 = 25 Cr. L. J. 691 = A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 43.

—S. 325—Injuries causing death—Blow with stick—Death—Offence.

An accused who is proved to have struck the deceased with a lathi on the head and caused a fracture of the skull which resulted in death, is guilty under S. 325, I.P.C. 3 Pat. L. J. 636 = 20 Cr. L. J. 139 = 49 Ind. Cas. 171.

4. Intention and knowledge.

—Ss. 325 and 322—Blow with a stick breaking arm—Not sufficient for conviction under S. 325 unless there was intention or knowledge that the act was likely to cause grievous hurt. 1936 M.W.N. 522 (1).

—S. 325—Intention and knowledge.

A poor old sweeper went out towards the latter part of the night and was taking cowdung cakes belonging to the accused's master when the accused fell on him with a dang, beating him severely on the head and arms, whereby the arms were disabled completely. There was no evidence whatever that the accused had any intention of killing the sweeper, or that he knew that he was likely to kill him.

Held, that the accused could not be convicted under S. 308 but was guilty of an offence under S. 325. 102 Ind. Cas. 907 = 28 Cr. L. J. 619 = A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 801.

—Ss. 325 and 323—Intention and knowledge—Grievous hurt, intention or knowledge essential for conviction—Imprisonment obligatory under S. 345.

Before any one could be convicted of causing grievous hurt, it must be proved that there was an intention on his part to cause grievous hurt or at least knowledge that it would be caused. The imposition of the punishment of imprisonment on conviction for grievous hurt is obligatory. 15 Cr. L. J. 192 = 22 Ind. Cas. 768 (Mad.).

5. Joint attack.

See also (1) S. 34, I.P.C. (2) S. 325, I.P.C. INJURIES CAUSING DEATH.

—Ss. 325, and 34—Accused having common intention of beating deceased—Conviction for grievous hurt—Legality.

The question whether a number of persons who joined in the commission of an offence had a common intention or not is a question of fact and not one of law. Where all the accused had the common intention of giving the deceased a sound beating regardless of whether it resulted in causing only simple injuries or grievous hurt, they can be convicted under S. 325, I.P. Code. 50 Cr. L. J. 878=A.I.R. 1949 All. 582.

—Ss. 325 and 34—Joint attack—Conviction under—Legality—Absence of evidence to show which accused actually caused the grievous hurt.

A conviction under S. 325 read with S. 34, I.P. Code, could not be maintained where there is no evidence to indicate as to which of the accused actually caused the grievous hurt even though it could be inferred from their conduct that there should have been a prearranged plan to give a beating. 1948 A.W.R. (H.C.) 139=1948 A.L.W. 212=1948 O. A. (H.C.) 139=49 Cr. L.J. 595=A.I.R. 1949 All. 77=1948 A.L.J. 194.

—S. 325—Joint attack—Grievous hurt caused in the course of beating by several persons—Absence of evidence as to who actually caused the grievous hurt—Conviction for grievous hurt—Legality.

Though it may be presumed from the conduct of several persons striking another with lathis that each of them intended to cause grievous hurt, such a presumption is not sufficient to establish the offence of grievous hurt against an accused unless it be further shown that that accused actually caused grievous hurt. I.L.R. (1947) All. 684=1947 A.L.J. 208=1947 A. W. R. (H.C.) 271=1947 A.L.W. 358=48 Cr. L.J. 858=A.I.R. 1917 A. 408.

—S. 325—Joint attack—Simultaneous attack with lathis by accused on another—Intention to cause grievous hurt can be presumed against every one of them.

Where accused persons simultaneously attack another person with lathis, it can fairly be presumed against every one of them that he had at least the intention of causing grievous hurt and therefore each of them is guilty of an offence under S. 325, Penal Code. —Ss. 325, 304—Joint attack—Sudden fight between two parties—No undue advantage taken by any party and no intention to kill—U's rib fractured and fractured rib piercing his lung and causing death—Who gave blow causing fracture of rib not known—N accompanying accused A and H to thana to help them in making first information report—Offence.

The prosecution story was that one N was ploughing a field which did not belong to him and which was given by the owner on batai to U who was unable to obtain possession from N. U who was at work in his own field next door, passed some remarks about the way in which N was cultivating a field which did not really belong to him and as a result, N and his companions A and H left the field in dispute came into the field of U and attacked him and thereafter a fight took place between N, A and H on the one side and U and C on the other. In the course of the fight which lasted for some time a number of injuries were received by persons on both the sides. N however, had not a single injury on his person. U received some injuries on the head but they were not serious and his death was caused by fracture of the ribs and sternum, one fractured rib unfortunately having pierced a lung and caused haemorrhage and death. There was evidence that N had gone with accused A and H to the thana to help them to make the first information report:

Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to establish N's participation in the fight and he was entitled to get benefit of doubt.

Held, also that the case was of a sudden fight in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel and that no undue advantage was taken. Since there was a quite long drawn out fight with passions considerably raised and yet without any intention to kill and it was impossible to say who gave the fatal blow which broke the rib which pierced the lung of the deceased and it was difficult to say that in inflicting any of the injuries found on the body of the deceased the accused were really saddled with the knowledge that, by so doing, they were likely to cause the death of U much less that there was an imminent danger of his death being caused, the accused A and H should properly be convicted under S. 325 and not under S. 304 as there clearly was a common intention to inflict hurt extending to grievous hurt upon U and C. —Ss. 325, 34—Joint attack.

Held, on facts that since the common intention of the accused was merely to give the deceased a sound beating, it must be held that the offence committed by them fell under S. 325 read with S. 34, and not under S. 302 read with S. 149. —Ss. 325, 34—Joint attack—Accused armed with sticks with intention of beating.

Held, on facts that if the accused go armed with sticks with the intention of beating, the question whether or not they are guilty of causing grievous hurt under S. 325 read with S. 34, I.P.C. is one deserving serious consideration. A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 87=37 Cr.L.J. 715 (2) =I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 54=162 Ind. Cas. 925.

—Ss. 325, 34—Joint attack—Two persons attacking another—Absence of proof that one of them struck a blow.

Where M, armed with an axe, accompanied K, armed with a spear and with him made a concerted attack upon D, and K was convicted under S. 304, part II, and M under S. 325:

Held, that the mere fact that no particular blow had been proved to have been struck by M would not absolve him from the charge under S. 325 on which he was tried.

Held, also that the omission of a charge under S. 34 against M was not material as he was not in any way misled in his defence. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 313=34 Cr.L.J. 724=34 P.L.R. 699=144 Ind. Cas. 300.

—S. 325—Joint attack.

Two persons armed with lathis attacked a third person beat him to the ground, broke his thigh and ulna bone struck him at nine places and continued to strike him after he had fallen on the ground. But there was only one injury on the head.

Held, that taking the injuries as a whole the legitimate inference was that they did not intend to kill him. They are therefore guilty not under S. 307 but under S. 325. 100 Ind. Cas. 234=8 Lah. 521=28 P.L.R. 559=28 Cr.L.J. 266=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 217.

—S. 325—Joint attack.

Where three men attack another with dangs and caused two separate grievous hurts.

Held, it can fairly be presumed that all intended to cause or knew that they were likely to cause grievous hurt. 85 Ind. Cas. 941=6 L.L.J. 268=25 Cr.L.J. 653 =A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 555.

—S. 325—Joint attack.

In the case of rioting resulting in grievous hurt convictions and separate sentences under S. 325 are legal where it is shown that the accused actually joined in the assault. Some of these assaults may have resulted in simple hurt, others in grievous hurt, but all the actual assailants are under S. 149, I. P. C. liable for all the results. 82 Ind. Cas. 473=3 Bur. L. —S. 325—Joint attack.

If it is not shown which of the two appellants dealt the blow which caused grievous hurt, both the accused cannot be convicted of an offence under S. 325, unless they had a common intention of causing grievous hurt. 81 Ind. Cas. 48=25 Cr. L. J. 560=A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 35.

—S. 325—Joint attack—Grievous hurt—Conviction of other accused—Intention.

Where two persons were charged and convicted of an offence of causing grievous hurt, but hurt was caused by the blow inflicted by only one of them, the conviction of the other for grievous hurt is illegal without a finding that he participated with the other in the intention of causing grievous hurt. 7 Cr.L.R. 173 (Mad.).

6. Omission to specify.

—Ss. 325, 34—Accused convicted under S. 325 Penal Code—Court applying S. 34, Penal Code—

S. 34 not mentioned in charge sheet—No failure of justice—Defect, if cured by S. 535, Criminal P.C.

Where the accused is convicted under S. 325 by application of S. 34, the absence of the specific mention of S. 34 in the charge sheet does not make the conviction and sentence under S. 325 invalid, if no failure of justice has been occasioned by this omission. The omission by the Magistrate to mention S. 34 in the charge sheet is cured by the operation of S. 535, Criminal P.C. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 227=35 Cr.L.J. 1386 =151 Ind. Cas. 741 (2).

—Ss. 325 and 326—Omission to specify—Robbery—Grievous hurt—Separate charge of common object—Cr. P. Code, S. 106.

Accused were charged separately with having entered complainant's house and removed his earrings out of his ears. There was no specification of a common intention to inflict grievous injury and the conviction under S. 325 was bad, for which conviction under S. 323 must be substituted. An order under S. 106 of the Cr. P. Code is not illegal though there is technically no breach of the public peace by the accused. A person who enters on another's premises and uses violence to him and deprives him of his property commits a breach of the peace within the wider sense of expression. 19 Cr. L.J. 929=47 Ind. Cas. 445 (Mad.).

7. Private Defence.

—Ss. 325, 302 and 34—Private defence.

Dispute between deceased and accused who were brothers, over rights to possess certain land—Land admittedly in possession of accused—Deceased attempting to plough land—Accused and his party arriving on spot—Sudden quarrel arising between parties and accused and his party inflicting injuries on deceased with sticks—Accused held to be guilty under S. 325/34 and not under S. 302—No right of private defence of person or property held to exist. A.I.R. 1938 Pesh. 18 =39 Cr. L.J. 627=174 Ind. Cas. 678.

—Ss. 325, 105—Private defence—Right of private defence of property—Held, accused exceeded that right.

Accused pursuing deceased who was running away with property—Held, accused acted in private defence of property but that in striking a fatal blow on the head of the deceased, the accused exceeded the right of private defence of property but in the circumstances, a sentence of six month' rigorous imprisonment was sufficient. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 28=37 Cr. L.J. 428=161 Ind. Cas. 344.

—Ss. 325 and 99—Private defence—Complainant's party in large numbers, aggressors—Right of private defence.

The complainant's party trespassed on the lands of the accused in small numbers and were driven away. Then they returned to the land of the accused in larger numbers to enforce their supposed right of cutting grass and were again driven away by the party of the accused, and a number of men of the complainant's party suffered injuries:

Held, that the accused were acting in exercise of their right of private defence of property and that in view of the fact that the complainant's party came in large numbers as the aggressors and only one of them suffered grievous hurt and a number of others suffered only simple hurts, the accused could not be said to have exceeded in their right of private defence. A.I.R. 1933 All. 896=1933 A.L.J. 1119=35 Cr. L.J. 236=56 A. 188=146 Ind. Cas. 914.

—S. 325—Private defence—Three against two—Private defence, plea of, not open to the former.

Where there were 3 persons on the side of the appellants and only two on the side of the deceased who received injuries, from whom was not clear and subsequently died no presumption can be made that the appellants were acting in private right of self-defence. They committed an offence under section 325 and not under section 304. 72 Ind. Cas. 611=25 Cr. L.J. 451=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 394.

8. Punishment and Sentence.

—S. 325—Sentence of fine only—Legality.

The punishment provided for an offence under S. 325, I.P. Code, is a sentence of imprisonment extending up to seven years and a sentence of fine can only be in addition to such sentence of imprisonment and not in substitution thereof. Hence a sentence of fine only is contrary to law. I.L.R. (1949) A. 434=1948 O.W.N. 383=1948 A.L.W. 381=A.I.R. 1949 A. 213=3 A.I. Cr. D. 350=50 Cr. L.J. 322=1948 A.L.J. 469.

—S. 325—Scope—Sentence—Mere fine for offence under, is not legal.

Section 325, I.P.C. makes it clear that there must be a sentence of imprisonment, whether a fine is imposed or not.

Accused threw a stone at the face of the complainant with a force sufficient to cut his upper lip and knock out six teeth :

Held, that he must be presumed to have intended to cause such injury and that he should be convicted under S. 325 :

Held, also that a sentence of fine of Rs. 25 was not legal and sufficient for the offence. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 550=(1942) 1. M.L.J. 595=1942 M.W.N. 377 (1)=55 L.W. 354 (1)=44 Cr. L.J. 65=203 Ind. Cas. 425.

—S. 325—Sentence.

When an officer in control of helpless prisoners beats and tortures them the severest sentence known to the law should be inflicted. In addition, an example must be made in order to show conclusively to others, who may be similarly inclined to ill-treat those in their custody that the Courts cannot tolerate such cruelties.

Since the torture had resulted in the death of some of the convicts, the accused was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, the most severe sentence possible under S. 325, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 210=I.L.R. (1940) Lah. 521=41 Cr. L.J. 639=188 Ind. Cas. 440.

—S. 325—Punishment and sentence.

In a case where an accused is convicted of an offence under S. 147 and also under S. 325 read with S. 149, it is not illegal to inflict on him separate sentences for the two offences. A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 91=1939 O.W.N. 27=40 Cr. L.J. 217=179 Ind. Cas. 461.

—S. 325—Sentence—Accused hitting deceased with lathi—Deceased not armed—No fighting proved—Sentence.

A sentence of rigorous imprisonment for a period of three years is not excessive for a man who has caused the death of another by hitting him with a than, and is held guilty under S. 325, I.P.C., especially when the deceased was not armed and that there was nothing in the nature of a fight. A.I.R. 1937 All. 14=1936 A.L.J. 1310=38 Cr. L.J. 193=166 Ind. Cas. 369.

—S. 325—Sentence—Revision—Fine paid—Interference, if proper.

For an offence under S. 325, a sentence of fine only is not sufficient. But when such is the sentence and fine has been paid, the High Court will not interfere and pass sentence of imprisonment especially when more than five months have elapsed since the case was settled. A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 131=38 P.L.R. 229=38 Cr. L.J. 180 (1)=166 Ind. Cas. 343.

—S. 325—Punishment and sentence.

Fine alone is not one of the punishments that can be awarded for an offence under S. 325 and therefore whipping cannot be awarded in lieu of or in addition to fine alone. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 219 (2)=13 R. 115=36 Cr. L.J. 1129=157 Ind. Cas. 244.

—S. 325—Punishment and sentence—Sudden and unpremeditated fight—Accused throwing stone at deceased without deliberation and causing death—Sentence.

Where, in a fight which is sudden and unpremeditated the accused throws a stone at the deceased and causes death, he is guilty under S. 325, I.P.C. But as he did not throw the stone deliberately, the sentence of seven years was reduced to four years. A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 111=35 P.L.R. 301=35 Cr. L.J. 1456=151 Ind. Cas. 968.

—Ss. 325 and 323—Punishment and sentence.

When there is only one beating conviction should not be under both S. 323 and S. 325 but only under S. 325 in view of S. 71. Illus. (a). 1933 M.W.N. 244.

—S. 325—Sentence.

It had been proved that the accused had broken the legs of the victim by beating him severely. There was no misdirection or non-direction by the Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury. The charge was a fair one and no point has been left out which, in view of the evidence, in the case, might have been legitimately urged in favour of the accused.

Held, that under the circumstances the sentence of 2 1/2 years rigorous imprisonment was not at all severe for an offence under S. 325 and the sentence was confirmed. 52 C.L.J. 425.

—S. 325—Sentence—Blows on head causing death—No uncertainty as to responsibility for offence—Sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment held proper.

The accused had caused death by blows on head of the deceased with sticks. It had been proved that the accused were the assaulters and were aware of the result of their action. There was no uncertainty as to responsibility for the offence by which death was caused.

Held: that under the circumstances the sentence of five years, rigorous imprisonment was reasonable whether the offence be under S. 304 (2) or S. 325. A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 483=32 Bom. L.R. 1143=129 Ind. Cas. 351.

—S. 325—Sentence.

Accused who had dispute with his wife because she ran away to her father's house, beat her with a stick after her return as a result of which she died two day later. He was convicted under S. 325 for causing grievous hurt to his wife and was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Held: that under the circumstances the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment was too short and should be enhanced to three years rigorous imprisonment. It was a brutal thing for a man to beat a woman with a heavy stick and hurt her on vital parts of her body causing such injuries that she died in two days. 54 Bom 822=32 Bom L.R. 1286=129 Ind. Cas. 159=A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 593 (2).

—S. 325—Punishment and sentence—Stone thrown from unknown distance—Conviction for simple hurt—Additional punishment for grievous hurt if necessary.

Where two or more persons are tried for simple hurt and for grievous hurt caused by a stone thrown from an unknown distance. Held, that even if a certain man was identified as the person who threw the stone no extra punishment was called for because the stone was not thrown at very close quarters.

Semble.—The throwing of a stone is not as serious an offence as the wielding of a lathi. 31 P.L.R. 1017=129 Ind. Cas. 223=1930 Cr. C. 1230=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1054.

—S. 325—Sentence—Severe beating—Death supervening owing to unforeseen internal troubles—Causing death if need be taken into account in passing sentence.

As soon as it is found that the offence does not amount to culpable homicide it is best to leave the death out of account and look only to the injury. Where the accused gave a man severe beating and they broke no bones and it appeared death supervened owing to some internal trouble which was unforeseen, held, that a sentence of three years rigorous imprisonment was sufficient. 123 Ind. Cas. 43=1930 M.W.N. 74=31 Cr. L.J. 477.

9. Revision.

—S. 325—Revision—Conviction under—Sentence of fine only—Interference by High Court.

Where a Magistrate convicted certain persons under S. 325, I.P.C., but sentenced them to pay fines only :

Held, that although the sentence was irregular, the High Court would not interfere under their revisional powers which were intended for the redress of genuine grievances and not of mere formal defects. A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 179 (1)=14 P.L.T. 71=34 Cr. L.J. 407=142 Ind. Cas. 624.

10. Miscellaneous.

—S. 325—Miscellaneous.

Held, on the facts (by Harrison and Addison, JJ. Dalip Singh J. dissenting) that as there was no evidence to show that the accused were the aggressors and as there was no free fight, the accused could not be convicted for injuries caused to the complainant's party. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 513=32 Cr.L.J. 868=132 Ind. Cas. 381.

Ss. 325-B, 353—Resistance to warrant of arrest—Warrant signed by Deputy Nazir not only authorised—Offence.

Where a warrant of arrest was signed by the Deputy Nazir, an officer who had not been empowered legally or given any lawful authority to sign warrants and the petitioners who had resisted the execution of the same were convicted under Ss. 325-B and 353, I.P.C.

Held, that the warrants were illegal and the petitioners were not guilty under S. 325-B, or S. 353, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 206=39 L. W. 388=35 Cr. L.J. 782=66 M.L.J. 408=1934 M.W.N. 399=148 Ind. Cas. 818 (2).

1. Applicability and scope.

—S. 326—Applicability—Nose cutting—Possibility of healing—If takes offence out of S. 236, I. P. Code.

Where in the case of a nose cutting the doctor's evidence is that it is likely to heal it cannot take it out of the mischief of S. 326, I. P. Code. 1949 A.M. L.J. 64=A.I.R. 1950 Ajmer 13 (1)=51 Cr.L.J. 799.

—S. 326—Applicability and scope.

Section 304-A must be read along with Ss. 336, 337 and 338. All the sections are confined in their operation to acts done without any criminal intent, apart from the rashness or negligence which is their essential ingredient. Reading S. 321 with S. 322, it is obvious that the guilt, of an accused person remains just the same whether in seeking to inflict simple hurt or grievous hurt, as the case may be, upon one person he actually causes the intended hurt to that person or to some other.

Where in using his spear against his assailants, the accused accidentally struck the deceased who had intervened to separate the fighting persons:

Held, that the accused was guilty under S. 326 and his conviction under S. 304-A was illegal. A.I.R. 1941 All. 288=1941 A. L. J. 326=42 Cr. L. J. 621=I.L.R. (1941) All. 441=194 Ind. Cas. 794.

—Ss. 326, 320 and 34—Applicability and scope—Held on facts that S. 34 cannot be applied so as to make two accused liable for assault committed by others.

While A was keeping watch over his master's khesari the four accused B, C, D and E went there and proceeded to cut the khesari. A remonstrated but seeing

B and C armed, ran away and was pursued and eventually overtaken at some little distance from the field by B who struck him with a garasa and by C who struck him twice with a lathi. E and D had also joined in the pursuit but took no part in the assault. Their intention was to scare away A so that they might continue to cut the khesari without further interruption:

Held, that in the circumstances, it was quite impossible to apply S. 34, Penal Code, and make either D or E constructively liable for the assault committed by B and C. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 376=43 Cr.L.J. 511=8 B.R. 658=23 P.L.T. 633=200 Ind. Cas. 296.

—Ss. 326, 307—Applicability and scope—Offence held fell under S. 326 and not under S. 307.

The complainant was attacked by the accused owing to a sudden quarrel rather than as a result of any pre-concerted plan. The complainant had 17 injuries on his person, but they were not on vital parts and some of them were mere bruises:

Held, that the appropriate section applicable to the case was S. 326, Penal Code and not S. 307. A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 322=43 P.L.R. 436=43 Cr.L.J. 165=197 Ind. Cas. 413.

—Ss. 326, 307—Applicability and scope—Fact that if sepsis and gangrene had intervened, it would have endangered life did not bring offence under S. 307.

Only one stab was given, and there was nothing to show that the injury inflicted was likely in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The medical evidence was only to the effect that if sepsis and gangrene had intervened, it would have endangered life, but this could be said of most injuries caused with sharp weapons:

Held, that the offence committed by the accused was one of causing grievous hurt by a dangerous weapon and not attempt to murder. A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 780=1939 M.W.N. 513=40 Cr.L.J. 922=(1940) 1 M.L.J. 747=51 L.W. 743=184 Ind. Cas. 336.

—Ss. 326, 34—Applicability and scope—Trespassing into house for abduction—Causing grievous hurt to pursuer's while escaping—Offence.

Where all the accused went together armed with deadly weapons with the object of abducting a woman from her husband's house and to use force if necessary for the purpose of attaining their object of abduction and of making their escape, and some of them, while escaping, caused grievous hurt to their pursuers:

Held, they were guilty of an offence under S. 326, read with S. 34, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1933 Sind 407=35 Cr.L.J. 357=27 S.L.R. 269=147 Ind. Cas. 264.

—S. 326—Applicability and scope.

Where the injury caused is simple but is caused with a cutting weapon, it falls under S. 324 and not under S. 326. 1930 Cr. G. 1046=129 Ind. Cas. 483= A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 950.

—S. 326—Applicability and scope—Mutual infliction or injury on each other—No eye-witnesses—Conviction must be under S. 326 and not under S. 307.

Where in the course of a fight the two accused inflicted upon each other injuries so serious that in both cases their dying deposition had to be taken, there were no eye-witnesses to the occurrence and evidence in each trial consisted of the evidence of the complainant, the wounds on the complainant and the admission of the accused that he was himself wounded in the occurrence and where in separate trials each was convicted of an offence, under S. 307. of the Penal Code:

Held, as in case of either of the accused dying of the wounds, the other would have been entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt and to plead that the case came within exception 4 to S. 300, neither appellant could legally be convicted under S. 307.

Held, further that as under S. 105 of the Evidence Act the burden of proof of self-defence or provocation would have been in each case on the accused, neither of them could under the circumstances claim these defences and that S. 326, was the proper section for conviction. 84 Ind. Cas. 1049=2 Rang. 558=26 Cr. L.J. 409=A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 138.

2. Essentials of.

—Ss. 326, 322—Essentials for conviction under S. 326—Accused, held could be convicted only under S. 323.

An accused cannot be convicted under S. 326, Penal Code, unless the weapon used by him was deadly and the hurt intended or known to be likely to be caused was grievous. When the injury constituting grievous hurt caused by a stick is a simple fracture of the radius of the arm and there is no evidence as to the size of nature of the stick used, it cannot be said for certain that hurt intended or known to be likely to be caused was grievous. The conviction under S. 326, Penal Code, in such a case is, therefore, unsustainable and the accused can be convicted only under S. 323. A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 507=1939 M.W.N. 414=49 L.W. 553=(1939) 1 M.L.J. 886=40 Cr.L.J. 827 (1)=183 Ind. Cas. 602 (1).

—S. 326—Grievous hurt—Essence of offence—Jury—Verdict of "guilty but not voluntarily", meaning of—S. 338, conviction under—Causing grievous hurt by rash and negligent act—Cr.P.C. Ss. 237, 238.

To constitute an offence under S. 326 the act must have been done "voluntarily"—that is of the very essence of the offence. When an accused person was charged with committing offences under Ss. 304, 326 and tried before a Jury, and the latter found him not guilty under S. 304, but returned a verdict of "guilty but not voluntarily" under S. 326, and the Judge without asking the jury to explain the verdict discharged them and then convicted and sentenced the accused under S. 338:

Held, that the verdict on charge under S. 326 was in effect a verdict of "not guilty" and the accused was entitled to an acquittal. (1906) 12 C.W.N. 530.

3. Injury causing death.

—S. 326—Injury causing death—Free fight—Some members armed with deadly weapons—Injuries caused resulting in death of one person—Offence is under S. 326.

Where the death is the result of serious injuries caused in a free fight between both the parties, some of the members of which were armed with chhavis and takwas, the object of the assembly is merely to give a beating to their opponents and the offence committed is under S. 326. A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 106=223 Ind. Cas. 427=47 Cr. L.J. 391 (Lah.) (D.B.)

—Ss. 326, 323, 324, 109, 302—Injury causing death—Attack not premeditated—Accused not armed—Only scuffle between deceased and accused—One of accused suddenly giving knife blow—Offence.

There was no previous premeditation about the matter. The party did not go to the attack armed in any way. They had gone to rescue the cattle from the deceased who was taking them to the pound. The attack was only a scuffle between the rescuers and the deceased, except that one of the rescuers suddenly inflicted a blow with his knife on the deceased which proved fatal :

Held, that the accused other than the one who inflicted a knife blow were not guilty of offence more than that under S. 323, Penal Code. It did not appear that at any stage before the incident happened, they were aware that there was any likelihood of the deceased receiving any stab wound. Their conviction under S. 324, 109 could not be sustained.

Held, further that as regards the accused who inflicted the fatal blow, there was a reasonable doubt that any of the intentions or requisite knowledge necessary to support a charge of murder under S. 302 of the Code were present. It was clear that grievous hurt endangering life was caused to the deceased and there could be no doubt that the accused voluntarily caused hurt to him and intended or knew himself likely to cause hurt endangering life. It could, therefore, be safely said in the circumstances that he was clearly guilty of an offence under S. 326, Penal Code, while there was room for doubt as regards the charge under S. 302 of the Code. —Ss. 326, 323, 304, 302—Injury causing death.

The accused struck her daughter with a very heavy piece of wood whereupon she fell down and never stirred and everybody took her to be dead. She was then hung to a beam so as to make it appear that she had committed suicide:

Held, that the accused committed at least an offence under S. 304. Even if the offence might have been of a minor nature punishable under S. 323 and the girl might have died subsequently after she had been hung to a beam, the accused was still guilty of an offence under S. 326, Penal Code. Accused beating deceased with sticks and stones—Death in about two hours—Offence is culpable homicide and not grievous hurt.

But where the Public Prosecutor in the trial Court conceded that it was only a case under S. 326 and the accused were convicted accordingly and they appealed the appellate Court should order the whole case for retrial. 1936 M.W.N. 648.

F. Y. D. 12—21.

—Ss. 326, 326—109, 201, 88, 92—Injury causing death—Devil-dancers attempting to cure a woman by branding her—Death due to injuries—Woman's husband burying her due to panic—Offence—Sentence.

The accused were hillmen and three of them were devil-dancers who attempted at C's request or at any rate with his consent, to dispossess C's wife of a devil by applying a hot ladle (Karchhuli) to her mouth and throat and to various parts of her body, with the result that she died. C subsequently became frightened and buried the body of his wife, and for this reason he was convicted under S. 201, Penal Code, as well as of abetting the other offence.

Held, that S. 326 and S. 304-A, Penal Code, applied, that the hurt was grievous because it endangered life, and it was caused voluntarily because the appellants must be held to have known that they were likely to cause hurt which endangered life that Ss. 88 and 92 did not apply as the woman did not give her consent to this abominable treatment and that the view that as the devil was in possession of her she could not signify consent, could not be taken by the Court.

Held, also that as their ultimate motive was to cure the woman and that however barbarous their methods were, they were certainly acting in good faith but it would be extremely dangerous in any way to countenance a crime of such a heinous nature on the ground that it was only believed to be the means to an end which is worthy of praise.

Held further that it was possible to reduce the sentence of C under S. 201 on the ground that his action was due to panic rather than a deliberate attempt to shield his confederates from punishment. A.I.R. 1935 All. 282=36 Cr. L.J. 346=1935 A.W.R. 57=153 Ind. Cas. 425.

—S. 326—Injuries causing death.

A person who voluntarily inflicts injury such as to endanger life must always, except in the most exceptional and extraordinary circumstances be taken to know that he is likely to cause death. 32 Bom. L.R. 1143=129 Ind. Cas. 351=A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 483.

—S. 326—Injury causing death—Joint attack—Blow with spear on fleshy part of body is not necessarily fatal and offence does not fall under S. 302 but under S. 326.

A, B, C, D assembled together, three of them armed with spears with the intention of attacking another party of men. A gave only one blow with a spear on fleshy part of the body of one of his opponents.

Held: that such injury was not necessarily fatal and A could not be convicted under S. 302 and his case fell within the purview of S. 326, but as there had been a loss of life in the fight, a severe sentence was called for, A's companions having been acting in furtherance of a common intention were also guilty under S. 326 read with S. 34, 129 Ind. Cas. 483=1930 Cr. C. 1046=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 950.

—S. 326—Injury causing death.

Where the accused struck two lathi blows, one severe and the other slight, on the head of the deceased, which caused death, conviction under S. 326 is safer than under S. 304 (2). 115 Ind. Cas. 66=30 Cr. L.J. 378=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 37.

—S. 326—Injury causing death—Firing while drunk

The accused, when he was fully drunk, fired at the deceased and caused a wound on the upper portion of his thigh with a shot which was fired at point blank range. The injury was not fatal and was not such as in the ordinary course of nature would cause death. After nearly two months the injured person died, the wound having become septic and dysentery having supervened a few days before his death.

Held, that neither S. 300 (3) nor (4) applied to the case, and the accused was not guilty of murder he was not also guilty under S. 304. But he was guilty under S. 326 and as the shot was fired at point blank range on the upper portion of the thigh maximum sentence should be passed. 120 Ind. Cas. 183=11 L.L.J. 44=31 Cr. L.J. 44=1929 Cr. C. 4=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 433.

—S. 326—Injury causing death—Private defence—Fight over bund—Rival parties—One party seeking to cut down bund—Fight—Death of one—Liability—Plea of private defence.

People of the village S having assembled proceeded to cut the bund. People of village K, resisted but were turned back. Meanwhile a large crowd collected on both sides armed with lathis, spears and garases. People of K seeing that the people of S were not likely to listen to their remonstrances, proceeded in a body to prevent them from cutting the bund and to drive them away. A free fight ensued; one man from village S received mortal injuries and died on his way to the hospital. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused, who were residents of K under S. 302 read with Ss. 147, 148 and 149, I.P.C.

Held, that the people of S. had no right to cut the bund under the circumstances mentioned and when they actually proceeded to destroy it the people of K had certainly a right to prevent them from doing so.

Held, further that the people of K had erected a bund in their own village and at the time of the occurrence they were in possession of the bund and there had been no lawful order passed by any competent Court directing them or authorising people of K to remove the bund. This being so, it was not unlawful on the part of the appellant to prevent the people of S. from forcibly cutting the bund, and that consequently their convictions under Ss. 147, 148 and 149, could not be sustained.

Held, also that under the circumstances of the case and keeping in view the fact that mortal injuries were caused to the deceased in a free fight and in the exercise of the right of private defence of person and property, the conviction of the accused-appellants under S. 302 could not be sustained, especially when the deceased had received injuries from several other assailants. The conviction was therefore altered to one under S. 326, and the sentence of transportation for life passed was reduced to one of three years' rigorous imprisonment. 1929 Cr. C. 283=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 523.

—S. 326—Injury causing death—Joint assault with deadly weapons—Common intention is presumed.

There was a quarrel over a turn of water in which several persons arrived with Chhavis and assaulted A who died of the injuries caused to him. It was not certain as to who inflicted the fatal blow. All the accused were convicted under S. 326 with S. 34 and inflicted equal punishment.

Held, that considering the nature of the assault and the nature of the weapons, it cannot be said with regard to any one of them that he did not mean to cause serious injuries and S. 34, makes them equally responsible in such cases and each one of them was rightly given the same sentence. 72 Ind. Cas. 513=24 Cr. L.J. 401=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 216.

—S. 326—Injury causing death—Provocation—Hurt with a penknife on provocation—Offence of grievous hurt.

The accused had been married to a girl and the ceremony of taldie parchat was to take place on the day of the occurrence. On that day accused found the deceased taking the girl away from the village where the ceremony was to take place and when he remonstrated with her she told him that the girl would not be married to him that day and abused him. The accused thereupon attacked both the girl and the deceased with penknife and inflicted one injury on each in the abdomen. The girl however survived.

Held, that the accused acted without premeditation, used only a penknife and gave each woman only one injury and therefore there is a very wrong presumption that he neither intended to cause death nor such bodily injury as he knew to be likely to cause death and that the provocation given to him by the deceased was sufficiently grave and sudden to bring him within the first exception in section 300. Held, further that when the accused wounded the women in the abdomen with a penknife he certainly intended to cause them grievous hurt. 73 Ind. Cas. 695=24 Cr. L.J. 663=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 234.

—S. 326—Injury causing death—Boyish quarrel.

In a case where as a result merely of a boyish quarrel just a short time before, the accused stabbed the deceased with a penknife four inches in length there can be no conviction for murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder where the corpus delicti is not established. The offence of which the accused is guilty is voluntarily causing grievous hurt by an instrument used for cutting. 63 Ind. Cas. 450=3 L.L.J. 581=22 Cr. L.J. 658=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 26.

—S. 326—Injury causing death—Every person presumed to intend natural consequence of his acts—Dealing blows with lathis—Intention to cause grievous hurt presumed.

Every sane person of the age of discretion is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences, of his own acts. Every actual consequence is a natural and probable consequence unless and until the contrary is affirmatively shown. Where a number of accused dealt blows with lathis with the result that the assailed person died of it:

Held, that having regard to the nature of the weapons used it can be reasonably inferred that they intended to cause grievous hurt punishable under S. 326, of the Code. 66 Ind. Cas. 665=23 Cr. L.J. 313=A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 141.

4. Punishment and sentence.

—S. 326—Punishment and sentence—Permanent disfiguration—Cut on the nose by razor or knife—Opinion of the doctor—Value—Sentence.

A cut on the bridge of the nose causing a cut 1 inch into 1/2 an inch into 1/2 an inch must be held to cause permanent disfiguration though the doctor who examined the cut might have mentioned that it may not be so.

A sentence of 6 months' rigorous imprisonment cannot be said to be excessive in respect of such an offence which is a serious one and should ordinarily be committed to the Sessions. A.I.R. 1950 Ajmer 13 (1)=51 Cr. L.J. 799=1949 A. M.L.J. 64.

—S. 326—Punishment and sentence.

A punishment for an offence under S. 326, I.P.Code, should be severe when injuries inflicted are caused out of vindictiveness. A.I.R. 1944 Sind 186=I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 103=45 Cr. L.J. 764=215 Ind. Cas. 55.

—S. 326—Punishment and sentence—One month's rigorous imprisonment, held sufficient.

The accused had real provocation and all that he did was to take the weapon nearest to him and throw it at the complainant. It was an act done in annoyance when he received an injury which he thought was due to an act of the complainant:

Held, that in the circumstances, a sentence of one month's rigorous imprisonment was more than enough. A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 681=56 L.W. 436=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 176=1943 M.W.N. 585=45 Cr. L.J. 143=209 Ind. Cas. 303.

—S. 326—Punishment and sentence—Accused cutting wife's nose without serious provocation.

An act of nose-cutting is one which imports deliberate design of a particularly brutal and cruel character.

The accused cut off the nose of his wife. There was neither a ground for suspicion of wife's misconduct nor was there any evidence to suggest that there was anything amounting to serious provocation. The accused was sentenced to nine months rigorous imprisonment:

Held, that the sentence was inadequate and should be enhanced. (it was enhanced to one of two years). A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 430=40 Bom. L.R. 832=39 Cr. L.J. 928=177 Ind. Cas. 647.

—S. 326—Punishment and sentence—Injury with sharp crowbar on head.

Where the accused plunges into the head of his concubine a sharp crowbar 3" near the left ear, a sentence of 3 years rigorous imprisonment is insufficient to meet the ends of justice and may properly be enhanced to 7 years imprisonment. 1937 M.W.N. 886.

—S. 326—Proper sentence.

For an offence under S. 326, Penal Code, a sentence of mere fine is not premissible. 1937 M.W.N. 575.

—Ss. 326, 307—Punishment and sentence.

Where a person fired his gun at another and tried to shoot him, but in so doing, his gun went off and the person aimed at was grievously wounded and the accused was convicted both of attempted murder and grievous hurt:

Held, that conviction was not improper as there was nothing incongruous between S. 307 and S. 326, but punishment should be one. A.I.R. 1937 Sind 61=30 S.L.R. 238=38 Cr. L.J. 487=167 Ind. Cas. 943.

—S. 326—Punishment and sentence.

A person who commits an offence under S. 326, may be punished with whipping in addition to any other punishment to which he may be liable. He may, therefore, be sentenced to a term of imprisonment not exceeding 7 years and in addition to a sentence of whipping, in view of S. 32 (2), Criminal P.C. and S. 3 of Burma Act. (VIII of 1927.) Common intention to inflict grievous hurt—Blow on head given with chhavi by one accused causing death—Accused, aged 62 and 60 years—Accused, held guilty under S. 326/34 and 5 years rigorous imprisonment, held sufficient. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 97.

—S. 326—Punishment and sentence—Sudden quarrel.

The fact that the quarrel which ends in the deceased getting a fatal hurt, was a sudden one, arising in a heat of passion, is a mitigating circumstance in favour of the accused and the sentence should be reduced. 30 P.L.R. 582=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 311.

—S. 326—Punishment and sentence—Nose cutting—Punishment should not be lenient.

A Sessions Judge who while upholding the conviction of a person for cutting the nose of his wife reduced the sentence of the Magistrate.

Held, that the nose-cutting is an offence for which leniency is out of place. 39 P.W.R. 1915 (Cr.)=20 P.R. 1915 (Cr.)=16 Cr. L.J. 782=31 Ind. Cas. 382.

—S. 326—Punishment and sentence—Seperate conviction and sentence for grievous hurt and rioting, when illegal—Penal Code, Ss. 147, 149, 326.

It is illegal to pass and grievous hurt upon persons who are not proved to have individuality committed any acts to cause such grievous hurt or guilty of that offence under S. 149, I.P.C. 16 C. 144, foll. (1903) 8 C.W.N. 344.

5. Riot.

—S. 326—Riot—Riot between bus drivers—Use of motor tools—Both sides receiving injuries.

Where there is a general riot in which a number of bus drivers and their sparemen take part, and in the course of this riot both sides receive injuries from various weapons which are in most cases motor car tools, it is impossible to say that any particular person is responsible for any particular injury to any other person. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 436=37 Cr.L.J. 189=159 Ind. Cas. 967.

6. Unlawful assembly.

—Ss. 326, 149—Unlawful assembly—Conviction under Ss. 326, 149, when can be had.

It is not safe to record a conviction under Ss. 326, 149, Penal Code, where it is not possible to say that the act was done in the prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly having the common object of driving away the Hindus. Such members of the assembly as are found to be participating in it are guilty under S. 147. 202 Ind. Cas. 579=43 Cr. L.J. 871=9 B.R. 19.

—Ss. 326, 149—Unlawful assembly.

Even though it is not known which accused constituting an unlawful assembly with the common object to cause grievous hurt caused the specific injuries, they can all be found guilty under S. 326, Penal Code, by virtue of the provisions of S. 149, Penal Code. —Ss. 326, 34—Unlawful assembly—Common object to beat complainant—One accused causing grievous hurt.

Held, that all the accused forming an unlawful assembly were liable to be convicted of the offence under S. 326 and S. 147, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 444=1942 O.W.N. 440=43 Cr.L.J. 781=1942 A.W.R. 286=201 Ind. Cas. 791.

—Ss. 326, 149—Unlawful assembly—Common object of number of accused to cause hurt—One accused causing grievous hurt with dangerous weapon—Liability of others.

Where the common object of a number of accused was not merely to beat but also to cause hurt; and if in the prosecution of that common object to cause hurt to a certain person, one of them happens to cause grievous hurt and that too with a dangerous weapon, the others would certainly be liable for the grievous hurt so caused by reason of S. 149, Penal Code. —S. 328—Administration of arsenic through a girl.

The accused was charged under S. 328 for causing arsenic to be mixed in food of X through a girl of 13 years with an intention to injure X, and was convicted on the testimony of the girl, who, according to prosecution was innocent agents but the accused was acquitted on the ground that the girl was an accomplice.

Held, that the view that the girl was an accomplice could not be accepted and hence the acquittal was not proper. A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 832 (1)=1941 M. W. N. 790.

—Ss. 328, 307, 511—Administering poison.

Where the accused who was a youth, administered poison to his brother through food of which his brother's son and daughter also partook, and he was charged under S. 307, but the evidence showed that he was acting under the instigation of a person who had absconded and that owing to the ready help by neighbours, none of the three succumbed, and there was, in the opinion of the High Court, probability for the accused to become a fit member of the society after discipline, the High Court convicted the accused under S. 328 instead of S. 307, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 346=32 Cr. L.J. 1228=134 Ind. Cas. 639 (S.B.).

—S. 328—Applicability—Attempt frustrated.

Where the accused gave arsenic poison intending to cause death but through some cause or other the persons to whom he administered the arsenic recovered.

Held, that he is guilty of attempt to murder under S. 307, or at least under S. 328. 20 All. 143, Foll. 60 Ind. Cas. 50=3 L.L.J. 191=22 Cr. L.J. 194=A. I. R. 1921 Lah. 108.

—S. 328—Dhatara poison—Ss. 328, 302.

Accused administering dhatara with food to three persons—All of them found lying in open next day—Two of them recovering from poisoning but one dying after a week after developing pneumonia—Death, held not due to poisoning—Offence, held fell, not under S. 302 but under S. 328. A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 100=(1941) M.L.J. 661=1941 M.W.N. 1038=43 Cr.L.J. 320=198 Ind. Cas. 225.

—S. 328—Dhatara poison—Administering Dhatara to cause a girl to fall in love with accused is an offence where delirium was accused.

The accused a boy of about 16 years of age became infatuated with a girl Mt. Chando and began to make advances to her and did various tricks to make her inclined towards him. Ultimately he persuaded Kanhaiya, a boy about 12 years of age to take five Peras one of which contained dhatara in order that they might be given to Mt. Chando and other members of her family. Kanhaiya did distribute these peras to various people, including Mt. Chando. All the persons who took these peras showed symptoms of poisoning, and Mt. Chando was in a state of delirium.

Held, that the intention to persuade Mt. Chando by some mysterious means or other to fall in love with him, cannot be said to an intention to commit or facilitate the commission of any offence. But dhatara is a very common drug, and it is well known that it is poisonous and a person of the age of the accused must be presumed to know that such a drug is poisonous.

Held, further, that if a person by the administration of dhatara is thrown into a delirium, with the possible risk of falling into coma and becoming unconscious for the time being, both bodily pain and infirmity are caused and therefore the accused was guilty under S. 328. 84 Ind. Cas. 1053=46 All. 77=21 A. L. J. 844=4 L.R.A. (Cr.) 229=26 Cr.L.J. 413=A. I. R. 1924 All. 215.

—S. 328—Evidence—Sufficiency of.

One Bhagwana was found by the Police on duty wandering about in a peculiar condition. He was recently with Chajju Chunna and Ram Gopal his companion. Of these the first two were from Bhagwan's village and the third was a stranger who joined them during their travel to Jaharzarah. The police were informed of two neolis or money bags placed beneath the bedding on which Bhagwana had been seen sitting when his companions went to sleep, one containing Rs. 190 was missing. They were searched and Rs. 209 were found on Ram Gopal. Bhagwana was sent to the dispensary and exhibited symptoms of dhatara poisoning. The Sub-Assistant Surgeon gave him purgative and the resultant tools were found to contain dhatara. Chajju and Chunna in their depositions said the some laddus were offered to them and to Bhagwan by Ram Gopal and after these they ate pans brought by Ram Gopal at a shop. The pans had an intoxicating effect. Some of the laddus and mathris were found on the person of Ram Gopal but they were reported to have shown no traces of dhatura. There was nothing wrong with Chunna and Chajju. Ram Gopal was sent up for trial and was convicted of an offence under S. 328, Penal Code, and sentenced to five years rigorous imprisonment, held, that the circumstantial evidence is not sufficient to testify the conviction. 77 Ind. —S. 328—Intent necessary.

To convict under S. 328 there must be not merely an administration of a drug but the intention specified in the section. 15 Cr. L. J. 599=25 Ind. Cas. 351 (Mad.).

The accused administered arsenic to the deceased, her lover, in sweetmeat balls given to him to eat, in the belief that it was a charm which would revive his love for her; but she did not know that the substance was a deadly poison.

Held, acquitting the accused, that to support a conviction against her under S. 328, it must be shown that the poison was administered with intent to cause hurt, or to commit or facilitate the commission of an offence, or knowing it to be likely that she would thereby cause hurt. —S. 330—Applicability—Torture applied to suspects to extort information at the orders of Police Officers, when suspects are in their custody—Offence.

Where the corporeal violence is applied by others to the suspects under the orders of the Circle Inspector with the full concurrence of the Sub-Inspector, in their very presence, the Sub-Inspector is in point of law as much responsible for the violence as the Circle Inspector since as a Police Officer, he is under a legal duty to prevent the infliction of torture on those who are in their custody, and his failure to discharge that duty makes him a party to the crime. A Policeman who stands by, acquiescing in an assault on a prisoner committed by another Policeman for the purpose of extorting confession or information leading to the detection of the crime is guilty of the offence punishable under S. 330, Penal Code. The maxim "Respondent Superior" has no application in such a case. A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 186=I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 232=41 Cr. L.J. 757=1940 N.L.J. 667=189 Ind. Cas. 591.

—S. 331—Applicability.

Extorting a promise from complainant to restore the woman that he was alleged to have abducted does not fall within the purview of the section. 73 Ind. Cas. 272=5 L.L.J. 375=24 Cr. L.J. 576=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 167.

—S. 330—Offence under—Punishment—

The law clearly draws a very great distinction between simple hurt caused in the ordinary way and simple hurt caused for the purpose of extorting a confession or making an accused person recover any property. The conduct of causing hurt under S. 330, Penal Code, by a responsible Police Officer engaged in the investigation of a crime is one of the most serious offences known to the law. The result of third degree methods or of actual torture or beating must be that innocent persons might well be convicted confessions being forced from them which are false. In almost every case in which a confession is recorded in Criminal Courts, it is alleged by the defence that the Police have resorted to methods such as these. It is seldom, however, that an offence of this nature is or can be proved. It clearly is the duty of the Courts when a case of this kind is proved to pass sentences which may have a deterrent effect. A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 471=37 Cr. L.J. 811=38 P.L.R. 639=163 Ind. Cas. 145.

—S. 330—Requirements of.

S. 330 requires that the assault should be proved to be solely for the purpose of extorting confession or restoration of property. 5 Pat. L. W. 109=19 Cr. L.J. 749=46 Ind. Cas. 525.

—S. 331—Police Officer taking active part in assault on prisoner.

A Policeman who is present and stands by acquiescing in an assault on a prisoner committed by another Policeman for the purpose of extorting confession, is guilty of the offence of abetment of an offence under S. 330, Penal Code. If however, he is not merely standing by but taking active part, he is guilty of an offence under S. 331 if grievous hurt is caused. A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 340=1940 N. L. J. 459=42 Cr. L. J. 17=I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 110=190 Ind. Cas. 849 (D.B.).

—S. 331—Torture by police.

If torture of the police in exacting admission causes grievous hurt resulting in death does not come under the definition of murder, it is an offence under S. 351, I.P.C. 12 P.W.R. 1917 (Cr.)=18 Cr. L.J. 710=40 Ind. Cas. 710.

(1) Acts not in discharge of duty.

—S. 332—Exceeding authorities—An officer is not entitled to set fire to reeds on private property.

Section 10 of the Act does not authorise the Collector to enter upon the property of private individuals and to set fire to plants or trees growing thereon in order to facilitate the deposit of soil or silt excavated from the canal bed. Therefore, an officer during any of the above acts cannot be said to be acting in the discharge of the duty as a public servant within S. 332, I.P.C. 105 Ind. Cas. 817=9 L.L.J. 424=28 Cr. L.J. 993=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 706.

—S. 332—Acts not in discharge of duties—Unauthorised act.

Playing cards is not an offence and does not come within any of the eight clauses of S. 34, Police Act, and the act of a constable in prohibiting the men from playing cards is not in the discharge of his duty. So any assault by the persons so playing on the constable does not come under S. 332, I.P.C., but is an offence under S. 323, I.P.C. 92 Ind. Cas. 889=27 P.L.R. 74=27 Cr. L.J. 377=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 250.

—Ss. 332 and 323—Acts not in discharge of duty—Constable carrying out, out of date order.

A constable who carries out an order of a Magistrate which had ceased to have force by expiration of time, is not, discharging a duty imposed by law, under S. 332, I.P.C., and therefore a person causing hurt to the constable executing the order, is not liable except under S. 323, I.P.C. 40 All. 28=15 A.L.J. 813=19 Cr. L.J. 5=42 Ind. Cas. 917.

—Ss. 332 and 323—Acts not in discharge of duties—Discharge of duty by public servant—Irregularities—Hurt caused to public servant—Offence.

An Excise Inspector searching the applicant's house for illicit possession of cocaine committed several irregularities such as having no warrant with him authorising the search, taking only one search witness with him, directing a constable to scale over his outer wall of the house, etc. The accused caused hurt to the Inspector and the constables.

Held, that the Inspector and the constables were not acting in the discharge of their duties as public servants and therefore the accused was not guilty under S. 332 but only under S. 323. 37 All. 353=13 A.L.J. 439=16 Cr. L.J. 495=29 Ind. Cas. 335.

2. Applicability and scope.

—Ss. 332, 21 (9)—Applicability and scope—Talayari assisting collection of kist is public servant—Assault on him while exercising such function—Offence.

The Talayari is a permanent servant of the Crown and he exercises some of the functions referred to in S. 21 (9), Penal Code, while assisting the village officer in the matter of the collection of the kist. He is, therefore, a public servant and a person assaulting him while collecting kist is guilty of an offence under S. 332, Penal Code. A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 183=1943 M.W.N. 804 (2)=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 674=45 Cr. L.J. 535=212 Ind. Cas. 75.

—Applicability and scope—Assault on Sub-Inspector—Criminal P. C., Ss. 54, 47, 48.

In the investigation of a case under S. 363, Penal Code, the Sub-Inspector went to the house of the petitioners and asked them to produce the kidnapped girl, and one R, who was said to have kidnapped her. The petitioners denied the presence of these two persons in their house, whereupon the Sub-Inspector said that he would search the house. The petitioners then dragged the Sub-Inspector inside the house and assaulted him. The Sub-Inspector had no warrant under S. 100, Criminal P.C.

Held, that S. 165, Criminal P. C., empowered the Sub-Inspector to make such a search. Moreover, his authority to act as proposed was to be found in Ss. 54, 47 and 48, Criminal P. C. He was clearly empowered under the first of these sections, without any order or warrant from a Magistrate, to arrest R, who, on the information before him, was concerned in an offence under S. 363, Penal Code, a cognizable offence. As he also had reason to believe that R, was in the house of the petitioners, under S. 47, the petitioners were, therefore, bound to allow him free ingress to the house and afford all reasonable facilities for a search therein. Failing this, S. 48 authorised the Sub-Inspector to force himself into the house. As all this was in the discharge of his duty as Sub-Inspector in charge of Police Station, the hurt caused to him by the petitioners came within S. 332, Penal Code, and the petitioner's conviction of an offence under that section could not be said to be vitiated by any excess of authority on the part of the Sub-Inspector. A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 281=8 B.R. 307=43 Cr. L. J. 279=197 Ind. Cas. 827.

—Ss. 332, 323—Applicability and scope—Accused chasing Police constable—Attack not concerned with actual rescue of arrested person—Offence.

Where the accused chased the Police constable and beat him very severely but this attack was not concerned with the actual rescue of the arrested person, they were guilty of the minor offence punishable under S. 323, I.P.C. and not of the offence under S. 332. A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 321=44 C.W.N. 502=41 Cr. L.J. 744=189 Ind. Cas. 480.

—Ss. 332, 323—Applicability and scope—Constable not on duty, assaulted at Ramlila performance—Offence.

Where the constable who was assaulted at Ramlila performance was not there in pursuance of the duty for which he had been detained but went there only in order to enjoy the spectacle.

Held, that under the circumstances, the offence of assault fell under S. 323, I. P. C. and not under S. 332. 161 Ind. Cas. 12=18 N.L.J. 188=37 Cr. L.J. 375.

—S. 332—Applicability and scope—Vaccinator ordered to vaccinate women and children—Knocking at accused's door—Implied consent to enter—Assault—Obstruction to public servant—Boy of eleven acting under influence of elder brother—Sentence.

During the prevalence of small-pox in a Cantonment area, an order was passed by the Civil Surgeon and communicated to a lady vaccinator that she should go and vaccinate ladies and children in the Cantonment area. She went to the house of the accused and knocked at the front door and the door behind the house. It became known to the inmates of the house as to who was seeking admission. She waited for five minutes, during which time admission was not refused. The door was not closed from inside and she entered. It was alleged that when she entered the house, she was roughly handled by the two accused and her frock was torn. She received some hurt at the hands of the two accused. She remonstrated and said that she had come to vaccinate and that the accused should behave politely; but they, instead of desisting, inflicted some injuries on her.

Held, that under these circumstances, the person seeking admittance could assume that he or she had the implied consent of the house-owner to enter and if the person making the entrance happened to be a public servant who has entered the premises in order to discharge his or her public duties and if he or she is obstructed or assaulted, as the vaccinator was assaulted in the case, an offence under S. 332, I. P. C. would be made out.

Held further, that as one of the accused, a boy of eleven had not taken any prominent part in the incident whatever little he did might have been under the influence of his elder brother, his conviction might be set aside. A.I.R. 1935 All. 160=36 Cr. L.J. 356=1935 A.L.J. 175=153 Ind. Cas. 469.

—S. 332—Applicability and scope—Special pass obtained for liquor—Illiterate constable seizing it suspecting absence of certificate—Assault—Provocation, if sufficient—Sentence.

A party of villagers headed by the accused N had decided on a feast. They went to the trouble of obtaining a special pass from Government for the purpose and paid for it like honestmen. Two of their members went and fetched the liquor in a bottle and a canister, and brought it back to the village. Just as they were about to hand it over to the expectant gathering assembled for the purpose, a Police constable appeared, and from a distance of 25 paces told them to stop and asked them what they had in their hands. They took no notice but proceeded on their way. The constable then went up to them and stopped them in front of the place where their expectant companions were awaiting their liquor. The pass was shown and the constable was obviously told that everything was in order. But he could not read and did not believe them; he therefore, told one of the party to accompany him to the Police Station where he could get the 'chitthi' read. There was quite naturally a strong protest against this suggestion. The constable then caught hold of the canister of liquor and was about to take it away :

Held, that the provocation was both grave and sudden when the surrounding circumstances are taken into consideration. It is true that the prestige of the Police must be upheld, but there is another side to the picture. The prestige of Government stands higher than that of its servants. It is even more important that the people of the land should feel they are being dealt with honestly and in good faith, and not that their money is taken for passes on the one hand and their liquor taken away from them with the other. A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 247=17 N.L.J. 78=36 Cr. L.J. 317=153 Ind. Cas. 211 (2).

—S. 332—Applicability and scope.

Search of a place—Police refusing to allow the occupant to enter the house—Occupant causing hurt to a Police Officer in attempting to enter into his house on physical resistance being offered by the latter :

Held, that the occupant is not guilty of an offence under S. 332 or any other section of Penal Code. A.I.R. 1932 All. 449=(1932) A.L.J. 530=34 Cr. L.J. 439=142 Ind. Cas. 790.

—Ss. 332, 323—Applicability and scope.

Naib Tahsildar going to accused's village and demanding revenue—Beating of Naib Tahsildar by accused's sons—Court considering it not improbable that accused was roughly treated by Naib Tahsildar :

Held, that the accused were entitled to the benefit of doubt in that they tried to resist an illegal act of the officer and that S. 332 would not apply to the case and for injuries caused to the Naib Tahsildar, the person who caused them committed an offence under S. 323, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 162=33 P.L.R. 1065=34 Cr. L.J. 460=142 Ind. Cas. 897.

—S. 332—Applicability and scope—Offence under—Wrestling match—Police maintaining peace and order, interfering with the match—Arena rushed and police hustled—Offence under S. 332 is committed.

While a very evenly contested wrestling match organised by a Municipal Board was going on, one of the constables, who had been invited by the organizers to keep peace and order happened to be a backer of one of the contestants. He interfered with the wrestling and thereupon a scuffle followed in which some of the police men were hustled and their uniform torn.

Held, that though in a case like this it is difficult for the crowd to resist rushing to the arena, there was no reason for the crowd to hustle the police, and therefore an offence under S. 332 was committed. 92 Ind. Cas. 224=23 A.L.J. 1027=27 Cr.L.J. 240=A.I.R. 1926 All. 168.

—S. 332—Applicability and scope—Officials protecting property in private capacity.

S. 332 of the I.P.C. has no operation when the property is the private property of the officials and where the officials are protecting their property in their private capacity. 161 P.L.R. 1911=12 Cr.L.J. 236=53 P.W.R. 1911 (Cr.)=10 Ind. Cas. 278.

—S. 332—Applicability and scope—Constable arresting burglars.

A person assaulting the police constable who was attempting to arrest persons suspected of having committed burglary is guilty under S. 332 as the constable can arrest without warrant person suspected of having committed an offence under S. 457, I. P. C. 18 P. R. 1910 (Cr.)=32 P.W.R. 1910 (Cr.)=11 Cr.L.J. 423=104 P.L.R. 1910=6 Ind. Cas. 956.

—Ss. 332, 355—Applicability and scope—Causing hurt to deter public servant from his duty—Assault with intent to dishonour—Assault on police witness while giving evidence.

An accused person while under trial struck a Sub-Inspector of Police who was in the witness-box giving evidence against him.

Held, that the offence of which the accused was guilty in this respect was rather that provided for by S. 355 than that punishable under S. 382. 29 All. 596=1907 A.W.N. 186.

3. Essential ingredients.

—S. 332—Essential ingredients—Patwari dragged away and beaten in order to force him to make certain entries in revenue papers.

An offence under S. 332 is committed when a person voluntarily causes hurt to any person being a public servant in the discharge of his duty as such public servant, or with intent to prevent or deter that person from discharging his duty as such public servant. A duty may be negative as well as positive. It is the patwari's duty not to make entries in his official records under pressure from an interested party which he would not otherwise make. Where the accused drag away the patwari to a certain house and beat him in order to force him to make certain entries in the revenue papers, the accused, by their act, intend to prevent or deter the patwari from discharging his duties as a public servant. In such a case the offence committed is under S. 332 and the fact that when being assaulted the patwari had no official papers with him makes no difference. A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 267=42 Cr.L.J. 321=1941 O.W.N. 82=1941 A.W.R.(C.C.) 69=192 Ind. Cas. 774.

—S. 332—Essential ingredients—Constable assaulted while attempting to arrest accused without warrant—No allegation by constable that he proceeded under S. 54 (1), Criminal P. C.

In order to bring the case within the purview of S. 332, I.P.C., it is necessary to establish that the public servant was acting at the time of the assault as such public servant and in the particular matter discharging a duty imposed upon him as such public servant. A constable who had no warrant of arrest in his possession at the time of the assault, nor had he been entrusted with the duty of arresting the accused, cannot be said to have been acting in the discharge of his duty if he intended or wanted to arrest the accused. Where there is no allegation by the constable in his deposition that he proceeded under S. 54 (1), Criminal P. C., S. 54 (1), Criminal P. C., does not apply. A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 385 = 1941 O.W.N. 602 = 42 Cr.L.J. 501 = 1941 A.W.R. 151 = 193 Ind. Cas. 817.

—S. 332—Discharging official duties—Essential ingredients.

In considering the question of "discharge of official duties" it is not the dress that concludes the matter but it is what the public servant was doing at the time that counts. 1935 M.W.N. 892.

—S. 332—Essential ingredients.

Assault on Octroi Officer when acting in discharge of his public duty would constitute an offence under S. 332. A.I.R. 1935 Sind. 245 = 29 S.L.R. 54 = 37 Cr.L.J. 148 = 159 Ind. Cas. 665.

—S. 332—Essential ingredients—Knowledge of complainant being public servant is necessary.

An intention on the part of the accused person, namely to prevent or deter a public servant from discharging his duty is an ingredient of the offence. If the accused persons were unaware of the fact that the persons confined were public servants the offence is not committed. 85 Ind. Cas. 245 = 22 A.L.J. 501 = 5 L.R.A. (Cr.) 177 = 26 Cr.L.J. 501 = A.I.R. 1924 All. 1645.

—S. 332—Essential ingredients—Public servant acting bona fide but not in legitimate exercise of his public function—Person hurting is not guilty under the section.

Per Aston, A.J.C.—Where a public servant is acting in the legitimate discharge of his public functions and is hurt, the offender is guilty of one of the special offences relating to public servants. But where the public servant is acting bona fide but not in the legitimate exercise of his public functions, the offender will not be guilty of any of the special offences but of causing hurt or assault as the case may be. 18 All. 216, Rel. on. 83 Ind. Cas. 899 = 26 Cr.L.J. 195 = 16 S.L.R. 161 = A.I.R. 1921 Sind 51.

4. Illegal warrant.

—S. 332—Applicability—Chowkidar attempting to execute warrant of distraint—Assault—Warrant illegal—Offence. see BENGAL VILLAGE SELF-GOVERNMENT ACT, S. 41, Rr. 14 and 18. 230 I.C. 326-A. I.R. 1949 Cal. 487.

—S. 332—Illegal warrant.

Although it is arguable that a property owner is entitled to resist the execution of an illegal warrant of attachment, yet when the attachment is once effected without any protest being made by the property owners, and when that property has passed into the possession of the attaching officer, and when the attaching officer has left the premises it is not permissible that any person should remove the attached property from the custody of such officer. 83 Ind. Cas. 899 = 26 Cr. L.J. 195 = 16 S.L.R. 161 = A.I.R. 1921 Sind 51.

—S. 332—Illegal warrant.

When the authority under which the police attempted to make the search was invalid, persons resisting them would not be convicted under S. 332, I.P.C. although this act may come under other sections. 38 All. 14 = 13 A.L.J. 979 = 16 Cr. L.J. 819 = 31 Ind. Cas. 995.

5. Irregularity.

—S. 332—Irregularity.

Where there are serious irregularities in connexion with house search and the person whose house is searched assaults and beats a constable, the offence falls under S. 323 and not under S. 332. 11 P.L.T. 878 = 125 Ind. Cas. 784 = A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 387.

—S. 332—Irregularity—Police officer investigating search without warrant or witness—An officer of Police empowered to conduct an investigation can carry out a search without a warrant.

In carrying out such a search he is bound, under S. 103 of the Cr. P. Code to call upon two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality to attend and witness the search, and if he omits to do so a householder would be justified in closing the door and refusing ingress into the house, and would not be guilty of an offence under S. 332, I.P.C. While it may be necessary to oppose a police officer from forcing his way into a house in order to honestly to prevent an illegal search, there would be no justification for compelling him to do something illegal. 42 All. 67 = 17 A.L.J. 1047 = 20 Cr. C.J. 695 = 52 Ind. Cas. 663.

6. Jurisdiction

—S. 332—Jurisdiction.

An offence under S. 332 is triable only by First Class Magistrate. 1934 M.W.N. 271.

7. Punishment and sentence—See also S. 332 I.P.C.—Applicability and scope

—S. 332—Sentence.

Separate sentences under Ss. 147 and 332 of the Indian Penal Code are not illegal in view of amended S. 35. A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 64 and 49 Bom. 916, Foll. 93 Ind. Cas. 600 = 27 Cr. L.J. 824 = A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 521 —Ss. 332 and 149—Punishment and sentence—Rioting.

Offence under Ss. 332 and 149 includes the offence of rioting. In the later the violence is of a very serious kind. It is impossible to punish for the whole former offence without punishing for the offence of rioting. 3 S.L.R. 224 = 11 Cr. L.J. 415 = 6 Ind. Cas. 880.

8. Private defence.

—S. 332—Private defence—Distraint under District Municipalities Act—Resistance to.

A distrainer having a warrant has no right to take the front door of house, and if he threatens to do so, such a proceeding renders the house unsafe calling for immediate defence of private property. Further if the accused resists such attempts he cannot be said to have exceeded his right of self-defence and any conviction under Penal Code, S. 332, is liable to be set aside: 13 Mad. 518, Foll. 1930 Cr. C. 335 = 31 M.L.W. 205 = 1930 M.W.N. 172 = 3 M. Cr. C. 90 = 31 Cr. L.J. 639 = 53 Mad. 508 = 124 Ind. Cas. 139 = A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 430 (1) = 58 M.L.J. 193.

9. Sanction.

—S. 332—Sanction to prosecute, if necessary.

Offences under Ss. 335 and 353, Penal Code, do not require a complaint in writing of the public servant concerned or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate before a Court can take cognizance of them, presumably because they are cognizable and the measure of punishment with which they can be visited makes cases relating to them warrant cases. Although offences under Ss. 183, 186, Penal Code, which require no complaint under S. 195, Criminal P.C., may be present in offences under Ss. 332, 353, Penal Code, they are ancillary to them and no question of attracting the provisions of S. 195 (1), Criminal P.C. would arise unless the prosecution sought to include offence under S. 183 or S. 186, or offences under Ss. 183 and 186, with more serious offences or the more serious one of them. A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 210=1945 N.L.J. 239=I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 685=47 Cr. L.J. 175=221 Ind. Cas. 403.

—S. 333—Assault on Sub-Inspector in consequence of what he had done to accused—Accused, when can be convicted.

Under the provision of law contained in S. 333, I.P.C., a person who causes grievous hurt to a public servant can be convicted under three circumstances; (1) when grievous hurt is caused while the public servant is acting in the discharge of his duty as such public servant; in this case motive and object are irrelevant; (2) when a public servant is prevented or deterred from discharging his duty as such public servant; in this case it is necessary that the object of the accused should be to deter the public servant from discharging his duty but it is not necessary to prove any motive; (3) when the public servant is assaulted in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by that public servant in the discharge of his duty; in this case it is not necessary that the public servant should be discharging his duty at the time of the assault. The object, too, is irrelevant. The only thing that has got to be seen is the motive. The last circumstance mentioned above applies to a case, where the assault is committed on the Sub-Inspector in consequence of what he had done against the accused.

(In this particular case, considering the high-handedness of the offender, the sentence was enhanced to two years' rigorous imprisonment from that of 18 months). A.I.R. 1935 All. 563=1935 A.W.R. 463=36 Cr. L.J. 964=156 Ind. Cas. 602.

—Ss. 333 and 34—Arrest made by chaukidars—Bengal Chaukidari Act (20 of 1856), S. 52—United Prov. Towns Area Act, S. 41.

Two chaukidars arrested one P suspecting that he was in possession of stolen property. On the way to the Police Station he was rescued from their custody by certain persons.

Held, that the chaukidars were not members of the police force, and could not arrest P on mere suspicion as S. 52 of the Chaukidari Act where under they were appointed was repealed by the United Prov. Towns Areas Act, S. 41.

Held also, that P, could not be convicted under S. 333 because it must be shown that the rescuers were acting in pursuance of a common intention within the meaning of S. 34. 14 A.L.J. 789=17 Cr. L.J. 529=36 Ind. Cas. 577.

—S. 333—Private defence—Constable roughly handled by way of self-defence, to prevent him from doing further harm—No offence is made out.

The deceased assaulted the constable and beat him only after he had fired at one of them and caused him serious injury. The object of the accused was to snatch away the gun from him before he could do any further harm and in doing so they were exercising the right of self-defence. The constable exceeded his lawful rights in firing upon the men and causing such serious injuries to one of the accused as he did, and the others were not bound to stand by and allow the constable to use the gun once more :

Held, the act of the accused did not constitute an offence under S. 333, Indian Penal Code, on the facts disclosed. 71 Ind. Cas. 665=24 Cr. L.J. 201=A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 75.

—S. 333—Unauthorized search—Resistance.

A person who resists a police officer conducting an unauthorised search outside the limits of his station is not guilty of an offence under S. 333, I.P.C. 24 M.L.T. 96=(1918) M.W.N. 526=8 L.W. 225=20 Cr. L.J. 145=49 Ind. Cas. 337.

—S. 334—Provocation—Crying of counter-slogans, held likely to cause provocation.

The crying of a counterslogan, that is to say, in praise of the leader of one's own party and not in dispraise of the leader of the other party in reply to the slogans cried by that party is likely to cause provocation to its members though not grave and sudden. A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 20=40 Cr. L.J. 831=182 Ind. Cas. 643.

—S. 334—Provocation.

It is wrong to say that no offence is committed by an accused person who strikes a blow under provocation. 94 Ind. Cas. 142=27 Cr. L.J. 574.

—Ss. 334 and 323—Provocation—Abuse—Private defence.

The use of the abusive word 'bugger' to a person of the Bhaduw or gentleman class may constitute a grave and sudden provocation. There is no right of private defence where the apprehension of danger to the body ceases. An ordinary walking stick four feet long and one inch thick is not a dangerous weapon. 14 Cr. L.J. 442=20 Ind. Cas. 602 (Cal.).

—S. 334—Time of provocation—Provocation is necessary at the time of assault.

Police Officers had been harassing one R in the course of an investigation. In order to escape the high handedness of the police and also out of feelings of shame and humiliation felt at the treatment meted out to him, R threw himself into a well. The high-handedness on the part of police was resented by R's friends and the police were roughly handled by them. Four persons were convicted of voluntarily causing hurt to police while discharging their public duties.

Held, that if the assault upon the police had been made while the actual torture of harassment of R was in progress then the position of the accused would have been different and other considerations would have arisen. But as the police officers were attacked after R had thrown himself into the well and escaped oppression, the accused had no justification in law to attack the police. The grave and sudden provocation, if it was ever caused by the conduct of the police had already come to an end. 11 L.L.J. 287=1929 Cr. C. 329=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 739.

—Ss. 335, 304—Sudden provocation—Injury endangering life—Offence—Plea of self-defence, if available.

Where there is a free fight between the accused and the deceased, the accused must accept responsibility for the act done by him and he cannot claim a right of self-defence.

If the accused, under sudden provocation, caused an injury that endangered life and the deceased died as the result of that injury, the offence committed is certainly culpable homicide.

In very few cases of murder can it be said that the injury caused necessarily resulted in death; but if it is caused with the necessary intention or knowledge and death results from the injury caused, then the offence committed is murder or culpable homicide as the case may be. A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 723=(1938) M.W.N. 605=48 L.W. 142=(1938) 2 M.L.J. 225=39 Cr. L.J. 871=177 Ind. Cas. 432.

—S. 335—Offence under S. 335—Provocation—Sentence of fine only—Insufficiency of.

An offence under S. 335, I.P.C. though committed under some provocation, should not be treated leniently and a sentence of fine only will not be sufficient to meet the ends of justice. A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 194=33 P.L.R. 72=33 Cr. L.J. 368=136 Ind. Cas. 734.

—S. 335—Nose-cutting—Deliberate design.

Where the accused was found guilty of cutting of the nose, the act is one which imports deliberate design. The plea of grave and sudden provocation or the excuse it implies in such cases will not have by any means the same effect as in the case of a man who in sudden and provoked anger strikes a blow. Sentence enhanced to two years. 17 Bom. L.R. 68=16 Cr. L.J. 168=27 Ind. Cas. 552.

—S. 336—Accused's house stoned by people in neighbourhood—Accused firing shots to frighten them.

The accused's house was being stoned and he fired his gun in all directions merely to frighten off and prevent persons who were throwing stones and to prevent their continuing to do so. He was convicted under S. 336, I. P. C.:

Held, that the conviction must be set aside for three reasons: (i) that the firing of the gun was not a rash and negligent act but a deliberate act and, therefore, S. 336, I. P. C., had no application; (ii) there was no proof that human life was actually endangered; and (iii) that prima facie no offence was committed because the gun was fired merely to warn the people who were throwing stones and not with the object of hitting them. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 273=38 Cr. L.J. 897=170 Ind. Cas. 278.

—Ss. 336, 351—Throwing bricks into another's house—Offence—Assault—'Any act,' meaning of.

Where it appeared that the accused threw bricks into the complainant's house due to enmity with him:

Held, that it was an act which endangered the personal safety of the complainant when he was inside or of any other person who might be inside, and these facts would constitute an offence under S. 336, I. P. C., and that the accused could also be held liable under S. 351 for assault as the throwing of brickbats by the accused would be a gesture which would cause the complainant to apprehend that criminal force was about to be used against him.

The words 'any act' in S. 336, I. P. C. must not be limited to the meaning 'any legal act.' A.I.R. 1932 All. 322=(1932) A. L. J. 224=93 Cr. L.J. 889=140 Ind. Cas. 99.

—Ss. 336 and 426—Danger to human life.

Where the accused threw large pieces of brick at the side of the complainant's house there being no one in the house at the time,

Held, that the accused could not be convicted under S. 336 there being no evidence in the case that human life or personal safety was endangered; that only section applicable being S. 426. 5 L.B.R. 100=10 Cr. L.J. 552=4 Ind. Cas. 293.

—S. 336—Endangering safety—Temple—Omission to fence a well.

During a festival, a temple becomes a place of public resort and it is the duty of the person in charge, to take all reasonable precautions necessary to ensure the safety of those crowding thither by his license and invitation. If he omits to enclose a well standing by the path which the pilgrims take to reach the shrine, with the result that a man and a boy fell into the well, he is guilty of an offence under S. 336. 18 C.W.N. 1176=16 Cr. L.J. 131=27 Ind. Cas. 195.

—S. 336—Hurt not caused.

At the time of a communal riot in the city of Pilibhit in different parts, the accused threw brick-bats at the Muhammadans who were passing by the land close to his house, he also fired two shots at them from his house. No one was hit by the bricks or the gun shot.

Held: that the accused had committed no offence. 87 Ind. Cas. 523=47 All. 606=23 A.L.J. 356=26 Cr. L.J. 987=6 L.R. A.Cr. 121=A.I.R. 1925 All. 396.

—S. 336—Person deliberately throwing bricks at temple—he is guilty neither under S. 336 nor S. 153.

G deliberately threw bricks at a temple hoping that the Hindus would believe that the bricks came from the Mahomedan quarter and that thereby the Hindus would be enraged against the Mahomedans and there would be a riot between the Hindus and Mahomedans. Nobody was hurt by the Act.

Held: G desired a certain result to follow from the throwing of bricks and he deliberately threw the bricks at the temple for that purpose. There was neither rashness nor negligence in the act. G was not guilty under S. 336.

Held: further that the throwing of a brick at a temple is not declared to be an offence, nor is it prohibited by law. G's act was not therefore illegal and he was not guilty under S. 153. 112 Ind. Cas. 592=1929 A.L.J. 175=11 A.I. Cr. R. 207=29 Cr. L.J. 1008=10 L.R.A. Cr. 25=51 A. 465=A.I.R. 1928 All. 745.

—S. 336—No Rash Act—Driving motor without spectacles—No conviction.

A car driver who did not wear spectacles as prescribed by the licence for defective sight could not be convicted under S. 336, I.P.C., for collusion by accident, as no rash act on his part without spectacles was made out. If the eyesight is materially defective, it is a rash act for a motor driver to drive a car without spectacles. But mere omission to wear spectacles is not an offence. 42 Bom. 396=20 Bom. L.R. 376=19 Cr. L.J. 605=45 Ind. Cas. 509.

—S. 336—Rash or negligent act likely to endanger life—Hook swinging—License to swing by cloth attached to swinging apparatus.

A person having a licence to conduct swinging during a festival does not by allowing persons in his absence to swing by hooks inserted in the flesh instead of by being attached to the pole by cloth render himself liable to punishment for an offence under S. 336, unless it is shown that he knew of it. (1900) 5 C.W.N. 376.

—S. 337—Rash and negligent driving—If guilty of.

Where the accident was due to the pedestrian himself suddenly moving into the road without looking where he was going, and the driver had to make a quick decision to avoid collision, held that the driver was not guilty of rash and negligent driving. 1938 N. L. J. 44.

—Ss. 337, 307—Shooting blindly with shot gun, in dark in direction of sound heard—Offence.

If a man fires blindly in the dark with a shot gun in the direction from which he has heard sounds coming from a distance away, it cannot be held that his act must, in all probability, cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. Such a person cannot possibly be convicted under S. 307, I.P.C., but he could be convicted under S. 337, thereof. A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 220=39 Cr.L.J. 692=176 Ind. Cas. 150.

—S. 337—Shooting expedition—Accident.

A big party of some hundreds went for shooting pigs—A boar rushed towards the accused—Accused fired at the boar but missed the boar and the shot struck the leg of a member of the party:

Held, that the case was one of accident and not of rash or negligent shooting and conviction under S. 337 was illegal. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 54=31 P.L.R. 955=32 Cr.L.J. 587=130 Ind. Cas. 654.

—S. 337—Determination of liability.

The accused's liability is determined by what is the proximate cause. If the proximate cause is negligence of the accused, the presence of another and contributory cause is not a defence. 92 Ind. Cas. 433=18 S.L.R. 199=27 Cr.L.J. 257=A.I.R. 1925 Sind 233.

—S. 337—Error of judgment.

The accused who is arraigned with negligence cannot claim the benefit of an error of judgment when he exercised none. 92 Ind. Cas. 433=18 S.L.R. 199=27 Cr.L.J. 257=A.I.R. 1925 Sind 233.

—Ss. 337, 307, 325 and 109—Poisoning—Giving love potion.

A love potion administered to her husband by accused No. 1, to the knowledge of accused No. 2 and No. 3, who are aware of its nature, without care or caution makes accused No. 1, liable under S. 337, I.P.C. Accused No. 2 guilty of Ss. 307 and 107, I.P.C. Accused No. 3 guilty of Ss. 307 and 109, I.P.C. 19 Bom. L.R. 54=18 Cr.L.J. 443=38 Ind. Cas. 1003.

—Ss. 337 and 338—Native doctor—Operation.

The accused, a Hakim performed an operation on the right eye of the complainant using a pair of scissors and a needle ordinarily used by tailors, the most ordinary precautions by way of disinfecting and sterilizing, etc., being entirely neglected. The operation itself was needless and was not in accordance with any recognised Indian method.

Held, that the accused was guilty, in so acting, of an offence punishable under S. 337 and not under S. 338 as there was no permanent privation of the sight of either eye. The act was a rash and negligent one endangering human life or personal safety of another; when a Hakim gives out that he is a skilled doctor the public are entitled to expect of him the ordinary precautions which surgical knowledge regards as imperative. 39 Bom. 523=16 Cr.L.J. 437=17 Bom. L.R. 384=29 Ind. Cas. 69.

—Ss. 337, 286—Causing hurt by means of a gun—Evidence of negligence.

The causing of hurt by negligence in the use a gun would fall within the purview of S. 337 rather than of S. 286. But where all the evidence against the accused was that he went out shooting in the month of July when people were likely to be about in the fields, and that a single pellet from his gun struck a man who was sitting in a field:

Held, that this was not sufficient evidence of rashness or negligence to support a conviction under S. 337. 28 A. 464=1906 A.W.N. 91=3 A.L.J. 332.

—Ss. 338, 279 and 114—Lorry driver permitting minor boy sitting by his side to drive lorry—If liable or accident as principal offender. See PENAL CODE, Ss. 279, 338 and 114. 52 P.L.R. 193.

—S. 338—Accused in charge of motor vehicle permitting unlicensed person to drive it while sitting by his side—Passer-by knocked down by rash and negligent driving—Conviction of accused—Legality.

The accused who was a driver of a motor truck permitted one X, a novice, to drive the truck with actual knowledge that he had no licence to drive a motor vehicle, while he was by his side. X knocked down a passer-by by rash and negligent driving and caused him grievous hurt. Both X and the accused were convicted under S. 338, I. P. Code.

Held, that the accused was guilty of intentionally aiding X because he wilfully and with full knowledge of essential facts permitted him to drive the vehicle and failed to prevent him from using it in the manner in which he did. Since he was Present when the offence was committed he should be deemed to have committed the offence as if he were the principal offender, and he was therefore rightly convicted of the offence under S. 338, I. P. Code, as X was. I.L.R. (1947) Nag. 144=A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 113=226 Ind. Cas. 500=47 Cr.L.J. 968=1946 N.L.J. 540.

—S. 338—Applicability—Essentials of offence—Criminal intent—Absence of—Effect—Rashness or negligence—Driving motor bus with defective tyre at 15 to 20 miles an hour—Accident caused by bursting of tyre causing injuries to occupants—Offence—Conviction—Propriety.

Petitioner was driving a bus from B to A, and at about the 6th mile from B, the front tyre of the bus burst, as a result of which the bus swerved to the left and dashed against a tree causing injuries to the occupants. It was found that the tyre was too much worn out and that the bus was being driven at a speed of about 15 to 20 miles per hour. On these facts, he was convicted of an offence under S. 338, I. P. Code.

Held, that the petitioner's act of driving could not be characterised as rash or negligent within the meaning of S. 338, I. P. Code, as there was on his part no criminal intent which alone would justify a conviction under the section. Negligence within the meaning of the Motor Vehicles Act or the rules thereunder would not necessarily amount to negligence under the Penal Code and in the absence of evidence to prove negligence or rashness—a prosecution under S. 338, I. P. Code, was miss conceived and the conviction must be set aside a, improper. 16 Cut. L. T. 181.

—Ss. 338, 279—Scope and applicability.

Where the rash or negligent driving actually results in grievous hurt being caused to any person, an offence under S. 338 is committed and the accused can be convicted under S. 338 but not under both Ss. 279 and 338. A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 388=20 P.L.T. 403=40 Cr. L.J. 759 (2)=5 B.R. 954=183 Ind. Cas. 224.

—S. 338—Failure by motorist to sound horn, whether necessarily negligence—Sounding of horn, whether negative rashness or negligence—Presumption.

Failure to sound the horn by a person driving a motor vehicle is not necessarily negligence and to sound a horn does not necessarily negative rashness or negligence in driving. Each case must be decided on its own facts. From the mere fact that a motorist strikes a person walking on the road, the presumption cannot be drawn that the accident was caused by the motorist's carelessness. Such a presumption is ill-founded as a great many such occurrences are due to accident. If the car was being driven at an excessive speed, that in itself would be evidence to show that there was negligence. But where the car was being driven at about 20-25 miles an hour such a speed cannot be said to argue ipso facto that there was negligence. A. I. R. 1939 Rang. 209=40 Cr.L.J. 701=182 Ind. Cas. 509.

—Ss. 338, 279—Sounding of horn proved—Conviction—Sustainability.

Accused taking his car in Court premises, reversing it and moving forward and in so doing, the left rear wheel running over the shoulder of a person sleeping under a tree—Evidence showing that accused had sounded the horn.

Held, accused could not be held to be negligent and could not be convicted under S. 338 read with S. 279, I.P.C. (1938) N.L.J. 226.

—S. 338—Driving motor car under influence of drink—Accident—Rashness and negligence of driver—Sentence.

Where it appeared that an accident was due mainly, if not entirely, to the rashness of the appellant in driving the motor car while drunk and getting on to the wrong side of the road while there were vehicles in front or otherwise to his negligence in not seeing the tonga in front of him, and not properly controlling the motor car so as to avoid a collision, and the accused was found guilty of both rashness and negligence and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and fine of Rs. 150:

Held, that the sentence was excessive and it might be reduced to a fine of Rs. 100 only, or in default, three months' rigorous imprisonment. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 568=10 O.W.N. 1211=35 Cr.L.J. 296=147 Ind. Cas. 122.

—Ss. 338, 304-A, 279—No definite evidence of rashness or negligence—Conviction—Maintainability.

Rash and negligent driving of motor car resulting in collision with lorry and causing injuries to two persons one of whom died later—No definite evidence of rash and negligent driving—Accused cannot be convicted under Ss. 338, 279 and 304-A. A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 391=10 O.W.N. 823=34 Cr. L.J. 1154=146 Ind. Cas. 28.

—S. 338—Motor accident—Conviction—Maintainability.

Where it was found that the accused while driving a motor car at moderate speed and on the correct side of the road ran over a boy who came in contact with the car while crossing the road.

Held: that the accused could not be convicted under S. 338. 115 Ind. Cas. 96=32 C. W. N. 612=30 Cr. L.J. 402=12 A.I.Cr.R. 259.

—S. 338—Sentence—Contributory negligence—Contributory negligence must be considered in determining sentence.

While contributory negligence would not be a defence entitling the petitioner to an acquittal it might be a factor for consideration in determining the sentence.

In the case of a person driving a motor car the car should always be kept in a state of control sufficient to enable the driver to avoid running into any passenger who may fail to step off the road, however annoying the dilatoriness of the foot passenger may be to the driver. 100 Ind. Cas. 831=28 P.L.R. 99=28 Cr. L.J. 351=7 A.I.Cr.R. 288=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 165.

—S. 338—Grievous hurt—Act endangering life—Discharging gun.

Accused owning a paddy field in a jungle tract, discharged a gun in the direction of a footpath, close to his field, through which complainant was passing. The shot hit the complainant in the leg, which had to be cut off. The accused knew that the foot-path was generally used by the public.

Held, the accused was guilty of culpable negligence under S. 338, I.P.C. 13 Cr. L.J. 703=16 Ind. Cas. 511 (Mad.)

—S. 338—Grievous hurt—Giving blows in a riot.

In a riot the accused gave blows one of which fell on the temple of the deceased of which he died four days after. The accused did not commit culpable homicide but only an offence of grievous hurt. (1911) 2 M.W.N. 188=12 Cr.L.J. 528=12 Ind. Cas. 296.

—S. 338—Unsuccessful operation for cataract resulting in loss of sight.

One Suraj Bali operated upon a patient for cataract with the result that the patient lost the sight of her left eye. It was found, however, that the operation was performed with the consent of the patient, and in good faith and for her benefit, and that it was performed in accordance with the recognized Indian method of treatment for cataract.

Held, that Suraj Bali had not, on the facts found, committed any offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. 1908 A.W.N. 91=5 A.L.J. 155.

2. Interpretation.
3. Obstruction of vehicle.
4. Right in dispute—Forum.

1. Applicability and Scope.

—S. 339—Applicability — Preventing person from going in direction he wants.

The offence of wrongful restraint under S. 339, I.P. Code, is committed if a person is prevented from proceeding in the direction in which he wants to proceed. 49 Cr. L.J. 4198=A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 299.

—S. 339—Applicability and scope—Good faith—Obstruction in good faith under colour of legal right—No offence.

The defence that the accused is entitled to the exception to S. 339, Indian Penal Code must be clearly raised. Where the obstruction put up by the accused was put up in good faith because the accused believed himself to have a lawful right to obstruct the complainant from going along the passage.

Held, that the accused was not guilty of wrongful restraint. 41 C.L.J. 633=30 C.W.N. 192=A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1214.

—S. 339—Applicability and scope—Landlord preventing a tenant holding over from going to premises—Specific Relief Act, S. 9.

A landlord prevented a tenant of his who was holding over, from entering the room which the tenant had rented. He was convicted of the offence of wrongful restraint under S. 339, I.P.C.

Held, that the conviction was right. A tenant holding over had a position recognised by the law, and he had a right to retain possession of the premises he occupied even against the landlord himself until dispossessed in due course of law. 43 Bom. 581=21 Bom. L.R. 261=20 Cr.L.J. 417=51 Ind. Cas. 193.

—S. 339—Applicability and scope—Making Pariahs to stand in the street.

It is no offence under S. 339 to cause pariahs to stand in the public street, though the complainant did not conduct the procession owing to their presence there. (1910) M.W.N. 72=7 M.L.T. 366=11 Cr.L.J. 263=5 Ind. Cas. 851.

—S. 339—Applicability and scope—Obstruction.

Projecting shed over a wall which does not prevent the owner of the wall from moving under it but which is merely an obstruction to white washing or repairing wall, does not amount to an offence under S. 339. 106 Ind. Cas. 111=29 Bom. L.R. 494=28 Cr.L.J. 1023=A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 369.

—S. 339 — Applicability and scope—Obstruction to lawful act.

S. 339 covers the case of a person reasonably wanting to go vertically upwards if he has a right to do this, and being prevented from so doing by a voluntary obstruction. 29 Bom. L.R. 494=28 Cr.L.J. 1023=A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 369=106 Ind. Cas. 111.

—Ss. 339 and 341—Applicability and scope—Mamul path—Public path—Ploughing up—Obstruction.

To justify a conviction under S. 341, I.P.C. it must be found that the person complaining has a right to proceed along the path and that he was obstructed from doing so. The mere ploughing up of a mamul path does not amount to an obstruction within the meaning of S. 339, I.P.C. 2 L.W. 1035=16 Cr.L.J. 701=30 Ind. Cas. 749.

—S. 339—Applicability and scope—Presence of restrained person.

There is nothing in S. 339, which requires the physical presence of the person obstructed at the moment of obstruction. 34 Mad. 547, Foll. 106 Ind. Cas. 111=29 Bom. L.R. 494=28 Cr.L.J. 1023=A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 369.

—S. 339—Applicability and scope—Effect of obstruction—Remote and indirect result.

S. 339 contemplates obstructions attributable directly to the person charged. The legislature did not intend to include in the section an act, which in its remote and indirect consequences might obstruct the free movement of a person. 5 M.L.T. 207=11 Cr.L.J. 192=4 Ind. Cas. 1117.

—Ss. 339 and 340—Applicability and scope—Wrongful restraint—Wrongful confinement.

Putting lock in the outer door of a house during the temporary absence of the inmates, and thereby obstructing them from entering the same will amount to wrongful restraint. Physical presence of the obstructor is not necessary for the offences of wrongful restraint or wrongful confinement. To constitute the offence, the obstructor must intend or know or have reason to believe it to be likely that the means adopted would cause obstruction to the complainant. 34 Mad. 547=(1910) M.W.N. 727=9 M.L.T. 103=11 Cr. L.J. 708=8 Ind. Cas. 757.

—S. 339—Applicability.

S. 339, relates to voluntary obstruction by a person, and not obviously to obstruction which are not voluntarily continued by the persons accused of the obstruction throughout the time the obstruction lasts. (1906) 9 Bom. L.R. 30=5 Cr.L.J. 97.

2. Interpretation.

—Ss. 339 and 341—Interpretation—Wrongful restraint—Proceeding in any direction—Meaning of.

The accused, who was the driver of a bus purposely made his bus stand across a road in such a manner as to prevent another bus which was coming behind to proceed further.

Held, proceeding in any direction, within the meaning of S. 339, I.P.C. must mean only proceeding in that direction and not in any other direction, much less in the reverse direction. It cannot be said that because the driver and passengers in the second bus could have got down from that bus and walked away in different direction, or gone in that bus to a different destination, in the reverse direction, there was therefore no wrongful restraint. Hence the conviction of the accused under S. 341 was justified. I.L.R. (1950) Mad. 858=1949 M.W.N. 838=A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 235=4 A.I. Cr. D. 131=51 Cr. L.J. 568=62 L.W. 864=(1949) 2 M.L.J. 703.

—Ss. 339 and 340—Interpretation.

“Proceed” includes proceeding by outside agency. The word is not limited to proceeding on one’s own legs or by physical means within one’s power. 62 C. 629=39 C.W.N. 396.

3. Obstruction of vehicle.

—Ss. 339 and 341—Voluntary obstruction of a vehicle in which a person is travelling—If amounts to wrongful restraint of that person—Whether person in vehicle being allowed to proceed on foot makes any difference.

P. W. 1 was driving a cart along a path passing in the front of the petitioner’s house. The petitioners stopped the cart and unyoked the bulls. P. W. 1 fell down when the bulls were unyoked and the bulls ran away and he thereafter proceeded on his way on foot.

Held, that the voluntary obstruction of a vehicle in which a person was travelling would amount to wrongful restraint of that person within the meaning of S. 339, I.P. Code. The fact that a person might get down and then be left at liberty to proceed on his way unmolested, would be immaterial. If he was prevented from proceeding at the moment of restraint the terms of the section are satisfied. I.I.R. (1947) Mad. 555=48 Cr. L.J. 459=229 Ind. Cas. 556=A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 124=1946 M.W.N. 666=59 L.W. 543=(1946) 2 M.L.J. 281.

—S. 339—Voluntary obstruction of vehicle—Whether wrongful restraint.

The voluntary obstruction of a vehicle cannot be held to amount to wrongful restraint within the meaning of S. 339, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 252=39 C.W.N. 143=60 C.L.J. 472=36 Cr. L.J. 740 (1)=155 Ind. Cas. 444 (1).

—S. 339—Voluntary obstruction of vehicle.

Obstructing a marriage procession in a motor car amounts to wrongful restraint. 1934 M.W.N. 620.

—S. 339—Obstruction of vehicle—Restraining horse—Horse on which a person is riding, stopped from proceeding—Restraint is wrongful.

If a person is prevented from proceeding at the moment of restraint, the terms of S. 339 are satisfied.

If a horse on which a man is riding is prevented from proceeding, it is causing wrongful restraint to the rider and it is no defence to say that he might have got off the horse and walked in the same direction. 100 Ind. Cas. 544=28 Cr. L.J. 320=A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 506.

—S. 339—Obstruction of vehicle.

Although there is authority for the view that all that S. 339 protects is the obstruction of any person, and that it does not cover a case where he himself is free to proceed in a direction in which he has a right to proceed, but without any impediments (such as a cart) that he may have with him, this view of personal obstruction must obviously have some limits.

Where there was an obstruction to the complainant's proceeding with his bullocks in a direction in which he had a right to proceed with his bullocks.

Held, an offence under S. 39 was committed. 91 Ind. Cas. 811=27 Bom. L.R. 1419=27 Cr. L.J. 139=A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 118.

—S. 339—Obstruction of vehicle—Personal offence—Obstruction to bullock cart—Wrongful restraint.

Wrongful restraint is an offence against a person, so when a man is himself unobstructed but hindered from driving a bullock cart through a passage is not wrongfully restrained. Restraint must be complete and must not allow a man to proceed in any direction where he has right to do so. 15 Bom. L.R. 103=14 Cr. L.J. 177=19 Ind. Cas. 177.

4. Right in dispute—Forum.

—Ss. 339, Excep. and 341—Prosecution for obstruction of private right of way—Accused denying such right—Failure by him to plead bona fide belief under Exception to S. 339—Effect of—Proper forum for such dispute.

Where in a prosecution for an offence under S. 341, I. P. Code, for preventing the complainant from using a private pathway, the accused whose defence is that the complainant had no right of way fails to plead at the earliest possible opportunity that he bona fide believed that he had a right to close the pathway and as such is protected by the exception to S. 339, I.P. Code, this failure on the part of the accused does not deprive him of the right to show that the evidence in the case does not exclude the existence of a belief in his mind which takes away his act from the definition of the offence. Moreover, the question in controversy cannot be decided properly in the summary trial on the criminal side and can be more appropriately decided by the Civil Court. A.I.R. 1950 Assam 82=51 Cr. L.J. 809.

—S. 339—Right in dispute—Forum—Offence under—Landlord locking doors of privy and bathroom of tenant—Dispute if they are included in tenancy—Proper forum.

A landlord who prevents a tenant from entering a privy and bathroom of which he is a tenant by locking their doors, technically commits an offence under S. 339, I.P. Code. Where there is a dispute as to whether the privy and bathroom are included in the tenancy, it can be tried far more suitably in the Civil Court than in a Criminal Court. A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 157=51 Cr. L.J. 668.

—Ss. 339 and 341—Right in dispute—Forum—Obstruction to right of way not well—established.

Where the accused obstructed the complainant from using his right of way over the field of the accused where the right of way was not sufficiently established, the accused cannot be found guilty under S. 341, unless mala fides of the accused and the right of way were sufficiently established. The suit should properly go to the Civil Court. 22 P.R. 1910 Cr.=121 P.L.R. 1910=11 Cr. L.J. 495=7 Ind. Cas. 493.

—S. 340—Wrongful confinement.

Informal detention of suspect by Police during the whole period of investigation without arrest is illegal and amounts to wrongful confinement in however technical sense it may be. A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 186=I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 232=41 Cr. L.J. 757=1940 N.L.J. 667=189 Ind. Cas. 591.

—S. 340—Unlawful custody—Police Officer.

The applicant was convicted on an offence under S. 224, Session Judge in appeal found that applicant was not in lawful custody, and acquitted him of the offence under S. 224.

Held, the constable was guilty of the offence of wrongful confinement. 85 Ind. Cas. 44=26 Cr. L.J. 428=A.I.R. 1923 All. 34.

—S. 340—Wrongful confinement—What amounts to—obstruct—Meaning—Physical obstruction—Necessity for.

Per Fulton, J.—To support a charge of wrongful confinement, proof of actual physical obstruction is not essential. It must be proved in each case that there was at least such an impression produced in the mind of the prisoner as to lead him reasonably to believe that he was not free to depart and that he would be forthwith restrained if he attempted to do so. The mere threat of some future harm in case of departure will not suffice if the prisoner knows that it is open to him to go away and refrain from doing so lest he may suffer such harm. But if the circumstances are such as to justify and to create the belief that he cannot depart without being seized immediately then it would be proper to hold that he was obstructed and confined. ## 1. Applicability and scope.

—Ss. 341 and 441—Applicability—Wrongful restraint and criminal trespass—Ingredient—Intent to annoy, insult or intimidate or to commit offence—Tenant—Locking up premises and going away—Non-payment of rent for long time—Tenant not heard of—Servant of landlord breaking open door in presence of master and police for resuming possession—Offence.

There can be a wrongful restraint only when a person voluntarily obstructs another. Nor can there be any criminal trespass unless the person entering or remaining on the premises intends to commit an offence or to intimidate or insult or annoy any person in possession of such property.

The petitioner was the darwan of the owner of certain premises let to another for a shop. The tenant left without intimation and there was no sign of him for several months together. He never paid rent to the landlord, but left locking the door of the premises. The landlord believing that the tenant had abandoned and gone away and seeking the assistance of and accompanied by police went to the premises with the petitioner. The latter under the orders of his master, the landlord, broke open the door of the premises. The tenant having preferred a complaint the petitioner was prosecuted and convicted under Ss. 453 and 341, I. P. Code. The petitioner pleaded that he was not guilty of any offence and that he carried out his master's orders.

Held: (1) that though it was no defence to a criminal charge to plead that the accused (petitioner) was acting under the orders of his master, yet the position of the accused person was important when the offence involved a certain specific intent;

(2) that there never was any intention to annoy, intimidate or insult the tenant, the basis of the action being the belief that the tenant had abandoned the premises, and the breaking open of the shop having taken place quite openly in the presence of the police, and the intention clearly was to open the premises so that the landlord could resume possession;

(3) that there was no wrongful restraint of the tenant when it was thought that he had left the premises and had abandoned them altogether;

(4) and that the petitioner was not, therefore, guilty of any offence. 52 C.W.N. 782=49 Cr. L.J. 753=A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 85.

—S. 341—Applicability and scope—Complainant on tumtum—Accused obstructing it and preventing complainant from proceeding on his way—Offence.

Where the complainant was proceeding on a road on tumtum and by obstructing the tumtum, the accused prevented the complainant from proceeding on his way and assaulted him;

Held: that the facts constituted the offence of wrongful restraint under S. 341. I.P.C. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 384=7 B.R. 696=42 Cr. L.J. 526=194 Ind. Cas. 30.

—S. 341—Applicability and scope—Persons assisting Police must not interfere with right of other people. Held: that the persons assisting Police in finding out a kidnapped girl were not guilty.

Persons assisting the Police must be careful not to interfere with the rights of other people. Where, however, Police are searching for a girl who is alleged to have been kidnapped and the persons assisting the Police come across a covered bullock cart and stop the cart and accuse the owner of it of having kidnapped the girl and upon his denial, insist upon sending for the Police and when the Police arrive, the girl is not found in the cart on a search being made, it cannot be said that such persons intended any harm to the owner of the cart; their action is a bona fide attempt to prevent what they genuinely believed to be the taking away of the girl whom the Police were looking for. They are not, therefore, guilty of an offence under S. 341, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 256=20 P.L.T. 467=5 B.R. 863=40 Cr.L.J. 720=182 Ind. Cas. 979.

2. Essential for Conviction.

—S. 341—Essential for conviction—Applicability—Ingredients of offence—Blocking way up a staircase—Offence—What has to be proved.

Merely blocking the way up a staircase does not necessarily amount to an offence under S. 341, I. P.

Code. Before the person blocking the way can be convicted of the offence, it must be proved that the person blocking had no right over the staircase, as a tenant or owner or occupier and that the persons seeking to use the staircase had an easement over it to get on to the upper storey or roof, etc. In the absence of proof of these, the elements necessary to sustain a conviction under S. 341 cannot be said to be present. 83 C.L.J. 99=53 C.W.N. 236=A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 112=50 Cr. L.J. 211.

—S. 341—Essential for conviction.

Before convicting a person of wrongfully restraining the other from making use of a particular place or thing it is necessary for the Court to determine if that other person has right to use it. 34 C.W.N. 582=127 Ind. Cas. 554=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 760.

—S. 341—Essential for conviction.

A conviction under S. 341 is bad where there was no physical restraint of complainant's person. 19 Cr. L.J. 445=44 Ind. Cas. 973 (Mad.).

—S. 341—Essential for conviction.

Restraint, to amount to an offence under S. 341, must be directed to a person and not anything else. 1 Weir 341; 19 Ind. Cas. 177, Foll. 16 Cr. L.J. 176=2 L.W. 185=(1915) M.W.N. 203=27 Ind. Cas. 560.

3. Order to remove obstruction.

—S. 341—Dispossession—Order of removal of obstruction—Cr.P.C., S. 522.

Held, by Maclean, C.J. and Princep and Ghose, JJ:—

That a Magistrate while convicting an accused under Ss. 341, 114, I.P.C. for wrongfully restraining a person by the erection of a hut or by any similar act of obstruction cannot pass an order under the section that the hut or other means of obstruction should be removed, 5 C.W.N. 432 dissented from.

Held, by Ameer Ali and Brett, JJ.—That a Magistrate has an inherent power to pass the order of removal of obstruction on the conviction under S. 341, I.P.C., irrespective of the power under S. 522, Cr.P.C. 5 C.W.N. 432, foll.

Held, Per Curiam:—That as in the present case the offence was, on the finding of the lower appellate Court, attended by criminal force and the complainant was dispossessed by reason of the obstruction complained of the order of the Magistrate may be sustained as one under S. 522, Cr.P.C. (1904) 8 C.W.N. 538=31 C. 691 (F.B.).

On reference from 5 C.W.N. 432 supra.

—S. 341—Wrongful restraint—Obstruction to right of way—Order to remove obstruction.

A criminal court which convicts a person of wrongful restraint by blocking up a way over which the complainant had a right to go has jurisdiction to order the removal of the obstruction as the necessary corollary of the conviction. Such order, however, is not passed under S. 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which deals with restoration of property. (1901) 5 C.W.N. 432. But see 8 C.W.N. 538=31 C. 691.

4. Procedure.

Where a case was originally challaned under S. 341, I.P.C., but the Magistrate subsequently framed a charge

Held, that the procedure was not in any way irregular. A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 73=7 O.W.N. 1048=32 Cr.L.J. 330=129 Ind. Cas. 166.

Even if nothing more than an offence under S. 341 has been alleged, it is not advisable to try public servants, whose career may depend upon the result, summarily. 1932 M.W.N. 478.

—S. 341—Punishment and sentence.

Accused convicted under S. 448—Accused putting forward every fact required for conviction under S. 341.

Held, that if the charge were altered from one under S. 448 to one under S. 341, the accused could not be prejudiced. A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 250=38 Cr.L.J. 989=170 Ind. Cas. 909.

6. Miscellaneous.

—S. 341—Miscellaneous—Apprehension of violence—Any private individual can restrain a person when there is reasonable apprehension of violence from him.

It is very doubtful whether Regulations giving power to Village Magistrates to effect an arrest in the case of drunken and disorderly behaviour, were not really repealed by Act 17 of 1862. But the village Magistrate has the right which every citizen has to apprehend a person as to whom there is reasonable ground for supposing that he is about to commit a breach of the peace. 61 Ind. It would be no defence against the charge under Ss. 342 and 114, Penal Code, for the accused to say that he was not present at the actual arrest, if in fact he was instrumental in getting the arrest, made and, if after it was made, he instigated the bailiff to wrongfully confine a debtor, inspite of a protection order in his favour. 76 Ind.Cas. 234=18 M.L.W. 167=25 Cr.L.J. 138=A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 31.

Elements of offence under S. 342 indicated. 7 O.W.N. 957=A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 505.

—S. 342—Law as to arrest—Right of citizen to arrest another—English Common Law cannot be invoked.

On the night of 8th August, 1921 two Head Constables arrested one N as he was drunk and creating a disturbance in the Brahman Street of the village, and they took him to the station and confined him there, although one of them knew his name and address ;

Held: in view of Ss. 96, 97, 102 and 105 they were not guilty under S. 342. The Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code specifically deal with the question of arrests and it is not therefore permissible to invoke the Common Law of England in the matter.

The decision in In re Ramasami Aiyar, 44 M. 913 is correct but the grounds of the decision are not correct. 73 Ind. Cas. 343=46 Mad. 605=24 Cr.L.J. 599=17 M.L.W. 592=32 M.L.T. 352=1923 M.W.N. 425=A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 523=44 M.L.J. 655 (F.B.).

—S. 342—Legality of arrest.

A warrant for H's arrest was issued and the bailiff endorsed it for service to the process-server. H was arrested but was released by the Judge under S. 135, Civil P. C. The process-server had returned the warrant the same day to the bailiff, without any endorsement on it, and the bailiff, believing that it was executed merely returned the warrant to the process-server for want of his report, as he had made no report of execution. On this the process-server, instead of endorsing execution on the warrant, re-arrested H next day:

Held, that the second arrest was illegal. When the judgment-debtor was arrested and brought before the Court, the process had been executed, that is to say, the arrest had been carried out, though it may not have been carried out in accordance with law. There was also another reason why the second arrest was unlawful. The bailiff had power to delegate the execution of the warrant to the process-server and did so in the first instance. But on the second occasion, the bailiff did not delegate his authority to arrest to the process-server, but merely returned the warrant to him for endorsement. In the circumstances the endorsement for which the process was returned must have been the endorsement of execution, and could not be endorsement of non-execution. In any case, it was only returned for endorsement and not for further execution. In these circumstances, the re-arrest was unlawful. A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 112=I.L.R. Held, the peon was justified in keeping the judgment-debtor until the Munsif was at leisure to attend to his case and that as the peon acted in the discharge of his duty in arresting the judgment-debtor, it could not be said that he acted criminally and he was not guilty of an offence under S. 342, I.P.C. A decree-holder is guilty under S. 342, if he causes arrest of the judgment-debtor while returning from Court under circumstances mentioned in S. 135, C. P. Code and the Court Officer who arrests or makes over the warrant of arrest to his subordinate for compliance is also guilty along with the decree-holder. The fact that the judgment-debtor when returning from Court stopped in the way for some private work does not deprive him of the privilege afforded by law. 121 P.L.R. 1916 Cr.=17 Cr.L.J. 525=36 Ind. Cas. 493.

—S. 342—Legality of arrest—Wrongful confinement—Confinement by Amin of judgment-debtors—Amin's rights and liabilities.

In the present state of the law in India, an arresting officer (Amin) who confines the judgment-debtor in the decree-holder's house while waiting to produce him before the Court is not guilty of wrongful confinement. A warrant was issued on the 15th April, 1905 addressed to the Nazir, directing him to arrest the judgment-debtor and to bring him before the Court with all convenient speed. The warrant was made returnable on or before the 14th June, 1905. The Nazir entrusted the warrant to the Amin and the Amin arrested the judgment-debtor at 9 A.M., on the 22nd of April, during the Easter Holidays. The Court opened after the holidays, only on the 25th April. The Amin was found to have taken the judgment-debtor to the decree-holder's house and confined him there from 9 A.M., on the 22nd and again from 10 P.M. to 7-30 P.M., on the following morning, when he was taken before the Nazir.

Held, that the Amin was not guilty of any offence under S. 342.

Held, also that the legal duty of the Amin was to produce the judgment-debtor at the next sitting of the Court and in the meantime he was responsible for his safe custody and liable among other things to a suit by the decree-holder if he allowed the judgment-debtor to escape, and consequently, in the absence of any rule of law prescribing his powers, he can confine the judgment-debtor in any manner he chooses and is not bound to keep him in what is called "free custody." —S. 342—Submission by complainant.

Submission by the complainant to arrest does not detract from the accused's acts or diminish its legal effect. ## 1. Applicability.

—S. 352—Applicability.

Where the victim is assaulted by the accused and his thumb impression forcibly taken upon a blank piece of paper, the offence is no more than the use of criminal force or an assault punishable under S. 352. A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 129=21 P.L.T. 970=7 B.R. 514=42 Cr. L.J. 361=193 Ind. Cas. 241.

—Ss. 352, 111, 302—Applicability—Master ordering servant to chastise or beat deceased—Servant holding deceased but master murdering deceased—Offence of servant.

A person who unknowingly assists in the commission of a crime is not himself guilty of that crime or of aiding or abetting it. Where, therefore, the master ordered the servant to chastise or beat the deceased and in obedience to that order, the servant caught him and held him for a beating by the master who, instead of beating him, suddenly produced a spearhead from his pocket and plunged it into the deceased:

Held, that it could not be said that the servant knowingly held the deceased for any purpose other than chastisement and he was not guilty of the abetment of the murderous attack by the master but only guilty of abetment of ordinary assault punishable under S. 352, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1935 All. 346 (2)=57 All. 717=1935 A.W.R. 64=1935 A.L.J. 54=36 Cr. L.J. 438=153 Ind. Cas. 999 (2).

—S. 352—Applicability—Warrant of Civil Court—Judgment-debtor absent—Pardanashin wife of judgment-debtor in the house—Judgment-creditor pushing open door regardless of warning—Physical and mental pain caused to lady—Offence—Civil P.C., S. 62—Applicability of.

Where a warrant of the Court is being executed at the instance of the Judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtor is not in his house but his pardanashin wife alone is there and the creditor is warned that she will resent intrusion, the creditor is not entitled to push open the door, and is liable under S. 352, I.P.C., if the consequences of the push given by him cause great pain and distress to the lady, both mental and physical. Section 62, Civil P. C. applies to the case and the bailiff is the person who is to take such action as is necessary under S. 62 and not the judgment-creditor. A.I.R. 1934 Sind 52=34 Cr. L.J. 963=145 Ind. Cas. 259.

—S. 352—Applicability.

Persons may riot without actually committing an offence under S. 352 and the theory that S. 147 embraces S. 352 is fallacious. 106 Ind. Cas. 338=39 M.L.T. 109=29 Cr. L.J. 2=A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 21.

—Ss. 352, 307—Applicability—Pulling trigger of unloaded gun—Not an attempt to murder but is only an assault.

Complainant was seated on the verandah of his house when the accused rushed towards him from the road, levelled a gun to him and pulled the trigger. There was no report or discharge. Complainant took fright ran out of the house but stumbled and fell a short distance away. The accused followed up and, aiming at the prostrate complainant, pulled the trigger of this gun a second time. Again there was no result. Then the complainant got up and escaped. The appellant also fled and was not arrested till some days later. The gun had not been found and there was no evidence to show that it was loaded at the time when the complainant was attacked.

Held, that the conviction under S. 307, cannot be sustained, but that under S. 352, the accused was guilty of an assault. 74 Ind. Cas. 1042=1 Rang. 209=2 Bur. L.J. 76=24 Cr. L.J. 850=A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 251.

2. Assault—What amounts to.

—S. 352—Assault—What amounts to.

If the accused did in the circumstances alleged, put out his hand towards the woman in a menacing manner so as to cause her to apprehend that he was about to use criminal force, his act would constitute an assault. It would not be necessary to establish that he actually had any particular implement in his hand. A.I.R. 1944 Sind 19=45 Cr. L.J. 247=211 Ind. Cas. 88.

—S. 352—Assault—What amounts to—Trespass in pleader's room—Turning out without violence, if amounts to assault.

A pleader who turned out a person who had trespassed into the pleader's room in a District Court without, however, using violence did not thereby exceed his rights and no offence under S. 352 was committed. 15 Bom. L.R. 1039=15 Cr. L.J. 14=22 Ind. Cas. 158.

3. Charge and Conviction.

—Ss. 352, 323—Charge and conviction.

The conviction under S. 75, Madras City Police Act is no bar to the trial for an offence under Ss. 323 and 352, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 224=50 L.W. 800 (1)=(1939) 2 M.L.J. 814=1940 M.W.N. 172 (1)=41 Cr. L.J. 401 (1)=187 Ind. Cas. 82.

—S. 352—Charge and conviction.

The accused was summoned to answer a charge under S. 426 only and was convicted and sentenced under that section by trial Magistrate. There was nothing to show that he was ever informed by the Magistrate that he had to defend himself against in an offence of assault also:

Held, the alteration of the conviction to one under S. 352 in appeal could not be maintained. A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 536=17 P.L.T. 572=3 B.R. 62=37 Cr. L.J. 1156 (1)=165 Ind. Cas. 600.

—S. 352—Charge and conviction.

Where an accused is sent up on a police report for trial for an offence punishable under S. 122 of the Bombay City Police Act the trying Magistrate can alter the charge and convict him of an offence under S. 352, I.P.C. 36 Cal. 869, Foll. 93 Ind. Cas. 896=28 Bom. L.R. 291=27 Cr. L.J. 496=A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 255.

—S. 352—Charge and conviction—Charge under S. 147—Conviction under S. 352 can be given but not for abetment of assaults.

Criminal force being an element of the offence under S. 146, it must be taken to be capable of carrying conviction under S. 352. A different mens rea is not necessary in S. 146, Penal Code, as contrasted with S. 352. In a charge under S. 147, the conviction can be had under S. 352.

The conviction of the abetment of assault on a charge under S. 147, I.P.C. cannot stand. 33 Mad. 264, followed. 65 Ind. Cas. 862=15 Mad. L.W. 583=1922 M.W.N. 182=23 Cr. L.J. 206=A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 110.

—S. 352—Charge and conviction—No hurt but criminal force used to public servant charge was altered from Ss. 323 to 352.

Where there is nothing to show that any bodily pain, disease or infirmity was caused to anybody or that any act was done with the intention of doing so, but where the accused clearly used criminal force, the Court on reference altered the conviction under S. 323 to one under S. 352 especially in view of the fact that the accused intended to prevent the warrant being executed but which happened to be technically not legal. 71 Ind. Cas. 503=45 All. 142=20 A.L.J. 921=24 Cr.L.J. 151=A.I.R. 1923 All. 87.

4. Sentence.

—S. 352— Sentence.

An assault on a citizen for appealing to the police needs a deterrent sentence. 93 Ind. Cas. 896=28 Bom. L.R. 291=27 Cr. L.J. 496=A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 255.

5. Unauthorised act of public servant.

—Ss. 352 and 353—Applicability—Unauthorised act of public servant—Police party effecting unlawful seizure of goods under defective process of attachment—Absence of good faith—Resistance to seizure with force—Offence.

Where it is found that a police party attempting to effect an attachment had no right to make the attachment, that the police officers were not acting in good faith, and that the process of attachment was defective in many respects, the protection afforded to them by S. 99, I.P. Code, disappears, and the persons from whose possession the property is being seized are entitled to resist the seizure of their goods. They have every right to resist unlawful seizure of their goods and to use minimum force to prevent such unlawful seizure. They cannot therefore be convicted of an offence under S. 352, I.P. Code or S. 353, I.P. Code. 228 Ind. Cas. 73=13 B.R. 133=48 Cr. L.J. 60=A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 232.

—Ss. 352 and 353—Unauthorised act of public servant—Public servant present at search but not in execution of his duty—Assault on him—Offence does not fall under S. 353 but under S. 352.

If the acts of the public servant are not strictly justifiable, if he is not discharging a duty imposed on him by law, if he is not doing what it is his duty to do as a public servant, an assault on him does not fall under S. 353 but under S. 352, Penal Code.

A Tahsildar made a report to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of an offence under the Defence of India Rules against A for giving a false declaration of the quantity of wheat in his possession and proposing the search of his house. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed the Tahsildar to report the matter to the Station-house Officer under Defence of India Rule 81 (4). This was done. When the investigating officer was making a search of the house of A, the Tahsildar was present at the search, but he had no authority to issue a search-warrant either under S. 105, Criminal P. C., or under Defence of India Rule 124 (1). At the time of the search the accused assaulted the Tahsildar :

Held, that the Tahsildar must be deemed to have been present at the search as a public servant but not a public servant in execution of his duty as such public servant. The offence committed was, therefore, under S. 352 and not under S. 353. A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 261=I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 395=1946 N.L.J. 307=224 Ind. Cas. 458.

—Ss. 352, 353 and 186—Unauthorised act of public servant.

Accused while carrying juar crop in contravention of C.P. and Berar Food Grains Export Restriction Order, 1943, obstructed by public servant—Accused beating public servant with fists—Public servant not empowered to use force to prevent contravention of order.

Held, public servant was not acting in discharge of his duty as public servant—Offence committed is one under S. 352 and not under Ss. 186 or 353. 1946 N. L. J. 302=24 Ind. Cas. 454=I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 714=A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 60.

—Ss. 352, 97 and 99—Unauthorised act of public servant—Unauthorised search attempted by Sub-Inspector—Accused armed with lathi raising same to strike Sub-Inspector.

The Sub-Inspector who was not in charge of Police Station unauthorisedly proposed to search the house of X and his brothers. The latter refused to allow the search to be made. They were armed with lathis and assumed a threatening attitude. S actually raised his lathi to strike the Sub-Inspector :

Held, that X was guilty under S. 352. He had no right of private defence, not because the Sub-Inspector could invoke S. 99, but because X was not entitled to invoke S. 97. The Sub-Inspector could not be said to be acting in good faith under colour of his office. A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 222=11 B.R. 53=15 Cr.L.J. 806=215 Ind. Cas. 108.

Accused assaulting Police Officers arresting accused in good faith under colour of their office are guilty under S. 352. A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 18 = 1939 M. W. N. 1004 = 50 L.W. 763 = (1939) 2 M.L.J. 776 = 41 Cr.L.J. 250 = 186 Ind. Cas. 103.

—Ss. 352, 353—Unauthorised act of public servant—assault on amin executing warrant for possession—Offence.

Where an amin who in execution of a warrant, breaks open the lock and delivers the possession to the purchaser is assaulted and pushed out by the accused, the offence committed is one under S. 352 and not under S. 353. 1937 M.W.N. 176.

—Ss. 352, 353—Unauthorised act of public servant—Demand of tax by peons without formal writ of lawful authority—Assault—Offence.

A member of a Sanitation Committee submitted to the Tahsildar a list of persons who had made default in payment of sanitation tax. The Tahsildar endorsed this with an order that the jamadar should appoint a suitable chaprasi to realise the taxes due. Two peons accompanied by a chowkidar went round with the endorsed list and when they approached the accused the latter tore up the list and buffeted the peons out of the premises knocking off the turban of one of them. The accused were charged and convicted under S. 353, I.P.C.

Held, (i) that inasmuch as there was no formal writ at all and there was nothing to show that the tax had been demanded by the order of the Board or certified by any authority to be due, the accused were entitled to result the demand and were not guilty of an offence under S. 353, I.P.C.

(ii) that the accused were, however, not justified in assaulting the peons and were, therefore, guilty under S. 352, I.P.C. A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 524 = 32 Cr. L.J. 853 = 132 Ind. Cas. 214.

—Ss. 352, 353—Unauthorised act of public servant.

Held, that the Police Officer was not acting in good faith within the meaning of S. 52, I.P.C. and the accused was not guilty of an offence under S. 352. A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 66 = 10 Pat. 821 = 13 P.L.T. 62 = 33 Cr.L.J. 233 = 136 Ind. Cas. 60.

—S. 352—Unauthorised act of public servant.

Where it is found that the Sub-Inspector admittedly had not right to enter or attempt to search a house, a resistance to the search is no offence under section 352. 71 Ind. Cas. 996 = 24 Cr.L.J. 276 = A. I. R. 1923 All. 433.

Voluntary hurt to process-server while discharging his duty—Conviction by Taluk Magistrate under Ss. 225, 323 and 353—Objection before Joint Magistrate that the facts disclosed made the case not only one coming under S. 353 but also under S. 352 which was not cognizable by Taluk Magistrate—Joint Magistrate ordering retrial:

Held, that as the evidence disclosed a voluntary hurt to a public servant while he was discharging his duty, the Joint Magistrate's order was not wrong. (1939) 2 M.L.J. 404 = 1939 M.W.N. 518.

—S. 352—Miscellaneous.

Although, for a husband to take his wife would not be an offence, he has no legal right to cause injury, fear, and annoyance to her by using criminal force and his right can be enforced only by having recourse to the Court and not by use of force. A right must not be enforced by the use of criminal force and where five or more persons employ criminal force for the enforcement of a right, they constitute an unlawful assembly. A.I.R. 1935 All. 916 = 1935 A.L.J. 1096 = 1935 A.W.R. 1081 = 37 Cr.L.J. 35 = 159 Ind. Cas. 183.

—S. 352—Miscellaneous—Evidence—Assault in daylight before Tahsildar's house—Assault proved by independent witnesses—No evidence in defence—Weight to be attached to eye-witnesses.

It is true that the accused person are under no obligation, legal or moral, to prove how the crime was committed, but where a murderous assault was committed in daylight in front of the Tahsildar's headquarters and a number of independent witnesses have proved how the accused committed the murderous assault on their victim and how the assailants who were armed with pistols twice fired at him and each shot hit the mark, then the fact that the accused produced no evidence in their defence and are unable to produce any evidence in support of their alleged innocence is a factor which might will be taken into consideration in deciding what weight is to be attached to the evidence of the eye-witnesses, who prove the guilt of these accused. 1. Assaulting public servant.

—S. 353—Applicability—Assaulting public servant—Submission to arrest—Person proceeding to police station on direction by police officer—Attempt to escape—Assault on officer when latter tries to prevent escape—Offence.

A police officer can effect an arrest without touching the body of the person to be arrested ; if the person to be arrested submits to the arrest or custody, e.g., on the police officer's orders proceeds to the police station, such submission is a submission to the arrest, when that police officer is entitled to arrest them and take them to the police station. If, thereafter, the arrested man endeavours to escape and assaults the officer when the latter prevents him from escaping, he commits the offence punishable under S. 353, Indian Penal Code. 49 Cr.L.J. 22=A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 68.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant not discharging duty imposed by law—Offence committed.

The words "in the discharge of his duty as such public servant" in S. 353, Indian Penal Code, mean in the discharge of a duty imposed by law on such public servant and do not cover an act done by him in good faith under colour of his office. If the acts of the public servant are not strictly justifiable, if he is not discharging a duty imposed on him by law, if he is not doing what it is his duty to do as public servant, the offence does not fall under S. 353 but under S. 352, Indian Penal Code. I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 395=224 Ind. Cas. 458=47 Cr.L.J. 638=1946 N.L.J. 307=A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 261.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Sub-Inspector not in charge of Police Station attempting to search without warrant—Other defects against legality of search—Accused assuming threatening attitude—Offence.

The following were the main defects against the legality of the search which the Sub-Inspector was proposing to conduct : (i) he had no warrant (ii) he was not an officer in charge of a Police Station ; (iii) he was not an officer investigating into an offence which he was authorised to investigate ; (iv) he did not record in writing his grounds for wishing to make a search ; (v) he did not specify the thing for which search was to be made :

Held, that the Sub-Inspector was not acting in the lawful discharge of his duty or in the execution of his duty as a Sub-Inspector so as to bring the acts of the accused persons who assumed threatening attitude within the mischief of S. 353. A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 222=11 B.R. 53=45 Cr.L.J. 806=215 Ind. Cas. 108.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant.

Sub-Inspector suspecting accused to be in possession of papers "connected with Congress" attempting to search him on railway platform—Refusal by accused to allow search—Sub-Inspector attempting to take accused's jhola by force—Accused catching hold of Sub-Inspector's hand whereupon accused thrown down and beaten by Sub-Inspector :

Held, that the accused was not guilty under S. 353. A.I.R. 1942 All. 424=1942 A.L.J. 528=44 Cr.L.J. 67=I.L.R. (1942) All. 914=1942 A.W.R. 300=203 Ind. Cas. 467.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Striking a pot carried by public servant in discharge of his duties—Offence.

To strike a pot of lahn which a man is carrying and which is in contact with that man's body constitutes the offence of criminal force if it is done to cause him fear, annoyance, etc., and if that person is a public servant in the discharge of his duties, the offence is punishable under S. 353, Indian Penal Code. A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 297=I.L.R. (1941) Lah. 370=43 P.L.R. 536=42 Cr.L.J. 812=196 Ind. Cas. 106.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Execution of warrant which is, on its face, legal and issued under S. 88, Criminal Procedure Code—Sub-Inspector attached while executing it—Offence under S. 353, if committed.

When a warrant under S. 88, Criminal Procedure Code, is issued, it is presumed that a proclamation under S. 87 has already been issued, the presumption of law being that the acts of a Court must be presumed to have been duly performed. Even if it were presumed that a proclamation had not been issued under S. 87, Criminal Procedure Code, it would not justify the conclusion that the Sub-Inspector and the constables were not acting in execution of their duty as public servants when they went to execute the warrant which was not illegal and if he is attacked while executing the warrant, the person attacking can be convicted under S. 353, Indian Penal Code. A.I.R. 1938 All. 220=1938 A.L.J. 137=1938 A.W.R. 124=39 Cr.L.J. 570=I.L.R. (1938) All. 386=174 Ind. Cas. 861.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Search under S. 74, Bihar and Orissa Excise Act (II of 1915) by Excise Sub-Inspector—No reasons recorded—Accused assaulting—Offence.

The recording of reason before search is provided for both under the Criminal Procedure Code, and under the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, and is intended to protect the liberty of citizens and avoid useless and unjustified searches. If an officer, before proceeding to search, has to record his reason, he will have to apply his mind to the facts and the sufficiency of the information on the basis of which he wants to search. Where no reasons are recorded as required by S. 74, Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, and the Excise Sub-Inspector searching the house is assaulted by the accused, the accused cannot be convicted under S. 353, Indian Penal Code, since the Sub-Inspector cannot be said to be acting in exercise of his powers. A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 501=18 P.L.T. 398=3 B.R. 736=38 Cr.L.J. 982=170 Ind. Cas. 784.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant.

Government Notification No. 332-341-XII, dated 29th January, 1931—Tahsildar removing unauthorised encroachments—Tahsildar acting in execution of duty as public servant—Assault on Tahsildar while doing so is an offence under S. 353. A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 295=35 Cr.L.J. 746=148 Ind. Cas. 803.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Exercise of official duties in grossly illegal and outrageous manner—Accused—Offence.

Where an officer exercises his official duties in a grossly illegal and outrageous manner, he cannot be deemed to be a public servant in the execution of his duty, so as to bring an assault against such officer within the purview of S. 353, Indian Penal Code. A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 169=32 Cr.L.J. 939=132 Ind. Cas. 711.

—S. 353—Assault on police.

Where a police officer was deputed in a private place to control the traffic on the road leading from that private place to the public road and he was assaulted while so discharging his duty.

Held, the police officer was acting in the lawful discharge of his duty and the accused was guilty of an offence under S. 353. 111 Ind. Cas. 665=29 Cr.L.J. 905=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 230.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Illegal warrant—Arrest on illegal warrant—Assault by person on the officer arresting—No offence under S. 353 is committed.

Two persons were improperly arrested on an illegal warrant by a forest watcher and they were marched from the place of arrest along public road evidently to the police station. The accused came on the scene and asked: "What is the meaning of the extraordinary warrant?" or, "What is this extraordinary procedure?", or words to that effect, and seeing two of the men under actual arrest, that is, under wrongful confinement, he gave a slap on the cheek.

Held, that no offence under S. 353, was committed, and that at best it was a trivial offence. 109 Ind. Cas. 365=51 Mad. 873=1 M.Cr.C. 115=29 Cr.L.J. 541=28 M.L.W. 141=1928 M.W.N. 310=A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 624=55 M.L.J. 220.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Unlawful assembly.

Where the common object of the unlawful assembly was to compel by criminal force the excise officers to stop the house searches and this was effected by smashing up the handis, and when the excise officers expostulated with the rioters, they proceeded to attack them:

Held, that the members thereof were liable to be convicted both under S. 147 and Ss. 353, 354. 41 Cal. 836, Foll. 106 Ind. Cas. 591=6 Pat. 828=29 Cr.L.J. 79=9 A.I.Cr.R. 256=9 P.L.T. 167=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 115.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—On duty.

Although a Police Officer may be outside the area of his jurisdiction, he is bound within the limits of the district for which he is appointed to aid another Police Officer when called on by him to do so or to keep order as required under Ss. 51 (e) and 53 of the Bombay District Police Act. Therefore, any person assaulting a Police Officer while he is engaged in discharging the duty under Ss. 51 (e) and 53 is guilty of an offence under S. 353, Penal Code. 88 Ind. Cas. 15=26 Cr.L.J. 1071=18 S.L.R. 221=A.I.R. 1925 Sind 280.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Police on guard—Police on guard is a public servant in the discharge of his duty.

A constable was on duty at the judicial lock-up and while he was patrolling, the accused came up and entered into a conversation with certain under-trial prisoners who were detained in the lock-up. The constable prevented the accused from talking with the prisoners. Thereupon the accused not only abused the constable but also threw his shoe at him.

Held, that accused was guilty of an offence under S. 353, Indian Penal Code. 76 Ind. Cas. 29=4 Lah. 448=25 Cr.L.J. 93=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 257.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—No offence.

Assault by the lessee of the defaulter (pattadar) who had failed to pay the water-tax, on the officer executing the warrant authorising distraint of the defaulter's property is no offence under S. 353. 83 Ind. Cas. 1007=20 M.L.W. 669=26 Cr.L.J. 223=A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 895=47 M.L.J. 447.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant.

Where the date fixed for the return of the warrant had already expired on the day that the process-server went to execute it.

—S. 353—Assault on Amin.

Where the time fixed by the Munsif for the return of the warrant had not expired but only the time given by the Nazir for the earlier return of the warrant as a matter of office routine had expired.

Held, the warrant had not become time-barred and the accused assaulting the Amin while executing it was guilty under S. 353. 40 C. 849, Foll. 75 Ind. Cas. 768=32 M.L.T. 248=1923 M.W.N. 444=25 Cr.L.J. 64=A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 687=45 M.L.J. 74.

Where the accused assaulted Tahsil peons ordered to procure camels and to persuade the owners to take them to the Tahsil.

Held, that offence under S. 353 was not committed in absence of evidence to show for what purpose the camels were sent for. As otherwise there is no evidence to show that the peons were acting in the discharge of their duties. Conviction was altered to one under S. 323. 59 Ind. Cas. 321=22 Cr.L.J. 65=L.R. IA. (Cr.) 162.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Searching house of person suspected of theft—Assault.

A Police Inspector searching the house of a person, suspected of having committed a theft was assaulted by his brother.

Held, that the accused's brother being a suspect at the time of the attempted search, the search was not illegal and was justified under Ss. 95 and 165 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The accused was therefore guilty of an offence under S. 353, Indian Penal Code. 17 A.L.J. 115=20 Cr.L.J. 174=49 Ind. Cas. 494.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Police constable—Discharge of duty.

A police constable arresting a person without written order is not acting in the discharge of his duty and an assault on him is not an offence under S. 353. 20 Cr.L.J. 48=48 Ind. Cas. 688 (Nag.).

—Ss. 353 and 147—Assaulting public servant—Officer executing orders under Repealed Act.

The mere fact of a public servant executing an order of the Court under a Repealed Act, will not exonerate a person from liability under S. 353, Indian Penal Code, if the Court has jurisdiction to pass such an order. It is no excuse for a person assaulting the public servant that he is not attired in his departmental livery, if the person knows at the time that he is discharging his duties as a public servant. 13 N.L.R. 87=18 Cr.L.J. 689=40 Ind. Cas. 689.

—Ss. 353 and 358—Assaulting public servant—Illegal distraint—Assault while distraining—Offence.

An assault of a person illegally distraining under S. 82 (2) of the Madras Local Boards Act is not an offence under S. 353 but could come under S. 358. 14 M. 467, Foll. 16 M.L.T. 429=15 Cr.L.J. 637=25 Ind. Cas. 837.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant on duty—Search of accused's house.

An assault by the accused on a public officer conducting a search of the accused's house for specific stolen property and not a general search is an offence under S. 353, Indian Penal Code. 41 Cal. 261=14 Cr.L.J. 405=17 C.W.N. 1209=20 Ind. Cas. 229.

—S. 353—Assault on public servant executing orders of his superiors.

An assault made on a public servant acting under the orders of his superiors is punishable under S. 353 whether those orders were right or wrong. 183 P.L.R. 1913=19 P.W.R. 1913 (Cr.)=14 Cr.L.J. 141=18 Ind. Cas. 893.

—S. 353—Assaulting public servant—Malguzar, duty of.

—Ss. 353 and 225-B—Assaulting public officer in execution of his duties—Warrant of arrest, or contents of it to be made known before arrest is legal.

To make an arrest under a warrant issued in execution of a civil court's decree valid, it may not be necessary to show the warrant to the person to be arrested, but it is the duty of the bailiff to acquaint the person with the contents of the warrant when he insists him and that he was authorized to arrest him, and if the accused then wants to see the warrant, it would be the duty of the bailiff to show it to him. When a warrant is not shown to the person arrested, nor are the contents of the warrant notified to him before or at the time of the arrest, there is no lawful arrest. (1901) 5 C.W.N. 843.

2. Essentials for Conviction.

—Ss. 353, 352 and 99—Officer making search not acting lawfully—Conviction, if maintainable.

[Essentials for conviction under S. 353 explained.]

The test in such cases is whether the officer at the time of the assault was lawfully discharging a duty imposed on him by law as such. If the officer making search is not acting lawfully, conviction cannot stand. If the acts of the public servant are not strictly justifiable; if he is not discharging a duty imposed on him by law, if he is not doing what it is his duty to do as a public servant, the offence does not fall under S. 353. It falls under S. 352. Section 99 does not cure the defect caused by the irregularity. The effect of S. 99 is merely to remove certain rights of private defence.

Before proceeding to convict an accused under S. 353, a Magistrate should deal with the question of guilty knowledge on the part of the accused and the question as to whether they knew that the person assaulted was a public servant. A.I.R. 1933 Sind 174=34 Cr. L.J. 1147=27 S.L.R. 209=146 Ind. Cas. 43.

—S. 353—Essentials for Conviction—Facts required to be proved.

For a conviction under S. 353 the prosecution must prove that the person assaulted is a public servant and that the assault was made on him while he was discharging his duties as such. 15 A.L.J. 565=18 Cr. L.J. 803=41 Ind. Cas. 323.

3. Interpretation and Scope.

—S. 353—Interpretation—"Public servant".

Officer exercising his duties illegally—Assault against him—Is not an offence under S. 353 as he cannot be deemed to be "public servant." 4 A.I.Cr. D. 472.

—S. 353—Interpretation—"Discharge of his duty, etc."—Meaning of—Act done in good faith and colour of office.

The expression "discharge of his duty as such public servant" in S. 353, Indian Penal Code, means discharge of a duty imposed by law on such public servant in the particular case, and does not cover an act done by him in good faith and under colour of his office. I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 714=47 Cr. L.J. 636=224 Ind. Cas. 454=1946 N.L.J. 302=A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 60.

—S. 353—Interpretation—"In execution of his duty".

A bill-collector of a Union Board is a public servant but he cannot be said to be engaged in lawful discharge of his duty when he attempts to enforce a warrant for an amount in excess of what could be recovered by distress. 1936 M.W.N. 638.

—S. 353—"Public servant"—Interpretation.

Warrant which does not authorise any particular person by name or even by office and which is signed by the head accountant is illegal, and the person executing it cannot be said to be acting as a public servant. 1933 M.W.N. 725.

—S. 353—Interpretation—"In consequence of."

The expression "in consequence of" as used in S. 353 includes the motive which actuated the assault as well as the cause of such assault. 99 Ind. Cas. 935=28 Cr. L.J. 199=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 162.

—S. 353—Interpretation—“Public servant”
—Absence of name of person to be arrested vitiates warrant and the arresting person is not a public servant.

The name of the witness to be arrested is the most essential part of the warrant and where that was lacking.

Held, the peon acted without jurisdiction and consequently was not a public servant within the meaning of Section 353.

Held, further the warrant clearly was bad. 83 Ind. Cas. 481=51 Cal. 902=39 C.L.J. 462=26 Cr. L.J. 2=A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 950.

—S. 353—Interpretation—“Duty as such public servant”—Meaning.

The words ‘duty as such public servant’ in S. 353 mean duty imposed by law on such public servant and do not include acts done in good faith under colour of his office. 38 P.W.R. 1913 (Cr.)=325 P.L.R. 1913=14 Cr. L.J. 512=20 Ind. Cas. 992.

—S. 353—Interpretation—Criminal force to deter a public servant in discharge of his duty—“In the execution of his duty”.

A person who prevents a vaccinator from vaccinating a child, in a place where vaccination has not been made compulsory, cannot be said to be committing an offence under S. 353. A vaccinator who vaccinates in a place where vaccination is not compulsory is not discharging any duty under the law when attempting to vaccinate a child therein. (1908) 19 M.L.J. 238=4 Ind. Cas. 1166.

4. Obstruction.

—S. 353—Obstruction—Public Gambling Act (III of 1867), S. 13—Right to apprehend gamblers without warrant—Obstruction by use of criminal force—Offence.

Where a Police constable W was informed by certain constables that gambling was going on in a public place and he was asked to accompany them and assist in arresting the gamblers, and when the party was some paces from the place where the gambling was going on, the accused rushed forward and grappled with W shouting all the time to his companions to run away :

Held, that when W was informed of the gambling, he had every reason to believe that the information was correct and being a Police officer, he was under the law entitled to apprehend the gamblers without warrant and was prevented by the accused from proceeding in that direction by use of criminal force and the accused having thus deterred W from discharging his duty which was to arrest the gamblers, an offence under S. 353, Indian Penal Code, was committed. A.I.R. 1935 All. 516=1935 A.W.R. 469=36 Cr. L.J. 558=154 Ind. Cas. 740.

—S. 353—Obstruction.

Where a warrant that has been issued is illegal, the Officer executing the warrant is not acting in the discharge of his duty and if the judgment-debtor obstructs, he cannot be convicted under S. 353. A.I.R. 1932 All. 227=(1932) A.L.J. 179=33 Cr. L.J. 887=140 Ind. Cas. 118.

—S. 353—Obstruction—Search without warrant—Obstruction to police officers entering house without search warrant—No harm beyond push—No offence is committed.

Where a Sub-Inspector and a constable acting under him enter the house of the accused without being in possession of a search warrant it is more than doubtful whether it could be said that they were engaged in the execution of their duty as public servants. They are technically guilty of a house-trespass and the accused has a right to resent the invasion of his house. When no harm beyond a push appears to have been sustained by the constable, no offence can be said to be committed under S. 353. 13 A.L.J. 691, Rel. on 120 Ind. Cas. 113=30 Cr. L.J. 1145=1929 Cr. At the search of accused's house by the head constable under orders of the Sub-Inspector, the accused assaulted the constable and did not allow him to enter the house.

Held, that the accused was guilty under S. 353, Indian Penal Code, as the head constable, in conducting the search, was obeying the orders of his superior officer, and that S. 165 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code did not apply. 9 M.L.T. 168=11 Cr.L.J. 727=8 Ind. Cas. 881.

—Ss. 353 and 149—Obstruction—Execution after date fixed in warrant—Obstruction to commission with a warrant for execution.

5. Punishment and sentence.

—S. 353—Punishment and sentence—Assaulting Police constable in uniform.

To assault a constable in uniform, purporting to act in the execution of his duty with due moderation, and to declare that he did not care for the authority of the Police constable, is not a matter which should be treated lightly.

[The conviction under Ss. 225 and 353 was altered to one under S. 323 of the Indian Penal Code as the blows to the constable must have caused bodily pain.] A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 95=I.L.R. (1939) Nag. 488=1939 N.L.J. 101=40 Cr.L.J. 905=184 Ind. Cas. 231.

any use of criminal force in furtherance of the obstruction. A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 392=35 Cr. L.J. 447=147 Ind. Cas. 702 (1).

—S. 353—Punishment and sentence—Resistance to the process-server in the most open way—Deterrent punishment should not be given.

Very many people are disposed to resist process-servers when their property is attached, and it is necessary to pass deterrent sentences even where such persons are not sure that the attachment is legal. But where the accused acted in the most open way and made an endorsement that he had resisted the process-server.

Held, a very heavy punishment was not required in order to deter persons from taking such action as the resistance offered was merely a technical assault. It would be different if the action was such that the chance of detection and punishment was very small. 111 Ind. Cas. 576=29 Cr. L.J. 896=A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 135.

O. 21, R. 43, Civil Procedure Code, does not justify the seizure by violence of property, such as money, from the person of the judgment-debtor in pursuance of an order for attachment before judgment. If he lays violent hands on the person of a defendant or judgment-debtor and attempts to seize currency notes in his possession, he cannot be regarded as doing an act in the discharge of his duty within the meaning of S. 353, Indian Penal Code. If the judgment-debtor resists such unlawful trespass on his person and has to use criminal force, he cannot be held guilty of an offence under S. 353, Indian Penal Code. I.L.R. Held, that a supratdar is not a receiver appointed by court and therefore, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to a Receiver appointed by court do not apply to a supratdar. Therefore, the warrant was illegal and the supratdar and his partisans were competent to resist the removal of his cattle from his house, and were not guilty of any offence if in the exercise of that right they inflicted slight injuries to the companions of the bailiff. 11 C.W.N. 836, Foll. 75 Ind. 7. Use of Criminal force.*—S. 353—Using criminal force to constables interfering in cases of breaches of peace—Persons illegally taken into custody pelting stones at the constables in revenge after they had escaped from such custody—Offence.

While under our law, a person is entitled to inflict the necessary minimum injuries, even on constables and other public officers illegally arresting him, in order to release himself from such unlawful custody, he is not given any right to beat them or pelt stones at them or use criminal force towards them in revenge after escaping from their custody.

"Constables" are under S. 21 of the Madras District Police Act, always on duty when interfering in breaches of the public peace within their station limits and jurisdiction whether in mufti or in uniform, though they may not be entitled to arrest the persons committing an affray as it is a non-cognizable offence. If as a result of their warnings to persons committing an affray to desist from committing the affray, they are subjected to criminal force by pelting stones after the persons have escaped from their custody and there is no need to inflict any criminal force on them for the purpose of such escape, an offence under S. 353, Penal Code, will be made out against such persons. I.L.R. (1950) Mad. 1035 = 63 L.W. 18 = 1950 M.W.N. 34 = A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 365 = 51 Cr. L.J. 604 = 4 A.I.Cr.D. 306 = (1950) 1 M.L.J. 27.

—Ss. 353 and 352—Use of Criminal force—Offence under—Head constable having no written warrant trying to arrest a person—Use of criminal force against.

Where a head constable attempts to arrest a person on suspicion without the necessary warrant in writing required by S. 56 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, the use of criminal force by the person suspected against the head constable will not amount to an offence under S. 353 of the Penal Code. If the action of the public servant was not valid in law, using criminal force, against him would not amount to an offence under S. 353. Where the head constable did not purport to arrest on his own account it cannot be contended that an offence under S. 353 was committed as the officer could arrest a person suspected of a cognisable offence without a warrant. In the circumstances even if a relation of the person sought to be arrested tries to prevent the arrest by using force or threatening to use force, such an act cannot come within the ambit of S. 352 of the Penal Code. 61. #### 8. What amounts to assault.

—S. 353—Accused surrounded by police for being arrested as offender—Accused running away taking gun in hand and escaping without aiming gun—Offence.

Where a police party go to the house of the accused to arrest him as an offender in a cognisable crime, but he picks up a gun in his hand and escapes by running away without actually attempting to shoot at the police or aiming his gun at them, he cannot be said to have assaulted the police so as to render him liable to conviction under S. 353, Indian Penal Code. A.I.R. 1950 Kut. 23.

—Ss. 353, 351 and 349—What amounts to assault—‘Assault,’ ingredients of—Apprehension arising not from person making gesture or preparation but from somebody else—Whether assault causing change in position of human being—If ‘force’ used—Accused’s men moving near complainant at a gesture from accused—Accused, if guilty under S. 353.

According to the definition of ‘assault’ under S. 351, Indian Penal Code, the apprehension of the use of criminal force must be from the person making the gesture or preparation, and if that apprehension arises not from that person but from somebody else, it does not amount to assault on the part of that person. As, according to S. 349, force cannot be said to be used by one person to another by causing change in the position of another human being, where the accused’s men moved towards the complainant at a gesture from the accused, it cannot be said that the accused was guilty under S. 353. A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 81=1939 O.W.N. 63=1939 A.W.R. 39=40 Cr.L.J. 221=14 Luck. 409=179 Ind. Cas. 498.

—Ss. 353 and 143—U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), Ss. 295, 314, 244 (1)—What amounts to assault—Medical Officer and Sanitary Inspector ordering accused to remove ice kept for sale as unfit for use—Accused adopting threatening attitude towards them—Assault, if committed.

Where what the accused did was more than mere obstruction or molestation in that they adopted a threatening attitude towards the Medical Officer and Sanitary Inspector on their ordering the removal of the ice kept by the accused as being unfit for use and in consequence, the Medical Officer and Sanitary Inspector had to leave the place :

Held, that the accused committed an assault as defined in the Indian Penal Code and S. 314, U.P. Municipalities Act, had no application to the case and hence there was no illegality in the prosecution of the accused under S. 353, Indian Penal Code.

Held, also, that it was proved that power under S. 244(1), Municipalities Act, had been delegated by the Executive Officer with the sanction of the chairman to the Medical Officer of Health and hence it could not be said that the Medical Officer was exceeding his legal powers when he wanted to remove the ice from the accused’s shop. A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 20=1935 O.W.N. 1124=36 Cr.L.J. 1386=158 Ind. Cas. 481.

—S. 353—What amounts to assault—Use of abusive language—Threatening with lathi in heat of temper—Sentence.

Whether a particular act amounts or does not amount to an assault depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. A particular act may not amount to an assault in one case, but the same act taken along with the other surrounding circumstances may amount to an assault in another case. Where, therefore, the accused interposed between the attaching officer and the cattle which he was proceeding to attach and being removed under the orders of the officer, he indulged in the use of abusive language and thereafter went away threatening that he would return and teach them a lesson and soon afterwards he came back with a lathi with companions and came sufficiently close to the officers to raise in their minds a reasonable apprehension that actual force was likely to be used :

Held, that the act of the accused came within the definition of assault.

Held, also that as the accused’s subsequent appearance on the scene was in the heat of the moment and soon realising the situation he ran away from the spot and no violence or force was used by him, a sentence of fine would meet the ends of justice. A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 214=1 B.R. 446=16 P.L.T. 295=26 Cr. L.J. 714=155 Ind. Cas. 421 (2).

—Ss. 354 and 366—Applicability.

The mere act of assault and outraging the modesty of a woman are covered by S. 354 and not by S. 366. A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 69=35 Cr.L.J. 1273=151 Ind. Cas. 103.

—S. 354—Applicability—Offence under S. 354—Whether can be committed on girl of five and a half years of age.

While a girl of five and a half years of age was playing about, the accused put his finger into her private parts and caused a mark on them. A little while after the girl complained of a burning pain in her private parts and her mother saw a red mark there. The girl told her mother that it was caused by the accused. The accused was charged and convicted for having outraged the modesty of the girl :

Held, Per Jack, J.—Under S. 354 it must be shown that the assault was made intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely to outrage the modesty of the girl. The conduct of the girl showed that in fact her modesty was not outraged, and in view of the nature of the offence the sentence should be maintained but under S. 323, Indian Penal Code.

Per M. C. Ghose, J.—On the facts found, S. 354 was applicable and that such action on the part of a man as has been committed by the accused would tend to destroy the formation of a sense of modesty in the girl. A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 142=34 Cr. L.J. 303=142 Ind. Cas. 297.

—Ss. 354, 376 and 511—Applicability—Assault upon a girl.

The accused took off a girl's clothes, threw her on the ground and then sat down beside her. He said nothing to her nor did he do anything more.

Held, that the accused committed an offence under S. 354, Penal Code, and was not guilty of an attempt to commit rape. 116 P.L.R. 1912=16 P.W.R. 1912 (Cr.)=13 Cr. L.J. 469=15 Ind. Cas. 309.

—S. 354—Applicability—Catching hold of a girl of six years.

The accused took a girl of six years to his room and lay on her.

Held, that the accused should be convicted of the offence under S. 354. 14 Bom. L.R. 961=13 Cr. L.J. 858=17 Ind. Cas. 794.

—S. 354—Applicability—Outraging woman's modesty.

The fact that a person is in love with a woman does not authorise him to pull that woman by her hand and hair in the presence of others and such an act amounts to an outrage of a woman's modesty punishable under S. 354. 4 Bur. L.T. 268=13 Cr. L.J. 53=13 Ind. Cas. 389.

—S. 354—Attempt of rape and indecent assault—Distinction—Attempt to commit rape must be distinguished from preparation to commit rape and from indecent assault.

An act which amounts to attempt to commit rape does not lose that character merely because the offender does not display a determination to effect his object at all costs. But two conditions are requisite for an attempt to commit the offence. First, there must be an attempt to commit the offence and second, some act must be done towards the commission of the offence. The word "attempt" is not itself defined in the Penal Code and must therefore be taken in its ordinary meaning. And even if an act has been done towards the commission of the offence that alone does not bring the case within the section. From the moment when the intention is formed to commit an offence every act done which facilitates the commission of the offence, and which is done with that object in view, is in one sense an act done towards the commission of the offence, but the doing of every such act does not constitute an attempt to commit the offence. It must in every case be a question depending upon the circumstances whether a particular act done (with the requisite intention) towards the commission of an offence is sufficiently proximate to its commission to constitute an attempt or is so remote as merely to constitute preparation for its commission.

When a lady who was travelling alone in a train woke up from her sleep, she found the accused sitting on her berth. She jumped up and rushed screaming to the door, but the accused caught hold of her, put his hand over her mouth and threatened her with a revolver and made her sit down. She then managed to get to the window and open it but he caught her by the hair and pushed her on the seat—in a sitting position. He threatened to strangle her if she screamed. Then he began to unbutton his trousers and had unfastened the top button when she made an attempt to reach the communication cord. The accused then caught her by the wrist and in the struggle her wristwatch was broken. Then immediately the accused released her and asked her name. She gave it and he apologised for molesting her, saying he had mistaken her for some other lady. It was established on the evidence that accused entered the carriage with the intention of having intercourse by force if necessary, with a woman whom he then believed to be another than the one actually assaulted.

Held, that the acts were acts of preparation, done towards the commission of rape, but that singly or collectively they did not amount to an attempt to commit rape. They did, however, amount to an assault with the intent to outrage the modesty of a woman or which accused knew to be likely to have that result, and thus constituted an offence punishable under S. 354 of the Penal Code. 96 Ind. —Ss. 354, 376 and 511—Attempt of rape—Outraging modesty—Distinction.

Conviction of rape cannot be maintained where in the first report to the police, the girl merely stated that the accused seized her by the arm and asked her to have connection with him; but where the accused is proved to have stripped her nearly naked and was lying upon her when her cries attracted people to the spot, he commits an offence under S. 376 plus 511 and not merely under S. 354. 42 P.W.R. 1910 Cr.=11 Cr. L.J. 611=8 Ind. Cas. 257.

—S. 354—Essentials—Intent to outrage or likelihood thereof essential.

An offence under S. 354 is only committed when a person assaults or uses criminal force to a woman intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby outrage her modesty, but where a woman has no modesty to mention or it is not such as would be outraged by a person having sexual intercourse with her, the act of a person in taking her to a room and having intercourse with her, cannot be said to outrage her modesty. 108 Ind. Cas. 81=9 A.I.Cr.R. 545=29 Cr.L.J. 325=A.I.R. 1928 Pat 326.

Graham, J.—Catching a woman by neck while she is sleeping is an act which clearly comes within the purview of S. 354, since the accused may fairly be presumed to have known that his act was likely to outrage the woman's modesty. 103 Ind. —S. 355—Sentence.

—S. 355—Provocation—Prosecution must prove absence of grave and sudden provocation—Disturbing an orthodox Hindu Brahmin in his prayer is sufficient to cause grave and sudden provocation.

In order to prove that the assault by the accused was made with intent to dishonour a woman, absence of grave and sudden provocation has to be proved.

The accused, an orthodox Hindu Brahmin, took his bath and was sitting on a stone in the midst of a stream offering his prayers. While he was so reciting his prayer, a low caste woman passed through the stream at such close distance from that place that the surface of the water got naturally disturbed and some particles of water fell on his body. The accused was upset and after some exchange of abuses the accused caught hold of the woman's hand.

Held, that the accused acted under grave and sudden provocation and was not guilty under S. 355. 96 Ind. Cas. 859=9 M.L.J. 157=27 Cr.L.J. 1003=A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 47.
